Black's Law Dictionary 6th Ed.
2nd Reprint—1990

PREFACE

This new Sixth Edition starts a second century for Black's Law Dictionary—the standard authority for legal definitions since 1891.

Nearly every area of the law has undergone change and development since publication of the Fifth Edition in 1979. This period has seen particular change and expansion in such areas as tax, finance, commercial transactions, debtor-creditor relations, tort liability, employment, health care, environment, and criminal law. Congress and the states continue to legislate new rights and remedies; the courts continue to define and redefine legal terms; the states are increasingly adopting uniform or model laws and rules; and new causes of action and legal concepts continue unabated.

The vocabulary of the law has likewise continued to change and expand to keep pace. This has necessitated not only a significant expansion of new words and terms for inclusion in this Sixth Edition, but also a reexamination of all existing entries for currentness of legal usage. Indicative of this growth is that this new edition required the addition or revision of over 5,000 legal words and terms. Thousands of other changes were required to update or supplement supporting citations.

As with prior editions, considerable effort has been made in this Sixth Edition to provide more than basic definitions of legal words and terms. In those instances where traditional legal concepts and doctrines have over the years been either superseded, modified or supplemented by court decisions or legislation, such developments and changes are fully reflected. Additionally, because so many areas of law and practice are now governed by uniform or model acts and rules, such major sources of law as the Uniform Commercial Code, Restatements of the Law, Model Penal Code, and Federal Rules are fully reflected. Similarly, the growth and importance of federal laws, with their impact on matters that were traditionally state or local in nature, is evidenced with a considerable number of new entries and citations covering federal acts, agencies, departments and courts. Likewise, the ever expanding importance of financial terminology has necessitated the inclusion of numerous new tax, finance, and accounting terms.

Examples of word usages, with citations, have been added throughout to illustrate how specific terms are used or applied in various legal contexts.

PREFACE

Because of the inter-relationship of so many legal words and terms, the number of internal cross-references has been greatly increased. The number of abbreviation entries has also been substantially expanded, as has the Table of Abbreviations.

A number of changes have been made to the pronunciation guides to make this feature even more helpful. A comprehensive explanation of these guides is set forth on pages vii–xiv with a shorter pronunciation Key appearing on the inside front cover.

New and revised words and terms for this Sixth Edition were prepared by Joseph R. Nolan, Associate Justice, Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court, and Jacqueline M. Nolan-Haley of Fordham University School of Law. The pronunciation transcription system and guides were prepared by M.J. Connolly, Associate Professor of Linguistics, Boston College. Words and terms of the United Kingdom were revised and updated by Professor Stephen C. Hicks, Suffolk University Law School. Tax and accounting terms were updated and expanded by Martina N. Alibrandi, Certified Public Accountant, Bolton, Massachusetts.

A Final Word of Caution

The language of the law is ever-changing as the courts, Congress, state legislatures, and administrative agencies continue to define, redefine and expand legal words and terms. Furthermore, many legal terms are subject to variations from state to state and again can differ under federal laws. Also, the type of legal issue, dispute, or transaction involved can affect a given definition usage. Accordingly, a legal dictionary should only be used as a “starting point” for definitions. Additional research should follow for state or federal variations, for further or later court interpretations, and for specific applications. Helpful sources for supplemental research are “Words and Phrases” and WESTLAW.

THE PRONUNCIATION OF LATIN

A majority of the Latin terms in this revised edition of Black's Law Dictionary, and also occasional English and foreign terms, have been provided with pronunciation entries. The pronunciations follow a descriptive scheme and are based on actual usage rather than on any attempt to prescribe a uniform pronunciation. Where alternate pronunciations exist and philologically more 'appropriate' pronunciation generally receives first listing, however. The entries provide an acceptable pronunciation in a transcription system compatible with the major varieties of North American English and extendable to other pronunciations.

Despite its continuing decline as a working language of scholarship and jurisprudence, Latin still supplies a formidable stock of legal terms and phrases. The ability to use a Latin phrase correctly and pronounce it with authority and consistency belongs to the equipment of a well-rounded jurist. Those who actually study Latin today, however, will in all probability learn a pronunciation (either the reformed philological or the Italianate) at variance with the Anglo-Latin system which prevails in legal and medical spheres. Injection of the 'newer' school pronunciations actually serves to increase confusion and uncertainty: Where masculine plural alumni and feminine plural alumnae were once differentiated in speech as /ə'ləmnay/ and /ə'ləmnij/ respectively, one widespread variant of the philological pronunciation actually reverses the opposition with masculine /ə'ləmnij/ and feminine /ə'ləmnay/. The status of amicus curiae, traditionally pronounced /əməykəs kyúriyiy/, now has variants /əmiykəs kúriyà/ (adapted philological), /amiykus kúriyè/ (Italianate), and numerous hybrids. A parliamentarian of the old school, perhaps even well versed in Latin, adjourns a meeting sine die /sáyniy dáiyi/ only to have a junior colleague suggest that the 'correct' pronunciation is /síney díyey/.

Strictly speaking, of course, any attempt at 'correct' pronunciations of foreign terms can at best be only weak approximations. The linguistic contortions of a purist attempting to weave foreign sounds and intonations into the texture of an English sentence usually strike us as pedantic or affected. Although Julius Caesar may have pronounced his name something like /yúwliyus káysar/ and later Romans may have called him /chéyzar/, few speakers of English have place for anything other than the Anglo-Latin /júwl(i)yəs síyzər/.

Three major systems of Latin pronunciation, outlined below, coexist in the English-speaking world. Each has its proper cultural and scholarly context. The reformed (or new, or philological, or Roman) pronunciation represents a modification to English speech habits of the reconstructed sounds of Latin as it must have been in the classical period. Philologists, classical historians, and most teachers of Latin employ this pronunciation in their professional activity. Anglo-Latin (or English) pronunciation, the form most commonly encountered in law, medicine, the natural sciences, and in general usage, reflects the centuries of sound change that English has undergone.* Although it may not possess the authenticity of linguistic reconstruction, the Anglo-Latin system enjoys the authority of a persevering and distinct cultural tradition. The Italianate pronunciation derives from the pronunciation of Later Latin and is viewed as the standard in Roman Catholicism (including canon law), in music, in art history, and in medieval studies. Thus, a school master may leave the classroom, where he has just taught his pupils Latin imperatives including venite 'come' /weníyte/ (reformed philological), go to chapel to rehearse with the choir Psalm 95 in Anglican morning prayer, the Venite /vənáytiy/ (Anglo-Latin), and then actually sing the text in a Latin setting as /veyníytey èksultéymus.../ (Italianate). Each pronunciation is correct in its own context.

PRONUNCIATION OF LATIN

* There exist, in addition, various secondary pronunciations, such as the continental one often used by scholars of Middle English literature and history.

OUTLINE OF LATIN PRONUNCIATIONS

| Letter | Reformed Philological | Italianate | Anglo-Latin |
|--------|--------------------------|---------------|----------------|
| v | /w/ | /v/ | |
| x | /ks/ x + /ch/ = /ksh/ | | /ks, gz, z, s/ |
| y | /i, iy/ | /iy/ or Gmn ü | /ay, iy, i, y/ |
| z | /z/ | /z, dz/ | /z/ |

Attested forms in Anglo-Latin pronunciation sometimes fail to correspond in qualitative or accentual details with the forms we might expect on an etymological or systematic basis. Thus, bona fide appears as /bównə fáydíy/ instead of */bónə fídiy/industry appears as /índəstriy/ instead of */índəstriy/

minor appears as /máynər/ instead of */mínər/, etc.

Numerous developments in the sound system of English have tended to override the expected forms. Analogies with sibling or quasi-sibling forms often keep doublets flourishing side by side:

licet 'it is permitted' as /láysət/ (cf. license) or /lísət/ (cf. licit) debet 'one must' as /díybət/ or /débət/ (cf. debit and credit)

capias 'thou shouldst seize' as /kéypiyəs/ (cf. cape) or /káepiyəs/ (cf. capture)

Language traditions usually resolve such conflicts in good time, favoring 'usage' over 'correctness', and then promptly create new conflicts.

TRANSCRIPTION SYSTEM

The transcription system employed for these listings is derived from one of the traditional phonemic analyses of American English (Trager-Smith). The values of the symbols vary with context, i.e., their specific pronunciations depend on the nature of the surrounding sounds. The pronunciation habits of a normal speaker of English will, however, in practically all cases supply the accustomed variants for that speaker's usage if the elements presented in the key are substituted in accordance with the sample indications. This system enables the speakers of a range of dialects to use one and the same transcription and yet produce a pronunciation natural to their speech. For this reason, in addition to the considerations given above concerning the treatment of foreign terms in English, sounds foreign to English have been represented by the customary English substitutes. Thus, for example, the voiceless velar fricative of German Bach would be rendered with a simple stop /k/ and French front rounded eu with /yʷ/. Readers who wish to affect the foreign sounds will find guidance in their own linguistic experience or in the appropriate grammars and dictionaries. Similarly, readers who prefer pronunciations closer to the spelling than those presented here should feel free to substitute their preferences, e.g., restoration of "full" vowels for unaccented /ə/ or even to pronouncing the t in often. Finally, readers who already feel secure (or even superior) in their own renderings of words and phrases should retain these. The editors will always appreciate information on local variants and will welcome suggestions for improving the transcriptions.

The rubrics (sets of examples) under any given major symbol should always be applied in order. The earlier, more specific contexts take preference over the later, 'elsewhere' variant.

The special symbols

/æ/ (ash) /ð/ (edh) /ə/ (schwa) /ŋ/ (angma) (θ/ (theta)

The reader will, of course, be aware that the transcription symbols do not necessarily have the same alphabetic values as in English. Rather, the symbols must be viewed as arbitrary signs, although in many cases their forms will aid the user in remembering and associating the key sounds and symbols.

SIXTH EDITION

A

A. The first letter in the English and most other alphabets derived from the Roman or Latin alphabet, which was one of several ancient Italian alphabets derived from the Greek, which was an adaptation of the Phoenician. The first letter in the Phoenician alphabet was called aleph, meaning "ox", which is also the meaning of the first letter in the Greek alphabet, alpha. Alpha and the second letter of the Greek alphabet, beta, were combined to form "alphabet," which is largely the same in different languages.

A in Latin and law Latin. Anglo-American law abounds in Latin and French words and phrases, and the use of A in these languages is important to the English-speaking lawyer. In Latin "A" was used both as an abbreviation and as a symbol. For example "A" was an abbreviation for "Aulus," a praenomen, or the first of the usual three names of a person by which he was distinguished from others of the same family; also for "ante" in "a.d.," ante diem (before the day), and for "anno" (year) in a.u.c., anno urbis conditae (the year of the building of the city) and in anno ab urbe condita (from the year of the building of the city). As a preposition, the form was either Á, ĀB or ABS. A was used before consonants; ab was usually used before vowels, but sometimes before consonants, whereas abs was used before "c" or "t." The meaning was "from," "away from," "on the side of," "at," "after," "since," "by," "by means of," "out of," "with reference to," "in regard of," "near by," and "along." For example, A fronte in front; ab tergo, from behind; a puertitia, from youth; ab sole orbe, from or at sunrise; ab intestato, without a will, intestate. In law Latin, "a" means "by," "with," "from," "in," "of," and "on," and AB means "by," "from," and "in".

A in French and law French. In French A is a preposition, the meaning of which largely depends on context. It is usually translated as "into," "at," "to," "in," "by," "of," "with," "on," "from," "for," "under," "till," "with-in," "between," etc. It also changes into au and aux when combined with "the." A is also the third person, singular number, present tense, indicative mood of the verb avoir, (to have): Il a (he has). In law French "a" is used as a preposition meaning "at," "for," "in," "of," "on," "to," and "with."

The word "a" has varying meanings and uses. "A" means "one" or "any," but less emphatically than either. It may mean one where only one is intended, or it may mean any one of a great number. It is placed before nouns of the singular number, denoting an individual object or quality individualized.

The article "a" is not necessarily a singular term; it is often used in the sense of "any" and is then applied to more than one individual object. Lewis v. Spies, 43 A.D.2d 714, 350 N.Y.S.2d 14, 17. So under a statute providing that the issuance of "a" certificate to one carrier should not bar a certificate to another over the same route, a certificate could be granted to more than two carriers over the same route. State ex rel. Crown Coach Co. v. Public Service Commission, 238 Mo.App. 287, 179 S.W.2d 123, 127. Also, article "a" in statute making it a crime for a person to have in his possession a completed check with intent to defraud includes the plural. People v. Carter, 75 C.A.3d 865, 142 Cal.Rptr. 517, 520. But the meaning depends on context. For example, in Workers' Compensation Act, on, or in or about "a" railway, factory, etc., was held not to mean any railway, factory, etc., but the railway, factory, etc., of the employer. Where the law required the delivery of a copy of a notice to husband and a copy to wife, the sheriff's return that he had delivered "a copy" to husband and wife was insufficient. State v. Davis, Tex.Civ. App., 139 S.W.2d 638, 640.

AAA. Agricultural Adjustment Act; American Accounting Association; American Arbitration Association.

A.A.C. Anno ante Christum, the year before Christ.

A.A.C.N. Anno ante Christum natum, the year before the birth of Christ.

AALS. Association of American Law Schools.

A aver et tener /èy éyvar et ténər/. L. Fr. (L. Lat. habendum et tenendum) To have and to hold. A aver et tener a luy et a ses heires, a tous jours,—to have and to hold to him and his heirs forever.

Ab. The eleventh month of the Jewish civil year, and the fifth of the sacred year. It answers to the moon that begins in July, and consists of thirty days. On the 24th is observed a feast in memory of the abolishment of the Sadducean law, which required sons and daughters to be equal heirs and heiresses of their parents' estates.

Ab, at the beginning of English-Saxon names of places, is generally a contraction of abbot or abbey; whence it is inferred that those places once had an abbey there, or belonged to one elsewhere, as Abingdon in Berkshire.

A.B. Able-bodied seaman. For the requirements of able seaman, see 46 U.S.C.A. § 7306 et seq. Also artium baccalaureus, bachelor of arts. In England and U.S., generally written B. A. See Able-bodied.

A.B.A. American Bar Association.

Ab; Abr. Abridgment.

Ab abusu ad usum non valet consequentia /æb əbyúwz(y)uw æd yúwzəm non vələt kɒnsəkʷəns(h)(y)ə/. A conclusion as to the use of a thing from its abuse is invalid.

Abacist or abacista /æbəsisətə/. A caster of accounts, an arithmetician.

Abaction /əbækʃən/. A carrying away by violence.

Ab actis /æb æktəs/. Lat. An officer having charge of acta, public records, registers, journals, or minutes. An officer who entered on record the acta or proceedings of a court; a clerk of court; a notary or actuary. See "Acta diurna". This, and the similarly formed epithets à cancellis, à secretis, à libellis, were also anciently the titles of a chancellor (cancellarius) in the early history of that office.

Abactor /əbæktər/. A stealer and driver away of cattle or beasts by herds or in great numbers at once, as distinguished from a person who steals a single animal or beast. Also called abigeus, q.v.

Ab agendo /æb ejéndow/. Disabled from acting; unable to act; incapacitated for business or transactions of any kind.

A.B.A.J. American Bar Association Journal.

Abalienate /əbélyiənèyt/. To transfer interest or title.

Abalienatio /əbélyiənéysh(iy)ow/. In Roman law, the perfect conveyance or transfer of property from one Roman citizen to another. This term gave place to the simple alienatio, which is used in the Digest and Institutes, as well as in the feudal law, and from which the English "alienation" has been formed.

Abalienation /əbélyiənéyshən/. In the civil law, a making over of realty, or chattels to another by due course of law.

Abamita /əbæmətə/. In the civil law, a great-great-grandfather's sister (abavi soror). Called amita maxima.

Abandon. To desert, surrender, forsake, or cede. To relinquish or give up with intent of never again resuming one's right or interest. To give up or to cease to use. To give up absolutely; to forsake entirely; to renounce utterly; to relinquish all connection with or concern in; to desert. It includes the intention, and also the external act by which it is carried into effect.

Abandoned property. Property over which the owner has given up dominion and control with no intention of recovering it. See also Abandonment.

Abandonee. A party to whom a right or property is abandoned or relinquished by another. Term is applied to the insurers of vessels and cargoes.

Abandonment. The surrender, relinquishment, disclaimer, or cession of property or of rights. Voluntary relinquishment of all right, title, claim and possession, with the intention of not reclaiming it. State v. Bailey, 97 N.J.Super. 396, 235 A.2d 214, 216. The giving up of a thing absolutely, without reference to any particular person or purpose, as vacating property with the intention of not returning, so that it may be appropriated by the next comer or finder. The voluntary relinquishment of possession of thing by owner with intention of terminating his ownership, but without vesting it in any other person. Dober v. Ukase Inv. Co., 139 Or. 626, 10 P.2d 356, 357. The relinquishing of all title, possession, or claim, or a virtual, intentional throwing away of property.

Term includes both the intention to abandon and the external act by which the intention is carried into effect. In determining whether one has abandoned his property or rights, the intention is the first and paramount object of inquiry, for there can be no abandonment without the intention to abandon. Roebuck v. Mecosta County Road Commission, 59 Mich.App. 128, 229 N.W.2d 343, 345. Generally, "abandonment" can arise from a single act or from a series of acts. Holly Hill Lumber Co. v. Grooms, 198 S.C. 118, 16 S.E.2d 816, 821.

Time is not an essential element of act, although the lapse of time may be evidence of an intention to abandon, and where it is accompanied by acts manifesting such an intention, it may be considered in determining whether there has been an abandonment. Ullman ex rel. Eramo v. Payne, 127 Conn. 239, 16 A.2d 286, 287.

"Abandonment" differs from surrender in that surrender requires an agreement, and also from forfeiture, in that forfeiture may be against the intention of the party alleged to have forfeited.

See also Desertion; Discharge; Release; Waiver.

Actions, in general. Failure to prosecute or bring action within statutorily prescribed period (see Limitations (Statute of limitations)); failure to object to or submit jury instructions (Fed.R. Civil P. 51); failure to demand jury trial (Fed.R. Civil P. 38).

Adverse possession. To destroy continuity of adverse claimant's possession, there must be an intent to relinquish claim of ownership as well as an act of relinquishment of possession and mere temporary absence is not sufficient. Bruch v. Benedict, 62 Wyo. 213, 165 P.2d 561.

Assignment of error. Failure to object at trial. Meyer v. Hendrix, 311 Ill.App. 605, 37 N.E.2d 445, 446. Error not presented in brief. Roubay v. United States, C.C.A. Cal., 115 F.2d 49, 50. Error not supported by point, argument or authority. Cone v. Ariss, 13 Wash.2d 650, 126 P.2d 591, 593. See Fed.R.Civil Proc. 46 (Exceptions unnecessary).

Children. Desertion or willful forsaking. Foregoing parental duties. Wright v. Fitzgibbons, 198 Miss. 471, 21 So.2d 709, 710. See also Desertion.

Contracts. To constitute "abandonment" by conduct, action relied on must be positive, decisive, unequivocal, and inconsistent with the existence of the contract. Abandonment is a matter of intent, Lohn v. Fletcher Oil Co., 38 Cal.App.2d 26, 100 P.2d 505, 507, and implies not only nonperformance, but an intent not to perform which may be inferred from acts which necessarily point to actual abandonment.

Copyright. "Abandonment" of a copyright turns on state of mind of copyright proprietor and occurs whenever he engages in some overt action which manifests his purpose to surrender his rights in the work and to allow the public to enjoy it. Rexnord, Inc. v. Modern Handling Systems, Inc., D.C.Del., 379 F.Supp. 1190, 1199.

Criminal acts. "Abandonment" can relieve one of criminal responsibility where criminal enterprise is cut short by change of heart, desertion of criminal purpose, change of behavior, and rising revulsion for harm intended, and must occur before criminal act charged is in the process of consummation or has become so inevitable that it cannot reasonably be delayed. Pyle v. State, Ind., 476 N.E.2d 124, 126. See Model Penal Code § 5.01(4) (renunciation of criminal purpose).

Easements. To establish "abandonment" of an easement created by deed, there must be some conduct on part of owner of servient estate adverse to and inconsistent with existence of easement and continuing for statutory period, or nonuser must be accompanied by unequivocal and decisive acts clearly indicating an intent on part of owner of easement to abandon use of it. Permanent cessation of use or enjoyment with no intention to resume or reclaim. Intention and completed act are both essential. A mere temporary or occasional obstruction or use of an easement by the servient owner is not an "abandonment". Gerber v. Appel, Mo.App., 164 S.W.2d 225, 228.

Ground for divorce. "Abandonment" as cause for divorce must be willful and intentional without intention of returning, and without consent of spouse abandoned. This ground is commonly termed "desertion" in state divorce statutes. See also Desertion.

Inventions. The giving up of rights by inventor, as where he surrenders his idea or discovery or relinquishes the intention of perfecting his invention, and so throws it open to the public, or where he negligently postpones the assertion of his claims or fails to apply for a patent, and allows the public to use his invention. Electric Storage Battery Co. v. Shimadzu, Pa., 307 U.S. 5, 613, 616, 59 S.Ct. 675, 681, 83 L.Ed. 1071.

Leases in general. To constitute an "abandonment" of leased premises, there must be an absolute relinquishment of premises by tenant consisting of act and intention.

Mineral leases. "Abandonment" consists of an actual act of relinquishment, accompanied with the intent and purpose permanently to give up a claim and right of property. A distinction exists between "abandonment" and "surrender" which is the relinquishment of a thing or a property right thereto to another, which is not an essential element of abandonment. Distinction also exists between elements of "abandonment" and those of estoppel. Neither formal surrender of oil and gas lease nor release is necessary to effectuate "abandonment"; for example, failing to start work under the lease for more than 40 years, Chapman v. Continental Oil Co., 149 Kan. 822, 89 P.2d 833, 834; breach of implied obligation to proceed with search and development of land with reasonable diligence, Wood v. Arkansas Fuel Oil Co., D.C. Ark., 40 F.Supp. 42, 45; no drilling on leased land for more than two years, and failure to pay rentals, Rehart v. Klossner, 48 Cal.App.2d 40, 119 P.2d 145, 147; drawing of casing from well with no intention of replacing it, have all been held to constitute "abandonment". But there must be an intention by lessee to relinquish leased premises, Carter Oil Co. v. Mitchell, C.C.A.Okl., 100 F.2d 945, 950, 951; or an intention not to drill, Carter Oil Co. v. Mitchell, C.C.A.Okl., 100 F.2d 945, 950, 951. And ceasing of operations is not alone sufficient. Fisher v. Dixon, 188 Okl. 7, 105 P.2d 776, 777.

Office. Abandonment of a public office is a species of resignation, but differs from resignation in that resignation is a formal relinquishment, while abandonment is a voluntary relinquishment through nonuser. It is not wholly a matter of intention, but may result from the complete abandonment of duties of such a continuance that the law will infer a relinquishment. It must be total, and under such circumstances as clearly to indicate an absolute relinquishment; and whether an officer has abandoned an office depends on his overt acts rather than his declared intention. It implies nonuser, but nonuser does not, of itself constitute abandonment. The failure to perform the duties pertaining to the office must be with actual or imputed intention on the part of the officer to abandon and relinquish the office. The intention may be inferred from the acts and conduct of the party, and is a question of fact. Abandonment may result from an acquiescence by the officer in his wrongful removal or discharge, but, as in other cases of abandonment, the question of intention is involved. McCall v. Cull, 51 Ariz. 237, 75 P.2d 696, 698.

Patents. There may be an abandonment of a patent, where the inventor dedicates it to the public use; and this may be shown by his failure to sue infringers, sell licenses, or otherwise make efforts to realize a personal advantage from his patent. Sandlin v. Johnson, C.C.A. Mo., 141 F.2d 660. A person may not be deprived of a patent as a result of the earlier work of another if that work has been abandoned, supplemented, or concealed. 35 U.S.C.A. § 102(g).

Property. "Abandoned property" in a legal sense is that to which owner has relinquished all right, title, claim, and possession, but without vesting it in any other person, and with no intention of not reclaiming it or resuming its ownership, possession or enjoyment in the future. Com. v. Carter, 236 Pa.Super. 376, 344 A.2d 899, 901. There must be concurrence of act and intent, that is, the act of leaving the premises or property vacant, so that it may be appropriated by the next comer, and the intention of not returning. Relinquishment of all title, possession, or claim; a virtual intentional throwing away of property. Ex parte Szczygiel, Sup., 51 N.Y.S.2d 699, 702.

Rights in general. The relinquishment of a right. It implies some act of relinquishment done by the owner without regard to any future possession by himself, or by any other person, but with an intention to abandon. See Waiver.

Trademarks and trade names. There must be not only nonuser, but also an intent to abandon and to give up use of trademarks permanently. Neva-Wet Corporation of America v. Never Wet Processing Corporation, 277 N.Y. 163, 13 N.E.2d 755, 761.

Water rights. As applied to water rights may be defined to be an intentional relinquishment of a known right. It is not based on a time element, and mere nonuser will not establish "abandonment" for any less time, at least, than statutory period, controlling element in "abandonment" being matter of intent. Hammond v. Johnson, 94 Utah 20, 66 P.2d 894, 899. To desert or forsake right. The intent and an actual relinquishment must concur. Concurrence of relinquishment of possession, and intent not to resume it for beneficial use. Neither alone is sufficient. Osnes Livestock Co. v. Warren, 103 Mont. 284, 62 P.2d 206, 211.

Abandon, abandum, or abandonum /əbændən(əm)/. Anything sequestered, proscribed, or abandoned. Abandon, i. e., in bannum res missa, a thing banned or denounced as forfeited or lost, whence to abandon, desert, or forsake, as lost and gone.

Ab ante /æb æntiy/. Lat. Before; in advance. Thus, a legislature cannot agree ab ante to any modification or amendment to a law which a third person may make.

Ab antecedente /æb æntəsiydéntiy/. Lat. Beforehand; in advance.

Ab antiquo /æb æntáykwow/. From old times; from ancient time; of old; of an ancient date. 3 Bl.Comm. 95.

Abarnare /æbarnériy/. Lat. To discover and disclose to a magistrate any secret crime.

Ab assuetis non fit injuria /æb æswiytəs non fit injúriyə/. From things to which one is accustomed (or in which there has been long acquiescence) no legal injury or wrong arises. If a person neglects to insist on his right, he is deemed to have abandoned it.

Abatable nuisance. A nuisance which is practically susceptible of being suppressed, or extinguished, or rendered harmless, and whose continued existence is not authorized under the law. Fort Worth & Denver City Ry. Co. v. Muncy, Tex.Civ.App., 31 S.W.2d 491, 494.

Abatamentum /əbètəməntəm/. L. Lat. In old English law, an abatement of freehold; an entry upon lands by way of interposition between the death of the ancestor and the entry of the heir.

Abatare /æbətériy/. To abate.

Abate. To throw down, to beat down, destroy, quash. To do away with or nullify or lessen or diminish. In re Stevens' Estate, Cal.App., 150 P.2d 530, 534. To bring entirely down or demolish, to put an end to, to do away with, to nullify, to make void, Sparks Milling Co. v. Powell, 283 Ky. 669, 143 S.W.2d 75, 77. See also Abatement; Abatement of action.

Abatement. A reduction, a decrease, or a diminution. The suspension or cessation, in whole or in part, of a continuing charge, such as rent.

Legacies. A proportional diminution or reduction of the pecuniary legacies, when the funds or assets out of which such legacies are payable are not sufficient to pay them in full. Uniform Probate Code, § 3-902. See Ademption, infra, as to specific legacies and devises.

Nuisance. See Nuisance.

Plea in abatement. See Plea.

Taxes. Diminution or decrease in the amount of tax imposed. Abatement of taxes relieves property of its share of the burdens of taxation after the assessment has been made and the tax levied. Sheppard v. Hidalgo County, 126 Tex. 550, 83 S.W.2d 649, 657.

Abatement of action. Abatement is an entire overthrow or destruction of the suit so that it is quashed and ended. Carver v. State, 217 Tenn. 482, 398 S.W.2d 719. See Dismissal; Vacate.

Pleas in abatement have been abolished by Fed.R. Civil P. 7(c); such being replaced by a motion to dismiss under Rule 41. In certain states however this plea still exists to attack jurisdiction, or service of process, or to allege that a prior action between the same parties concerning the same subject matter is pending.

Abator /əbétər/. In real property law, a stranger who, having no right of entry, contrives to get possession of an estate of freehold, to the prejudice of the heir or devisee, before the latter can enter, after the ancestor's death. In the law of torts, one who abates, prostrates, or destroys a nuisance.

Abatuda /æbətúwdə/. Anything diminished. Moneta abatuda is money clipped or diminished in value.

Abavia /əbáviyə/. Lat. In the civil law, a great-great-grandmother.

Abavita /əbávmətə/. A great-great-grandfather's sister. This is a misspelling for abamita (q.v.).

Abavunculus /æbəvəŋkyləs/. Lat. In the civil law, a great-great-grandmother's brother (avavioe frater). Called avunculus maximus.

Abavus /æbəvəs/. Lat. In the civil law, a great-great-grandfather.

Abbacinare /æbəsənériy/. To blind by placing a burning basin or red-hot irons before the eyes. A form of punishment in the Middle Ages. Also spelled "abacinare." The modern Italian is spelled with two b's, and means to blind. Abbacination. Blinding by placing burning basin or red-hot irons before the eyes.

Abbacy /æbásiy/. The government of a religious house, and the revenues thereof, subject to an abbot, as a bishopric is to a bishop. The rights and privileges of an abbot.

Abbey. A monastery or nunnery for the use of an association of religious persons, having an abbot or abbess to preside over them.

Abbot. A prelate in the 13th century who had had an immemorial right to sit in the national assembly.

Abbot, abbat. The spiritual superior or governor of an abbey. Feminine, Abbess.

Abbreviatio placitorum /əbriyviyēsh(iy)ow plā-sətōrəm/. An abstract of ancient judicial records, prior to the Year Books.

Abbreviators /əbriyviyētərz/. In ecclesiastical law, officers whose duty it is to assist in drawing up the Pope's briefs, and reducing petitions into proper form to be converted into papal bulls.

Abbrochment, or abbroachment /əbrōwchmənt/. The act of forestalling a market, by buying up at wholesale the merchandise intended to be sold there, for the purpose of selling it at retail. See Forestalling the market.

Abbuttals. See Abuttals.

ABC test. Unemployment compensation law exclusion tests providing that employer is not covered if individuals he employs are free from his control, the services are performed outside employer's places of business, and employees are customarily engaged in independently established trades or professions are known as the "ABC tests". Employment Sec. Commission v. Wilson, Alaska, 461 P.2d 425, 427. See Independent contractor.

ABC transaction. In mining and oil drilling operations, a transfer by which A, the owner, conveys the working interest to B, the operator and developer for cash consideration, reserving a production payment usually larger than the cash consideration paid by B. Later, A sells the reserved production payment to C for cash. The tax advantages of this type of transaction were eliminated by the Tax Reform Act of 1969.

Abdication /əbdəkēyshən/. Renunciation of the privileges and prerogatives of an office. The act of a sovereign in renouncing and relinquishing his government or throne, so that either the throne is left entirely vacant, or is filled by a successor appointed or elected beforehand. Also, where a magistrate or person in office voluntarily renounces or gives it up before the time of service has expired. It differs from resignation, in that resignation is made by one who has received his office from another and restores it into his hands, as an inferior into the hands of a superior; abdication is the relinquishment of an office which has devolved by act of law. It is said to be a renunciation, quitting, and relinquishing, so as to have nothing further to do with a thing, or the doing of such actions as are inconsistent with the holding of it.

Abditorium /əbdətōriyəm/. An abditory or hiding place, to hide and preserve goods, plate or money.

Abduction. The offense of taking away a wife, child, or ward, by fraud and persuasion, or open violence. Model Penal Code, § 212.4.

To take away surreptitiously by force in kidnapping. The unlawful taking or detention of any female for purposes of marriage, concubinage, or prostitution. In many states this offense is created by statute and in most cases applies to females under a given age. By statute in some states, abduction includes the withdrawal of a husband from his wife, as where another woman alienates his affection and entices him away and causes him to abandon his wife.

Restraint of victim becomes "abduction" when it is done with intent to prevent liberation of victim. Padgett v. State, Tex.App. 4 Dist., 683 S.W.2d 453, 457.

See also Alienation of affections; Kidnapping.

Abearance /əbérəns/. Behavior; as a recognizance to be of good abearance signifies to be of good behavior.

Ab epistolis /əb iypistələs/. Lat. An officer having charge of the correspondence (epistolæ) of his superior or sovereign; a secretary.

Aberemurder /əbərmərdər/. (From Sax. abere, apparent, notorious; and mord, murder.) Plain or downright murder, as distinguished from the less heinous crime of manslaughter, or chance medley.

Abesse /əbésiy/. Lat. In the civil law, to be absent; to be away from a place. Said of a person who was extra continentia urbis, (beyond the suburbs of the city.)

Abet. To encourage, incite, or set another on to commit a crime. This word is usually applied to aiding in the commission of a crime. To abet another to commit a murder is to command, procure, counsel, encourage, induce, or assist. Wyatt v. U. S., 388 F.2d 395, 400 (10 Cir.). To facilitate the commission of a crime, promote its accomplishment, or help in advancing or bringing it about. State v. Lord, 42 N.M. 638, 84 P.2d 80, 86.

In relation to charge of aiding and abetting, term includes knowledge of the perpetrator's wrongful purpose, and encouragement, promotion or counsel of another in the commission of the criminal offense. State v. J-R Distributors, Inc., 82 Wash.2d 584, 512 P.2d 1049, 1055.

A French word combined of two words "a" and "bet-er"—to bait or excite an animal.

See also Abettor; Accomplice; Aid and abet.

Abetment. Act of encouraging, inciting or aiding another.

Abettator /əbətétər/. L. Lat. In old English law, an abettor. See Abettor.

Abettor /əbétər/. An instigator, or setter on; one who promotes or procures a crime to be committed. Handy v. State, 326 A.2d 189. One who commands, advises, instigates, or encourages another to commit a crime. A person who, being present, incites another to commit a crime, and thus becomes a principal. To be an "abettor" accused must have instigated or advised commission of crime or been present for purpose of assisting in its commission; he must share criminal intent with which crime was committed. People v. Francis, 71 C.2d 66, 75 Cal.Rptr. 199, 203, 450 P.2d 591. See also Accessory; Accomplice; Aider and abettor.

Ab extra /æb ɛkstrə/. Lat. Extra, beyond, without. From without.

Abeance /əbéyans/. Lapse in succession during which there is no person in whom title is vested. In the law of estates, the condition of a freehold when there is no person in being in whom it is vested. In such cases the freehold has been said to be in nubibus (in the clouds), in pendenti (in suspension); and in gremio legis (in the bosom of the law). Where there is a tenant of the freehold, the remainder or reversion in fee may exist for a time without any particular owner, in which case it is said to be in abeyance. A condition of being undetermined or in state of suspension or inactivity. Sales to third parties, of property acquired by county at tax sale, being held in "abeyance", means that certain rights or conditions are in expectancy. Willard v. Ward County, 72 N.D. 291, 6 N.W.2d 566, 568.

Abiaticus, or aviaticus /æviyétyəkəs/. L. Lat. In feudal law, a son's son; a grandson in the male line.

Abide. To accept the consequences of; to rest satisfied with; to wait for. With reference to an order, judgment, or decree of a court, to perform, to execute.

Abide by. To adhere to, to obey, to accept the consequences of. Detroit Fidelity & Surety Co. v. U. S., C.C.A.Ohio, 36 F.2d 682, 683.

To stand to, acquiesce in, conform to. To accept as valid, and to take consequences of; as to abide by a decision. Kovach v. Maddux, D.C.Tenn., 238 F.Supp. 835, 842.

Abiding conviction. A definite conviction of guilt derived from a thorough examination of the whole case. Used commonly to instruct juries on the frame of mind required for guilt proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Hopt v. Utah, 120 U.S. 439, 7 S.Ct. 614, 30 L.Ed. 708. A settled or fixed conviction. People v. Castro, 68 Cal. App.2d 491, 157 P.2d 25, 30.

Abigeatores /əbij(i)ətóriyz/. See Abigeus.

Abigeatus /əbijiyétyəs/. Lat. In the civil law, the offense of stealing or driving away cattle. See Abigeus.

Abigei /əbijiyay/. See Abigeus.

Abigere /əbijəriy/. Lat. In the civil law, to drive away. Applied to those who drove away animals with the intention of stealing them. Applied, also, formerly to the similar offense of cattle stealing on the borders between England and Scotland. See Abigeus.

To drive out; to expel by force; to produce abortion.

Abigeus /əbijiyəs/. Lat. (Pl., abigei, or more rarely abigeatores.) In the civil law, a stealer of cattle; one who drove or drew away (subtraxit) cattle from their pastures, as horses or oxen from the herds, and made booty of them, and who followed this as a business or trade. The term was applied also to those who drove away the smaller animals, as swine, sheep, and goats. In the latter case, it depended on the number taken, whether the offender was fur (a common thief) or abigeus. But the taking of a single horse or ox seems to have constituted the crime of abigeatus. And those who frequently did this were clearly abigei, though they took but an animal or two at a time. 4 Bl.Comm. 239.

Ability. Capacity to perform an act or service; e. g. to support spouse and family. Financial ability is usually construed as referring to pecuniary ability. See also Able to earn; Capacity; Incapacity.

Ab inconvenienti /æb inkənviyniyéntay/. From hardship, or inconvenience. An argument founded upon the hardship of the case, and the inconvenience or disastrous consequences to which a different course of reasoning would lead.

Ab initio /æb inish(i)ow/. Lat. From the beginning; from the first act; from the inception. An agreement is said to be "void ab initio" if it has at no time had any legal validity. A party may be said to be a trespasser, an estate said to be good, an agreement or deed said to be void, or a marriage or act said to be unlawful, ab initio. Contrasted in this sense with ex post facto, or with postea.

Ab initio mundi /æb inish(i)ow mánday/. Lat. From the beginning of the world. Ab initio mundi usque ad hodiernum diem, from the beginning of the world to this day.

Ab intestat. Intestate.

Ab intestato /æb instestétyow/. Lat. In the civil law, from an intestate; from the intestate; in case of intestacy. Hæreditas ab intestato, an inheritance derived from an intestate. Successio ab intestato, succession to an intestate, or in case of intestacy. This answers to the descent or inheritance of real estate at common law. 2 Bl.Comm. 490, 516. "Heir ab intestato." The phrase "ab intestato" is generally used as the opposite or alternative of ex testamento, (from, by, or under a will.) Vel ex testamento, vel ab intestato [hæreditates] pertinent,—inheritances are derived either from a will or from an intestate (one who dies without a will).

Ab invito /æb inváytoy/. Unwillingly. Against one's will. By or from an unwilling party. A transfer ab invito is a compulsory transfer. See In invitum; Invito.

Ab irato /æb ayrétyow/. Lat. By one who is angry. A devise or gift made by a man adversely to the interest of his heirs, on account of anger or hatred against them, is said to be made ab irato. A suit to set aside such a will is called an action ab irato.

Abishering, or abishersing /əbishə(s)ij/. Quit of amercements. It originally signified a forfeiture or amercement, and is more properly called mishering, mishersing, or miskering, according to certain writers. It has since been termed a liberty of freedom, because, wherever this word is used in a grant, the persons to whom the grant is made have the forfeitures and amercements of all others, and are themselves free from the control of any within their fee.

Abjudicatio /əbjuwdakéysh(iy)ow/. In old English law, the depriving of a thing by the judgment of a court; a putting out of court; the same as forisjudicatio, for judgment, for judgment. A removal from court.

Used to indicate an adverse decision in a writ of right. Thus, the land is said to be abjudged from one of the parties and his heirs.

Abjuration /əbjərəyʃən/. A renunciation or abandonment by or upon oath. The renunciation under oath of one's citizenship or some other right or privilege. See also Abjure.

Abjuration of the realm /əbjərəyʃən əv ðə rélm/. In ancient English law, a renunciation of one's country, a species of self-imposed banishment, under an oath never to return to the kingdom unless by permission.

Abjure. To renounce, or abandon, by or upon oath. See Abjuration.

Able. See Ability.

Able-bodied. As used in a statute relating to service in the militia, this term does not imply an absolute freedom from all physical ailment. It imports an absence of those palpable and visible defects which evidently incapacitate the person from performing the ordinary duties of a soldier. See also Able seaman.

Ablegati /əbləgéytay/. Papal ambassadors of the second rank, who are sent to a country where there is not a nuncio, with a less extensive commission than that of a nuncio. This title is equivalent to envoy.

Able seaman. A grade of merchant seamen. See 46 U.S.C.A. § 7306 et seq.

Able to earn. Ability to obtain and hold employment means that the person referred to is either able or unable to perform the usual duties of whatever employment may be under consideration, in the manner that such duties are customarily performed by the average person engaged in such employment. Kinyon v. Kinyon, 230 Mo.App. 623, 71 S.W.2d 78, 82. See also Disability; Gainful employment or occupation.

Able to purchase. "Ability" in sales contracts, dependent on ability to purchase, usually means financial ability. Anderson v. Craig, 111 Mont. 182, 108 P.2d 205, 206. Purchaser must have financial ability and legal capacity to acquire land. Campbell v. Hood, Tex.Com.App., 35 S.W.2d 93, 95. Purchaser is able to purchase, as respects broker's right to commission, if he is financially able to command the necessary funds to close the deal within the time required. Hersh v. Garau, 218 Cal. 460, 23 P.2d 1022. See Financially able.

Ablocatio /əblowkéysh(iy)ow/. A letting out to hire, or leasing for money. Sometimes used in the English form "ablocation."

Abmatertera /əbmətértərə/. Lat. In the civil law, a great-great-grandmother's sister (abavix soror). Called matertera maxima.

Abnepos /əbnépo(w)s/. Lat. A great-great-grandson. The grandson of a grandson or granddaughter.

Abneptis /əbnéptəs/. Lat. A great-great-granddaughter. The granddaughter of a grandson or granddaughter.

Abode. One's home; habitation; place of dwelling; or residence. Ordinarily means "domicile." Living place impermanent in character. Fowler v. Fowler, 156 Fla. 316, 22 So.2d 817, 818. The place where a person dwells. In re Erickson, 18 N.J.Misc. 5, 10 A.2d 142, 146. Residence of a legal voter. Pope v. Board of Election Com'rs, 370 Ill. 196, 18 N.E.2d 214, 216. Fixed place of residence for the time being. Augustus Co., for Use of Bourgeois v. Manzella, 19 N.J.Misc. 29, 17 A.2d 68, 70. For service of process, one's fixed place of residence for the time being; his "usual place of abode." Fed.R. Civil P. 4. Kurilla v. Roth, 132 N.J.L. 213, 38 A.2d 862, 864. See Domicile; Residence.

General abode. See Residence.

Abogado /əvowgáðow/. Sp. An advocate. See Bozero.

Ab olim /əb ówlam/. Of old.

Abolish. To do away with wholly; to annul; to repeal; to rescind; to abrogate; to dispense with. Put an end to. Stretch v. Murphy, 166 Or. 439, 112 P.2d 1018, 1021. Imports absolute destruction having its root in the Latin word "abolere," meaning to destroy utterly. Applies particularly to things of a permanent nature, such as institutions, usages, customs, as the abolition of slavery.

Abolishment. See Abolish.

Abolition. The destruction, annihilation, abrogation, or extinguishment of anything. See Abolish.

In the Civil, French and German law, abolition is used nearly synonymously with pardon, remission, grace.

A bon droit /éy bòn dróyt/. With good reason; justly; rightfully.

Aboriginal title /əbərijənəl táytəl/. Such title provides original natives of United States exclusive right to occupy lands and waters used by them and their ancestors before United States asserted sovereignty over such areas. Yankton Sioux Tribe of Indians v. State of S.D., C.A.S.D., 796 F.2d 241, 243.

Abortee /əbórtiy/. The woman upon whom an abortion is performed.

Abortifacient /əbórtáféyʃh(iy)ənt/. Drug or medicine capable of, or used for, producing abortion.

Abortion. The spontaneous or artificially induced expulsion of an embryo or fetus. As used in legal context, usually refers to induced abortion. For the law relating to abortion see Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 93 S.Ct. 705, 35 L.Ed.2d 147; Webster v. Reproductive Health Services, 109 S.Ct. 3040, 106 L.Ed.2d 410. See also Viability; Viable child.

Abortionist. One who performs abortions.

Abortus /əbórtəs/. Lat. An aborted fetus.

About. Near in time, quantity, number, quality, or degree. Substantially, approximately, almost, or nearly. Odom v. Langston, 351 Mo. 609, 173 S.W.2d 826, 829.

When used with reference to time, the term is of flexible significance, varying with the circumstances and the connection in which it is employed. But its use does not necessarily render time immaterial, nor make a contract one terminable at will. In a charter party, "about to sail" means just ready to sail. With relation to quantity, the term suggests only an estimate of probable amount. Its import is that the actual quantity is a near approximation to that mentioned, and it has the effect of providing against accidental variations. Norrington v. Wright, 115 U.S. 188, 6 S.Ct. 12, 29 L.Ed. 366. It may be given practically the same effect as the phrase more or less. Synonymous with "on" or "upon," as in offense of carrying concealed weapons. Near by, close at hand, convenient of access. Brown v. U. S., 30 F.2d 474, 475, 58 App.D.C. 311. As to number, it merely implies an estimate of a particular lot or class and not a warranty. In connection with distance or locality, the term is of relative significance, varying with the circumstances.

Aboutissement /abúwtismón/. Fr. An abuttal or abutment.

Above. Higher; superior. As, court above; plaintiff or defendant above. Above all incumbrances means in excess thereof. Principal, as distinguished from what is auxiliary or instrumental.

Abpatruus /əbpátruwəs/. Lat. A great-great-uncle; or, a great-great-grandfather's brother (abavi frater). It sometimes means uncle, and sometimes great-uncle.

Abridge. To reduce or contract; to diminish or curtail. Usually spoken of written language. See Abridgment.

Copyright law. To epitomize; to reduce; to contract. It implies preserving the substance, the essence, of a work, in language suited to such a purpose. In making extracts there is no condensation of the author's language, and hence no abridgment. To abridge requires the exercise of the mind; it is not copying. Between a compilation and an abridgment there is a clear distinction. A compilation consists of selected extracts from different authors; an abridgment is a condensation of the views of one author.

Abridgment. Condensation; contraction. An epitome or compendium of another and larger work, wherein the principal ideas of the larger work are summarily contained. Abridgments of the law are brief digests of the law, arranged alphabetically. In this context, the term "digest" (q.v.) has generally supplanted that of "abridgment." See also Abstract; Headnote; Syllabus.

As used in First Amendment (U.S.Const.) means neither more nor less than what it ordinarily means; abridgment occurs when legislative act either suppresses or substantially interferes with free speech. Keene v. Meese, D.C.Cal., 619 F.Supp. 1111, 1123.

Abridgment of damages. The right of the court to reduce the damages in certain cases. See Remittitur.

Abroad. In English chancery law, beyond the seas.

Abrogate /əbrəgeyt/. To annul, cancel, revoke, repeal, or destroy. To annul or repeal an order or rule issued by a subordinate authority; to repeal a former law by legislative act, or by usage.

Abrogation /əbrəgeyshan/. The destruction or annulling of a former law, by an act of the legislative power, by constitutional authority, or by usage. It stands opposed to rogation; and is distinguished from derogation, which implies the taking away only some part of a law; from subrogation, which denotes the substitution of a clause; from dispensation, which only sets it aside in a particular instance; and from antiqutation, which is the refusing to pass a law. Implied abrogation takes place when the new law contains provisions which are positively contrary to former laws, without expressly abrogating such laws; and also when the order of things for which the law has been made no longer exists. Ex parte Lum Poy, D.C.Wash., 23 F.2d 690.

For "Express abrogation," see that title. See also Annul; Repeal.

Abscond /əbskónd/. To go in a clandestine manner out of the jurisdiction of the courts, or to lie concealed, in order to avoid their process. To hide, conceal, or absent oneself clandestinely, with the intent to avoid legal process. Postponing limitations. Keck v. Pickens, 207 Ark. 757, 182 S.W.2d 873, 875. Fleeing from arresting or prosecuting officers of the state. See Fugitive.

Absconding debtor. One who absconds from his creditors to avoid payment of debts. A debtor who has intentionally concealed himself from his creditors, or withdrawn himself from the reach of their suits, with intent to frustrate their just demands. Such act was formerly an "Act of bankruptcy" (q.v.).

Absence. The state of being absent, removed, or away from one's domicile, or usual place of residence. Not present at particular time; opposite of appearance at a specified time. See also Seven years' absence.

Absent. Being away from; at a distance from; not in company with.

Absente /əbséntiy/. Lat. Being absent; often used in the old reports of one of the judges not present at the hearing of a cause.

Absente reo /əbséntiy riýow/. The defendant being absent.

Absentee. One who is absent from his usual place of residence or domicile.

Absentee landlord. Lessor of real property (normally the owner) who does not live on the premises.

Absentee voting. Participation (usually by mail) in elections by qualified voters who, because of serious illness, military service, or absence because of travel or other reasons, are unable to appear at the polls in person on election day. See also Proxy with respect to absent voting by stockholder.

Absentem accipere debemus eum qui non est eo loci in quo petitur /əbséntəm əksípəriy dəbiýməs iyəm kwáy nón est iyow lówsay in kwów pétətər/. We ought to consider him absent who is not in the place where he is demanded (or sought).

Absentia ejus qui reipublicæ causa abest, neque ei neque alii damosa esse debet /æbsénsh(iy)ə iyjəs kwáy ríyaypábləsiy kózá æbést, néykwiý iyay néykwiý æliýay dæmnoúwsə ésiy díybət/. The absence of him who is away in behalf of the republic (on business of the state) ought not to be prejudicial either to him or to another.

Absoile, assoil, assoile /əsóyl/. To pardon; to deliver from excommunication.

Absoluta sententia expositore non indiget /æbsəl(y)úwtə sánténsh(iy)ə ekspozatóriy non indajət/. An absolute sentence or proposition (one that is plain without any scruple, or absolute without any saving) needs not an expositor.

Absolute. Complete; perfect; final; without any condition or incumbrance; as an absolute bond (simplex obligatio) in distinction from a conditional bond. Unconditional; complete and perfect in itself; without relation to or dependence on other things or persons.

Free from conditions, limitations or qualifications, not dependent, or modified or affected by circumstances; that is, without any condition or restrictive provisions. Button v. Day, 205 Va. 629, 139 S.E.2d 91, 100.

As to absolute Conveyance; Covenant; Delivery; Divorce; Estate; Gift; Guaranty; Interest; Legacy; Nuisance; Nullity; Obligation; Property; Right; Rule; Sale; Title, see those titles.

Absolute deed. A document of conveyance without restriction or defeasance; generally used in contradistinction to mortgage deed. See Deed.

Absolute law. The true and proper law of nature, immutable in the abstract or in principle, in theory, but not in application; for very often the object, the reason, situation, and other circumstances, may vary its exercise and obligation. See also Natural law.

Absolute liability. Responsibility without fault or negligence. Rylands v. Fletcher, 3 H.L. 330; Clark-Aiken Co. v. Cromwell-Wright Co., Inc. (Mass.), 323 N.E.2d 876. See Strict liability.

Absolutely. Completely; wholly; without qualification; without reference or relation to, or dependence upon, any other person, thing, or event. Thus, absolutely void means utterly void; that which the law or nature of things forbids to be enforced at all. Absolutely necessary may be used to make the idea of necessity more emphatic. Independently or unconditionally, wholly or positively. Collins v. Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co., 178 Va. 501, 17 S.E.2d 413, 418.

Absolution. In Canon Law, a juridical act whereby the clergy declare that the sins of such as are penitent are remitted. Among Protestants it is chiefly used for a sentence by which a person who stands excommunicated is released or freed from that punishment.

In the Civil Law, a sentence whereby a party accused is declared innocent of the crime laid to his charge.

In French Law, the dismissal of an accusation.

Absolutism /æbsəl(y)uwtízəm/. In politics, a system of government in which public power is vested in some person or persons, unchecked and uncontrolled by any law, institution, constitutional device, or coordinate body. A government which is run by a dictator whose power is without restriction and without any checks or balances.

Absolve. To set free, or release, as from obligation, debt, or responsibility. State ex rel. St. Louis Car Co. v. Hughes, 348 Mo. 125, 152 S.W.2d 193, 194. See also Amnesty; Pardon; Release.

Absorption /æbzórpshən/. Act or process of absorbing. Term used in collective bargaining agreements to provide seniority for union members if employer's business is merged with another. Humphrey v. Moore, Ky., 375 U.S. 335, 84 S.Ct. 363, 369. Partial or complete payment of freight charges by seller or freight carrier. Costs not passed on to customer.

Absque /æbskwíy/. Without. Occurs in phrases taken from the Latin; such as those immediately following.

Absque aliquo inde redendo /æbskwíy ælækwow índiy redéndow/. Lat. Without reserving any rent therefrom; without rendering anything therefrom. A term used of a free grant by the crown.

Absque consideratione curiæ /æbskwíy kən-sidæreyshiyówniy kyúriýiy/. In old practice, without the consideration of the court; without judgment.

Absque dubio /æbskwíy d(y)úwbíyow/. Lat. Without doubt.

Absque hoc /æbskwíy hók/. Without this. These are technical words of denial, used in pleading at common law by way of special traverse, to introduce the negative part of the plea, following the affirmative part or inducement. See also Traverse.

Absque impetitione vasti /æbskwíy impætishiyówniy véystay/. Without impeachment of waste; without accountability for waste; without liability to suit for waste. A clause anciently often inserted in leases (as the equivalent English phrase sometimes is) signifying that the tenant or lessee shall not be liable to suit (impetitio) or challenged, or called to account, for committing waste. See Waste.

Absque tali causa /æbskwíy téylay kózá/. Lat. Without such cause. A form of replication, now obsolete, in an action ex delicto which works a general denial of the whole matter of the defendant's plea of de injuria.

Abstention doctrine. Doctrine of "abstention" permits a federal court, in the exercise of its discretion, to relinquish jurisdiction where necessary to avoid needless conflict with the administration by a state of its own affairs. Surowitz v. New York City Emp. Retirement System, D.C.N.Y., 376 F.Supp. 369, 376; Railroad Commission of Texas v. Pullman Co., 312 U.S. 496, 61 S.Ct.

643, 85 L.Ed. 971. See also Equitable abstention doctrine; Pullman abstention.

Abstinence. Refraining completely from indulgence in some act such as eating or drinking, unlike temperance which presupposes moderate indulgence. Mayfield v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y., 16 C.A.2d 611, 61 P.2d 83.

Abstract /əbstrækt/, n. A lesser quantity containing the virtue and force of a greater quantity; an abridgment. A transcript is generally defined as a copy, and is more comprehensive than an abstract. Summary or epitome, or that which comprises or concentrates in itself the essential qualities of a larger thing or of several things. Robbins Inv. Co. v. Robbins, 49 Cal. App.2d 446, 122 P.2d 91, 92. See Abridge; Abridgment; Digest; Headnote; Syllabus.

Abstract /əbstrækt/, v. To take or withdraw from; as, to abstract the funds of a bank. To remove or separate. To summarize or abridge.

Abstraction. Taking from with intent to injure or defraud. "Wrongful abstraction" is unauthorized and illegal taking or withdrawing of funds, etc., and appropriation thereof to taker's benefit. Pacific Coast Adjustment Bureau v. Indemnity Ins. Co. of North America, 115 Cal.App. 583, 2 P.2d 218, 219.

Abstract of a fine. In old English conveyancing, one of the parts of a fine, being an abstract of the writ of covenant, and the concord, naming the parties, the parcels of land, and the agreement. 2 Bl.Comm. 351. More commonly called the "note" of the fine. See Fine; Concord.

Abstract of record. A complete history in short, abbreviated form of the case as found in the record, complete enough to show the appellate court that the questions presented for review have been properly reserved. Synopsis or summary of facts, rather than table of contents of transcript. Abbreviated accurate and authentic history of (e.g. trial court) proceedings. Brown v. Reichmann, 237 Mo.App. 136, 164 S.W.2d 201, 207.

Abstract of title. A condensed history of the title to land, consisting of a synopsis or summary of the material or operative portion of all the conveyances, of whatever kind or nature, which in any manner affect said land, or any estate or interest therein, together with a statement of all liens, charges, or liabilities to which the same may be subject, and of which it is in any way material for purchasers to be apprised. An epitome of the record evidence of title, including maps, plats, and other aids. Commissioners' Court of Madison County v. Wallace, 118 Tex. 279, 15 S.W.2d 535, 536. An epitome of the conveyances, transfers, and other facts relied on as evidence of title, together with all such facts appearing of record as may impair the title. State ex rel. Freeman v. Abstracters Board of Examiners, 99 Mont. 564, 45 P.2d 668, 670. Memorandum or concise statement in orderly form of the substance of documents or facts appearing on public records which affect title to real property. State ex rel. Doria v. Ferguson, 145 Ohio St. 12, 60 N.E.2d 476, 478. See also Torrens title system.

Abstract question. One which does not rest upon existing facts or rights. Morris Plan Bank of Fort Worth v. Ogden, Tex.Civ.App., 144 S.W.2d 998, 1004. Hypothetical question. See also Hypothetical question; Moot.

Absurdity. Anything which is so irrational, unnatural, or inconvenient that it cannot be supposed to have been within the intention of men of ordinary intelligence and discretion. Obviously and flatly opposed to the manifest truth; inconsistent with the plain dictates of common sense; logically contradictory; nonsensical; ridiculous.

Abundans cautela non nocet /əbʊndənz kɔtiylə nɔn nɔsət/. Abundant or extreme caution does no harm. This principle is generally applied to the construction of instruments in which superfluous words have been inserted more clearly to express the intention.

Ab urbe condita /æb ʊrbiy kɔnditə/. From the founding of the city. See A.U.C.

Abus de confiance /əbyúw də kɔnfiyɔns əbyúws də kənfáyəns/. Fraudulently misusing or spending to anybody's prejudice goods, cash, bills, documents, or contracts handed over for a special object.

Abuse /əbyúws/, n. Everything which is contrary to good order established by usage. Departure from reasonable use; immoderate or improper use. Physical or mental maltreatment. Misuse. Deception.

To wrong in speech, reproach coarsely, disparage, revile, and malign. State v. Neubauer, 2 Conn.Cir. 169, 197 A.2d 93, 96. See Defamation.

Child abuse. See Child abuse.

Civil law. The destruction of the substance of a thing in using it. See Abuse, v.

Corporate franchise or entity. The abuse or misuse of its franchises by a corporation signifies any positive act in violation of the charter and in derogation of public right, willfully done or caused to be done. The use of rights or franchises as a pretext for wrongs and injuries to the public.

Discretion. "Abuse of discretion" is synonymous with a failure to exercise a sound, reasonable, and legal discretion. It is a strict legal term indicating that appellate court is of opinion that there was commission of an error of law by the trial court. It does not imply intentional wrong or bad faith, or misconduct, nor any reflection on the judge but means the clearly erroneous conclusion and judgment—one is that clearly against logic and effect of such facts as are presented in support of the application or against the reasonable and probable deductions to be drawn from the facts disclosed upon the hearing; an improvident exercise of discretion; an error of law. State v. Draper, 83 Utah 115, 27 P.2d 39; Ex parte Jones, 246 Ala. 433, 20 So.2d 859, 862. A discretion exercised to an end or purpose not justified by and clearly against reason and evidence. Unreasonable departure from considered precedents and settled judicial custom, constituting error of law. Beck v. Wings Field,

Inc., C.C.A.Pa., 122 F.2d 114, 116, 117. A judgment or decision by an administrative agency or judge which has no foundation in fact or in law. "Abuse of discretion" by trial court is any unreasonable, unconscionable and arbitrary action taken without proper consideration of facts and law pertaining to matter submitted. Harvey v. State, Okl.Cr., 458 P.2d 336, 338.

Drug abuse. See that title.

Female child. An injury to the genital organs in an attempt at carnal knowledge, falling short of actual penetration. Lee v. State, 246 Ala. 69, 18 So.2d 706, 707. But, according to other authorities, "abuse" is here equivalent to ravishment or rape. Any injury to private parts of girl constitutes "abuse" within meaning of criminal statute proscribing abuse of girl under age of 12 years in attempt to have carnal knowledge of her; mere hurting of private parts of girl, even though they are not bruised, cut, lacerated or torn, is sufficient. Ard v. State, 57 Ala.App. 250, 327 So.2d 745, 747. See also Carnal abuse; Child abuse.

Police officer. As used in statute prohibiting one from obstructing, resisting, or abusing an officer, word "abuses" means to wrong in speech, reproach coarsely, disparage, revile, or malign an officer who is performing his duty. State v. Neubauer, 2 Conn.Cir. 169, 197 A.2d 93.

Power. Use of one who possesses it in a manner contrary to law. Improper use of power, distinguished from usurpation of power which presupposes exercise of power not vested in the offender. Swenson v. Cahoon, 111 Fla. 788, 152 So. 203, 204.

Process. The gist of an action for "abuse of process" is improper use or perversion of process after it has been issued. Publix Drug Co. v. Breyer Ice Cream Co., 347 Pa. 346, 32 A.2d 413, 415. A malicious abuse of legal process occurs where the party employs it for some unlawful object, not the purpose which it is intended by the law to effect; in other words, a perversion of it. 500 West 174 St. v. Vasquez, 67 Misc.2d 993, 325 N.Y.S.2d 256, 258. Thus, where the purpose of a prosecution for issuance of a check without funds was to collect a debt, the prosecution is an abuse of criminal process. Regular and legitimate use of process, although with a bad intention, is not a malicious "abuse of process." Priest v. Union Agency, 174 Tenn. 304, 125 S.W.2d 142, 143. Action for "abuse of process" is distinguished from action for "malicious prosecution," in that action for abuse of process rests upon improper use of regularly issued process, while "malicious prosecution" has reference to wrong in issuance of process. Lobel v. Trade Bank of New York, 132 Misc. 643, 229 N.Y.S. 778, 781.

Fundamental elements of this tort are an ulterior purpose, and a willful act in the use of process not proper in the regular conduct of the proceeding. Barquis v. Merchants Collection Ass'n of Oakland, Inc., Cal., 7 C.3d 94, 101 Cal.Rptr. 745, 752, 496 P.2d 817.

See also Malicious abuse of legal process; Malicious use of process.

Abuse /əbyúwz/, v. To make excessive or improper use of a thing, or to employ it in a manner contrary to the natural or legal rules for its use. To make an extravagant or excessive use, as to abuse one's authority.

Abused and neglected children. Those who are suffering serious physical or emotional injury inflicted on them, including malnutrition. See Abuse (Female child); Child abuse.

Abusive. Tending to deceive; practicing abuse; prone to ill-treat by coarse, insulting words or harmful acts. Using ill treatment; injurious, improper, hurtful, offensive, reproachful.

Abut. To reach; to touch. To touch at the end; be contiguous; join at a border or boundary; terminate on; end at; border on; reach or touch with an end. The term "abutting" implies a closer proximity than the term "adjacent." No intervening land.

Abuttals /əbótəlz/. The buttings or boundings of lands, showing to what other lands, highways, or places they belong or are abutting. It has been used to express the end boundary lines as distinguished from those on the sides, as "buttals and sidings".

Abutter. One whose property abuts, is contiguous, or joins at a border or boundary, as where no other land, road, or street intervenes.

Abutting owner. An owner of land which abuts or adjoins. The term usually implies that the relative parts actually adjoin, but is sometimes loosely used without implying more than close proximity. See Abut; Adjoining owners.

A.C. Anno Christi, the year of Christ.

A/C Abbreviation used by accountants and bookkeepers meaning "account." As used in a check, it has been held not a direction to the bank to credit the amount of the check to the person named, but rather a memorandum to identify the transaction in which the check was issued.

Academic. Pertaining to college, university, or preparatory school. Sisters of Mercy v. Town of Hooksett, 93 N.H. 301, 42 A.2d 222, 225. A question or issue which is not relevant to case or is premature or hypothetical. In re Battell's Will, 286 N.Y. 97, 35 N.E.2d 913. See Academic question.

Academic freedom. Right to teach as one sees fit, but not necessarily the right to teach evil. Kay v. Bd. of Higher Education of City of N. Y., 173 Misc. 943, 18 N.Y.S.2d 821, 829. The term encompasses much more than teaching-related speech rights of teachers. Cary v. Board of Ed. of Adams-Arapahoe School Dist. 28-J, Aurora, Colo., C.A.Colo., 598 F.2d 535.

Academic question. An issue which does not require answer or adjudication by court because it is not necessary to case. A hypothetical or moot question. In re Electrolux Corp., 288 N.Y. 440, 43 N.E.2d 480. See Hypothetical question.

Academy. An institution of higher learning. An association of experts in some particular branch of art, literature, law, or science (e.g. American Academy of Matrimonial Lawyers). In its original meaning, an association formed for mutual improvement, or for the advancement of science or art; in later use, a species of educational institution, of a level between the elementary school and the college. U. S. ex rel. Jacovides v. Day, C.C.A.N.Y., 32 F.2d 542, 544; Sisters of Mercy v. Town of Hooksett, 93 N.H. 301, 42 A.2d 222, 225. In current usage, term commonly refers to private high school or one of the service academies (e. g. Air Force Academy). See School.

A cælo usque ad centrum /èy síyloŷ ðskwiŷ æd séntɾəm/. From the heavens to the center of the earth. Or more fully, Cujus est solum ejus est usque ad cælum et ad inferos. The owner of the soil owns to the heavens and also to the lowest depths. Or, Cujus est solum est usque ad cælum,—the owner of the soil owns to the heavens. This doctrine has, however, been abrogated; the flight of airplanes and oil and gas regulations have qualified the owner's dominion not only in the heavens but in the lowest depths. See Air rights.

A cancellando /èy kənsələndəŷ/. From cancelling. 3 Bl.Comm. 46.

A cancellis /èy kənsələs/. The Chancellor.

A cancellis curiæ explodi /èy kənsələs kyúriyŷ èkspləŷdŷ/. To be expelled from the bar of the court.

Acapte /ækæpt/. In French feudal law, a species of relief; a seignorial right due on every change of a tenant. A feudal right which formerly prevailed in Languedoc and Guyenne, being attached to that species of heritable estates which were granted on the contract of emphyteusis.

A causa de cy /ey kóza də síy/. For this reason.

Accedas ad curiam /æksiydəs æd kyúriyəm/. (Lat. That you go to court.) An original writ out of chancery directed to the sheriff, for the purpose of removing a replevin suit from a Court Baron or a hundred court to one of the superior courts of law. It directs the sheriff to go to the lower court, and enroll the proceedings and send up the record. 3 Bl.Comm. 34.

Accede. To consent; agree.

Accelerated Cost Recovery System. (ACRS). An accounting method whereby the cost of a fixed asset is written off for tax purposes over a prescribed period of time. Instituted by the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981, and modified by Tax Reform Act of 1986, the system places assets into one of various recovery periods and prescribes the applicable percentage of cost that can be deducted each year. I.R.C. § 168. See also Asset Depreciation Range.

Accelerated depreciation. Various methods of depreciation that yield larger deductions in the earlier years of the life of an asset than the straight-line method. Examples include the double declining-balance and the sum of the years' digits methods of depreciation. See Accelerated Cost Recovery System; Depreciation.

Acceleration. The shortening of the time for the vesting in possession of an expectant interest. Hastening of the enjoyment of an estate which was otherwise postponed to a later period. Blackwell v. Virginia Trust Co., 177 Va. 299, 14 S.E.2d 301, 304. If the life estate fails for any reason the remainder is "accelerated". Elliott v. Brintlinger, 376 Ill. 147, 33 N.E.2d 199, 201.

Doctrine of "acceleration", as applied to law of property, refers to hastening of owner of future interests toward status of present possession or enjoyment by reason of failure of preceding estate. Aberg v. First Nat. Bank in Dallas, Tex.Civ.App., 450 S.W.2d 403, 408. A remedy used where there has been an anticipatory repudiation or a possibility of a future breach. Rose City Transit Co. v. City of Portland, 18 Or.App. 369, 525 P.2d 1325, 1353.

Acceleration clause. A provision or clause in a mortgage, note, bond, deed of trust, or other credit agreement, that requires the maker, drawer or other obligor to pay part or all of the balance sooner than the date or dates specified for payment upon the occurrence of some event or circumstance described in the contract. Such clause operates when there has been a default such as nonpayment of principal, interest, or failure to pay insurance premiums. General Motors Acceptance Corp. v. Shuey, 243 Ky. 74, 47 S.W.2d 968. U.C.C. § 1-208 provides that if the provision for acceleration is "at will" such demand must be made only under a "good faith" belief that the prospect of payment is impaired.

Acceleration of remainders. Hastening of owner of remainder interest in property toward status of present possession or enjoyment by reason of failure preceding estate. Aberg v. First Nat'l Bank in Dallas, Tex.Civ.App., 450 S.W.2d 403, 408.

Acceleration premium. Increased rate of pay for increased production.

Accept. To receive with approval or satisfaction; to receive with intent to retain. Morris v. State, 102 Ark. 513, 145 S.W. 213, 214. Admit and agree to; accede to or consent to; receive with approval; adopt; agree to. Rocha v. Hulen, 6 Cal.App.2d 245, 44 P.2d 478, 482, 483. Means something more than to receive, meaning to adopt, to agree to carry out provisions, to keep and retain.

In the capacity of drawee of a bill, means to recognize the draft, and engage to pay it when due. See Acceptance.

Acceptance. The taking and receiving of anything in good part, and as it were a tacit agreement to a preceding act, which might have been defeated or avoided if such acceptance had not been made. The act of a person to whom a thing is offered or tendered by another, whereby he receives the thing with the intention of retaining it, such intention being evidenced by a sufficient act. Aetna Inv. Corporation v. Chandler Landscape & Floral Co., 227 Mo.App. 17, 50 S.W.2d 195, 197.

The exercise of power conferred by an offer by performance of some act. In re Larney's Estate, 148 Misc. 871, 266 N.Y.S. 564.

Commercial paper. Acceptance is the drawee's signed engagement to honor the draft as presented. It must be written on the draft, and may consist of his signature alone. It becomes operative when completed by delivery or notification. U.C.C. § 3-410. Certification of a check is acceptance. U.C.C. § 3-411. A draft may be accepted although it has not been signed by the drawer or is otherwise incomplete or is overdue or has been dishonored. U.C.C. § 3-410(2). See also Acceptor; Banker's acceptance; Honor.

Contracts. Compliance by offeree with terms and conditions of offer constitute an "acceptance". Davis & Clanton v. C. I. T. Corporation, 190 S.C. 151, 2 S.E.2d 382, 383. A manifestation of assent to terms thereof made by offeree in a manner invited or required by offer. K-Line Builders, Inc. v. First Federal Sa. & Loan Ass'n, App., 139 Ariz. 209, 677 P.2d 1317, 1320. The offeree's notification or expression to the offeror that he or she agrees to be bound by the terms of the offeror's proposal. A contract is thereby created. The trend is to allow acceptance by any means that will reasonably notify the offeror of the acceptance. See also Confirmation; Offer and acceptance.

Insurance. In a contract of insurance, the "acceptance" occurs when insurer agrees to accept application and to issue policy. Acacia Mut. Life Ass'n v. Berry, 54 Ariz. 208, 94 P.2d 770, 772. Delay or inaction on the part of an insurer cannot constitute an "acceptance". French American Banking Corporation v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., D.C.N.Y., 43 F.Supp. 494, 498. More than mere mental resolution or determination on part of insurer to accept application is required; such must be communicated to applicant. Limbaugh v. Monarch Life Ins. Co., Springfield, Mass., Mo.App., 84 S.W.2d 208, 212. Term as applied to policy means assent, acquiescence or agreement to terms and conditions of policy. Baker v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., Mo.App., 427 S.W.2d 281, 291.

Sale of goods. U.C.C. § 2-606 provides three ways a buyer can accept goods: (1) by signifying to the seller that the goods are conforming or that he will accept them in spite of their nonconformity, (2) by failing to make an effective rejection, and (3) by doing an act inconsistent with the seller's ownership. Acceptance of a part of any commercial unit is acceptance of that entire unit.

Types of acceptance.

Conditional. An engagement to pay the draft or accept the offer on the happening of a condition. A "conditional acceptance" is in effect a statement that the offeree is willing to enter into a bargain differing in some respects from that proposed in the original offer. The conditional acceptance is, therefore, itself a counter offer.

Express. An undertaking in direct and express terms to perform the terms of the contract, pay the bill, draft, etc.; an absolute acceptance.

Implied. An undertaking to pay the draft inferred from acts of the drawee of a character which fairly warrant such an inference. In case of a bilateral contract, "acceptance" of an offer need not be expressed, but may be shown by any words or acts indicating the offeree's assent to the proposed bargain.

Qualified. One either conditional or partial, and which introduces a variation in the sum, mode, or place of payment. In contract law, an acceptance based on a variation of the terms of the offer and hence a counter-offer. In negotiable instruments, a variation in the terms of the instrument by the acceptor.

Acceptance au besoin /əkseptóns òw bəzwán/. Fr. Acceptance in case of need. An acceptance by one whom a bill is drawn au besoin, that is, in case of refusal or failure of the drawee to accept.

Acceptare /əkseptéry/. Lat. To accept; to assent; to assent to a promise made by another.

Accepteur par intervention /əkseptýúr par əntərvonsýówn/. In French law, acceptor of a bill of honor.

Acceptilation /əkseptəléyshən/. In the civil and Scotch law, release made by a creditor to his debtor of his debt, without receiving any consideration. It is a species of donation, but not subject to the forms of the latter, and is valid unless in fraud of creditors. The verbal extinction of a verbal contract, with a declaration that the debt has been paid when it has not; or the acceptance of something merely imaginary in satisfaction of a verbal contract.

Acceptor. The person (the drawee) who accepts a draft and who engages to be primarily responsible for its payment. One who engages that he will pay the draft according to its tenor at the time of his engagement or as completed pursuant to authority on incomplete instruments. U.C.C. § 3-413.

Acceptor supra protest /əksépter s(y)úwprə prówtèst/. One who accepts a bill which has been protested, for the honor of the drawer or any one of the indorsers.

Access. Freedom of approach or communication; or the means, power, or opportunity of approaching, communicating, or passing to and from. Sometimes importing the occurrence of sexual intercourse, Jackson v. Jackson, 182 Okl. 74, 76 P.2d 1062, 1066; otherwise as importing opportunity of communication for that purpose as between husband and wife.

In real property law, the term "access" denotes the right vested in the owner of land which adjoins a road or other highway to go and return from his own land to the highway without obstruction. "Access" to property does not necessarily carry with it possession. People v. Brenneauer, 101 Misc. 156, 166 N.Y.S. 801, 806. See Access, easement of.

For purposes of establishing element of access by defendant in copyright infringement action, "access" is ordinarily defined as opportunity to copy. Musto v. Meyer, D.C.N.Y., 434 F.Supp. 32, 34.

Multiple access. The defense of several lovers in paternity actions. Yarmark v. Strickland, 193 So.2d 212.

Public records. The right of access to public records includes not only a legal right of access but a reasonable opportunity to avail oneself of the same. See Freedom of Information Act.

Accessory. See Accessory.

Access, easement of /'ɪzmənt əv ɔːksəs/. An easement of access is the right which an abutting owner has of ingress to and egress from his premises, in addition to the public easement in the street.

Accessio /'æksəʃ(i)əw/. In Roman law, an increase or addition; that which lies next to a thing, and is supplementary and necessary to the principal thing; that which arises or is produced from the principal thing; an "accessory obligation" (q.v.). One of the modes of acquiring property, being the extension of ownership over that which grows from, or is united to, an article which one already possesses.

Accessio includes both accession and accretion as used in the common law. See Adjunction.

Accession. Coming into possession of a right or office; increase; augmentation; addition.

The right to all which one's own property produces, whether that property be movable or immovable; and the right to that which is united to it by accession, either naturally or artificially. The right to own things that become a part of something already owned; e.g. riparian owners' right to abandoned river beds and rights of alluvion by accretion and reliction. Manry v. Robison, 122 Tex. 213, 56 S.W.2d 438, 443, 444. See Accretion.

A principle derived from the civil law, by which the owner of property becomes entitled to all which it produces, and to all that is added or united to it, either naturally or artificially, (that is, by the labor or skill of another) even where such addition extends to a change of form or materials; and by which, on the other hand, the possessor of property becomes entitled to it, as against the original owner, where the addition made to it by his skill and labor is of greater value than the property itself, or where the change effected in its form is so great as to render it impossible to restore it to its original shape.

Generally, "accession" signifies acquisition of title to personal property by bestowing labor on it which converts it into an entirely different thing or by incorporation of property into a union with other property. IDS Leasing Corp. v. Leasing Associates, Inc., Tex.Civ. App., 590 S.W.2d 607, 609.

The commencement or inauguration of a sovereign's reign.

International law. The absolute or conditional acceptance by one or several nations of a treaty already concluded between other sovereignties. It may be of two kinds: First, the formal entrance of a third nation into a treaty so that such nation becomes a party to it; and this can only be with the consent of the original parties. Second, a nation may accede to a treaty between other nations solely for the purpose of guarantee, in which case, though a party, it is affected by the treaty only as a guarantor. See Adhesion.

Accessions. Goods which are installed in or affixed to other goods. U.C.C. § 9-314(1). See also Fixture.

Accessorium non ducit, sed sequitur suum principale /'æksəsəriyəm nɒn dyuwsət sed sɛkwətər syuwəm prinsəpɛlyi/. That which is the accessory or incident does not lead, but follows, its principal.

Accessorius sequitur naturam sui principalis /'æksəsəriyəs sɛkwədər neytjūrəm syúway prinsəpɛyləs/. An accessory follows the nature of his principal. One who is accessory to a crime cannot be guilty of a higher degree of crime than his principal.

Accessory. Anything which is joined to another thing as an ornament, or to render it more perfect, or which accompanies it, or is connected with it as an incident, or as subordinate to it, or which belongs to or with it. Adjunct or accompaniment. Louis Werner Saw Mill Co. v. White, 205 La. 242, 17 So.2d 264, 270. A thing of subordinate importance. Aiding or contributing in secondary way or assisting in or contributing to as a subordinate. Gilfoil v. Greenspon, La.App., 216 So.2d 829, 831.

Criminal law. Contributing to or aiding in the commission of a crime. One who, without being present at the commission of a felonious offense, becomes guilty of such offense, not as a chief actor, but as a participator, as by command, advice, instigation, or concealment; either before or after the fact or commission; a particeps criminis. Model Penal Code, § 2.06.

One who is not the chief actor in the offense, nor present at its performance, but in some way concerned therein, either before or after the act committed. One who aids, abets, commands, or counsels another in the commission of a crime. See also Abettor; Aid and abet; Accomplice.

Accessory after the fact. A person who, knowing a felony to have been committed by another, receives, relieves, comforts or assists the felon, in order to enable him to escape from punishment, or the like. Robinson v. State, 5 Md.App. 723, 249 A.2d 504, 507; 18 U.S.C.A. § 3. See also Harbor; Obstructing justice.

Accessory before the fact. One who orders, counsels, encourages, or otherwise aids and abets another to commit a felony and who is not present at the commission of the offense. Com. v. Leach, 455 Pa. 448, 317 A.2d 293, 294. The primary distinction between the accessory before the fact and the principal in the second degree is presence. Virtually all states have now expressly abrogated the distinction between principals and accessories before the fact; the latter now being classified as principals.

Accessory during the fact. One who stands by without interfering or giving such help as may be in his power to prevent the commission of a criminal offense.

Accessory building. Structures used for benefit of main building; e.g. tool shed. Out-buildings.

Accessory contract. An accessory contract is made for assuring the performance of a prior contract, either by the same parties or by others; such as suretyship, mortgage, and pledge.

Accessory obligation. An obligation which is incidental to another or principal obligation; e.g. the obligation of a surety.

Accessory use. With reference to zoning law, an "accessory use" in its ordinary signification is a use which is dependent on or pertains to principal or main use. Town of Foxborough v. Bay State Harness Horse Racing & Breeding Ass'n, Inc., Mass.App., 366 N.E.2d 773, 777. A use which is subordinate to, clearly incidental to, customary in connection with, and ordinarily located on same lot with, principal use. Board of County Com'rs of Boulder County v. Thompson, 177 Colo. 277, 493 P.2d 1358, 1360.

Access to courts. Right of person to require fair hearing from judiciary. Gilmore v. Lynch, D.C.Cal., 319 F.Supp. 105, 110.

Accident. The word "accident" is derived from the Latin verb "accidere" signifying "fall upon, befall, happen, chance." In an etymological sense anything that happens may be said to be an accident and in this sense, the word has been defined as befalling a change; a happening; an incident; an occurrence or event. In its most commonly accepted meaning, or in its ordinary or popular sense, the word may be defined as meaning: a fortuitous circumstance, event, or happening; an event happening without any human agency, or if happening wholly or partly through human agency, an event which under the circumstances is unusual and unexpected by the person to whom it happens; an unusual, fortuitous, unexpected, unforeseen or unlooked for event, happening or occurrence; an unusual or unexpected result attending the operation or performance of a usual or necessary act or event; chance or contingency; fortune; mishap; some sudden and unexpected event taking place without expectation, upon the instant, rather than something which continues, progresses or develops; something happening by chance; something unforeseen, unexpected, unusual, extraordinary or phenomenal, taking place not according to the usual course of things or events, out of the range of ordinary calculations; that which exists or occurs abnormally, or an uncommon occurrence. The word may be employed as denoting a calamity, casualty, catastrophe, disaster, an undesirable or unfortunate happening; any unexpected personal injury resulting from any unlooked for mishap or occurrence; any unpleasant or unfortunate occurrence, that causes injury, loss, suffering or death; some untoward occurrence aside from the usual course of events. An event that takes place without one's foresight or expectation; an undesigned, sudden, and unexpected event. Kochring Co. v. American Auto. Ins. Co., C.A.Wis., 353 F.2d 993, 996. See also Act of God; Casualty; Inevitable accident; Unavoidable accident.

Its synonyms are chance, contingency, mishap, mischance, misfortune, disaster, calamity, catastrophe.

Automobiles. The word as used in automobile liability policy requiring notice of any "accident" to be given to the insurer as a condition precedent to liability means an untoward and unforeseen occurrence in the operation of the automobile which results in injury to the person or property of another. Ohio Casualty Ins. Co. v. Marr, C.C.A.Okl., 98 F.2d 973, 975. The word "accident", requiring operator of vehicle to stop immediately in case of accident, contemplates any situation occurring on the highway wherein driver so operates his automobile as to cause injury to the property or person of another using the same highway. See also Hit and run accident.

Insurance contract. An accident within accident insurance policies is an event happening without any human agency, or, if happening through such agency, an event which, under circumstances, is unusual and not expected by the person to whom it happens. A more comprehensive term than "negligence," and in its common signification the word means an unexpected happening without intention or design.

Maritime law. "Accidents of navigation" or "accidents of the sea" are such as are peculiar to the sea or to usual navigation or the action of the elements, which do not happen by the intervention of man, and are not to be avoided by the exercise of proper prudence, foresight, and skill. The G. R. Booth, 171 U.S. 450, 19 S.Ct. 9, 43 L.Ed. 234. See also Perils of the sea.

Unavoidable accident. One which is not occasioned in any degree, either directly or remotely, by the want of such care and prudence as the law holds every man bound to exercise. Vincent v. Johnson, Tex.Civ.App., 117 S.W.2d 135. One which could not have been prevented by exercise of due care by both parties under circumstances prevailing. Woodiwiss v. Rise, 3 Wash. App. 5, 471 P.2d 124, 126. One which occurs while all persons concerned are exercising ordinary care, which is not caused by fault of any of persons and which could not have been prevented by any means suggested by common prudence. Cavanaugh v. Jepson, Iowa, 167 N.W.2d 616, 623. See Restatement, Second, Torts § 8. See also Unavoidable accident.

Workers' compensation acts. Within meaning of Worker's Compensation Act is any unforeseen, untoward happening which was not to be reasonably anticipated. A.P. Green Refractories Co. v. Workmen's Compensation Appeal Bd., 8 Pa.Cmwith. 172, 301 A.2d 914, 917. As referred to in Act is an unlooked for and untoward event which is not expected or designed by injured employee; a result produced by a fortuitous cause. Reams v.

Burlington Industries, 42 N.C.App. 54, 255 S.E.2d 586, 587.

Accident policy. Type of business and personal insurance coverage that insures against loss resulting directly from bodily injuries effected during the term of the policy solely through accidental means.

Accidental. Happening by chance, or unexpectedly; taking place not according to usual course of things; casual; fortuitous. Norris v. New York Life Ins. Co., C.C.A.Md., 49 F.2d 62, 63; Murphy v. Travelers Ins. Co., 141 Neb. 41, 2 N.W.2d 576, 578, 579. See also Accident.

Accidental cause. That which produces result which is not foreseen; producing an unexpected effect. Fernandez v. Flint Bd. of Ed., C.A.Mich., 283 F.2d 906, 908. See also Accidental.

Accidental death. One caused by unexpected or unintended means. Sanders v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 104 Utah 75, 138 P.2d 239.

Accidental death benefit. Provision in insurance policy encompassing death caused by sudden, unexpected, external force. Maneval v. Lutheran Bros., Del.Super., 281 A.2d 502, 506.

Accidental killing. One resulting from an act which is lawful and lawfully done under a reasonable belief that no harm is possible; distinguished from "involuntary manslaughter," which is the result of an unlawful act, or of a lawful act done in an unlawful way.

Accidental means. Injury resulting from unintended, unforeseeable, and unexpected cause.

Accidental vein. See Vein.

Accident proneness. Tendency towards being involved in or contributing to accidents.

Accidere /æksidəri/. Lat. To fall; fall in; come to hand; happen. Judgment is sometimes given against an executor or administrator to be satisfied out of assets quando acciderint; i.e., when they shall come to hand.

Accion /æksiyówn/. In Spanish law, a right of action; also the method of judicial procedure for the recovery of property or a debt.

Accipere quid ut justitiam facias, non est tam accipere quam extorquere /æksípəriy kwíd òt jàstishiyàm féyshiyàs, nòn est tàm æksípəriy kwàm ekstórkwəriy/. To accept anything as a reward for doing justice is rather extorting than accepting.

Accipitare /æksipatériy/. To pay relief to lords of manors. Capitali domino accipitare, i.e., to pay a relief, homage, or obedience to the chief lord on becoming his vassal.

Accola /ækələ/. Civil law. One who inhabits or occupies land near a place, as one who dwells by a river, or on the bank of a river.

Feudal law. A husbandman; an agricultural tenant; a tenant of a manor. A name given to a class of villeins in Italy.

Accomenda /ækəméndə/. In maritime law, a contract between the owner of goods and the master of a ship, by which the former intrusts the property to the latter to be sold by him on their joint account. In such case, two contracts take place: First, the contract called mandatum, by which the owner of the property gives the master power to dispose of it; and the contract of partnership, in virtue of which the profits are to be divided between them. One party runs the risk of losing his capital; the other, his labor. If the sale produces no more than first cost, the owner takes all the proceeds. It is only the profits which are to be divided.

Accommodated party. One to whom the credit of the accommodation party is loaned, and is not necessarily the payee, since the inquiry always is as to whom did the maker of the paper loan his credit as a matter of fact; not third person who may receive advantage. See also Accommodation party.

Accommodation /ækòmədəyshən/. An arrangement or engagement made as a favor to another, not upon a consideration received. Something done to oblige, usually spoken of a loan of money or commercial paper; also a friendly agreement or composition of differences. The word implies no consideration. While a party's intent may be to aid a maker of note by lending his credit, if he seeks to accomplish thereby legitimate objects of his own, and not simply to aid maker, the act is not for accommodation. See Accommodation maker.

Accommodation bill or note. See Accommodation paper.

Accommodation indorsement. See Indorsement.

Accommodation indorser. A party who places his name to a note without consideration for purpose of benefiting or accommodating some other party. U.C.C. § 3-415. See also Indorsement.

Accommodation lands. Land bought by a builder or speculator, who erects houses thereon, and then leases portions thereof upon an improved ground-rent.

Accommodation line. Insurance policies accepted by insurer because agent or brokers account in general is satisfactory, even though specific policy would otherwise likely not be acceptable.

Accommodation loan. Loan furnished as an act of friendship or assistance without tangible or full consideration; money or credit extended for such reasons.

Accommodation maker. One who puts his name to a note without any consideration with the intention of lending his credit to the accommodated party. In re Chamberlain's Estate, Cal.App., 109 P.2d 449, 454. U.C.C. § 3-415. See also Accommodation party.

Accommodation note. One to which accommodating party has put his name, without consideration, to accommodate some other party, who is to issue it and is expected to pay it. U.C.C. § 3-415.

Accommodation paper. An accommodation bill or note is one to which the accommodating party, be he acceptor, drawer, or indorser, has put his name, without consideration, for the purpose of benefiting or accommodating some other party who desires to raise money on it, and is to provide for the bill when due. Hickox v. Hickox, Tex.Civ.App., 151 S.W.2d 913, 917. Such must be executed for the purpose of loaning credit, and incidental benefit to party is insufficient. Morrison v. Painter, Mo.App., 170 S.W.2d 965, 970.

Accommodation party. One who signs commercial paper in any capacity for purpose of lending his name (i.e. credit) to another party to instrument. U.C.C. § 3-415. Such party is a surety.

Accommodation road. A road opened for benefit of certain individuals to go from and to their homes, for service of their lands, and for use of some estates exclusively. See also Easement.

Accommodatum /əkòmədéytəm/. The same as Commodatum (q.v.).

Accompany. To go along with. To go with or attend as a companion or associate. To occur in association with. United States v. Lee, C.C.A.Wis., 131 F.2d 464, 466. The word has been defined judicially in cases involving varied facts; thus, an automobile driver under sixteen is not accompanied by an adult person unless the latter exercises supervision over the driver; an unlicensed driver is not accompanied by a licensed driver unless the latter is near enough to render advice and assistance.

Accomplice /əkómpłəs/. One who knowingly, voluntarily and with common intent unites with the principal offender in the commission of a crime. Smith v. State, Tenn.Cr.App., 525 S.W.2d 674, 676; Model Penal Code, § 2.06(3). One who is in some way concerned or associated in commission of crime; partaker of guilt; one who aids or assists, or is an accessory. McLendon v. U. S., C.C.A.Mo., 19 F.2d 465, 466. Equally concerned in the commission of crime. Fryman v. Commonwealth, 289 Ky. 540, 159 S.W.2d 426, 429. One who is guilty of complicity in crime charged, either by being present and aiding or abetting in it, or having advised and encouraged it, though absent from place when it was committed, though mere presence, acquiescence, or silence, in the absence of a duty to act, is not enough, no matter how reprehensible it may be, to constitute one an accomplice. One is liable as an accomplice to the crime of another if he gave assistance or encouragement or failed to perform a legal duty to prevent it with the intent thereby to promote or facilitate commission of the crime. See also Abet; Aid and abet; Accessory.

Accomplice liability. Criminal responsibility of one who acts with another before, during or after the perpetration of a crime. Model Penal Code, § 2.06.

Accomplice witness. A person who either as principal, accomplice, or accessory, was connected with crime by unlawful act or omission on his part, transpiring either before, at time of, or after commission of offense, and whether or not he was present and participated in crime. Johnson v. State, Tex.Cr.App., 502 S.W.2d 761, 763.

Accord, n. An agreement between two persons, one of whom has a right of action against the other, to settle the dispute. In a debtor/creditor relationship, an agreement between the parties to settle a dispute for some partial payment. It is called an accord because the creditor has a right of action against the debtor.

A satisfaction agreed upon between the party injuring and the party injured which, when performed, is a bar to all actions upon this account. An accord being a contract, the requirements of mutual assent and consideration must be met. Buob v. Feenaughty Machinery Co., 191 Wash. 477, 71 P.2d 559, 564. An agreement whereby one of parties undertakes to give or perform, and other to accept, in satisfaction of liquidated or disputed claim arising in either contract or tort something different or less from what he is or considers himself entitled to; and "satisfaction" is execution or performance of agreement. Harris, Upham & Co., Inc. v. Ballantyne, Tex.Civ.App., 538 S.W.2d 153, 158. It may arise both where the demand itself is unliquidated or in dispute, and where the amount and nature of the demand is undisputed, and it is agreed to give and take less than the demand. See Accord and satisfaction; Compromise and settlement; Executory accord; Satisfaction.

Accord, v. In practice, to agree or concur, as one judge with another. In agreement with. See Concur; Concurring opinion.

Accordance. Agreement; harmony; concord; conformity. City and County of San Francisco v. Boyd, 22 Cal.2d 685, 140 P.2d 666, 668.

Accord and satisfaction. A method of discharging a claim whereby the parties agree to give and accept something in settlement of the claim and perform the agreement, the "accord" being the agreement and the "satisfaction" its execution or performance, and it is a new contract substituted for an old contract which is thereby discharged, or for an obligation or cause of action which is settled, and must have all of the elements of a valid contract. Holm v. Hansen, Iowa, 248 N.W.2d 503, 506. An executory bilateral contract of "accord" is an agreement embodying a promise, express or implied, to accept at some future time a stipulated performance in satisfaction or discharge in whole or in part of any present claim, cause of action or obligation, and a promise express or implied to render such performance. Such arises where parties, by a subsequent agreement, have satisfied the former one, and the latter agreement has been executed. The execution of a new agreement may itself amount to a satisfaction, where it is so expressly agreed by the parties; and without such agreement, if the new promise is founded on a new consideration, in which case the taking of the new consideration amounts to the satisfaction of the former contract.

Accord and satisfaction may also arise in a criminal case. See e.g. Mass.Gen.L. c. 276, § 55.

In some jurisdictions, novation is a species of accord and satisfaction.

See Compromise and settlement; Novation; Satisfaction; Settlement.

Affirmative defense. A defense which must be pleaded affirmatively in the defendant's answer. Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(c).

Accordant /əkórdənt/. Fr. and Eng. Agreeing; concurring.

Accord executory. A bilateral agreement of settlement which has not yet been performed (satisfied). Restatement, Second, Contracts, § 281.

Accouchement /ækúwshmán/. The act of a woman in giving birth to a child. The fact of the accouchement, which may be proved by the direct testimony of one who was present, as a physician or midwife, is often important evidence in proving parentage.

Account. A detailed statement of the mutual demands in the nature of debit and credit between parties, arising out of contracts or some fiduciary relation. A statement in writing, of debits and credits, or of receipts and payments; a list of items of debits and credits, with their respective dates. A statement of pecuniary transactions; a record or course of business dealings between parties; a list or statement of monetary transactions, such as payments, losses, sales, debits, credits, accounts payable, accounts receivable, etc., in most cases showing a balance or result of comparison between items of an opposite nature.

See also Aging of accounts; Blocked account; Charge account; Community account; Custody account; Contra account; Escrow account; Impound account; Intermediate account; Liquidated account; Leger; Long account; Margin account; Nominal account; Stated account; Statement of account. For Open account, see Open.

Account annexed. Form of simplified statement used in pleading a common count (e.g. money had and received) impliedly authorized for use under Fed.R.Civil P. 8(a)(2).

Account balance. Difference between debit and credit sides of an account.

Account debtor. Person who is obligated on an account, chattel paper or general intangible. U.C.C. § 9-105(1)(a).

Account payable. A debt, owed by an enterprise, that arises in the normal course of business dealings and has not been replaced by a note payable of a debtor. For example, bills for materials received but not yet paid. Contract obligations owing by a person on open account. State Tax Commission v. Shattuck, 44 Ariz. 379, 38 P.2d 631, 639. A liability representing an amount owed to a creditor, usually arising from purchase of merchandise or materials and supplies; not necessarily due or past due.

Account receivable. A debt, owed to an enterprise, that arises in the normal course of business dealings and is not supported by negotiable paper. For example, the charge accounts of a department store. But income due from investments (unless investments are the business itself) is not usually shown in accounts receivable. A claim against a debtor usually arising from sales or services rendered; not necessarily due or past due. For accounts receivable insurance, see Insurance.

Account rendered. An account made out by the creditor, and presented to the debtor for his examination and acceptance. When accepted, it becomes an account stated.

Account settled. One in which the balance has been in fact paid, thereby differing from an account stated.

Account stated. An agreed balance between parties to a settlement. Eng v. Stein, 123 Ariz. 343, 599 P.2d 796, 800.

Adjunct account. An account that accumulates additions to another account.

Bank account. See Bank.

Book account. See Book.

Closed account. An account to which no further additions can be made on either side, but which remains still open for adjustment and set-off, which distinguishes it from an account stated.

Commercial transactions. In the check collection process, "any account with a bank and includes a checking, time, interest or savings account." U.C.C. § 4-104(1)(a). In secured transactions law, "any right to payment for goods sold or leased or for services rendered which is not evidenced by an instrument or chattel paper, whether or not it has been earned by performance," including ordinary accounts receivable and rights under a ship charter, U.C.C. § 9-106, and also the right to proceeds of a letter of credit. U.C.C. § 5-116(2).

Contra account. An account which serves to reduce the gross valuation of an asset, also known as a valuation allowance. For example, accumulated depreciation serves as a valuation allowance for machinery and equipment. Contrast with adjunct account, above.

Current account. An open or running or unsettled account between two parties; the antithesis of an account stated.

Mutual accounts. Accounts comprising mutual credits between the parties; or an existing credit on one side which constitutes a ground for credit on the other, or where there is an understanding that mutual debts shall be a satisfaction or set-off pro tanto between the parties. A "mutual account" arises when there are items debited and credited on both sides of the account which indicate mutual transactions between the parties. State for Use and Benefit of State Hospital v. Hintz, N.D., 281 N.W.2d 564, 567.

Open account. An account which has not been finally settled or closed, but is still running or open to future adjustment or liquidation. Open account, in legal as well as in ordinary language, means an indebtedness subject to future adjustment, and which may be reduced or modified by proof.

Account, or account render. "Account," sometimes called "account render," was a form of action at common law against a person who by reason of some fiduciary relation (as guardian, bailiff, receiver, etc.) was bound to render an account to another, but refused to do so. Peoples Finance & Thrift Co. of Visalia v. Bowman, 58 Cal.App.2d 729, 137 P.2d 729, 731.

Accountability. State of being responsible or answerable. See also Liability.

Accountable. Subject to pay; responsible; liable.

Accountable receipt. An instrument acknowledging the receipt of money or personal property, coupled with an obligation.

Accountant. Person who works in field of accounting and is skilled in keeping books or accounts; in designing and controlling systems of account; in giving tax advice and preparing tax returns.

An accountant authorized under applicable law to practice public accounting, and includes professional accounting association, corporation, or partnership, if so authorized. Bankruptcy Code, § 101.

Certified Public Accountant (CPA). An accountant who has satisfied the statutory and administrative requirements of his or her jurisdiction to be registered or licensed as a public accountant. In addition to passing the Uniform CPA Examination administered by the AICPA, the CPA must meet certain business experience, educational and moral requirements that differ from jurisdiction to jurisdiction. See also Auditor.

Cost accountant. See Cost.

Accountant privilege. Protection afforded to client from disclosure by accountant of materials submitted to or prepared by accountant.

Accountants, chartered. Persons skilled in the keeping and examination of accounts, who are employed for the purpose of examining and certifying to the correctness of accounts of corporations and others. British Commonwealth equivalent of Certified Public Accountant.

Accountant's lien. Possessory right of accountant to papers prepared by him and held until payment is made for his services.

Account book. A book kept by a merchant, trader, professional, or other person, in which are entered from time to time the transactions of his trade, business, or profession. Entries made therein are admissible in evidence as exception to hearsay rule under certain conditions. Fed.Evid.R. 803.

Account computatio. As term is used in proceedings of courts of law or equity, is some matter of debt and credit, or demand in nature thereof. Coleman v. Kansas City, 351 Mo. 254, 173 S.W.2d 572, 576.

Account for. To pay over to the person entitled thereto. U. S. v. Rehwald, D.C.Cal., 44 F.2d 663. To furnish substantial reasons or convincing explanation, make clear or reveal basic causes. People v. Weger, 251 C.A.2d 584, 59 Cal.Rptr. 661, 668.

Accounting. An act or a system of making up or settling accounts, consisting of a statement of account with debits and credits arising from relationship of parties. State ex rel. King v. Harvey, Miss., 214 So.2d 817, 819. Rendition of an account, either voluntarily or by order of a court. In the latter case, it imports a rendition of a judgment for the balance ascertained to be due. The term may include payment of the amount due.

In partnership law, is equitable proceeding for a complete settlement of all partnership affairs.

The methods under which income and expenses are determined for tax purposes. Major accounting methods are the cash basis and the accrual basis. Special methods are available for the reporting of gain on installment sales, recognition of income on construction projects (i.e., the completed-contract and percentage-of-completion methods), and the valuation of inventories (i.e. last-in first-out and first-in first-out). The various types of accounting methods appear below:

Accrual method. A method of keeping accounts which shows expenses incurred and income earned for a given period, although such expenses and income may not have been actually paid or received. Right to receive and not the actual receipt determines inclusion of amount in gross income. When right to receive an amount becomes fixed, right accrues. Obligations payable to or by taxpayer are treated as if discharged when incurred. H. Liebes & Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.9, 90 F.2d 932, 936. Entries are made of credits and debits when liability arises, whether received or disbursed. Insurance Finance Corporation v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.3, 84 F.2d 382. See also Accrual basis; Accrue (Taxation).

Cash method. The practice of recording income and expense only when cash is received or paid out; used in contradistinction to accrual method. See Cash basis accounting.

Completed contract method. A method of reporting profit or loss on certain long-term contracts. Under this method of accounting, gross income and expenses are recognized in the tax year in which the contract is completed. This method should be used only when the conditions or terms of the contract do not permit use of the percent of completion method.

Cost method. The practice of recording the value of assets in terms of their cost. See also Cost (Cost accounting).

Fair value method. Valuation of assets at present value, meaning same as actual value or market value. Kerr v. Clinchfield Coal Corp., 169 Va. 149, 192 S.E. 741, 744.

Flow through method. Type of calculation of depreciation used by regulated utilities for income tax purposes. Federal Power Commission v. Memphis Light, Gas, & Water Division, 411 U.S. 458, 93 S.Ct. 1723, 36 L.Ed.2d 426.

Installment method. Procedure applied in reflecting collection of sales price in installments.

Price level accounting. Modern method of valuing assets in a financial statement which requires use of gross national product to reflect current values. See also Change in accounting method.

See also Generally Accepted Accounting Principles; Generally Accepted Auditing Standards; Installment method; Interim statements; Percentage of completion method; Purchase method of accounting; T-Account; Trial (Trial balance).

Accounting for profits. Action for equitable relief against one in a fiduciary relation to recover profits taken in breach of relation.

Accounting period. The period of time, usually a year, used by a taxpayer in the determination of income and related tax liability. Unless a fiscal year is chosen, taxpayers must determine and pay their income tax liability by using the calendar year (i.e., January 1 through December 31) as the period of measurement. An example of a fiscal year is July 1 through June 30. A change in accounting periods (e.g., from a calendar year to a fiscal year) generally requires the consent of the Internal Revenue Service. Some new taxpayers, such as a newly formed corporation, are free to select either an initial calendar or a fiscal year without the consent of the Internal Revenue Service. See Annual accounting period; Fiscal year.

Accounting Research Bulletin (ARB). Statement on recommended accounting procedures issued by the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants' Committee on Accounting Procedure.

Accounting Series Release (ASR). The official pronouncements issued by the Securities and Exchange Commission to clarify accounting and auditing procedures to be followed in reports filed with the SEC.

Account in trust. Account established by an individual to be held in trust for the benefit of another.

Account party. The customer in a letter of credit transaction. Synonymous also with "applicant."

Account payable. See Account.

Account receivable. See Account.

Accounts receivable insurance. Insurance against loss due to inability to collect outstanding accounts receivable because of damage to or destruction of records.

Account stated. An agreed balance between parties to a settlement. Eng v. Stein, 123 Ariz. 343, 599 P.2d 796, 800. See also Account.

Accouple. /əkópəl/. To unite; to marry. Ne unques accouple /niy ʔnkwiwz əkópəl/ never married.

Accredit /əkredət/. To give official authorization or status. To recognize as having sufficient academic standards to qualify graduates for higher education or for professional practice. In international law: (1) To acknowledge; to receive as an envoy in his public character, and give him credit and rank accordingly. (2) To send with credentials as an envoy. This latter use is now the accepted one.

Accredited law school. Law school which has been approved by the state and the Association of American Law Schools and/or the American Bar Association. In certain states (e.g. Calif.) a law school might be accredited by the state, but not by either the AALS or ABA. In most states only graduates of AALS or ABA accredited law schools are permitted to take the state bar exam.

Accredited representative. As respects service of process, representative having general authority to act.

Accredulitare /əkredýlätérier/. Lat. To purge an offense by oath.

Accretion /əkriyshən/. The act of growing to a thing; usually applied to the gradual and imperceptible accumulation of land by natural causes, as out of the sea or a river.

Civil law. The right of heirs or legatees to unite or aggregate with their shares or portions of the estate the portion of any co-heir or legatee who refuses to accept it, fails to comply with a condition, becomes incapacitated to inherit, or dies before, the testator.

Land. Addition of portions of soil, by gradual deposition through the operation of natural causes, to that already in possession of owner. Willett v. Miller, 176 Okl. 278, 55 P.2d 90, 92. Accretion of land is of two kinds: By alluvion, i.e., by the washing up of sand or soil, so as to form firm ground; or by dereliction, as when the sea shrinks below the usual water-mark. The term "alluvion" is applied to deposit itself, while "accretion" denotes the act. However, the terms are frequently used synonymously. Land uncovered by gradual subsidence of water is not an "accretion" but a "reliction".

Trust property. Receipts other than those ordinarily considered as income.

See Accrue; Alluvion; Avulsion; Reliction.

Accroach. To encroach; to exercise power without authority.

Accrocher /ækrowshéy/. Fr. To delay; retard; put off. Accrocher un proces, to stay the proceedings in a suit.

Accrual accounting. See Accounting.

Accrual basis. A method of accounting that reflects expenses incurred and income earned for any one tax year. In contrast to the cash basis of accounting, expenses do not have to be paid to be deductible nor does income have to be received to be taxable. Unearned income (e. g., prepaid interest and rent) generally is taxed in the year of receipt regardless of the method of accounting used by the taxpayer. See Accounting.

Accrual, clause of. See Accruer, clause of.

Accrual method of accounting. See Accounting.

Accrue /əkrúw/. Derived from the Latin, "ad" and "creso," to grow to. In past tense, in sense of due and payable; vested. It means to increase; to augment; to come to by way of increase; to be added as an increase, profit, or damage. Acquired; falling due; made or executed; matured; occurred; received; vested; was created; was incurred. H. Liebes & Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.9, 90 F.2d 932, 936. To attach itself to, as a subordinate or accessory claim or demand arises out of, and is joined to, its principal. Lifson v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.8, 98 F.2d 508.

The term is also used of independent or original demands, meaning to arise, to happen, to come into force or existence; to vest, as in the phrase, "The right of action did not accrue within six years." Amy v. Dubuque, 98 U.S. 470, 476, 25 L.Ed. 228. To become a present right or demand; to come to pass. See also Vested.

Cause of action. A cause of action "accrues" when a suit may be maintained thereon, and the law in this regard differs from state-to-state and by nature of action (e.g. type of breach of contract, tort, etc.). Dillon v. Board of Pension Com'rs of City of Los Angeles, 18 Cal.2d 427, 116 P.2d 37, 39. For example, cause of action might "accrue" on date that damage is sustained and not date when causes are set in motion which ultimately produce injury, City of Philadelphia v. Lieberman, C.C.A.Pa., 112 F.2d 424, 428; on date of injury, Fredericks v. Town of Dover, 125 N.J.L. 288, 15 A.2d 784, 787; when actual damage has resulted, National Lead Co. v. City of New York, C.C.A.N.Y., 43 F.2d 914, 916; as soon as contract is breached, Wichita Nat. Bank v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., Tex.Civ.App., 147 S.W.2d 295, 297; in legal malpractice action, when the client knows or should know of attorneys error, Hendrickson v. Sears, 365 Mass. 83, 310 N.E.2d 131. The point in time at which a cause of action "accrues" is important for purposes of running of statute of limitations.

Taxation. Income "accrues" to taxpayer when there arises to him a fixed or unconditional right to receive it. Franklin County Distilling Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.6, 125 F.2d 800, 804, 805. But not unless there is a reasonable expectancy that the right will be converted into money or its equivalent. Swastika Oil & Gas Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.6, 123 F.2d 382, 384. Where taxpayer makes returns on accrual basis, item "accrues" when all events occur which fix amount payable and determine liability of taxpayer. Hudson Motor Car Co. v. U. S., Ct.Cl., 3 F.Supp. 834, 847. Tax "accrues" for deduction when all events have occurred which fix amount of tax and determine liability of taxpayer for it, although there has not yet been assessment or maturity. Elmhirst v. Dugan, D.C.N.Y., 14 F.Supp. 782, 784.

Accrued alimony. Alimony which is due but not yet paid.

Accrued compensation. Compensation earned but not yet paid.

Accrued depreciation. Formerly called accumulated depreciation. An accumulation of charges made over a period of time for the replacement of a fixed asset. The portion of the useful service life which for tax and financial statement purposes has expired. State ex rel. City of St. Louis v. Public Service Commission, 341 Mo. 920, 110 S.W.2d 749, 768. A loss which is not restored by current maintenance, and which is due to all factors involved causing ultimate retirement of the property, including wear, tear, decay, and inadequacy. Iowa-Illinois Gas & Electric Co. v. Iowa City, 255 Iowa 1341, 124 N.W.2d 840, 845. See also Depreciation (Accumulated depreciation).

Accrued dividend. A share of net earnings declared but not yet paid as a dividend.

Accrued expense. Expense incurred but not yet billed for nor paid.

Accrued income. Income which is earned but not yet billed and receivable. In re Schlinger's Will, 48 Misc.2d 345, 438, 265 N.Y.S.2d 32, 35.

Accrued interest. Interest that has been earned but is not yet received nor receivable.

Accrued liability. An obligation or debt which is properly chargeable in a given accounting period but which is not yet paid or payable.

Accrued right. A matured cause of action, as legal authority to demand redress. See Accrue (Cause of action).

Accrued salary. Compensation to employee which is incurred by an employer but not yet payable.

Accrued taxes. Taxes which are properly incurred in a given accounting period but not yet paid or payable.

Accruer (or accrual), clause of. An express clause, frequently occurring in the case of gifts by deed or will to persons as tenants in common, providing that upon the death of one or more of the beneficiaries his or their shares shall go to the survivor or survivors. The share of the decedent is then said to accrue to the others.

Accruing /əkrúwɪŋ/. Inchoate; in process of maturing. That which will or may, at a future time, ripen into a vested right, an available demand, or an existing cause of action. Arising by way of increase or augmentation. Globe Indemnity Co. v. Bruce, C.C.A.Okl., 81 F.2d 143, 153.

Accounting. Allocation of income and expense, which has been earned or incurred but not yet collected or paid out, to the accounting period in which the income is earned or expense incurred.

Accruing costs. Costs and expenses incurred after judgment.

Accruing interest. Running or accumulating interest, as distinguished from accrued or matured interest. Interest accumulating daily on the principal debt but not yet paid and payable.

Accruing right. One that is increasing, enlarging, or augmenting.

Acct. Abbreviation for "account", of such universal and immemorial use that the courts will take judicial notice of its meaning.

Accumulated depreciation. See Accrued depreciation.

Accumulated dividend. Dividend due shareholder which has not been paid. See Accumulative dividends; Dividend (Cumulative).

Accumulated earnings credit. A deduction allowed in arriving at accumulated taxable income for purposes of determining the accumulated earnings tax. See Accumulated earnings tax; Accumulated taxable income.

Accumulated earnings tax. A special tax imposed on corporations that accumulate (rather than distribute via dividends) their earnings beyond the reasonable needs of the business. The accumulated earnings tax is imposed on accumulated taxable income in addition to the corporate income tax. I.R.C. § 531 et seq. See also Accumulated taxable income; Excess profits tax.

Accumulated legacy. Portion of distributable estate not yet paid to legatees or donees.

Accumulated profits. Earned surplus or undivided profits. Flint v. Commissioner of Corporations and Taxation, 312 Mass. 204, 43 N.E.2d 789, 791, 792. Such include profits earned and invested. Commissioner of Corporations and Taxation v. Filoon, 310 Mass. 374, 38 N.E.2d 693, 698, 700.

Accumulated surplus. In statutes relative to the taxation of corporations, this term refers to the fund which the company has in excess of its capital and liabilities. See Retained earnings.

Accumulated taxable income. The base upon which the accumulated earnings tax is imposed. Basically, it is the taxable income of the corporation as adjusted for certain items (e.g., the Federal income tax, excess charitable contributions, the dividends received deduction) less the dividends paid deduction and the accumulated earnings credit. I.R.C. § 535. See Accumulated earnings tax.

Accumulations /əkyümyləyshənz/. Increase by continuous or repeated additions, or, if taken literally, means either profit accruing on sale of principal assets, or increase derived from their investment, or both. Adding of interest or income of a fund to principal pursuant to provisions of a will or deed, preventing its being expended. When an executor or other trustee masses the rents, dividends, and other income which he receives, treats it as a capital, invests it, makes a new capital of the income derived therefrom, invests that, and so on, he is said to accumulate the fund, and the capital and accrued income thus procured constitute accumulations.

Accumulations, rule against. A rule rendering an accumulation of income beyond the period of perpetuities void.

Accumulation trust. A trust in which the trustee is directed to accumulate income for a period of time before distribution.

Accumulative. That which accumulates, or is heaped up; additional. Said of several things joined together, or of one thing added to another.

Accumulative dividends. Same as cumulative dividends; characteristic of preferred stockholders' agreement by which they receive their agreed dividends before common stockholders. Dividends which accumulate from year to year when not paid. See Dividend (Cumulative).

Accumulative judgment. Where a person has already been convicted and sentenced, and a second or additional judgment is passed against him, the execution of which is postponed until the completion of the first sentence, such second judgment is said to be accumulative. See also Accumulative sentence.

Accumulative legacy. A second, double or additional legacy; a legacy given in addition to another given by the same instrument, or by another instrument. See also Legacy.

Accumulative sentence. A sentence, additional to others, imposed on a defendant who has been convicted upon an indictment containing several counts, each of such counts charging a distinct offense, or who is under conviction at the same time for several distinct offenses; one of such sentences to begin at the expiration of another. Consecutive sentences. See Sentence.

Accusation /əkyəzəyshan/. A formal charge against a person, to the effect that he is guilty of a punishable offense, laid before a court or magistrate having jurisdiction to inquire into the alleged crime. See Accuse; Indictment; Information.

Accusatory body. Body such as grand jury whose duty is to hear evidence to determine whether a person should be accused (charged) of a crime; to be distinguished from a traverse or petit jury which is charged with duty of determining guilt or innocence.

Accusatory instrument. A document in which an accusation of crime is set forth like an indictment, information or complaint.

Accusatory part. The "accusatory part" of an indictment is that part where the offense is named.

Accusatory pleading. An indictment or complaint in which a person is accused of crime and on which the government tries such person. Fed.R.Crim.P. 3.

Accusatory procedure. System of American jurisprudence in which the government accuses and bears the burden of proving the guilt of a person for a crime; to be distinguished from inquisitorial system. Rogers v. Richmond, 365 U.S. 534, 81 S.Ct. 735, 5 L.Ed.2d 760.

Accusatory stage. That stage of criminal proceedings at which right to counsel accrues to accused; such matures when officers have arrested accused, and officers have undertaken process of interrogations that lends itself to eliciting incriminating statements. People v. Bilderbach, 62 C.2d 757, 44 Cal.Rptr. 313, 315, 401 P.2d 921.

Accuse. To bring a formal charge against a person, to the effect that he is guilty of a crime or punishable offense, before a court or magistrate having jurisdiction to inquire into the alleged crime. See also Indictment; Information.

Accused. The generic name for the defendant in a criminal case. Person becomes "accused" within meaning of guarantee of speedy trial only at point at which either formal indictment or information has been returned against him, or when he becomes subject to actual restraints on his liberty imposed by arrest, whichever first occurs. State v. Almeida, 54 Haw. 443, 509 P.2d 549, 551.

Accuser. The person by whom an accusation is made (e.g. State or United States in criminal proceedings). A person who signs and swears to charges, directs charges be brought, or has interest other than official in prosecution of accused. U.S. v. Orsic, AFCMR, 8 M.J. 657, 658.

Accustomed. Habitual; often used; synonymous with usual or customary.

A ce /à sô/. For this purpose.

A cel jour /ə sél zhúr/. At this day.

Acequia /əsiykwiyə/. A ditch, channel, or canal, through which water, diverted from its natural course, is conducted, for use in irrigation or other purposes; public ditches.

Ac etiam /æk éshiyəm/. (Lat. And also.) The introduction of the statement of the real cause of action, used formerly in those cases where it was necessary to allege a fictitious cause of action to give the court jurisdiction, and also the real cause in compliance with the statutes. It is sometimes written acetiam. See Bill of Middlesex under Bill, definition 2.

Achieve subject matter. The English equivalent for patentability. Mesta Mach. Co. v. Federal Machine & Welder Co., C.C.A.Pa., 110 F.2d 479, 480.

Acid ratio test. Method of financial analysis involving ratio of cash and receivables to current liabilities. Sum of cash, marketable securities, and receivables divided by current liabilities. Also called the "quick ratio."

Acknowledge. To own, avow, or admit; to confess; to recognize one's acts, and assume the responsibility therefor.

Acknowledgment. To "acknowledge" is to admit, affirm, declare, testify, avow, confess, or own as genuine. Favello v. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n, 24 Cal.App.2d 342, 74 P.2d 1057, 1058. Admission or affirmation of obligation or responsibility. Weyerhaeuser Timber Co. v. Marshall, C.C.A.Wash., 102 F.2d 78, 81. Most states have adopted the Uniform Acknowledgment Act. See also Receipt.

Debt. The debtor's acknowledgment of the creditor's demand or right of action that will revive the enforceability of a debt barred by the statute of limitations. Part payment of obligation which tolls statute of limitations is a form of "acknowledgment of debt". In re Badger's Estate, 156 Kan. 734, 137 P.2d 198, 205.

Instruments. Formal declaration before authorized official, by person who executed instrument, that it is his free act and deed. The certificate of the officer on such instrument that it has been so acknowledged. See also Attestation clause; Certificate of acknowledgment; Jurat; Notary public; Verification.

Paternity. An avowal or admission that the child is one's own. Recognition of a parental relation, either by a written agreement, verbal declarations or statements, by the life, acts, and conduct of the parties, or any other satisfactory evidence that the relation was recognized and admitted.

A.C.L.U. American Civil Liberties Union.

A communi observantia non est recedendum /èy kəmyúwnəy obzərvəns(i)yə nón est riyəsədéndəm/. From common observance there should be no departure; there must be no departure from common usage. A maxim formerly applied to the practice of the courts, to the ancient and established forms of pleading and conveyancing, and to professional usage generally. Lord Coke applies it to common professional opinion.

A confectione /èy kənfèkshiyówniy/. From the making.

A confectione præsentium /èy kənfèkshiyówniy prəzəns(i)yəm/. From the making of the indentures.

A consiliis /èy kənsilyəs/. (Lat. consilium, advice.) Of counsel; a counsellor. The term is used in the civil law by some writers instead of a responsis.

A contrario sensu /èy kəntreíyow sénsiyuw/. On the other hand; in the opposite sense.

Acquainted. Having personal, familiar, knowledge of a person, event, or thing. "Acquaintance" expresses less than familiarity; familiarity less than intimacy. Acquaintance springs from occasional intercourse, familiarity from daily intercourse, intimacy from unreserved intercourse. Atkins Corporation v. Tourny, 6 Cal.2d 206, 57 P.2d 480, 483. To be "personally acquainted with," and to "know personally," are equivalent terms, Kelly v. Calhoun, 95 U.S. 710, 24 L.Ed. 544. When used with reference to a paper to which a certificate or affidavit is attached, it indicates a substantial knowledge of the subject-matter thereof.

Acquereur /ækərór/. In French and Canadian law, one who acquires title, particularly to immovable property, by purchase.

Acquest /ækwést/. An estate acquired newly, or by purchase.

Acquêts /àkéy/. In the civil law, property which has been acquired by purchase, gift, or otherwise than by succession. Immovable property which has been acquired otherwise than by succession. Profits or gains of property, as between husband and wife. Civil Code La. art. 2338. The profits of all the effects of which the husband has the administration and enjoyment, either of right or in fact, of the produce of the joint industry of both husband and wife, and of the estates which they may acquire during the marriage, either by donations made jointly to them both, or by purchase, or in any other similar way, even though the purchase be only in the name of one of the two, and not of both. See Community property; Conquêts.

Acquiesce /ækwiýés/. To give an implied consent to a transaction, to the accrual of a right, or to any act, by one's mere silence, or without express assent or acknowledgment.

Acquiescence /ækwiýésəns/. Conduct recognizing the existence of a transaction, and intended, in some extent at least, to carry the transaction, or permit it to be carried, into effect. It is some act, not deliberately intended to ratify a former transaction known to be voidable, but recognizing the transaction as existing, and intended, in some extent at least, to carry it into effect, and to obtain or claim the benefits resulting from it, and thus differs from "confirmation," which implies a deliberate act, intended to renew and ratify a transaction known to be voidable. De Boe v. Prentice Packing & Storage Co., 172 Wash. 514, 20 P.2d 1107, 1110. Passive compliance or satisfaction; distinguished from avowed consent on the one hand, and, on the other, from opposition or open discontent. Paul v. Western Distributing Co., 142 Kan. 816, 52 P.2d 379, 387. Conduct from which assent may be reasonably inferred. Frank v. Wilson & Co., 24 Del.Ch. 237, 9 A.2d 82, 86. Equivalent to assent inferred from silence with knowledge or from encouragement and presupposes knowledge and assent. Imports tacit consent, concurrence, acceptance or assent. Natural Soda Products Co. v. City of Los Angeles, Cal. App., 132 P.2d 553, 563. A silent appearance of consent. Failure to make any objections. Submission to an act of which one had knowledge. Exists where a person knows or ought to know that he is entitled to enforce his right or to impeach a transaction, and neglects to do so for such a length of time as would imply that he intended to waive or abandon his right. Yench v. Stockmar, C.A. Colo., 483 F.2d 820, 834.

It is to be distinguished from avowed consent, on the one hand, and from open discontent or opposition, on the other.

Acquiescence and laches are cognate but not equivalent terms. The former is a submission to, or resting satisfied with, an existing state of things, while laches implies a neglect to do that which the party ought to do for his own benefit or protection. Hence laches may be evidence of acquiescence. Laches imports a merely passive assent, while acquiescence implies active assent. In re Wilbur's Estate, 334 Pa. 45, 5 A.2d 325, 331. "Acquiescence" relates to inaction during performance of an act while "laches" relates to delay after act is done.

See also Admission; Confession; Estoppel; Nonacquiescence; Ratification.

Administrative agencies. An administrative agency's policy of agreeing to be bound by judicial precedent which is contrary to the agency's interpretation of its organic statute. Compare Nonacquiescence.

Acquiescence, estoppel by. Acquiescence is a species of estoppel. An estoppel arises where party aware of his rights sees other party acting upon mistaken notion of his rights. Injury accruing from one's acquiescence in another's action to his prejudice creates "estoppel". Lebold v. Inland Steel Co., C.C.A.Ill., 125 F.2d 369, 375. Passive conduct on the part of one who has knowledge of the facts may be basis of estoppel. Winslow v. Burns, 47 N.M. 29, 132 P.2d 1048, 1050. It must appear that party to be estopped was bound in equity and good conscience to speak and that party claiming estoppel relied upon acquiescence and was misled thereby to change his position to his prejudice. Sherlock v. Greaves, 106 Mont. 206, 76 P.2d 87, 91. See also Estoppel.

Acquietandis plegiis /ækwiýətándəs plíjýýəs/. A writ of justices, formerly lying for the surety against a creditor who refuses to acquit him after the debt has been satisfied.

Acquire. To gain by any means, usually by one's own exertions; to get as one's own; to obtain by search, endeavor, investment, practice, or purchase; receive or gain in whatever manner; come to have. In law of contracts and of descents, to become owner of property; to make property one's own. To gain ownership of. Commissioner of Insurance v. Broad Street Mut. Casualty Ins. Co., 312 Mass. 261, 44 N.E.2d 683, 684. The act of getting or obtaining something which may be already in existence, or may be brought into existence through means employed to acquire it. Ronnow v. City of Las Vegas, 57 Nev. 332, 65 P.2d 133, 140. Sometimes used in the sense of "procure." It does not necessarily mean that title has passed. Includes taking by devise. U. S. v. Merriam, 263 U.S. 179, 44 S.Ct. 69, 70, 68 L.Ed. 240. See also Accession; Acquisition; Purchase.

Acquired rights. Those which one does not naturally enjoy, but which are owing to his or her own procurement, as sovereignty, or the right of commanding, or the right of property.

Acquired surplus. Surplus arising from changes of the capital structure of one or more businesses; e.g. from the purchase of one business by another business.

Acquisition /ækwəzishən/. The act of becoming the owner of certain property; the act by which one acquires or procures the property in anything. State ex rel. Fisher v. Sherman, 135 Ohio St. 458, 21 N.E.2d 467, 470. Used also of the thing acquired. Taking with, or against, consent. Scribner v. Wikstrom, 93 N.H. 17, 34 A.2d 658, 660. Term refers especially to a material possession obtained by any means. Jones v. State, 126 Tex.Cr.R. 469, 72 S.W.2d 260, 263.

See Accession; Acquire; Purchase; Tender offer.

Derivative acquisitions are those which are procured from others. Goods and chattels may change owners by act of law in the cases of forfeiture, succession, marriage, judgment, insolvency, and intestacy; or by act of the parties, as by gift or sale.

Original acquisition is that by which a man secures a property in a thing which is not at the time he acquires it, and in its then existing condition, the property of any other individual. It may result from occupancy; accession; intellectual labor—namely, for inventions, which are secured by patent rights; and for the authorship of books, maps, and charts, which is protected by copy-rights.

An acquisition may result from the act of the party himself, or those who are in his power acting for him, as his children while minors.

Acquisitive offenses. A generic term to describe all forms of larceny and offenses against the title or possession of property.

Acquit /əkwi:t/. To set free, release or discharge as from an obligation, burden or accusation. To absolve one from an obligation or a liability; or to legally certify the innocence of one charged with crime. See also Acquittal.

Acquittal. See Absolution.

Acquittal /əkwi:təl/. Contracts. A release, absolution, or discharge from an obligation, liability, or engagement.

Criminal law. The legal and formal certification of the innocence of a person who has been charged with crime; a deliverance or setting free a person from a charge of guilt; finding of not guilty. Also, one legally acquitted by a judgment rendered otherwise than in pursuance of a verdict, as where he is discharged by a magistrate because of the insufficiency of the evidence, or the indictment is dismissed by the court or a nol. pros. entered. Or, it may occur even though the question of guilt or innocence has never been submitted to a jury, as where a defendant, having been held under an indictment or information, is discharged because not brought to trial within the time provided by statute.

Acquittals in fact are those which take place when the jury, upon trial, finds a verdict of not guilty.

Acquittals in law are those which take place by mere operation of law; as where a man has been charged merely as an accessory, and the principal has been acquitted.

See Autrefois acquit; Jeopardy; Nolle prosequi; Verdict.

Feudal law. The obligation on the part of a mesne lord to protect his tenant from any claims, entries or molestations by lords paramount arising out of the services due to them by the mesne lord.

Acquittance /əkwi:təns/. A written discharge, whereby one is freed from an obligation to pay money or perform a duty. This word, though perhaps not strictly speaking synonymous with "receipt," includes it. A receipt is one form of an acquittance; a discharge is another. A receipt in full is an acquittance, and a receipt for a part of a demand or obligation is an acquittance pro tanto.

Acquitted /əkwi:təd/. Released; absolved; purged of an accusation. Judicially discharged from accusation; released from debt, etc. Includes both civil and criminal prosecutions. See Acquittal.

Acre. A quantity of land containing 160 square rods, 4,840 square yards, or 43,560 square feet of land, in whatever shape. See Land measure.

Net acre. The amount of actual acreage that may be used for building lots after installation of streets, sidewalks, etc.

Acre foot. 325,850 gallons, or the amount of water which will cover one acre one foot in depth.

Acre right. Formerly the share of a citizen of a New England town in the common lands. The value of the acre right was a fixed quantity in each town, but varied in different towns. A 10-acre lot or right in a certain town was equivalent to 113 acres of upland and 12 acres of meadow, and a certain exact proportion was maintained between the acre right and salable lands.

Across. From side to side. Transverse to the length of. It may mean "over," or "upon and along," or "upon," or "within".

ACRS. See Accelerated Cost Recovery System.

Act, n. Denotes external manifestation of actor's will. Restatement, Second, Torts § 2. Expression of will or purpose, carrying idea of performance; primarily that which is done or doing; exercise of power, or effect of which power exerted is cause; a performance; a deed. In its most general sense, this noun signifies something done voluntarily by a person; the exercise of an individual's power; an effect produced in the external world by an exercise of the power of a person objectively, prompted by intention, and proximately caused by a motion of the will. In a more technical sense, it means something done voluntarily by a person, and of such a nature that certain legal consequences attach to it. Thus a grantor acknowledges the conveyance to be his "act and deed," the terms being synonymous. It may denote something done by an individual, as a private citizen, or as an officer; or by a body of men, as a legislature, a council, or a court of justice; including not merely physical acts, but also decrees, edicts, laws, judgments, resolves, awards, and determinations. Some general laws made by the Congress of the United States are styled joint resolutions, and these have the same force and effect as those styled acts.

Acts under private signature are those which have been made by private individuals under their hands.

Criminal act. External manifestation of one's will which is prerequisite to criminal responsibility. There can be no crime without some act, affirmative or negative. An omission or failure to act may constitute an act for purpose of criminal law.

Legislative act. An alternative name for statutory law. A bill which has been enacted by legislature into law. When introduced into the first house of the legislature, a piece of proposed legislation is known as a bill. When passed to the next house, it may then be referred to as an act. After enactment the terms "law" and "act" may be used interchangeably. An act has the same legislative force as a joint resolution but is technically distinguishable, being of a different form and introduced with the words "Be it enacted" instead of "Be it resolved."

Acts are either public or private. Public acts (also called general acts, or general statutes, or statutes at large) are those which relate to the community generally, or establish a universal rule for the governance of the whole body politic. Private acts (formerly called special), are those which relate either to particular persons (personal acts) or to particular places (local acts), or which operate only upon specified individuals or their private concerns. Unity v. Burrage, 103 U.S. 447, 454, 26 L.Ed. 465. Public acts are those which concern the whole community and of which courts of law are bound to take judicial notice.

A "special" or "private" act is one operating only on particular persons and private concerns. A "local act" is one applicable only to a particular part of the legislative jurisdiction.

See also Governmental act; Legislation; Legislative act; Statute.

Private acts are those made by private persons as registers in relation to their receipts and expenditures, schedules, acquittances, and the like.

Public acts are those which have a public authority, and which have been made before public officers, are authorized by a public seal, have been made public by the authority of a magistrate, or which have been extracted and been properly authenticated from public records.

Acta diurna /æktə dayǝrnə/. Lat. In the Roman law, daily acts or chronicles; the public registers or journals of the daily proceedings of the senate, assemblies of the people, courts of justice, etc. Supposed to have resembled a modern newspaper.

Acta exteriora indicant interiora secreta /æktə ekstiriyórə indækənt intiriyórə sækriytə/. External acts indicate undisclosed thoughts.

Acta in uno iudicio non probant in alio nisi inter easdem personas /æktə in yúnnow juwdishiyow non prówbənt in éyliyow náysay intər iyéysdəm pərsównəs/. Things done in one action cannot be taken as evidence in another, unless it be between the same parties.

Acta publica /æktə pówbləkə/. Lat. Things of general knowledge and concern; matters transacted before certain public officers.

Acte /ækt/ákt/. In French law, denotes a document, or formal, solemn writing, embodying a legal attestation that something has been done, corresponding to one sense or use of the English word "act."

Actes de naissance are the certificates of birth, and must contain the day, hour, and place of birth, together with the sex and intended christian name of the child, and the names of the parents and of the witnesses. Actes de mariage are the marriage certificates, and contain names, professions, ages, and places of birth and domicile of the two persons marrying, and of their parents; also the consent of these latter, and the mutual agreements of the intended husband and wife to take each other for better and worse, together with the usual attestations. Actes de décès are the certificates of death, which are required to be drawn up before any one may be buried. Les actes de l'état civil are public documents.

Acte authentique /ákt òtontiyk/. A deed executed with certain prescribed formalities, in the presence of a notary, mayor, greffier, huissier, or other functionary qualified to act in the place in which it is drawn up.

Acte de francisation /ákt də fránkəzasyówn/. The certificate of registration of a ship, by virtue of which its French nationality is established.

Acte d'héritier /ákt dəyrətyéy/. Act of inheritance. Any action or fact on the part of an heir which manifests his intention to accept the succession; the acceptance may be express or tacit.

Acte extrajudiciaire /ákt ètrəjuwdisksiyéy/. A document served by a huissier, at the demand of one party upon another party, without legal proceedings.

Acting. Doing duty for another. Officiating or holding a temporary rank or position or performing services temporarily; as, an acting captain, manager, president. Pellecchia v. Mattia, 121 N.J.L. 21, 1 A.2d 28. Performing; operating.

Acting executor. One who assumes to act as executor for a decedent, not being the executor legally appointed or the executor in fact.

Acting officer. Term is used to designate, not an appointed incumbent, but merely a locum tenens, who is performing the duties of an office to which he himself does not claim title.

Acting within scope of employment. See Scope of employment.

Act in pais /ákt in péy(s)/. An act done out of court, and not a matter of record. A deed or an assurance transacted between two or more private persons in the country, that is, according to the old common law, upon the very spot to be transferred, is matter in pais.

Actio /ækshiyow/. Lat. In the civil law, an action or suit; a right or cause of action. Term means both the proceeding to enforce a right in a court and the right itself which is sought to be enforced.

Actio ad exhibendum /ækshiyow æd ègzibéndəm/. An action for the purpose of compelling a defendant to exhibit a thing or title in his power. It was preparatory to another action, which was always a real action in the sense of the Roman law; that is, for the recovery of a thing, whether it was movable or immovable.

Actio æstimatoria; actio quanti minoris /ækshiyow iystəmətóriyə ækshiyow kwóntay mənóras/. In the criminal law, two names of an action which lay in behalf of a buyer to reduce the contract price proportionately to the defects of the object, not to cancel the sale; the judex had power, however, to cancel the sale.

Actio arbitraria /ækshiyow árbətrériyə/. Action depending on the discretion of the judge. In this, unless defendant would make amends to plaintiff as dictated by the judge in his discretion, he was liable to be condemned.

Actio bonæ fidei /ækshiyow bówniy fáydíyay/. An action of good faith. A class of actions in which the judge might at the trial ex officio take into account any equitable circumstances that were presented to him affecting either of the parties to the action.

Actio calumniæ /ækshiyow kəlómniyiv/. An action to restrain defendant from prosecuting a groundless proceeding or trumped-up charge against plaintiff. An action for malicious prosecution.

Actio civilis /ækshiyow sívələs/. In the common law, a civil action, as distinguished from a criminal action.

Actio commodati /ækshiyow kòmədéytay/. Inclusion of several actions appropriate to enforce the obligations of a borrower or a lender.

Actio commodati contraria /ækshiyow kòmədéytay kənt්රéiyə/. An action by the borrower against the lender, to compel the execution of the contract.

Actio commodati directa /ækshiyow kòmədéytay dərékta/. An action by a lender against a borrower, the principal object of which is to obtain a restitution of the thing lent.

Actio communi dividundo /ækshiyow kəmyúwnay divədándow/. An action to procure a judicial division of joint property. It was analogous in its object to proceedings for partition in modern law.

Actio condictio indebitati /ækshiyow kəndishiyow indébétéytay/. An action by which the plaintiff recovers the amount of a sum of money or other thing he paid by mistake.

Actio confessoria /ækshiyow kònfəsóriyə/. An affirmative petitory action for the recognition and enforcement of a servitude. So called because based on plaintiff's affirmative allegation of a right in defendant's land. Distinguished from an actio negatoria, which was brought to repel a claim of defendant to a servitude in plaintiff's land.

Actio contrario /ækshiyow kənt්රéiyow/. Counter action or cross action.

Actio criminalis /ækshiyow krímənéyləs/. Criminal action.

Actio damni injuria /ækshiyow dámnay injúriyə/. The name of a general class of actions for damages, including many species of suits for losses caused by wrongful or negligent acts. The term is about equivalent to our "action for damages."

Actio de dolo malo /ækshiyow diy dówlow məlow/. An action of fraud; an action which lay for a defrauded person against the defrauder and his heirs, who had been enriched by the fraud, to obtain the restitution of the thing of which he had been fraudulently deprived, with all its accessions (cum omni causa;) or, where this was not practicable, for compensation in damages.

Actio de peculio /ækshiyow diy pəkyúwliyow/. An action concerning or against the peculium, or separate property of a party.

Actio de pecunia constituta /ækshiyow diy pəkyúwniyə kònstətyúwda/. An action for money engaged to be paid; an action which lay against any person who had engaged to pay money for himself, or for another without any formal stipulation.

Actio depositi contraria /ækshiyow dəpózətay kənt්රéiyə/. An action which the depositary has against the depositor, to compel him to fulfil his engagement towards him.

Actio depositi directa /ækshiyow dəpózətay dərékta/. An action which is brought by the depositor against the depositary, in order to get back the thing deposited.

Actio de tigno juncto /ækshiyow diy tignow jəŋktow/. An action by the owner of material built by another into his building.

Actio directa /ækshiyow dərékta/. A direct action; an action founded on strict law, and conducted according to fixed forms; an action founded on certain legal obligations which from their origin were accurately defined and recognized as actionable. See Actio utilis.

Actio empti /ækshiyow ém(p)tay/. An action employed in behalf of a buyer to compel a seller to perform his obligations or pay compensation; also to enforce any special agreements by him, embodied in a contract of sale. See Specific performance.

Actio ex conducto /ækshiyow èks kəndáktow/. An action which the bailor of a thing for hire may bring against the bailee, in order to compel him to redeliver the thing hired.

Actio ex contractu /ækshiyow èks kənt්රəktuyw/. In the civil and common law, an action of contract; an action arising out of, or founded on, contract. 3 Bl. Comm. 117.

Actio ex delicto /ækshiyow èks dəlíktow/. In the civil and common law, an action of tort; an action arising out of fault, misconduct, or malfeasance. 3 Bl. Comm. 117. Ex maleficio is the more common expression of the civil law; which is adopted by Bracton.

Actio exercitoria /ækshiyow egzərsətóriyə/. An action against the exercitor or employer of a vessel.

Actio ex locato /ækshiyow èks lowkétow/. An action upon letting; an action which the person who let a thing for hire to another might have against the hirer.

Actio ex stipulatu /ækshiyow eks stípyaléytyw/. An action brought to enforce a stipulation.

Actio familiæ erciscundæ /ækshiyow fəmilíyiy ərsískəndiy/. An action for the partition of an inheritance.

Actio furti /ækshiyow fərtay/. An action of theft; an action founded upon theft. This could be brought only for the penalty attached to the offense, and not to recover the thing stolen, for which other actions were provided. An appeal of larceny. The old process by which a thief can be pursued and the goods vindicated.

Actio honoraria /ækshiyow (h)onərəriyə/. An honorary, or praetorian action. Actiones honorariæ are those forms of remedies which were gradually introduced by the praetors and ædiles, by virtue of their equitable powers, in order to prevent the failure of justice which too often resulted from the employment of the actiones civiles. These were found so beneficial in practice that they eventually supplanted the old remedies, of which in the time of Justinian hardly a trace remained.

Actio in factum /ækshiyow in fæktəm/. An action adapted to the particular case, having an analogy to some actio in jus, the latter being founded on some subsisting acknowledged law. The origin of these actions is similar to that of actions on the case at common law.

Actio in personam /ækshiyow in pərsónəm/. In the civil law, an action against the person, founded on a personal liability; an action seeking redress for the violation of a jus in personam or right available against a particular individual. See In personam.

Actio in rem /ækshiyow in rém/. In the civil and common law, an action for a thing; an action for the recovery of a thing possessed by another. An action for the enforcement of a right (or for redress for its invasion) which was originally available against all the world, and not in any special sense against the individual sued, until he violated it. See In rem.

Actio iudicati /ækshiyow jüwdakéytay/. In the civil law, an action instituted after four months had elapsed after the rendition of judgment, in which the judge issued his warrant to seize, first, the movables, which were sold within eight days afterwards; and then the immovables, which were delivered in pledge to the creditors, or put under the care of a curator, and if, at the end of two months, the debt was not paid, the land was sold.

Actio legis aquiliæ /ækshiyow líyjas ækwíliyy/. An action under the Aquilian law; an action to recover damages for maliciously or injuriously killing or wounding the slave or beast of another, or injuring in any way a thing belonging to another. Otherwise called damni injuriæ actio.

Actio mandati /ækshiyow mändéytay/. In the civil law, term included actions to enforce contracts of mandate or obligations arising out of them.

Actio mixta /ækshiyow míkstə/. A mixed action, an action brought for the recovery of a thing, or compensation for damages, and also for the payment of a penalty; partaking of the nature both of an actio in rem and in personam.

Action. Conduct; behavior; something done; the condition of acting; an act or series of acts.

Term in its usual legal sense means a lawsuit brought in a court; a formal complaint within the jurisdiction of a court of law. Pathman Const. Co. v. Knox County Hospital Ass'n, Ind.App., 326 N.E.2d 844, 853. The legal and formal demand of one's right from another person or party made and insisted on in a court of justice. An ordinary proceeding in a court of justice by which one party prosecutes another for the enforcement or protection of a right, the redress or prevention of a wrong, or the punishment of a public offense. It includes all the formal proceedings in a court of justice attendant upon the demand of a right made by one person of another in such court, including an adjudication upon the right and its enforcement or denial by the court.

Merger of law and equity. In the federal courts, and most state courts, there is only one form of action—civil action—which embraces all actions formerly denominated suits in equity and actions at law. While there has been a merger of law and equity for procedural purposes, substantive principles of equity still govern. Fed.R.Civ.P. 2.

Types of action. Such term was formerly used to describe action for damages as distinguished from suit in equity for equitable relief. This distinction however has been abolished under Fed. Rules of Civil Procedure and in those states which have adopted court rules tracking the Federal Rules. Fed.R.Civ.P. 2.

Action for death. See Wrongful death action.

Action in equity. Action in which person seeks equitable relief as distinguished from damages; e.g. injunction or specific performance of real estate agreement. Term has been abolished by Fed. Rules of Civil Procedure (Rule 2) in favor of single form of action—civil action—which embraces both law and equity actions.

Action in rem. See In rem.

Action on account. An action of assumpsit or debt for recovery of money only for services performed, property sold and delivered, money loaned, or damages for the non-performance of simple contracts, express or implied, when the rights of the parties will be adequately conserved by the payment and receipt of money. Northwest Foundry & Furnace Co. v. Willamette Mfg. & Supply Co., Inc., 268 Or. 343, 521 P.2d 545, 549.

Action quasi in rem. See In rem.

Civil actions are such as lie in behalf of persons to enforce their rights or obtain redress of wrongs in their relation to individuals. Fed.R.Civ.P. 2.

Class actions. See Class or representative action; Derivative action.

Common law actions are such as will lie, on the particular facts, at common law, without the aid of a statute. Actions are called, in common-law practice, ex contractu when they arise out of a contract, and ex delicto when they arise out of a tort. If a cause of action arises from a breach of promise, the action is "ex contractu", and, if it arises from breach of duty growing out of contract, it is "ex delicto".

Criminal actions are such as are instituted by the sovereign power (i.e. government), for the purpose of punishing or preventing offenses against the public.

Local action. See Local actions.

Mixed actions partake of twofold nature of real and personal actions, having for their object the demand and restitution of real property and also personal damages for a wrong sustained. In the civil law, an action in which some specific thing was demanded, and also some personal obligation claimed to be performed; or, in other words, an action which proceeded both in rem and in personam.

Penal actions are such as are brought, either by federal, state, or local authorities or by an individual under permission of a statute, to enforce a penalty imposed by law for the commission of a prohibited act. See Criminal.

Personal action. In civil law, an action in personam seeks to enforce an obligation imposed on the defendant by his contract or delict; that is, it is the contention that he is bound to transfer some dominion or to perform some service or to repair some loss. In common law, an action brought for the recovery of some debt or for damages for some personal injury, in contradistinction to the old real actions, which related to real property only. An action which can be brought only by the person himself who is injured, and not by his representatives. See In personam.

Popular actions, in English usage, were those actions which were given upon the breach of a penal statute, and which any man that will may sue on account of the king and himself, as the statute allowed and the case required. Because the action was not given to one especially, but generally to any that would prosecute, it was called "action popular," and, from the words used in the process (qui tam pro domino rege sequitur quam pro se ipso, who sues as well for the king as for himself) it was called a qui tam action.

Real actions. At common law, one brought for the specific recovery of lands, tenements, or hereditaments. They are droitural when they are based upon the right of property, and possessory when based upon the right of possession. They are either writs of right; writs of entry upon disseisin (which lie in the per, the per et cui, or the post), intrusion, or alienation; writs ancestral possessory, as mort d'ancestor, aiel, besaiel, cossinage, or nuper obiit. The former class was divided into droitural, founded upon demandant's own seisin, and ancestral droiturial upon the demandant's claim in respect of a mere right descended to him from an ancestor. Possessory actions were divided in the same way—as to the demandant's own seisin and as to that of his ancestor. Among the civilians, real actions, otherwise called "vindications," were those in which a man demanded something that was his own. They were founded on dominion, or jus in re. The real actions of the Roman law were not, like the real actions of the common law, confined to real estate, but they included personal, as well as real, property. See In rem. Statutory actions are such as can only be based upon the particular statutes creating them. Contrast Common law actions, above.

Transitory actions are those founded upon a cause of action not necessarily referring to or arising in any particular locality. Their characteristic feature is that the right of action follows the person of the defendant.

Actions are "transitory" when the transactions relied on might have taken place anywhere, and are "local" when they could not occur except in some particular place; the distinction being in the nature of the subject of the injury, and not in the means used or the place at which the cause of action arises. The test of whether an action is local or transitory is whether the injury is done to a subject-matter which, in its nature, could not arise beyond the locality of its situation, in contradistinction to the subject causing the injury. Actions triable where defendant resides are termed "transitory" and those triable where the subject-matter is situated are termed "local."

Actionable. That for which an action will lie, furnishing legal ground for an action. See Cause of action; Justiciable controversy.

Actionable fraud. Deception practiced in order to induce another to part with property or surrender some legal right. A false representation made with an intention to deceive; such may be committed by stating what is known to be false or by professing knowledge of the truth of a statement which is false, but in either case, the essential ingredient is a falsehood uttered with intent to deceive. To constitute "actionable fraud," it must appear that defendant made a material representation; that it was false; that when he made it he knew it was false, or made it recklessly without any knowledge of its truth and as a positive assertion; that he made it with intention that it should be acted on by plaintiff; that plaintiff acted in reliance on it; and that plaintiff thereby suffered injury. Vertes v. GAC Properties, Inc., D.C.Fla., 337 F.Supp. 256, 266. Essential elements are representation, falsity, scienter, deception, reliance and injury. See Fraud.

Actionable misrepresentation. A false statement respecting a fact material to the contract and which is influential in procuring it. See Fraud; Misrepresentation.

Actionable negligence. The breach or nonperformance of a legal duty, through neglect or carelessness, resulting in damage or injury to another. It is failure of duty, omission of something which ought to have been done, or doing of something which ought not to have been done, or which reasonable man, guided by considerations which ordinarily regulate conduct of human affairs, would or would not do. Essential elements are failure to exercise due care, injury, or damage, and proximate cause. See Negligence.

Actionable nuisance. Anything wrongfully done or permitted which injures or annoys another in the enjoyment of his legal rights. Miller v. City of Dayton, 70 Ohio App. 173, 41 N.E.2d 728, 730. Anything injurious to health, or indecent, or offensive to the senses, or an obstruction to the free use of property so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property. See Nuisance.

Actionable per quod. Words actionable only on allegation and proof of special damage. Knapp v. Post Printing & Publishing Co., 111 Colo. 492, 144 P.2d 981, 984.

Words not actionable per se upon their face, but only in consequence of extrinsic facts showing circumstances under which they were said or the damages resulting to slandered party therefrom. Not injurious on their face in their usual and natural signification, but only so in consequence of extrinsic facts and requiring innuendo. See Libelous per quod.

Actionable per se. Words in themselves libelous or slanderous. Knapp v. Post Printing & Publishing Co., 111 Colo. 492, 144 P.2d 981, 984. Words which law presumes must actually, proximately and necessarily damage defendant for which general damages are recoverable and whose injurious character is a fact of common notoriety, established by the general consent of men, necessarily importing damage. Actions based on such words require no proof of damages. Words actionable per se include imputation of crime, a loathsome disease, unchastity, or words affecting plaintiff's business, trade, profession, office or calling. See Libelous per se.

Actionable tort. A tort for which a cause of action exists. To constitute an "actionable tort," there must be a legal duty, imposed by statute or otherwise, owing by defendant to the one injured, and in the absence of such duty damage caused is "injury without wrong" or "damnum absque injuria." Coleman v. California Yearly Meeting of Friends Church, 27 Cal.App.2d 579, 81 P.2d 469, 470. See Tort.

Actionable words. In law of libel and slander, such words as naturally imply damage. See Libel; Slander.

Actionable wrong. A tort committed when a responsible person has neglected to use a reasonable degree of care for protection of another person from such injury as under existing circumstances should reasonably have been foreseen as a proximate consequence of that negligence.

Actionare /æksh(iy)ənəriy/. L. Lat. (From actio, an action.) To bring an action; to prosecute; or sue.

Actionary /ækshən(ə)riy/. A foreign commercial term for the proprietor of an action or share of a public company's stock; a stockholder.

Actio negatoria (or negativa) /ækshiyow nĕgətóriyǝ /'nĕgətáyvǝ/. An action brought to repel a claim of the defendant to a servitude in the plaintiff's land. See Actio confessoria.

Actio negotiorum gestorum /ækshiyow nĕgòwshiyórǝm jĕstórǝm/. Included actions between principal and agent and other parties to an engagement, whereby one person undertook the transaction of business for another.

Actiones legis /ækshiyówniyz liyǝs/. In the Roman law, legal or lawful action; actions of or at law (legitimæ actiones).

Actiones nominatae /ækshiyówniyz nòmĕnýtiy/. (Lat. named actions). In the English chancery, writs for which there were precedents. The statute of Westminster,

2, c. 24, gave chancery authority to form new writs in consimili casu; hence the action on the case.

Action ex contractu /ækshən ĕks kǎnrĕktyuw/. An action for breach of promise set forth in a contract, express or implied. McCullough v. The American Workmen, 200 S.C. 84, 20 S.E.2d 640.

Action ex delicto /ækshən ĕks dǎliktow/. An action arising from a breach of duty growing out of contract.

Action for accounting. Action in equity based on inadequacy of legal remedy and particularly applicable to mutual and complicated accounts and where confidential or fiduciary relationship exists. Action to adjust mutual accounts and to strike a balance.

Action for money had and received. Action in assumpsit based upon promise to repay implied by law, and in respect of limitation is a stated or liquidated account. Action brought where one person has received money or its equivalent under such circumstances that in equity and good conscience he ought not to retain it and in justice it belongs to another. Interstate Life & Accident Co. v. Cook, 19 Tenn.App. 290, 86 S.W.2d 887, 891.

Action for poinding /ækshən fɔr pɪndɪŋ/. An action by a creditor to obtain a sequestration of the rents of land and the goods of his debtor for the satisfaction of his debt, or to enforce a distress.

Action in personam /ækshən in pǎrsòwnǎm/. See In personam.

Action in rem /ækshən in rém/. See In rem.

Action of assize /ækshən əv əsáyz/. A real action at common law which proved the title of the demandant, merely by showing his ancestor's possession.

Action of assumpsit /ækshən əv əsǎmpst/. See Assumpsit.

Action of book debt. A form of common law action for the recovery of claims, such as are usually evidenced by a book-account.

Action of contract. An action brought to enforce rights whereof the contract is the evidence, and usually the sufficient evidence.

Action of writ. A (now obsolete) phrase in common law pleading used when a defendant plead some matter by which he showed that the plaintiff had no cause to have the writ sued upon, although it may be that he was entitled to another writ or action for the same matter.

Actio non /ækshiyow nón/. In the common law pleading, the Latin name of that part of a special plea which follows next after the statement of appearance and defense, and declares that the plaintiff "ought not to have or maintain his aforesaid action thereof against" the defendant (in Latin, actionem non habere debet).

Actio non accrevit infra sex annos /ækshiyow nòn əkriyvət ínfɾə séks ǎnows/. The name of the plea of the statute of limitations, when the defendant alleges that the plaintiff's action has not accrued within six years.

Actio non datur non damnificato /ækshiyow nòn déytər nòn dæmnáfékéytow/. An action is not given to one who is not injured.

Actio non facit reum, nisi mens sit rea /ækshiyow nòn féysət riyəm, náysay ménz sit riyə/. An act does not make one guilty, unless the intention be bad.

Action on the case. A common law species of personal action of formerly extensive application, otherwise called "trespass on the case," or simply "case," from the circumstance of the plaintiff's whole case or cause of complaint being set forth at length in the original writ by which formerly it was always commenced. In its most comprehensive signification it includes assumpsit as well as an action in form ex delicto; though when it is mentioned it is usually understood to mean an action in form ex delicto. It is founded on the common law or upon acts of Parliament, and lies generally to recover damages for torts not committed with force, actual or implied; or having been occasioned by force where the matter affected was not tangible, or the injury was not immediate but consequential; or where the interest in the property was only in reversion, in all of which cases trespass is not sustainable. In the progress of judicial contestation it was discovered that there was a mass of tortious wrongs unattended by direct and immediate force, or where the force, though direct, was not expended on an existing right of present enjoyment, for which the then known forms of action furnished no redress. The action on the case was instituted to meet this want. And wrongs which will maintain an action on the case are frequently committed in the nonobservance of duties, which are but the implication of contract obligation, duties of requisite skill, fidelity, diligence, and a proper regard for the rights of others, implied in every obligation to serve another. If the cause of action arises from a breach of promise, the action is "ex contractu"; but if the cause of action arises from a breach of duty growing out of the contract, it is in form ex delicto and case. When there is a contract, either express or implied, from which a common-law duty results, an action on the case lies for the breach of that duty. Such form of action no longer exists under Code and Rule pleading. See Assumpsit.

Actio non ulterius /ækshiyow nòn èltíriyəs/. In English pleading, a name given to the distinctive clause in the plea to the further maintenance of the action, introduced in place of the plea puis darrein continuance; the averment being that the plaintiff ought not further (ulterius) to have or maintain his action.

Actio noxalis /ækshiyow nokséyləs/. In civil law, a noxal action; an action which lay against a master for a crime committed or injury done by his slave; and in which the master had the alternative either to pay for the damage done or to deliver up the slave to the complaining party. So called from noxā, the offense or injury committed.

Action quasi in rem /ækshən kwéysay in rém/. An action brought against persons which only seeks to subject the interest in certain property of those persons to discharge of claims asserted and judgment therein is only conclusive between parties and their privies. Tobin v. McClellan, 225 Ind. 335, 75 N.E.2d 149, 151. See In rem; Quasi in rem jurisdiction.

Action redhibitory /ækshən rəd(h)íbit(ə)riy/. See Redhibitory action.

Action to quiet title. One in which plaintiff asserts his own estate and declares generally that defendant claims some estate in the land, without defining it, and avers that the claim is without foundation, and calls on defendant to set forth the nature of his claim, so that it may be determined by decree. It differs from a "suit to remove a cloud," in that plaintiff therein declares on his own title, and also avers the source and nature of defendant's claim, points out its defect, and prays that it may be declared void as a cloud on plaintiff's estate. It embraces every sort of a claim whereby the plaintiff might be deprived of his property or his title clouded or its value depreciated, or whereby the plaintiff might be incommoded or damaged by assertion of an outstanding title already held or to grow out of the adverse pretension. Bank of American Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n v. Town of Atherton, 60 Cal.App.2d 268, 140 P.2d 678, 680. See Cloud on title.

Actionum genera maxime sunt servanda /ækshiyównəm jénərə máksəmiy sánt sərvádə/. The kinds of actions are especially to be preserved.

Actio perpetua /ækshiyow pərpéchuwə/. An action without limitation period.

Actio personalis /ækshiyow pərsənéyləs/. In the civil and common law, a personal action. See In personam.

Actio personalis moritur cum persona /ækshiyow pərsənéyləs mórətər kəm pərsówney/. A personal right of action dies with the person. The maxim was originally applied to almost every form of action, whether arising out of contract or tort, but the common law was modified by the Statute of 4 Edward the III. Momand v. Twentieth-Century Fox Film Corporation, D.C.Ok., 37 F.Supp. 649, 652.

Actio pignoratitia /ækshiyow pignəreytishiyə/. An action of pledge; an action founded on the contract of pledge (pignus).

Actio pœnalis /ækshiyow piynéyləs/. Called also actio ex delicto. An action in which a penalty was recovered of the delinquent.

Actiones pœnales and actiones mixtæ comprehended cases of injuries, for which the civil law permitted redress by private action, but which modern civilization universally regards as crimes; that is, offenses against society at large, and punished by proceedings in the name of the state alone. Thus, theft, receiving stolen goods, robbery, malicious mischief, and the murder or negligent homicide of a slave (in which case an injury to property was involved), gave rise to private actions for damages against the delinquent.

Actio pœnalis in hæredem non datur, nisi forte ex damno locupletior hæres factus sit /ækshiyow piynéylas in hãriyðam nõn dëytãr nãysay fõrtiy èks dãmnow lõwkãplyshãr hãriyz fãktãs sit/. A penal action is not given against an heir, unless, indeed, such heir is benefited by the wrong.

Actio præjudicialis /ækshiyow priyjuwdishiyéylas/. A preliminary or preparatory action. An action instituted for the determination of some preliminary matter on which other litigated matters depend, or for the determination of some point or question arising in another or principal action; and so called from its being determined before (prius, or præ judicari).

Actio præscriptis verbis /ækshiyow præskriptãs vërbãs/. A form of action which derived its force from continued usage or the responsa prudentium, and was founded on the unwritten law. The distinction between this action and an actio in factum is said to be, that the latter was founded not on usage or the unwritten law, but by analogy to or on the equity of some subsisting law.

Actio prætoria /ækshiyow prætõriyã/. A prætorian action; one introduced by the prætor, as distinguished from the more ancient actio civilis (q.v.).

Actio pro socio /ækshiyow prõw sówshiyow/. An action of partnership. An action brought by one partner against his associates to compel them to carry out the terms of the partnership agreement.

Actio publiciana /ækshiyow pëblishiyéynã/. An action which lay for one who had lost a thing of which he had bona fide obtained possession, before he had gained a property in it, in order to have it restored, under color that he had obtained a property in it by prescription. It was an honorary action, and derived its name from the prætor Publicius, by whose edict it was first given.

Actio quælibet in sua via /ækshiyow kwiyëlbët in sy'yúwã váyã/. Every action proceeds in its own way.

Actio quod jussu /ækshiyow kwòd jësyuw/. An action given against a master, founded on some business done by his slave, acting under his order (jussu).

Actio quod metus causa /ækshiyow kwòd métãs kózã/. An action granted to one who had been compelled by unlawful force, or fear (metus causa) that was not groundless (metus probabilis or justus) to deliver, sell, or promise a thing to another.

Actio realis /ækshiyow riyéylãs/. A real action. The proper term in the civil law was rei vindicatio.

Actio redhibitoria /ækshiyow rãd(h)ibãtõriyã/. An action to cancel a sale in consequence of defects in the thing sold. It was prosecuted to compel complete restitution to the seller of the thing sold, with its produce and accessories, and to give the buyer back the price, with interest, as an equivalent for the restitution of the produce. See Redhibitory action.

Actio rerum amotarum /ækshiyow rirãm èymow-tërãm/. An action for things removed; an action which, in cases of divorce, lay for a husband against a wife, to recover things carried away by the latter, in contemplation of such divorce. It also lay for the wife against the husband in such cases.

Actio rescissoria /ækshiyow rësãsõriyã/. An action for restoring plaintiff to a right or title which he has lost by prescription, in a case where the equities are such that he should be relieved from the operation of the prescription. An action to rescind a prescriptive title by one who was entitled to exemption from the prescription law, as a minor, etc.

Actio serviana /ækshiyow sãrviyéynã/. An action which lay for the lessor of a farm, or rural estate, to recover the goods of the lessee or farmer, which were pledged or bound for the rent.

Actio stricti juris /ækshiyow striktay jurãs/. An action of strict right. The class of civil law personal actions, which were adjudged only by the strict law, and in which the judge was limited to the precise language of the formula, and had no discretionary power to regard the bona fides of the transaction.

Actio tẽmporalis /ækshiyow tẽmpëréylãs/. An action which must be brought within a limited time. See Limitation.

Actio tutelã /ækshiyow t(y)uwtyilyy/. Action founded on the duties or obligations arising on the relation analogous to that of guardian and ward.

Actio utilis /ækshiyow yúwtãlãs/. In the civil law, a beneficial action or equitable action. An action founded on equity instead of strict law, and available for those who had equitable rights or the beneficial ownership of property. Actions are divided into actiones directæ or utiles. The former are founded on certain legal obligations which from their origin were accurately defined and recognized as actionable. The latter were formed analogically in imitation of the former. They were permitted in legal obligations for which the actiones directæ were not originally intended, but which resembled the legal obligations which formed the basis of the direct action.

Actio venditi /ækshiyow vëndëtay/. An action employed in behalf of a seller, to compel a buyer to pay the price, or perform any special obligations embodied in a contract of sale. See Specific performance.

Actio vi bonorum raptorum /ækshiyow váy bow-nõrãm rãptõrãm/. An action for goods taken by force; a species of mixed action, which lay for a party whose goods or movables (bona) had been taken from him by force (vi), to recover the things so taken, together with a penalty of triple the value. Bracton describes it as lying de rebus mobilibus vi ablati sive robbati (for movable things taken away by force, or robbed).

Actio vulgaris /ækshiyow vãlgërãs/. A legal action; a common action. Sometimes used for actio directa.

Active. That is in action; that demands action; actually subsisting; the opposite of passive. An active debt is one which draws interest. An active trust is a confidence connected with a duty. An active use is a present legal estate.

Active concealment. Term implies a purpose or design to conceal accomplished by words or acts, while passive concealment consists in mere silence where there is a duty to speak. Vendt v. Duenke, Mo.App., 210 S.W.2d 692, 699. Concealment becomes a fraud where it is effected by misleading and deceptive talk, acts, or conduct, where it is accompanied by misrepresentations, or where, in addition to a party's silence, there is any statement, word, or act on his part which tends affirmatively to a suppression of the truth. Such conduct is designated active concealment. Equitable Life Ins. Co. of Iowa v. Halsey, Stuart & Co., C.C.A.III., 112 F.2d 302, 309.

Active negligence. A term of extensive meaning embracing many occurrences that would fall short of willful wrongdoing, or of crass negligence, for example, all inadvertent acts causing injury to others, resulting from failure to exercise ordinary care; likewise, all acts the effects of which are misjudged or unforeseen, through want of proper attention, or reflection, and hence the term covers the acts of willful wrongdoing and also those which are not of that character. Cohen v. Noel, Tenn.App., 104 S.W.2d 1001, 1005.

Active negligence denotes some positive act or some failure in duty of operation which is equivalent of a positive act and is omission of due care and affirmative action by person in control, or negligence occurring in connection with activities conducted on the premises. Pachowitz v. Milwaukee & Suburban Transport Corp., 56 Wis.2d 383, 202 N.W.2d 268, 275. Difference between "active" and "passive" negligence is that one is only passively negligent if he merely fails to act in fulfillment of duty of care which law imposes upon him, while one is actively negligent if he participates in some manner in conduct or omission which caused injury. King v. Timber Structures, Inc. of Cal., 240 C.A.2d 178, 49 Cal.Rptr. 414, 417.

See Also Negligence.

Active participant. Any person who engages in conduct, either by act or omission, which is an essential element of the crime. State v. Greene, Mo.App., 655 S.W.2d 714, 717.

Active trust. See Trust.

Activity. An occupation or pursuit in which person is active. State ex rel. Agard v. Riederer, Mo., 448 S.W.2d 577, 582.

Act malum in se /ækt mələm in siy/. See Malum in se.

Act malum prohibitum /ækt mələm prəhibətəm/. See Malum prohibitum.

Act of attainder. A legislative act, attainting a person. See Attainder.

Act of bankruptcy. Term used under former federal Bankruptcy Act (§ 3), to refer to any act which rendered a person liable to be proceeded against involuntarily as a bankrupt, or for which he could be adjudged bankrupt. The new Bankruptcy Code (1979) no longer provides for specific acts of bankruptcy, but rather provides for involuntary bankruptcy when the debtor, in general, is not paying his debts as they become due. Bankruptcy Code, § 303. See Bankruptcy Code; Bankruptcy proceedings.

Act of Elizabeth. See Act of supremacy.

Act of God. An act occasioned exclusively by forces of nature without the interference of any human agency. A misadventure or casualty is said to be caused by the "act of God," when it happens by the direct, immediate, and exclusive operation of the forces of nature, uncontrolled and uninfluenced by the power of man, and without human intervention, and is of such a character that it could not have been prevented or escaped from by any amount of foresight or prudence, or by any reasonable degree of care or diligence, or by the aid of any appliances which the situation of the party might reasonably require him to use. Any accident produced by any physical cause which is irresistible, such as lightning, tempests, perils of the seas, tornados, earthquakes. Middaugh v. U.S., D.C.Wyo., 293 F.Supp. 977, 980. See Inevitable accident; Perils of the sea; Vis major.

Act of grace. The term is often used to designate a general act of parliament, originating with the crown, such as has often been passed at the commencement of a new reign, or the coming of age or marriage of a sovereign, or at the close of a period of civil troubles, declaring pardon or amnesty to numerous offenders. See also Days of grace; Grace period.

Act of insolvency. See Act of bankruptcy.

Act of law. The operation of fixed legal rules upon given facts or occurrences, producing consequences independent of the design or will of the parties concerned; as distinguished from "act of parties." Also an act performed by judicial authority which prevents or precludes a party from fulfilling a contract or other engagement. See Act in pais.

Act of nature. See Act of God.

Act of parliament. A statute; a law made by the British sovereign, with the advice and consent of the lords and the commons, in parliament assembled. Acts of parliament form the leges scriptæ, i.e., the written laws of the kingdom. Such acts are of three kinds: public, local or special, private or personal. The validity of a statute cannot be questioned in court.

Act of providence. An accident against which ordinary skill and foresight could not guard. Equivalent to "act of God" (q.v.).

Act of sale. An official record of a sale of property, made by a notary who writes down the agreement of the parties as stated by them, and which is then signed by the parties and attested by witnesses.

Act of settlement. The English statute (12 & 13 Wm. III, c. 2) limiting the crown to the Princess Sophia of Hanover, and to the heirs of her body being Protestants. 1 Bl.Comm. 128. One clause of it made the tenure of judges' office for life or good behavior independent of the crown.

Act of state. An act done by the sovereign power of a country, or by its delegate, within the limits of the power vested in him. An act of state cannot be questioned or made the subject of legal proceedings in a court of law. See Act of state doctrine.

Act of state doctrine. The judicially created act of state doctrine precludes the courts of this country from inquiring into the validity of governmental acts of a recognized foreign sovereign committed within its own territory. Banco Nacional de Cuba v. Sabbatino, 376 U.S. 398, 84 S.Ct. 923, 11 L.Ed.2d 804; Ricaud v. American Metal Co., 246 U.S. 304, 38 S.Ct. 312, 62 L.Ed. 733; Oetjen v. Central Leather Co., 246 U.S. 297, 38 S.Ct. 309, 62 L.Ed. 726; F. Palicio y Compania, S. A. v. Brush, 256 F.Supp. 481 aff'd, 375 F.2d 1011 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 389 U.S. 830, 88 S.Ct. 95, 19 L.Ed.2d 88.

Act of supremacy. An act of 26 Hen. VIII, c. 1, and also 1 Eliz., c. 1, which recognized the king as the only supreme head on earth of the Church of England having full power to correct all errors, heresies, abuses, offenses, contempts and enormities. The oath, taken under the act, denies to the Pope any other authority than that of the Bishop of Rome.

Act of uniformity. The English statute of 13 & 14 Car. II, c. 4, enacting that the book of common prayer, as then recently revised, should be used in every parish church and other place of public worship, and otherwise ordaining a uniformity in religious services, etc.

Acton Burnel, statute of. In English law, a statute, otherwise called Statutum Mercatorum or de Mercatoribus, the statute of the merchants, made at a parliament held at the castle or village of Acton Burnel in Shropshire, in the 11th year of the reign of Edward I. It was a statute for the collection of debts, the earliest of its class, being enacted in 1283. A further statute for the same object, and known as De Mercatoribus, was enacted 13 Edw. I, (c. 3). See Statute (Statute merchant).

Act on petition. A form of summary proceeding formerly in use in the high court of admiralty, in England, in which the parties stated their respective cases briefly, and supported their statements by affidavit.

Actor. One who acts. The term is used in the Restatement of Torts, Second, to designate either the person whose conduct is in question as subjecting him to liability toward another, or as precluding him from recovering against another whose tortious conduct is a legal cause of the actor's injury. Sec. 2.

Old European law. A patron, proctor, advocate, or pleader; one who acted for another in legal matters; one who represented a party and managed his cause. An attorney, bailiff, or steward; one who managed or acted for another. The Scotch "doer" is the literal translation.

Roman law. One who acted for another; one who attended to another's business; a manager or agent. A slave who attended to, transacted, or superintended his master's business or affairs, received and paid out moneys, and kept accounts. The word has a variety of closely-related meanings, very nearly corresponding with manager. Thus, actor dominæ, manager of his master's farm; actor ecclesiæ, manager of church property; actores provinciarum, tax-gatherers, treasurers, and managers of the public debt.

Actor ecclesiæ.—An advocate for a church; one who protects the temporal interests of a church. Actor villæ was the steward or head-bailiff of a town or village.

Plaintiff or complainant. In a civil or private action the plaintiff was often called by the Romans "petitor;" in a public action (causa publica) he was called "accusator." The defendant was called "reus," both in private and public causes. This term, however, might signify either party, as might be concluded from the word itself. In a private action, the defendant was often called "adversarius," but either party might be called so.

Also, the term is used of a party who, for the time being, sustains the burden of proof, or has the initiative in the suit.

Actore non probante reus absolvitur /æktóriy non probántiy riyás æbzólvætər/. When the plaintiff does not prove his case the defendant is acquitted (or absolved).

Actori incumbit onus probandi /æktóray iŋkámbat ównás prábénday/. The burden of proof rests on the plaintiff (or on the party who advances a proposition affirmatively.)

Actor qui contra regulam quid adduxit, non est audiendus /æktòr kwày kóntrə régyələm kwíd ədóksət, nón èst òdiyéndəs/. A plaintiff (or pleader) is not to be heard who has advanced anything against authority (or against the rule).

Actor sequitur forum rei /æktòr sékwətər fóram riyay/. According as rei is intended as the genitive of res, a thing, or reus, a defendant, this phrase means: The plaintiff follows the forum of the property in suit, or the forum of the defendant's residence.

Actrix /æktriks/. Lat. A female actor; a female plaintiff.

Acts of court. Legal memoranda made in the admiralty courts in England, in the nature of pleas.

Acts of possession. To constitute adverse possession, acts of possession must be: (1) hostile or adverse, (2) actual, (3) visible, notorious, and exclusive, (4) continuous, and (5) under claim of ownership. Bilyeu v. Plant, 75 Ill.App.2d 109, 220 N.E.2d 513. See Adverse possession.

Actual. Real; substantial; existing presently in fact; having a valid objective existence as opposed to that which is merely theoretical or possible. Opposed to potential, possible, virtual, theoretical, hypothetical, or nominal. Something real, in opposition to constructive or speculative; something existing in act. It is used as a legal term in contradistinction to virtual or constructive as of possession or occupation. Actually is opposed to seemingly, pretendedly, or feignedly, as actually engaged in farming means really, truly in fact. As to actual Bias; Damages; Delivery; Fraud; Malice; Notice; Occu- pation; Ouster; Possession; Residence; Seisin; Total loss, see those titles.

Actual authority. The power of an agent to bind its principal where such power derives either from express or implied agreement between the principal and the agent. HyKen v. Travelers Ins. Co., Mo.App., 678 S.W.2d 454, 457. In the law of agency, such authority as a principal intentionally confers on the agent, or intentionally or by want of ordinary care allows the agent to believe himself to possess. National Cash Register Co. v. Wichita Frozen Food Lockers, Tex.Civ.App., 172 S.W.2d 781, 787. Includes both express and implied authority.

Actual bias. See Bias.

Actual cash value. The fair or reasonable cash price for which the property could be sold in the market in the ordinary course of business, and not at forced sale. The price it will bring in a fair market after reasonable efforts to find a purchaser who will give the highest price. What property is worth in money, allowing for depreciation. Ordinarily, "actual cash value", "fair market value", and "market value" are synonymous terms. See Actual value; Cash value; Fair market value; Fair value.

Actual change of possession. In statutes of frauds, an open, visible and unequivocal change of possession, manifested by the usual outward signs, as distinguished from a merely formal or constructive change.

Actual controversy. Declaratory judgment may be rendered only in cases of "actual controversy" defined as concrete cases touching legal relations of parties having adverse legal interests and susceptible of an immediate and definitive determination of the legal rights of the parties in an adversary proceeding upon the alleged facts. Dr. Beck & Co. G.M.B.H. v. General Elec. Co., D.C.N.Y., 210 F.Supp. 86, 89. See also Case (Cases and controversies); Declaratory Judgment Act.

Actual cost. The actual price paid for goods by a party, in the case of a real bona fide purchase, which may not necessarily be the market value of the goods. It is a general or descriptive term which may have varying meanings according to the circumstances in which it is used. It imports the exact sum expended or loss sustained rather than the average or proportional part of the cost. Its meaning may be restricted to materials, labor, and overhead or extended to other items.

Actual damages. Compensation for actual injuries or loss. Chappell v. City of Springfield, Mo., 423 S.W.2d 810, 814. Term used to denote the type of damage award as well as the nature of injury for which recovery is allowed; thus, actual damages flowing from injury in fact are to be distinguished from damages which are nominal, exemplary or punitive. Razor v. Retail Credit Co., 87 Wash.2d 516, 554 P.2d 1041, 1049. "Actual damages" are synonymous with compensatory damages. Weider v. Hoffman, D.C.Pa., 238 F.Supp. 437, 445. See also Damages.

Actual delivery. See Delivery.

Actual eviction. An actual expulsion of the tenant out of all or some part of the demised premises. A physical ouster or dispossession from the very thing granted or some substantial part thereof. Cauley v. Northern Trust Co., 315 Ill.App. 307, 43 N.E.2d 147, 155, 315. See Constructive eviction; Eviction; Forcible entry and detainer; Summary (Summary process).

Actual fraud. See Fraud.

Actual loss. One resulting from the real and substantial destruction of the property insured.

Actual malice. See Malice.

Actual market value. In custom laws, the price at which merchandise is freely offered for sale to all purchasers; the price which the manufacturer or owner would have received for merchandise, sold in the ordinary course of trade in the usual wholesale quantities. See also, Market volume.

Actual possession. See Possession.

Actual practice. Active, open and notorious engagement in business, vocation or profession as opposed to casual or clandestine practice. State ex rel. Laughlin v. Washington State Bar Ass'n, 26 Wash.2d 914, 176 P.2d 301, 309.

Actual physical control. Such control within statute providing that it is unlawful and punishable by law for any person under influence of intoxicating liquor to be in actual physical control of any motor vehicle within state means existing or present bodily restraint, directing influence, domination, or regulation of any automobile while under the influence of intoxicating liquor. Bearden v. State, Okl.Cr., 430 P.2d 844, 847.

Actual residence. The abode, where one actually lives, not mere naked legal residence. In re McGrath, 243 App.Div. 803, 278 N.Y.S. 135. See Domicile; Residence.

Actual trust. See Trust.

Actual use. Term "actual use" in automobile liability policy providing coverage for nonowned automobile if the actual operation or actual use of automobile by relative of insured is with permission of owner means present or active use or a use existing in fact or reality as distinguished from an imputed or constructive use. United Services Auto. Ass'n v. United States Fire Ins. Co., 36 C.A.3d 765, 111 Cal.Rptr. 595, 598.

Actual value. Actual value to be awarded in condemnation proceeding is price that would probably result from negotiations between willing seller and willing buyer. "Actual value," "market value," "fair market value," "just compensation" and the like may be used as convertible terms. "Saleable value," "actual value," "cash value," and other like terms used in directions to tax assessing officers, all mean generally the same thing. In re Lang Body Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 92 F.2d 338, 340. See also Market value.

Actual violence. An assault with actual violence is an assault with physical force put in action, exerted upon the person assailed. The term violence is synonymous with physical force, and the two are used interchangeably in relation to assaults.

Actuarial table /ækchuwériyəl téybəl/. A form of organized statistical data which indicates the life expectancy of a person and which is admissible in evidence through an expert witness. *Leave v. Testator's giving to a legatee that which he has provided in his will, or his disposing of that part of his estate so bequeathed in such manner as to make it impossible to carry out the will. Hurley v. Schuler, 296 Ky. 118, 176 S.W.2d 275, 276. Revocation, recalling, or cancellation of a legacy, according to the apparent intention of the testator, implied by the law from acts done by him in his life, though such acts do not amount to an express revocation of it.

To take away, recall, revoke, or to satisfy legacy by some gift or substituted disposition, made by testator, in advance. In re Burnett's Estate, 49 N.J.Super. 439, 140 A.2d 242, 244.

The act by which the testator pays to his legatee, in his life-time, a general legacy which by his will he had proposed to give him at his death; and the act by which a specific legacy has become inoperative on account of the testator having parted with the subject. Dillender v. Wilson, 228 Ky. 758, 16 S.W.2d 173, 174.

See Advancement.

Adeo /ædiyow/. Lat. So, as. Adeo plene et integre, as fully and entirely.

Adequate. Sufficient; commensurate; equally efficient; equal to what is required; suitable to the case or occasion; satisfactory. Equal to some given occasion or work. Nissen v. Miller, 44 N.M. 487, 105 P.2d 324, 326.

Adequate care. Such care as a man of ordinary prudence would himself take under similar circumstances to avoid accident; care proportionate to the risk to be incurred. See also Care.

Adequate cause. Sufficient cause for a particular purpose.

In criminal law, adequate cause for the passion which reduces a homicide committed under its influence from the grade of murder to manslaughter, means such cause as would commonly produce a degree of anger, rage, resentment, or terror, in a person of ordinary temper, sufficient to render the mind incapable of cool reflection. Insulting words or gestures, or an assault and battery so slight as to show no intention to inflict pain or injury, or an injury to property unaccompanied by violence are not adequate causes. Berry v. State, 143 Tex.Cr.R. 67, 157 S.W.2d 650, 652. See Adequate provocation; Cause; Probable cause.

Adequate compensation. Just value of property taken under power of eminent domain, payable in money, as guaranteed by 5th Amendment. Market value of property when taken. It may include interest and may include the cost or value of the property to the owner for the purposes for which he designed it. Such only as puts injured party in as good a condition as he would have been in if injury had not been inflicted. Town of Winchester v. Cox, 129 Conn. 106, 26 A.2d 592, 597. See also Fair market value; Just compensation.

Adequate consideration. Such as is equal, or reasonably proportioned, to the value of that for which it is given. That which is not so disproportionate as to shock our sense of that morality and fair dealing which should always characterize transactions between man and man. Fair and reasonable under circumstances. Reasonably just and equitable. See Consideration; Fair consideration; Fair market value; Fair value; Just compensation.

Adequate notice. Notice reasonably calculated to apprise a person of an action, proceeding, or motion. Notice sufficient to permit an objection or defense. U. S. v. San Juan Lumber Co., D.C.Colo., 313 F.Supp. 703, 709. Notice reasonably calculated, in all circumstances of given proceeding, to apprise all interested parties of action and opportunity to present their objections. U.S. v. San Juan Lumber Co., D.C.Colo., 313 F.Supp. 703, 709. See Notice.

Adequate preparation. Embraces full consultation with accused, interviews with witnesses, study of facts and law, and determination of character of defense to be made and policy to be followed during trial. Nelson v. Commonwealth, 295 Ky. 641, 175 S.W.2d 132, 133.

Adequate protection. Phrase used in several sections of the Bankruptcy Code to describe protection afforded to holders of secured claims. It is meant to preserve secured creditor's position at the time of bankruptcy. In re Jamaica House, Inc., Bkrcty.Vt., 31 B.R. 192, 195. More specifically, the lack of adequate protection of the creditor's interest in its collateral is a basis for relief from stay under Code § 362(d)(1); adequate protection is also the standard for creditor protection from sale or use or encumbrance of the collateral under Code sections 363 and 364. While adequate protection is not statutorily defined, section 361 sets out examples of adequate protection. See In re Cooley, Bkrcty.Pa., 37 B.R. 590, 592.

Adequate provocation. An adequate provocation to cause a sudden transport of passion that may suspend the exercise of judgment and exclude premeditation and a previously formed design is one that is calculated to excite such anger as might obscure the reason or dominate the volition of an ordinary reasonable man. See Adequate cause.

Adequate remedy at law. For purposes of rule that a litigant who fails to avail himself of a remedy provided by law and who is subsequently barred from pursuing that remedy because of his own lack of diligence cannot rely on the absence of a remedy at law as a basis for equitable jurisdiction, is one which is as complete, practical and as efficient to the ends of justice and its prompt administration as a remedy in equity, and which is obtainable as of right. In re Wife, K., Del.Ch., 297 A.2d 424, 426.

As preventing relief by injunction, means a remedy which is plain and complete and as practical and efficient to ends of justice and its prompt administration as a remedy in equity, and although an injunction will issue when legal remedy is inadequate, injunction should not be granted where complainant has an adequate remedy at law. Hancock v. Bradshaw, Tex.Civ. App., 350 S.W.2d 955, 957.

A remedy that affords complete relief with reference to the particular matter in controversy, and is appropriate to the circumstances of the case. Such must reach end intended, and actually compel performance of duty in question. Simpson v. Williams Rural High School Dist., Tex.Civ.App., 153 S.W.2d 852, 856.

Adessee /ædesi/. In the civil law, to be present; the opposite of abesse.

Adieu /ædyúw/. Without day, as when a matter is finally dismissed by the court. Alez adieu, go without day. See Adieu.

Ad eversionem juris nostri /æd əvərz(h)iyównəm júrés nóstray/. To the overthrow of our right.

Ad excambium /æd ekskæmbiyəm/. For exchange; for compensation.

Ad exhæredationem /æd eks-hirædeyshiýównəm/. To the disherison, or disinheriting; to the injury of the inheritance. 3 Bl.Comm. 288. Formal words in the old writ of waste, which calls upon the tenant to appear and show cause why he hath committed waste and destruction in the place named, ad exhæredationem, etc.

Ad exitum /æd égzædəm/. At issue; at the end (of the pleadings).

Ad faciendum /æd feyshiyéndəm/. To do. Ad faciendum, subjiciendum et recipiendum; to do, submit to, and receive. Ad faciendam juratam illam; to make up that jury.

Ad feodi firmam /æd fyúwday fárməm/. To fee farm.

Ad fidem /æd fáydəm/. In allegiance. Subjects born ad fidem are those born in allegiance.

Ad filum aquæ /æd fáyləm ákwíy/. To the thread of the water; to the central line, or middle of the stream. Usque ad filum aquæ, as far as the thread of the stream. A phrase of which ad medium filum aquæ (q.v.) is another form, and etymologically more exact.

Ad filum viæ /æd fáyləm váiy/. To the middle of the way; to the central line of the road.

Ad finem /æd fáynəm/. Abbreviated ad fin. To the end. It is used in citations to books, as a direction to read from the place designated to the end of the chapter, section, etc. Ad finem litis, at the end of the suit.

Ad firmam /æd fárməm/. To farm. Derived from an old Saxon word denoting rent. Ad firmam noctis was a fine or penalty equal in amount to the estimated cost of entertaining the king for one night. Ad feodi firmam, to fee farm.

Ad fundandam jurisdictionem /æd fúndándəm júrésdikshiyównəm/. To make the basis of jurisdiction.

Ad gaolas deliberandas /æd jeylæs dəlībərándəs/. To deliver the gaols; to empty the gaols. Ad gaolam deliberandam; to deliver the gaol; to make gaol delivery.

Ad gravamen /æd grævéymən/. To the grievance, injury, or oppression.

Adhering. Joining, leagued with, cleaving to; as, "adhering to the enemies of the United States." "Adhering" consists in giving to the United States the loyalty due from a citizen. United States v. Stephan, D.C.Mich., 50 F.Supp. 738, 741. Any intentional act furthering hostile designs of enemies of the United States, or an act which intentionally strengthens or tends to strengthen enemies of the United States, or which weakens or tends to weaken power of the United States to resist and attack such enemies, constitutes "adhering" to such enemies. United States v. Haupt, D.C.Ill., 47 F.Supp. 836, 839.

Adhesion. Agreement to join; adherence. The entrance of another nation into an existing treaty with respect only to a part of the principles laid down or the stipulations agreed to. Properly speaking, by adhesion the third nation becomes a party only to such parts as are specifically agreed to, and by accession it accepts and is bound by the whole treaty. See Accession.

Adhesion contract. Standardized contract form offered to consumers of goods and services on essentially "take it or leave it" basis without affording consumer realistic opportunity to bargain and under such conditions that consumer cannot obtain desired product or services except by acquiescing in form contract. Distinctive feature of adhesion contract is that weaker party has no realistic choice as to its terms. Cubic Corp. v. Marty, 4 Dist., 185 C.A.3d 438, 229 Cal.Rptr. 828, 833; Standard Oil Co. of Calif. v. Perkins, C.A.Or., 347 F.2d 379, 383. Recognizing that these contracts are not the result of traditionally "bargained" contracts, the trend is to relieve parties from onerous conditions imposed by such contracts. However, not every such contract is unconscionable. Lechmere Tire and Sales Co. v. Burwick, 360 Mass. 713, 720, 721, 277 N.E.2d 503.

Adhibere /ædhəbéry/. In the civil law, to apply; to employ; to exercise; to use. Adhibere diligentiam, to use care. Adhibere vim, to employ force.

Ad hoc /æd hó(w)k/. For this; for this special purpose.

An attorney ad hoc, or a guardian or curator ad hoc, is one appointed for a special purpose, generally to represent the client or infant in the particular action in which the appointment is made.

Ad hoc arbitration. Submission of a particular issue to arbitration.

Ad hominem /æd hómənəm/. To the person. A term used in logic with reference to a personal argument.

Ad hunc diem /æd (h)ŋk dáyəm/. At this day.

ADI. That amount of a particular chemical which Environmental Protection Agency considers safe for human ingestion every day for seventy years with no ill effects. Oregon Environmental Council v. Kunzman, D.Or., 636 F.Supp. 632, 637.

Ad idem /æd áydəm/. To the same point, or effect. Ad idem facit, it makes to or goes to establish the same point.

A die confectionis /èy dáyiy kənfèkshiyównəs/. From the day of the making.

A die datus /èy dáyiy déytəs/. From the day of the date. Used in leases to determine the time or running of the estate, and when so used includes the day of the date.

Adieu /ədyúw/. L. Fr. Without day. A common term in the Year Books, implying final dismissal from court.

A digniori fieri debet denominatio /èy digniyóray fáyəray débət dənómənéysh(iy)ow/. Denomination ought to be from the more worthy. The description (of a place) should be taken from the more worthy subject (as from a will).

A digniori fieri debet denominatio et resolutio /èy digniyóray fáyəray débət dənómənéysh(iy)ow et rəzəl(y)uwsh(iy)ow/. The title and exposition of a thing ought to be derived from, or given, or made with reference to, the more worthy degree, quality, or species of it.

Ad inde /æd índiy/. Thereunto. Ad inde requisitus, thereunto required.

Ad infinitum /æd infináyətəm/. Without limit; to an infinite extent; indefinitely.

Ad inquirendum /æd inkwəréndəm/. To inquire; a writ of inquiry; a judicial writ, commanding inquiry to be made of anything relating to a cause pending in court.

Ad instantiam /æd instəنش(iy)əm/. At the instance. Ad instantiam partis, at the instance of a party.

Ad interim /æd intərəm/. In the meantime. An officer ad interim is one appointed to fill a temporary vacancy, or to discharge the duties of the office during the absence or temporary incapacity of its regular incumbent.

Adiratus /ædəréytəs/. Lost; strayed; a price or value set upon things stolen or lost, as a recompense to the owner.

Adjacent. Lying near or close to; sometimes, contiguous; neighboring. Adjacent implies that the two objects are not widely separated, though they may not actually touch, Harrison v. Guilford County, 218 N.C. 718, 12 S.E.2d 269, while adjoining imports that they are so joined or united to each other that no third object intervenes. Wolfe v. Hurley, D.C.La., 46 F.2d 515, 521. See Adjoining.

Adjective law. The aggregate of rules of procedure or practice. Also called adjectival law, as opposed to that body of law which the courts are established to administer (called "substantive law"), it means the rules according to which the substantive law is administered; e.g. Rules of Civil Procedure. That part of the law which provides a method for enforcing or maintaining rights, or obtaining redress for their invasion. Maurizi v. Western Coal & Mining Co., 321 Mo. 378, 11 S.W.2d 268, 272. Pertains to and prescribes practice, method, procedure or legal machinery by which substantive law is enforced or made effective. Ambrose v. State Dept. of Public Health and Welfare, Mo.App., 319 S.W.2d 271, 274. See also Procedural law, Compare Substantive law.

Adjoining. The word in its etymological sense means touching or contiguous, as distinguished from lying near to or adjacent. To be in contact with; to abut upon. State ex rel. Boynton v. Bunton, 141 Kan. 103, 40 P.2d 326, 328. And the same meaning has been given to it when used in statutes. See Adjacent.

Adjoining owners. Those persons who own land touching the subject land and who, as a result, have right to notice of proceedings concerning the subject real estate as, for example, in zoning and licensing matters. Bayport Civic Ass'n v. Koehler, Sup., 138 N.Y.S.2d 524, 530. See Abutting owner.

Adjourn /əjərn/. To put off; defer; recess; postpone. To postpone action of a convened court or legislative body until another time specified, or indefinitely; the latter being usually called to adjourn sine die. To suspend or recess during a meeting, legislature or assembly, which continues in session. Suspending business for a time, delaying. See Adjournment.

Adjournamentum est ad diem dicere seu diem dare /əjərnəməntəm èst ə(d) dáyəm dísərey syuw dáyəm dérey/. An adjournment is to appoint a day or give a day. Hence the formula "eat sine die."

Adjournatur /əjərnéydər/. L. Lat. It is adjourned. A word with which the old reports very frequently concluded a case.

A continuation of the same meeting, and at such adjourned meeting the governing body can do any act which might have been done if no adjournment had taken place, and limitations imposed on governing body as regards action at original meeting obtain at adjourned meeting. One ordered by board at regular meeting, and which is to convene after termination of such regular meeting and prior to next regular meeting. Byrd v. Byrd, 193 Miss. 249, 8 So.2d 510, 513.

Adjourned summons. A summons taken out in the chambers of a judge, and afterwards taken into court to be argued by counsel.

Adjourned term. In practice, a continuance, by adjournment, of a regular term. Distinguished from an "additional term," which is a distinct term. A continuation of a previous or regular term. The same term prolonged, wherein power of court over business which has been done, and the entries made at the regular term, continues.

Adjournment. A putting off or postponing of business or of a session until another time or place. The act of a court, legislative body, public meeting, or officer, by which the session or assembly is dissolved, either temporarily or finally, and the business in hand dismissed from consideration, either definitely or for an interval. If the adjournment is final, it is said to be sine die. See also Recess.

Adjournment day. A further day appointed by the judges at the regular sittings at nisi prius to try issue of fact not then ready for trial.

Adjournment day in error. In old English practice, a day appointed some days before the end of the term at which matters left undone on the affirmance day are finished.

Adjournment in eyre /əjɔːnmənt in ɛr/. In English law, the appointment of a day when the justices in eyre mean to sit again.

Adjournment sine die /əjɔːnmənt saɪniy dáy(iy)/"siyney díyey/. An adjournment without setting a time for another meeting or session. See Sine die.

Adjudge /əjɔːj/. To pass on judicially, to decide, settle, or decree, or to sentence or condemn. People v. Rave, 364 Ill. 72, 3 N.E.2d 972, 975. Judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction; equivalent of convicted and sentenced. Implies a judicial determination of a fact, and the entry of a judgment. See also Adjudication; Judgment.

Adjudicate /əjɔːdəkəyt/. To settle in the exercise of judicial authority. To determine finally. Synonymous with adjudge in its strictest sense. United States v. Irwin, 127 U.S. 125, 8 S.Ct. 1033, 32 L.Ed. 99.

Adjudicated rights. Rights which have been recognized in a judicial or administrative proceeding.

Adjudicatee /əjɔːdəkəytɪy/. In French and civil law, the purchaser at a judicial sale.

Adjudicatio /əjɔːdəkəyʃ(iy)ow/. In the civil law, an adjudication. The judgment of the court that the subject matter is the property of one of the litigants; confirmation of title by judgment.

Adjudication /əjɔːdəkəyʃən/. The legal process of resolving a dispute. The formal giving or pronouncing a judgment or decree in a court proceeding; also the judgment or decision given. The entry of a decree by a court in respect to the parties in a case. Samuel Goldwyn, Inc. v. United Artists Corporation, C.C.A.Del., 113 F.2d 703, 706. It implies a hearing by a court, after notice, of legal evidence on the factual issue(s) involved. Genzer v. Phillip, Tex.Civ.App., 134 S.W.2d 730, 732. The equivalent of a "determination." Campbell v. Wyoming Development Co., 55 Wyo. 347, 100 P.2d 124, 132. It contemplates that the claims of all the parties thereto have been considered and set at rest. Miller v. Scobie, 152 Fla. 328, 11 So.2d 892, 894. See Administrative adjudication; Judgment.

Adjudicative claims arbitration. This form of dispute resolution is concerned primarily with tort and other claims involving small amounts as distinguished from the traditional categories of arbitration in the fields of labor, commerce and international trade. Designed to relieve courts of burden of handling such cases.

Adjudicative facts. Factual matters concerning the parties to an administrative proceeding as contrasted with legislative facts which are general and usually do not touch individual questions of particular parties to a proceeding. Facts which concern a person's motives and intent, as contrasted with general policy issues. U. S. v. Bishop Processing Co., D.C.Md., 287 F.Supp. 624, 633. Those facts that must be found beyond a reasonable doubt by trier of fact before there can be a conviction. Sundberg v. State, Alaska App., 667 P.2d 1268, 1271.

"Adjudicative facts," of which trial court may take notice if fact is not subject to reasonable dispute, are those to which law is applied in process of adjudication; they are facts that, in jury case, normally go to jury. Grason Elec. Co. v. Sacramento Mun. Utility Dist., D.C. Cal., 571 F.Supp. 1504, 1521.

Adjudicatory action. Administrative actions are "adjudicatory" in character when they culminate in final determination affecting personal or property rights. Allegheny Ludlum Steel Corp. v. Pennsylvania Public Utility Com'n, 501 Pa. 71, 459 A.2d 1218, 1221. See also Adjudicatory hearing; Adjudicatory process.

Adjudicatory hearing. A proceeding before an administrative agency in which the rights and duties of particular persons are adjudicated after notice and opportunity to be heard.

Adjudicatory proceeding. See Adjudicatory action; Adjudicatory hearing; Adjudicatory process.

Adjudicatory process. Method of adjudicating factual disputes; used generally in reference to administrative proceedings in contrast to judicial proceedings.

Adjudicataire /əjɔːdəkəçər/. In Canadian law, a purchaser at a sheriff's sale.

Ad iudicium /æd juwdish(iy)əm/. To judgment; to court. Ad iudicium provocare; to summon to court; to commence an action; a term of the Roman law.

Adjunct /éjəŋkt/. Something added to another, but in a subordinate, auxiliary, or dependent position. See also Appurtenance.

One associated with another in a subordinate or an auxiliary manner; an associate.

Adjunction /əjəŋ(k)ʃən/. Adding, affixing or attaching to another. Act of adjoining. In civil law, the attachment or union permanently of a thing belonging to one person to that belonging to another. The common law implicitly adopts the civil law doctrines. See Accession.

Adjunctum accessorium /əjŋktəm əksəsóriyəm/. An accessory or appurtenance.

Ad jungendum auxilium /æ(d) jənʒəndəm ogzil(i)yəm/. To join in aid. See Aid prayer.

Ad jura regis /æ(d) júra riyjəs/. To the rights of the king; a writ which was brought by the king's clerk, presented to a living against those who endeavored to eject him, to the prejudice of the king's title.

Adjuration /æjərəyʃhən/. A swearing or binding upon oath.

Adjust. To settle or arrange; to free from differences or discrepancies. To bring to satisfactory state so that parties are agreed, as to adjust amount of loss by fire or controversy regarding property or estate. To bring to proper relations; to settle. To determine and apportion an amount due. Accounts are adjusted when they are settled and a balance is struck. Term is sometimes used in the sense of pay, when used in reference to a liquidated claim. Combination Oil & Gas Co. v. Brady, Tex.Civ.App., 96 S.W.2d 415, 416. Determination of amount to be paid to insured by insurer to cover loss or damage sustained. See Adjuster; Adjustment; Settlement.

Adjustable-rate mortgage (ARM). See Mortgage.

Adjusted basis. The cost or other basis of property reduced by depreciation allowed or allowable and increased by capital improvements. See Basis.

Adjusted cost basis. For income tax purposes, original cost plus additions to capital less depreciation results in the "adjusted cost basis." Herder v. Helvering, 70 U.S. App.D.C. 287, 106 F.2d 153, 162.

Adjusted gross estate. The gross estate less I.R.C. §§ 2053 and 2054 expenses equals the adjusted gross estate. Generally, I.R.C. §§ 2053 and 2054 expenses include administration expenses, debts of the decedent, and losses incurred during the settlement of the estate. Fifty percent of the adjusted gross estate measures the maximum amount of the marital deduction allowed for death tax purposes. See Administration expense; Gross estate; Marital deduction.

Adjusted gross income. A tax determination peculiar to individual taxpayers. Generally, it represents gross income less business expenses, expenses attributable to the production of rent or royalty income, the allowed capital loss deduction, and certain personal expenses. See also Gross income.

Adjusted ordinary gross income. A determination peculiar to the personal holding company tax imposed by I.R.C. § 541. Adjusted ordinary gross income is the corporation's gross income less capital gains, § 1231 gains, and certain expenses. I.R.C. § 543(b)(2). See also Personal holding company income.

Adjuster. One appointed to adjust a matter; to ascertain or arrange or settle. One who makes any adjustment or settlement, or who determines the amount of a claim, as a claim against an insurance company. A representative of the insurer who seeks to determine the extent of the firm's liability for loss when a claim is submitted. A person who acts for the insurance company or the insured in the determination and settlement of claims. "Public" adjusters represent claimants only in presenting their claims to insurer. "Average" adjusters specialize in adjusting marine losses. See Claim adjuster; Claimant adjuster; Independent adjuster.

Adjusting entry. An accounting entry made at the end of an accounting period to record previously unrecognized revenue and expenses and changes in assets and liabilities. An adjusting entry can also occur as a result of an error made in a prior period, requiring an adjusting or correcting entry in the current period.

Adjustment. An arrangement; a settlement. In the law of insurance, the adjustment of a loss is the ascertainment of its amount and the ratable distribution of it among those liable to pay it. The settling and ascertaining the amount of the indemnity which the assured, after all allowances and deductions made, is entitled to receive under the policy, and fixing the proportion which each underwriter is liable to pay.

In tax practice, the correction of erroneous determination of deficiency. Hopper v. Government of Virgin Islands, C.A. Virgin Islands, 550 F.2d 844, 847.

Adjustment board. See Board of adjustment.

Adjustment bond. See Bond.

Adjustment securities. Stocks and bonds which are issued during a corporate reorganization.

Adjutant general /æjɔdən(t) jén(ə)rəl/. An officer in charge of the National Guard of one of the States. The administrative head of a military unit having a general staff.

Adjuvari quippe nos, non decipi, beneficio oportet /æjuwvéray kwípiy nóws, non désəpay, bənəfish(i)yow əpórtət/. We ought to be favored, not injured by that which is intended for our benefit. (The species of bailment called "loan" must be to the advantage of the borrower, not to his detriment.)

Ad largum /æd lárgəm/. At large; as, title at large; assize at large. Also at liberty; free, or unconfined. Ire ad largum, to go at large. A special verdict was formerly called a verdict at large.

Adlegiare /ædlijiyériy/. To purge one's self of a crime by oath.

Ad libitum /æd libítəm/. At pleasure. 3 Bl.Comm. 292.

Ad litem /æd láytəm/. For the suit; for the purposes of the suit; pending the suit. A guardian ad litem is a guardian appointed to prosecute or defend a suit on behalf of a party incapacitated by infancy or otherwise.

Ad lucrandum vel perdendum /æd l(y)uwkrándəm vél pərdéndəm/. For gain or loss. Emphatic words in the old warrants of attorney. Sometimes expressed in English, "to lose and gain."

Ad majorem cautelam /æd məjórəm kotíyləm/. For greater security.

Admanuensis /ædmənyuwénsəs/. A person who swore by laying his hands on the book.

Ad manum /æd méynəm/. At hand; ready for use. Et querens sectam habeat ad manum; and the plaintiff immediately have his suit ready.

Admeasurement /ædmézhərmənt/. Ascertainment by measure; measuring out; assignment or apportionment by measure, that is, by fixed quantity or value, by certain limits, or in definite and fixed proportions.

Admeasurement of dower. A common law remedy which lay for the heir on reaching his majority to rectify an assignment of dower made during his minority, by which the doweress had received more than she was legally entitled to.

Admeasurement of pasture. In English law, a writ which lay between those that had common of pasture appendant, or by vicinage, in cases where any one or more of them surcharged the common with more cattle than they ought. This remedy has long been abolished in England and in the United States.

Admeasurement, writ of. A common law remedy which lay against persons who usurped more than their share, in the two following cases: Admeasurement of dower, and admeasurement of pasture.

Ad medium filum aquæ /æd mídyiyəm fáyləm ákwíy/. To the middle thread of the stream. See Ad filum aquæ.

Ad medium filum viæ /æd mídyiyəm fáyləm váiy/. To the middle thread of the way.

Ad melius inquirendum /æd mílyiyəs inkwərəndəm/. A writ directed to a coroner commanding him to hold a second inquest.

Admensuratio /ædmənsyərəysh(iy)ow/. In old English law, admeasurement.

Adminicle /ædmínəkəl/. Used as an English word in the statute of 1 Edw. IV, c. 1, in the sense of aid, or support. In civil law, imperfect proof. See Adminiculum.

Adminicular /ædmənikyələr/. Auxiliary or subordinate to. "The murder would be adminicular to the robbery" (i. e., committed to accomplish it).

Adminicular evidence /ædmənikyələr évidəns/. Auxiliary or supplementary evidence; such as is presented for the purpose of explaining and completing other evidence. (Chiefly used in ecclesiastical law.)

Adminiculate /ædmənikyələyt/. To give adminicular evidence.

Adminiculator /ædmənikyələytər/. An officer in the Roman Catholic Church who administered to the wants of widows, orphans, and afflicted persons.

Adminiculum /ædmənikyələm/. Lat. An adminicle; a prop or support; an accessory thing. An aid or support to something else, whether a right or the evidence of one. It is principally used to designate evidence adduced in aid or support of other evidence, which without it is imperfect.

Administer. To manage or conduct. Glocksens v. Holmes, 299 Ky. 626, 186 S.W.2d 634, 637. To discharge the duties of an office; to take charge of business; to manage affairs; to serve in the conduct of affairs, in the application of things to their uses; to settle and distribute the estate of a decedent. Also, to give, as an oath; to direct or cause to be taken.

To "administer" a decree is to execute it, to enforce its provisions, to resolve conflicts as to its meaning, to construe and to interpret its language. U. S. v. Hennen, D.C.Nev., 300 F.Supp. 256, 263.

To "administer" trusts is to manage, direct or superintend affairs of such trusts. Wisconsin Dept. of Taxation v. Pabst, 15 Wis.2d 195, 112 N.W.2d 161, 164, 165.

To apply, as medicine or a remedy; to give, as a dose of something beneficial or suitable. Barfield v. State, 71 Okl.Cr. 195, 110 P.2d 316, 317. To cause or procure a person to take some drug or other substance into his or her system; to direct and cause a medicine, poison, or drug to be taken into the system.

Administration. Management or conduct of an office or employment; the performance of the executive duties of an institution, business, or the like. In public law, the administration of government means the practical management and direction of the executive department, or of the public machinery or functions, or of the operations of the various organs or agencies. Direction or oversight of any office, service, or employment. Greene v. Wheeler, C.C.A.Wis., 29 F.2d 468, 469. The term "administration" is also conventionally applied to the whole class of public functionaries, or those in charge of the management of the executive department.

Administration expense. Administrative expenses imply disbursements incidental to the management of the estate which are deductible in computing estate taxes. Deductions are allowed for such expenses or claims only to the extent that they "are allowable by the laws of the jurisdiction" under which the estate is being administered. I.R.C. § 2053.

Administration letters. The instrument by which an administrator or administratrix is authorized by the probate court, surrogate, or other proper officer, to have the charge and administration of the goods and property of an intestate. See Administrator.

Administration of estates. The management and settlement of the estate of an intestate decedent, or of a testator who has no executor, performed under the supervision of a court, by a person duly qualified and legally appointed, and usually involving: (1) the collection of the decedent's assets; (2) payment of debts and claims against the estate; (3) payment of estate taxes; (4) distribution of the remainder of the estate among those entitled thereto. The administration of an estate runs from the date of an individual's death until all assets have been distributed and liabilities paid. Such administration is conducted by an administrator or an executor. See Administrator; Letters of administration.

Administration of estates is principally of the following kinds:

Ad colligendum bona defuncti. To collect the goods of the deceased. Special letters of administration granted to one or more persons, authorizing them to collect and preserve the goods of the deceased.

Ad prosequendum. An administrator appointed to prosecute or defend a certain action (e.g. wrongful death) or actions in which the estate is concerned.

Ancillary administration is auxiliary and subordinate to the administration at the place of the decedent's domicile; it may be taken out in any foreign state or country where assets are locally situated, and is merely for the purpose of collecting such assets and paying debts there.

Cum testamento annexo (CTA). Administration with the will annexed. Administration granted in cases where a testator makes a will without naming any executors; or where the executors who are named in the will are incompetent to act, are deceased, or refuse to act.

De bonis non (DBN). Administration granted for the purpose of administering such of the goods of a deceased person as were not administered by the former executor or administrator.

De bonis non cum testamento annexo (DBNCTA). That which is granted when an executor dies leaving a part of the estate unadministered.

Durante absentia. That which is granted during the absence of the executor and until he has proved the will.

Durante minori ætate. Exists where an infant is made executor, in which case administration with will annexed is granted to another during the minority of such executor, and until he shall attain his lawful age to act.

Foreign administration. That which is exercised by virtue of authority properly conferred by a foreign power.

General administration. The grant of authority to administer upon the entire estate of a decedent, without restriction or limitation, whether under the intestate laws or with the will annexed.

Pendente lite. Administration granted during the pendency of a suit touching the validity of a will.

Public administration is such as is conducted (in some jurisdictions) by an officer called the public administrator, who is appointed to administer in cases where the intestate has left no person entitled to apply for letters.

Special administration. Authority to administer upon some few particular effects of a decedent, as opposed to authority to administer his whole estate.

Administrative. Connotes of or pertains to administration, especially management, as by managing or conducting, directing, or superintending, the execution, application or conduct of persons or things. Fluet v. McCabe, 299 Mass. 173, 12 N.E.2d 89, 93. Particularly, having the character of executive or ministerial action. Mauritz v. Schwind, Tex.Civ.App., 101 S.W.2d 1085, 1090. In this sense, administrative functions or acts are distinguished from such as are judicial. People ex rel. Van Sickle v. Austin, 20 App.Div. 1, 46 N.Y.S. 526.

Administrative acts. Those acts which are necessary to be done to carry out legislative policies and purposes already declared by the legislative body or such as are devolved upon it by the organic law of its existence. Ex parte McDonough, 27 Cal.App.2d 155, 80 P.2d 485, 487.

Administrative adjudication. The process by which an administrative agency issues an order, such order being affirmative, negative, injunctive or declaratory in form. Adm. Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C.A. § 551.

Administrative agency. A governmental body charged with administering and implementing particular legislation. Examples are worker's compensation commissions, Federal Trade Commission, Hastings Mfg. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, C.C.A.6th, 153 F.2d 253, certiorari denied 328 U.S. 853, 66 S.Ct. 1344, 90 L.Ed. 1626; tax commissions, First State Bank of Mountainair v. State Tax Commission, 40 N.M. 319, 59 P.2d 667; public service commissions, New York Cent. R. Co. v. Public Service Commission, 212 Ind. 329, 7 N.E.2d 957; and the like. In addition to "agency", such governmental bodies may be called commissions, corporations (e.g. F.D.I.C.), boards, departments, or divisions.

The term "agency" includes any department, independent establishment, commission, administration, authority, board or bureau of the United States or any corporation in which the United States has a proprietary interest, unless the context shows that such term was intended to be used in a more limited sense. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1.

Administrative authority. The power of an agency or its head to carry out the terms of the law creating the agency as well as to make regulations for the conduct of business before the agency; distinguishable from legislative authority to make laws.

Administrative board. This term is very broad and includes bodies exercising varied functions, some of which involve orders made or other acts done ex parte or without full hearing as to the operative facts, while others are done only after such a notice and hearing, and the functions of the former kind are plainly "administrative" and those of the latter are "quasi judicial." Beaverdale Memorial Park v. Danaher, 127 Conn. 175, 15 A.2d 17, 21. Administrative boards differ from "courts" in that boards frequently represent public interests entrusted to boards, whereas courts are concerned with litigating rights of parties with adverse interests. Rommell v. Walsh, 127 Conn. 16, 15 A.2d 6, 9.

Administrative collateral estoppel. Principles of this estoppel doctrine apply when agency is acting in a judicial capacity and resolves disputed issues of fact properly before it which parties have had adequate opportunity to litigate; threshold inquiry is whether earlier proceeding is essential equivalent of judicial proceeding. City Wide Learning Center, Inc. v. William C. Smith & Co., Inc., D.C.App., 488 A.2d 1310, 1313.

Administrative crime. An offense consisting of a violation of an administrative rule or regulation and carrying with it a criminal sanction.

Administrative determination. See Administrative adjudication.

Administrative deviation. Departure from the administrative provisions of a trust by the trustee acting alone or with prior approval of the court. Anderson v. Ryland, 232 Ark. 335, 336 S.W.2d 52.

Administrative discretion. Term means that the doing of acts or things required to be done may rest, in part at least, upon considerations not entirely susceptible of proof or disproof and at times which considering the circumstances and subject-matter cannot be supplied by the Legislature, and a statute confers such discretion when it refers a commission or office to beliefs, expectations, or tendencies instead of facts for the exercise of the powers conferred. Culver v. Smith, Tex.Civ.App., 74 S.W.2d 754, 757.

Administrative exhaustion. See Exhaustion of administrative remedies.

Administrative hearing. An oral proceeding before an administrative agency consisting of argument or trial or both. Procedural rules are more relaxed at such hearings as contrasted with civil or criminal trials; e.g. rules governing admissibility of evidence are usually quite liberal. See also Hearing.

Administrative interpretation. Meaning given to a law or regulation by an administrative agency.

Administrative law. Body of law created by administrative agencies in the form of rules, regulations, orders, and decisions to carry out regulatory powers and duties of such agencies.

Administrative law judge. One who presides at an administrative hearing, with power to administer oaths, take testimony, rule on questions of evidence, regulate course of proceedings, and make agency determinations of fact. Formerly called "hearing officer" or "hearing examiner". Adm. Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C.A. § 556.

Administrative office of United States courts. Created by the Administrative Office Act of 1939, it is responsible for administration of the Federal court system, as a whole, including the collection of statistics on court business, supervision of administrative personnel in the courts and conducting of financial and management audits of courts.

Administrative officer. Politically, and as used in constitutional law, an officer of the executive department of government, and generally one of inferior rank; legally, a ministerial or executive officer, as distinguished from a judicial officer.

Administrative order. The final disposition of a matter before an administrative agency; product of an administrative adjudication. Such order may be declaratory or it may contain an affirmative or negative command. Adm. Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C.A. § 554.

A regulation issued by an administrative agency interpreting or applying the provisions of a statute. Administrative acts having force of law, designed to clarify or implement a law or policy.

Administrative procedure. Methods and processes before administrative agencies as distinguished from judicial procedure which applies to courts. Procedural rules and regulations of most federal agencies are set forth in the Code of Federal Regulations. See also Administrative Procedure Act.

Administrative Procedure Act. Federal. Law enacted in 1946 (60 Stat. 237, 5 U.S.C.A.) governing practice and proceedings before federal administrative agencies.

State. Individual states have enacted variations of the federal Act, e.g. M.G.L.A. (Mass.) c. 30A. Such acts govern proceedings before state administrative agencies.

Administrative process. In general, the procedure used before administrative agencies; in particular, the means of summoning witnesses before such agencies, e.g. subpoena.

Administrative remedy. Procedure for allowing person to assert a right to some kind of relief before an administrative agency. Daniels v. U.S., C.A.Cal., 372 F.2d 407, 414. Non-judicial remedy provided by agency, board, commission, or the like. In most instances, all administrative remedies must have been exhausted before a court will take jurisdiction of a case; e.g. U.S. District Courts will not consider a social security case unless all hearing, appeal, etc. remedies before the Social Security Administration have been exhausted.

Administrative review. Generally refers to judicial review of administrative proceedings; may also embrace appellate review within the administrative agency itself. Adm. Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C.A. § 557.

Administrative rule. Agency statement of general applicability and continuing effect that interprets law or policy or describes agency's requirements. Matter of 1982 Final Reconciliation Adjustment for Jersey Shore Medical Center, 209 N.J.Super. 79, 506 A.2d 1269, 1272.

Administrative rule-making. Power of an administrative agency to make rules and regulations for proceedings before it. Adm. Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C.A. § 553.

Administrative tribunal. A particular administrative agency before which a matter may be heard or tried as distinguished from a judicial forum.

Administrator(-trix). A person appointed by the court to administer (i.e., manage or take charge of) the assets and liabilities of a decedent (i.e., the deceased). Such person may be a male (i.e., administrator) or a female (i.e., administratrix). If the person performing these probate services is named by the decedent's will, he is designated as the executor, or she the executrix, of the estate. See also Executor.

An instrumentality established by law for performing the acts necessary for transfer of effects left by deceased to those who succeed to their ownership. Behnke v. Geib, D.C.Md., 169 F.Supp. 647, 650.

Domestic. One appointed at the place of the domicile of the decedent; distinguished from a foreign or an ancillary administrator.

Foreign. One appointed or qualified under the laws of a foreign state or country, where the decedent was domiciled.

Public. An official provided for by statute in some states to administer upon the property of intestates in certain cases.

Administrator ad litem /ædminəstrétər æd láytəm/. A special administrator appointed by court to supply a necessary party to an action in which deceased or his estate is interested.

Administrator cum testamento annexo (C.T.A.) /ædminəstrétər kəm testəméntow ənéksoʊ/. See Cum testamento annexo.

Administrator de bonis non (D.B.N.) /ædminəstrétər díy bównəs nòn/. "Administrators de bonis non administratis" are, as the term signifies, persons appointed by the court of probate to administer on the effects of a decedent which have not been included in a former administration.

Administrator pendente lite /ædminəstrétər pèndén- tēy láytiy/. A temporary administrator appointed before an adjudication of intestacy has been made for purpose of preserving assets of the estate.

Administrator with will annexed. One appointed administrator of deceased's estate after executors named in will have refused or are unable to act.

Administratrix /ædminəstrétəks/. A female who administers, or to whom letters of administration have been granted.

Admiralitas /ædmərəlætəs/. L. Lat. Admiralty; the admiralty, or court of admiralty. In European law, an association of private armed vessels for mutual protection and defense against pirates and enemies.

Admiralty. See Maritime.

Admiralty court. A court exercising jurisdiction over all maritime contracts, torts, injuries, or offenses. Federal district courts have jurisdiction over admiralty and maritime actions. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1333. Procedure in such actions is governed by the Fed.R. Civil P. and Supp. Admiralty Rules. See also Saving to suitors clause with respect to admiralty actions in state courts.

Admiralty, First Lord of the. In England, formerly the normal head of the executive department of state which presided over the naval forces of the kingdom was the lord high admiral, but in practice the functions of the great office were discharged by several Lords Commissioners, of whom one, being the chief, was called the "First Lord," and was a member of the Cabinet. He was assisted by other lords, called Sea Lords, and by various secretaries.

Admiralty law. The terms "admiralty" and "maritime" law are virtually synonymous. See Maritime law.

Admissible. Pertinent and proper to be considered in reaching a decision. Used with reference to the issues to be decided in any judicial proceeding.

Admissible evidence. As applied to evidence, the term means that the evidence introduced is of such a character that the court or judge is bound to receive it; that is, allow it to be introduced at trial. To be "admissible" evidence must be relevant, and, inter alia, to be "relevant" it must tend to establish material proposition. Smith v. State, Alaska, 431 P.2d 507, 509. Admissibility of evidence in federal courts is governed by Federal Rules of Evidence. Many states have similar evidence rules for their trial courts. See Evidence; Limited admissibility; Relevant evidence.

Admission. Admission temporaire. Admission of goods into country duty-free for processing and eventual export.

Bail. The order of a competent court or magistrate that a person accused of crime be discharged from actual custody upon the taking of bail.

Evidence. Ruling by trial judge that trier of fact, judge or jury, may consider testimony or document or other thing (real evidence) in determining ultimate question. See Evidence.

Admissions. Confessions, concessions or voluntary acknowledgments made by a party of the existence of certain facts. More accurately regarded, they are statements by a party, or some one identified with him in legal interest, of the existence of a fact which is relevant to the cause of his adversary.

A voluntary acknowledgement made by a party of the existence of the truth of certain facts which are inconsistent with his claims in an action. Vockie v. General Motors Corp., Chevrolet Division, D.C.Pa., 66 F.R.D. 57, 60. An admission is not limited to words, but may also include the demeanor, conduct and acts of the person charged with a crime. People v. Baldi, 80 Misc.2d 118, 362 N.Y.S.2d 927, 933.

Admissions against interest. A statement made by one of the parties to an action which amounts to a prior acknowledgment by him that one of the material facts relevant to the issues is not as he now claims. Nagel v. Hopingardner, Tex.Civ.App., 464 S.W.2d 472, 476. Any statements made by or attributable to a party to an action, which constitute admissions against his interest and tend to establish or disprove any material fact in the case. Kellner v. Whaley, 148 Neb. 259, 27 N.W.2d 183, 189.

Admissions by party-opponent. A statement is not hearsay if the statement is offered against a party and is (A) his own statement, in either his individual or a representative capacity, or (B) a statement of which he has manifested his adoption or belief in its truth, or (C) a statement by a person authorized by him to make a statement concerning the subject, or (D) a statement by his agent or servant concerning a matter within the scope of his agency or employment, made during the existence of the relationship, or (E) a statement by a coconspirator of a party during the course and in furtherance of the conspiracy. Fed.Evid.R. 801(d)(2).

Admissions by silence. If a statement is made by another person in the presence of a party to the action, containing assertions of facts which, if untrue, the party would under all the circumstances naturally be expected to deny, his failure to speak has traditionally been receivable against him as an admission. Failure of one not under arrest to respond by denial to accusation of crime, or element of crime, may be construed as admission of guilt if such person understood accusation and could have responded. See also Estoppel; Silence.

Adoptive admission. Action by a party in which he approves statement of one for whom he is responsible thereby accepting truth of statement. Silence, actions, or statements which manifest assent to the statements of another person. Such may be received into evidence as admissions of the defendant if it can be shown that the defendant adopted the statements as his own. See Fed.Evid.R. 801(d)(2)(B).

Criminal admissions. A statement by accused, direct or implied, of facts pertinent to issue, and tending, in connection with proof of other facts, to prove his guilt. State v. Johnson, 277 Minn. 368, 152 N.W.2d 768, 773. The avowal of a fact or of circumstances from which guilt may be inferred, but only tending to prove the offense charged, and not amounting to a confession of guilt. A statement by defendant of fact or facts pertinent to issues tending, in connection with proof of other facts or circumstances, to prove guilt, but which is, of itself, insufficient to authorize conviction. Does not include statements which are part of the res gestae. State v. Clark, 102 Mont. 432, 58 P.2d 276, 278.

Discovery practice. Requests for admissions in civil actions are governed by Fed.R. Civil P. 36. Any matter admitted under Rule 36 is conclusively established unless the court on motion permits withdrawal or amendment of the admission. See Request (Request for admission); Stipulation.

Distinguished from confession. A confession is a statement admitting or acknowledging all facts necessary for conviction of the crime. An admission, on the other hand, is an acknowledgment of a fact or facts tending to prove guilt which falls short of an acknowledgment of all essential elements of the crime. Gladden v. Unsworth, 9th Cir., 396 F.2d 373, 375 n. 2; People v. Fitzgerald, 56 Cal.2d 855, 861, 17 Cal.Rptr. 129, 132, 366 P.2d 481, 484. The term "admission" is usually applied to civil transactions and to those matters of fact in criminal cases which do not involve criminal intent, while the term "confession" is generally restricted to acknowledgments of guilt. People v. Sourisseau, 62 Cal.App.2d 917, 145 P.2d 916, 923.

Extrajudicial admissions. Those made outside of court.

Implied admissions are those which result from some act or failure to act of the party; e.g. part payment of a debt is an admission of liability to pay debt.

Incidental admissions are those made in some other connection, or involved in the admission of some other fact.

Judicial admissions are those made in court by a person's attorney for the purpose of being used as a substitute for the regular legal evidence of the facts at the trial. A formal waiver of proof that relieves opposing party from making proof of admitted fact and bars party who made admission from disputing it. E-Tex Dairy Queen, Inc. v. Adair, Tex.Civ.App., 566 S.W.2d 37, 39. Such as are made voluntarily by a party, which appear of record in the proceedings of the court. Formal acts done by a party or his attorney in court on the trial of a cause for the purpose of dispensing with proof by the opposing party of some fact claimed by the latter to be true. Hofer v. Bituminous Gas. Corp., 260 Iowa 81, 148 N.W.2d 485, 486.

Pleading. The acknowledgment or recognition by one party of the truth of some matter alleged by the opposite party, made in a pleading, the effect of which is to narrow the area of facts or allegations required to be proved by evidence. Averments in a pleading to which a responsive pleading is required are admitted when not denied in the responsive pleading. Fed.R. Civil P. 8(d).

Quasi admission. See that title.

Request for admission. See Request.

Tacit admissions. See Tacit admissions.

Admissions tax. Form of tax imposed as part of price of being admitted to a particular function or event.

Admission to sufficient facts. Also called "submission to a finding", means an admission to facts sufficient to warrant a finding of guilty. Com. v. Duquette, 386 Mass. 834, 438 N.E.2d 334, 338.

Admit. See Admission; Admissions.

Admittance. In English law, the act of giving possession of a copyhold estate. It is of three kinds: (1) Upon a voluntary grant by the lord, where the land has escheated or reverted to him. (2) Upon surrender by the former tenant. (3) Upon descent, where the heir is tenant on his ancestor's death. Copyholds were abolished by Part V of Law of Property Act 1922. Abolition took effect Jan. 1, 1926. See also, Copyhold; Surrender.

Admittendo clericus /ædmətəndow klérəkow/. An old English writ issuing to the bishop to establish the right of the Crown to make a presentation to a benefice. A writ of execution upon a right of presentation to a benefice being recovered in quare impedit, addressed to the bishop or his metropolitan, requiring him to admit and institute the clerk or presentee of the plaintiff.

Admittendo in socium /ædmətəndow in sówshiyəm/. An old English writ for associating certain persons, as knights and other gentlemen of the county, to justices of assize on the circuit.

Admixture /ædmiks(h)char/. A substance formed by mixing; state of being mixed; act of mixing.

Admonish /ædmónəsh/. To caution or advise. To counsel against wrong practices, or to warn against danger of an offense. See Admonition.

Admonition /ædmənɪʃən/. Any authoritative oral communication or statement by way of advice or caution by the court to the jury respecting their duty or conduct as jurors, the admissibility or nonadmissibility of evidence, or the purpose for which any evidence admitted may be considered by them. Reprimand or cautionary statement addressed to counsel by judge.

In English law, a reprimand from a judge to a person accused, on being discharged, warning him of the consequences of his conduct, and intimating to him that, should he be guilty of the same fault for which he has been admonished, he will be punished with greater severity. The admonition was authorized as a species of punishment for slight misdemeanors. In ecclesiastical law, this is the lightest form of punishment.

Admonitio trina /ædmənɪʃiəw træɪnə/. The threefold warning given to a prisoner who stood mute, before he was subjected to peine forte et dure (q.v.). 4 Bl.Comm. 325.

Ad mordendum assuetus /æd mɔrdɛndəm æswiɪtəs/. Accustomed to bite. A material averment in declarations for damage done by a dog to persons or animals.

Admortization /ædmɔrtəzɪʃən/. In feudal customs, the reduction of property of lands or tenements to mortmain.

Adnepos /ædnəpɔws/. The son of a great-great-grandson.

Adneptis /ædnɛptəs/. The daughter of a great-great-granddaughter.

Adnichiled /ædnɪkəld/. Annulled, canceled, made void.

Adnihilare /ædnəɪ(h)ələriy/. In old English law, to annul; to make void; to reduce to nothing; to treat as nothing; to hold as or for nought.

Ad nocumentum /æd nɔkɪməntəm/. To the nuisance, or annoyance; to the hurt or injury. Ad nocumentum liberi tenementi sui, to the nuisance of his freehold. Formal words in the old assise of nuisance. 3 Bl.Comm. 221.

Adnotatio /ædnɔwtɛyʃh(i)ow/. In the civil law, the subscription of a name or signature to an instrument. A rescript (q.v.) of the prince or emperor, signed with his own hand, or sign-manual. In the imperial law, casual homicide was excused by the indulgence of the emperor, signed with his own sign-manual, annotatione principis. 4 Bl.Comm. 187.

Ad officium justiciariorum spectat, unicuique coram eis placitanti justitiam exhibere /æd əfɪʃh(i)əm jɛstɪʃiəriyɔrəm spɛktət yūwnək(yuw)əykwi y kɔrəm i yəs pləsətəntay jɛstɪʃh(i)əm ɛksəbiri y/. It is the duty of justices to administer justice to every one pleading before them.

Adolescence. That age which follows puberty and precedes the age of majority.

Ad omissa vel male appretiatia /æd əmɪsə vel məli y əpriyʃh(i)ɛytə/. With relation to omissions or wrong interpretations.

Adopt. To accept, appropriate, choose, or select. To make that one's own (property or act) which was not so originally. To accept, consent to, and put into effective operation; as in the case of a constitution, constitutional amendment, ordinance, court rule, or by-law.

Adoption. Legal process pursuant to state statute in which a child's legal rights and duties toward his natural parents are terminated and similar rights and duties toward his adoptive parents are substituted. To take into one's family the child of another and give him or her the rights, privileges, and duties of a child and heir. The procedure is entirely statutory and has no historical basis in common law. Most adoptions are through agency placements. See Adoption by estoppel; De facto adoption; Equitable adoption; Placement; Private placement (Adoption).

A contract principle by which a person agrees to assume a contract previously made for his or her benefit. An adoption speaks only from the time such person agrees, in contrast to a "ratification" which relates back to the time the original contract was made. In corporation law, the concept is applied when a newly formed corporation accepts a preincorporation contract made for its benefit by a promoter.

Adoption by estoppel. Equitable adoption of a child by promises and acts which preclude such person and his estate from denying adopted status to child. Heien v. Crabtree, Tex., 369 S.W.2d 28, 30. See also Equitable adoption.

Adoption by reference. Statement in writing by which another statement in a separate writing is incorporated by reference. Statement in pleading may be adopted by reference in a different part of same pleading or in another pleading or motion. Fed.R. Civil P. 10(c).

Adoptive act. An act of legislation which comes into operation within a limited area upon being adopted, in manner prescribed therein, by the inhabitants of that area.

Ad opus /æd ɔwpəs/. To the work.

Ad ostendendum /æd ɔstɛndɛndəm/. To show. Formal words in old writs.

Ad ostium ecclesie /æd ɔstiyəm əkliziyiy/. At the door of the church. One of the five species of dower formerly recognized by the English law. 2 Bl.Comm. 132.

Ad pios usus /æd piyɔws yūwzəs/. Lat. For pious (religious or charitable) uses or purposes. Used with reference to gifts and bequests.

Ad prosequendam /æd prɔsɛkwɛndəm/. To prosecute.

Ad proximum antecedens fiat relatio nisi impediatur sententia /æd prɔksəməm əntɛsiyɛnz fáyət rəlɛyʃh(i)ow náysay ɪmpliediyɛytər sɛntɛnsh(i)yə/. Relative words refer to the nearest antecedent, unless it be prevented by the context. Brown v. Brown, Del., 3 Terry 157, 29 A.2d 149, 153.

Ad punctum temporis /æd pəŋktəm tɛmpərəs/. At the point of time.

Ad quærimoniam /æd kwirəmówniyəm/. On complaint of.

Ad quæstionem facti non respondent iudices; ad questionem juris non respondent juratores /æd kwès(h)chiyównəm fáktay nón rəspóndənt júwdəsiyz; æd kwès(h)chiyównəm júrəs nón rəspóndənt júrətóriyz/. Means that juries must answer to questions of fact and judges to questions of law. Ex parte United States, C.C.A.Wis., 101 F.2d 870, 874.

Ad quæstiones legis iudices, et non juratores, respondent /æd kwes(h)chiyówniyz líyjəs júwdəsiyz, et nón júrətóriyz, rəspóndənt/. Judges, and not jurors, decide questions of law.

Ad quem /æd kwém/. To which. A term used in the computation of time or distance, as correlative to a quo; denotes the end or terminal point. See A quo.

The terminus a quo is the point of beginning or departure; the terminus ad quem, the end of the period or point of arrival.

Ad questiones facti non respondent iudices; ad quæstiones legis non respondent juratores /æd kwès(h)chiyówniyz fáktay nón rəspóndənt júwdəsiyz; æd kwès(h)chiyówniyz líyjəs nón rəspóndənt júrətóriyz/. Judges do not answer questions of fact; juries do not answer questions of law.

Ad quieto /ædkwayíytow/. Payment.

Ad quod curia concordavit /æd kwòd kýúriyə kòŋkərdéyvt/. To which the court agreed.

Ad quod damnum /æd kwò(d) dámnəm/. The name of a writ formerly issuing from the English chancery, commanding the sheriff to make inquiry "to what damage" a specified act, if done, will tend.

It is a writ which ought to be sued before the king grants certain liberties, as a fair, market or such like, which may be prejudicial to others, and thereby it should be inquired whether it will be a prejudice to grant them, and to whom it will be prejudicial, and what prejudice will come thereby.

There is also another writ of ad quod damnum, if any one will turn a common highway and lay out another way as beneficial.

A "writ of ad quod damnum" is of ancient origin, and could be issued as a writ of right when landowner was dissatisfied with assessment of damages by condemnation commission. Lewis v. Du Pont, Del.Super., 2 Terry 347, 22 A.2d 832, 834.

Ad quod non fuit responsum /æd kwód nón fyúwət rəspónsəm/. To which there was no answer. A phrase used in old reports, where a point advanced in argument by one party was not denied by the other; or where a point or argument of counsel was not met or noticed by the court; or where an objection was met by the court, and not replied to by the counsel who raised it.

A.D.R. See Alternative dispute resolution; Asset Depreciation Range.

Ad rationem ponere /æd rəyshiyównəm pównəriy/. To cite a person to appear. A technical expression in the old records of the Exchequer, signifying, to put to the bar and interrogate as to a charge made; to arraign on a trial.

Ad recognoscendum /æd ríykognəsəndəm/. To recognize. Formal words in old writs.

Adrectare /ædrekteriý/. To set right, satisfy, or make amends.

Ad recte docendum oportet, primum inquirere nomina, quia rerum cognitio a nominibus rerum dependet /æd réktey dowsəndəm owpórtət, práyməm ínkwáyərəriy nómnə, kwáyə rírəm kògníshiyow èy nəmínəbəs rírəm dəpəndət/. In order rightly to comprehend a thing, inquire first into the names, for a right knowledge of things depends upon their names.

Ad rectum /æd réktəm/. To right. To do right. To meet an accusation. To answer the demands of the law. Habeant eos ad rectum. They shall render themselves to answer the law, or to make satisfaction.

Ad reparationem et sustentationem /æd rəpərəyshiyównəm et səsəntəyshiyównəm/. For repairing and keeping in suitable condition.

Ad respondendum /æd rəspóndəndəm/. For answering; to make answer. Words used in certain writs employed for bringing a person before the court to make answer in defense in a proceeding, as in habeas corpus ad respondendum and capias ad respondendum, q.v.

Adrhãmire /ædrəmáryiy/. In old European law, to undertake, declare, or promise solemnly; to pledge; to pledge one's self to make oath.

Adrogation /ædrowgéyshən/. In the civil law, the adoption of one who was impubes; that is, if a male, under fourteen years of age; if a female, under twelve.

Ads. An abbreviation for ad sectam (q.v.), meaning "at the suit of."

Ad satisfaciendum /æd sətəsəfyshiyéndəm/. To satisfy. The emphatic words of the writ of capias ad satisfaciendum, which requires the sheriff to take the person of the defendant to satisfy the plaintiff's claim.

Adscendentes /ædsəndəntiyz/. Lat. In the civil law, ascendants.

Adscripti /ædskríptay/. See Adscriptus.

Adscripti glebæ /ædskríptay glíbyiy/. Slaves who served the master of the soil, who were annexed to the land, and passed with it when it was conveyed.

Adscriptitii /ædskríptíshiyay/. Lat. A species of serfs or slaves. Those persons who were enrolled and liable to be drafted as legionary soldiers.

Adscriptus /ædskríptəs/. In the civil law, added, annexed, or bound by or in writing; enrolled, registered; united, joined, annexed, bound to, generally. Servus colonæ adscriptus, a slave annexed to an estate as a cultivator. Fundus adscriptus, an estate bound to, or burdened with a duty.

Ad sectam /æd séktəm/. At the suit of. Commonly abbreviated to ads. Used in entering and indexing the names of cases, where it is desired that the name of the defendant should come first. Thus, "B. ads. A." indicates that B. is defendant in an action brought by A., and the title so written would be an inversion of the more usual form "A. v. B."

Adsessores /ædsəsóriyz/. Side judges. Assistants or advisers of the regular magistrates, or appointed as their substitutes in certain cases. See Assessor.

Adstipulator /ædstipyléytər/. In Roman law, an accessory party to a promise, who received the same promise as his principal did, and could equally receive and exact payment; or he only stipulated for a part of that for which the principal stipulated, and then his rights were coextensive with the amount of his own stipulation. One who supplied the place of a procurator at a time when the law refused to allow stipulations to be made by procurator.

Ad terminum annorum /æd térmənəm ənórəm/. For a term of years.

Ad terminum qui præterit /æd térmənəm kwáy prédərət/. For a term which has passed. Words in the Latin form of the writ of entry employed at common law to recover, on behalf of a landlord, possession of premises from a tenant holding over after the expiration of the term for which they were demised.

Ad testificandum /æd tɛstəfəkændəm/. To testify. Type of writ of habeas corpus used to bring prisoner to court to testify. See Habeas corpus.

Ad tristem partem strenua est suspicio /æd trístəm pártəm strényuwə ést səsɪsh(iy)ow/. Suspicion lies heavy on the unfortunate side.

Ad tunc et ibidem /æd tánk ət əbáydəm/íbadəm/. In pleading, the Latin name of that clause of an indictment containing the statement of the subject-matter "then and there being found."

Adult. One who has attained the legal age of majority; generally 18 years. At civil law, a male who had attained the age of 14; a female who had attained the age of 12. See Legal age; Majority.

Adulter /ədáltər/. One who corrupts; one who seduces another man's wife. Adulter solidorum. A corruptor of metals; a counterfeiter.

Adultera /ədáltərə/. In the civil law, an adulteress; a woman guilty of adultery.

Adulteration. The act of corrupting or debasing. The act of mixing something impure or spurious with something pure or genuine, or an inferior article with a superior one of the same kind. The term is generally applied to the act of mixing up with food or drink intended to be sold other matters of an inferior quality, and usually of a more or less deleterious quality. The act, process or omission to act by which food becomes impure and unfit for consumption. Such is prohibited and regulated by federal and state statutes and agencies.

See Food and Drug Administration; Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act; Foreign substance.

Adulterator /ədáltəreydər/. A corrupter. In the civil law, a forger; a counterfeiter.

Adulteratores monetæ /ədáltarətóriyz məníytiy/. Counterfeiters of money.

Adulterine /ədáltərən/. Begotten in an adulterous intercourse. Those are not deemed adulterine who are begotten of a woman openly married through ignorance of a former wife being alive. In the Roman and canon law, adulterine bastards were distinguished from such as were the issue of two unmarried persons, and the former were treated with more severity, not being allowed the status of natural children, and being ineligible to holy orders.

Adulterine guilds. Traders acting as a corporation without a charter, and paying a fine annually for permission to exercise their usurped privileges.

Adulterium /ədáltíriyəm/. A fine anciently imposed for the commission of adultery.

Adultery /ədáltəriy/. Voluntary sexual intercourse of a married person with a person other than the offender's husband or wife, or by a person with a person who is married to another. See e.g. Wisc.St. 944.16. This crime, which is variously defined and punished by state statutes, is seldom prosecuted. See also Illicit cohabitation.

Open and notorious adultery. To constitute living in open and notorious adultery, the parties must reside together publicly in the face of society, as if conjugal relations existed between them, and their so living and the fact that they are not husband and wife must be known in the community.

Ad ultimam vim terminorum /æd últəməm vím tərənórəm/. To the most extended import of the terms; in a sense as universal as the terms will reach.

Ad usum et commodum /æd yúsəm et kómədəm/. To the use and benefit.

Ad valentiam /æd váləns(iy)əm/. To the value. See Ad valorem tax.

Ad valorem tax /æd válórəm/. According to value. A tax imposed on the value of property. The more common ad valorem tax is that imposed by states, counties, and cities on real estate. Ad valorem taxes, can, however, be imposed upon personal property; e.g., a motor vehicle tax may be imposed upon the value of an automobile and is therefore deductible as a tax. A tax levied on property or an article of commerce in proportion to its value, as determined by assessment or appraisal. Callaway v. City of Overland Park, 211 Kan. 646, 508 P.2d 902, 907.

Duties are either ad valorem or specific; the former when the duty is laid in the form of a percentage on the value of the property; the latter where it is imposed as a fixed sum on each article of a class without regard to its value.

Advance. To move something forward in position, time or place. To pay money or render other value before it is due; to furnish something before an equivalent is received; to loan; to furnish capital in aid of a projected enterprise, in expectation of return from it. To supply beforehand; to furnish on credit or before goods are delivered or work done; to furnish as a part of a stock or fund; to pay money before it is due; to furnish money for a specific purpose understood between the parties, the money or sum equivalent to be returned; to furnish money or goods for others in expectation of reimbursement.

Money or commodities furnished on credit. A loan, or gift or money advanced to be repaid conditionally; may be equivalent to "pay." See also Advances.

Advance bill. Bill of exchange drawn before shipment of goods.

Advancement. Money or property given by a parent to his child or, sometimes, presumptive heir, or expended by the former for the latter's benefit, by way of anticipation of the share which the child will inherit in the parent's estate and intended to be deducted therefrom. It is the latter circumstance which differentiates an advancement from a gift or a loan.

Advance payment. Payments made in anticipation of a contingent or fixed future liability or obligation.

Advances. Moneys paid before or in advance of the proper time of payment; money or commodities furnished on credit; a loan or gift, or money advanced to be repaid conditionally. Payments advanced to the owner of property by a factor or broker on the price of goods which the latter has in his hands, or is to receive, for sale. See also Advance.

Advance sheets. Pamphlets (published weekly for National Reporter System) containing the most recently reported opinions of specific courts (e.g. Federal Reporter) or the courts of several jurisdictions (e.g. Pacific Reporter). The volume and page numbers usually are the same as in the subsequently bound volumes of the respective reporter series, which cover several numbered issues of the advance sheets.

Advantagium. In old pleading, an advantage.

Advena /ædvənə/. In Roman law, one of foreign birth, who has left his own country and settled elsewhere, and who has not acquired citizenship in his new locality; often called albanus.

Advent. A period of time recognized by the English common and ecclesiastical law, beginning on the Sunday that falls either upon St. Andrew's day, being the 30th of November, or the next to it, and continuing to Christmas day.

Adventitious /ædvəntɪʃəs/. That which comes incidentally, fortuitously, or out of the regular course.

Adventitious /ædvəntɪʃ(ij)əs/. Lat. Fortuitous; incidental; coming from an unusual source. Adventitia bona are goods which fall to a man otherwise than by inheritance. Adventitia dos is a dowry or portion given by some friend other than the parent.

Ad ventrem inspiciendum /æd véntɾəm inspɪʃi-iyéndəm/. To inspect the womb. A writ for the summoning of a jury of matrons (q.v.) to determine the question of pregnancy.

Adventura /ædvəntjūrə/. An adventure. Flotsam, jetsam, and lagon are styled adventuræ maris (adventures of the sea).

Adventure. A hazardous and striking enterprise. A bold undertaking accompanied by possible hazards, risks and unforeseen events.

A common word in marine insurance policies, used as synonymous, or nearly so, with "perils." A shipment of goods in charge of an agent to be disposed of for the best price obtainable.

Adventure, bill of. In commercial law, a writing signed by a merchant, stating that the property in goods shipped in his name belongs to another, to the adventure or chance of which the person so named is to stand, with a covenant from the merchant to account to him for the produce.

Gross adventure. In maritime law, a loan on bottomry. So named because the lender, in case of a loss, or expense incurred for the common safety, must contribute to the gross or general average.

Joint adventure. A commercial or maritime enterprise undertaken by several persons jointly; a limited partnership,—not limited in the statutory sense as to the liability of the partners, but as to its scope and duration. An association of two or more persons to carry out a single business enterprise for profit, for which purpose they combine their property, money, effects, skill, and knowledge. A special combination of two or more persons, where, in some specific adventure, a profit is jointly sought, without any actual partnership or corporate designation. See also Joint venture.

Adventurer. One who undertakes uncertain or hazardous actions or enterprises. It is also used to denote one who seeks to advance his own interests by unscrupulous designs on the credulity of others.

Adversary counsel. Such counsel, as required to be appointed in commitment proceedings has the same functions, duties and responsibilities as one would have if one retained by the person involved as his or her own attorney, and such duties include preserving the confidences and secrets of the client, exercising independent professional judgment on behalf of the client, representing the client competently, and representing client zealously within the bounds of the law. State ex rel. Memmel v. Mundy, 75 Wis.2d 276, 249 N.W.2d 573, 577.

Adversary proceeding. One having opposing parties; contested, as distinguished from an ex parte hearing or proceeding. One of which the party seeking relief has given legal notice to the other party, and afforded the latter an opportunity to contest it. See also Case. Compare Ex parte.

Adversary system. The jurisprudential network of laws, rules and procedures characterized by opposing parties who contend against each other for a result favorable to themselves. In such system, the judge acts as an independent magistrate rather than prosecutor; distinguished from inquisitorial system.

Adverse. Opposed; contrary; in resistance or opposition to a claim, application, or proceeding. Having opposing interests; having interests for the preservation of which opposition is essential.

Use of land is "adverse", as against owner, if it is not made in subordination to him, is open and notorious and is not wrongful as to him; "adverse" means that one making use shall not recognize in those as against whom it is claimed to be adverse an authority either to prevent or to permit its continuance, and refers to nonrecognition of such authority at time use is made. Benson v. Fekete, Mo., 424 S.W.2d 729, 738.

As to adverse Enjoyment; User; Verdict; Witness, see those titles.

Adverse claim. An alleged right of one person asserted against the interest of another person.

Adverse enjoyment. See Adverse possession.

Adverse interest. The "adverse interest" of a witness, so as to permit cross-examination by the party calling him, must be so involved in the event of the suit that a legal right or liability will be acquired, lost, or materially affected by the judgment, and must be such as would be promoted by the success of the adversary of the party calling him. See also Adverse witness.

Adverse interest rule. Failure of a party to produce a witness who is within his power to produce and who would naturally have been produced by him, which failure permits inference that evidence of witness would be unfavorable to party's cause. New England Whalers Hockey Club v. Nair, 1 Conn.App. 680, 474 A.2d 810, 814.

Adverse opinion. An accounting term used in connection with the issuance of audited financial statements. An adverse opinion states that the entity's financial statements do not present fairly the financial position, results of operations, and changes in financial position in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles (GAAP).

An explanation of the departure from GAAP must be included in the opinion. See Opinion (Accounting) for "qualified," "unqualified," and "disclaimer" opinions.

Adverse party. A party to an action whose interests are opposed to or opposite the interests of another party to the action.

Appeal. An "adverse party" entitled to notice of appeal is every party whose interest in relation to the judgment or decree appealed from is in conflict with the modification or reversal sought by the appeal. Such term includes the following: Every party interested in sustaining the judgment or decree. All parties appearing against losing party unless reversal of case will not be to party's detriment. Any party who would be prejudicially affected by a modification or reversal of the judgment appealed from. One who has interest in opposing object sought to be accomplished by appeal. Party to record, whose interest in subject-matter of appeal is adverse to reversal or modification of judgment or order appealed from.

Discovery. When the parties exchange pleadings, one asserting a claim for relief against the other, the parties are "adverse," within rule allowing written interrogatories to be served upon any adverse party. Carey v. Schuldt, D.C.La., 42 F.R.D. 390, 393, 394, 395.

Adverse possession. A method of acquisition of title to real property by possession for a statutory period under certain conditions. Lowery v. Garfield County, 122 Mont. 571, 208 P.2d 478, 486. It has been described as the statutory method of acquiring title to land by limitation. Field v. Sosby, Tex.Civ.App., 226 S.W.2d 484, 486.

Because of the statute of limitations on the bringing of actions for the recovery of land, title can be acquired to real property by adverse possession. In order to establish title in this manner, there must be proof of nonpermissive use which is actual, open, notorious, exclusive and adverse for the statutorily prescribed period. Ryan v. Stavros, 348 Mass. 251, 203 N.E.2d 85. State statutes differ with respect to the required length of possession from an upper limit of 20 years to a lower one of 5 years, with even more extreme time periods covering certain special cases. There may be different periods of time even within a single state, depending on whether or not the adverse possessor has color of title and/or whether or not taxes have been paid. In some cases a longer possession is required against public entities than against individuals.

Adverse possession depends on intent of occupant to claim and hold real property in opposition to all the world, Sertic v. Roberts, 171 Or. 121, 136 P.2d 248; and also embodies the idea that owner or persons interested in property have knowledge of the assertion of ownership by the occupant, Field v. Sosby, Tex.Civ.App., 226 S.W.2d 484, 486.

Adverse possession consists of actual possession with intent to hold solely for possessor to exclusion of others and is denoted by exercise of acts of dominion over land including making of ordinary use and taking of ordinary profits of which land is susceptible in its present state. U. S. v. Chatham, D.C.N.C., 208 F.Supp. 220, 226.

See also Constructive adverse possession; Hostile; Possession (Hostile possession; Open possession); Notorious possession; Prescription; Tacking.

Adverse use. Use without license or permission; an element necessary to acquire title or easement by prescription. Shuggars v. Brake, 248 Md. 38, 234 A.2d 752.

Adverse witness. A witness who gives evidence on a material matter prejudicial to the party then examining him. Commonly used to describe a witness whose testimony is prejudicial or unfavorable to the party who called him and as a result, such witness may be impeached. Foremost Dairies Inc. of South v. Cutler, Fla.

App., 212 So.2d 37, 40, 41. See also Adverse interest; Hostile or adverse witness.

Adversus /ædvɜrsəs/. In the civil law, against (contra). Adversus bonos mores, against good morals.

Adversus extraneos vitiosa possessio prodesset solet /ædvɜrsəs ekstréyniyows vishiyóvzə pəzesh(iy)ow prɔwdésiy sówłət/. Prior possession is a good title of ownership against all who cannot show a better.

Advertise. To advise, announce, apprise, command, give notice of, inform, make known, publish. To call a matter to the public attention by any means whatsoever. Any oral, written, or graphic statement made by the seller in any manner in connection with the solicitation of business and includes, without limitation because of enumeration, statements and representations made in a newspaper or other publication or on radio or television or contained in any notice, handbill, sign, catalog, or letter, or printed on or contained in any tag or label attached to or accompanying any merchandise. As distinguished from other forms of communication means to call a matter to the public attention. Freeman v. Greenbriar Homes, Inc., Tex.App.—Dallas, 715 S.W.2d 394, 397. False and deceptive advertising is regulated by the Federal Trade Commission and similar state agencies. See also Printers Ink Statute.

Comparative advertising. Advertising that specifically compares the advertised brand with other brands of the same product.

Competitive advertising. Advertising that contains basically little information and is used only to allow a producer to maintain a share of the market for that product.

Informative advertising. Advertising that gives information about the suitability and quality of products. To be contrasted with competitive advertising.

Advisement. Notice given in a manner designed to attract public attention. Edwards v. Lubbock County, Tex.Civ.App., 33 S.W.2d 482, 484. Information communicated to the public, or to an individual concerned, as by handbills, newspaper, television, billboards, radio. First Nat. Corporation v. Perrine, 99 Mont. 454, 43 P.2d 1073, 1077.

Advice. View; opinion; information; the counsel given by lawyers to their clients; an opinion expressed as to wisdom of future conduct. Hughes v. Van Bruggen, 44 N.M. 534, 105 P.2d 494, 496. See also Advise.

The instruction usually given by one merchant or banker to another by letter, informing him of shipments made to him, or of bills or drafts drawn on him, with particulars of date, or sight, the sum, and the payee. Bills presented for acceptance or payment are frequently dishonored for want of advice.

Advice of counsel. A defense used in actions for malicious prosecution which requires a finding that defendant presented all facts to his counsel and that he honestly followed counsel's advice. Boylan v. Tracy, 254 Mass. 105, 108, 149 N.E. 674.

Advice of credit. Notice by an advising bank of the issuance of a letter of credit.

Ad vim majorem vel ad casus fortuitus non tenetur quis, nisi sua culpa intervenerit /æd vim majórəm vèl æd kéysəs fərt(y)úwətəs nòn təniytər kwís, náysay s(y)úwə kálpə intərvənirát/. No one is held to answer for the effects of a superior force, or of accidents, unless his own fault has contributed.

Advisare /ædvəzəriy/ or advisari /ædvəzəray/. Lat. To consult, deliberate, consider, advise; to be advised. Occurring in the phrase curia advisari vult (q.v.), (usually abbreviated cur. adv. vult, or C.A. V.), the court wishes to be advised, or to consider the matter.

Advise. To give an opinion or counsel, or recommend a plan or course of action; also to give notice. To encourage, inform, or acquaint. It is different in meaning from "instruct" or "persuade." Hughes v. Van Bruggen, 44 N.M. 534, 105 P.2d 494, 497. Where a statute authorizes the trial court to advise the jury to acquit, the court has no power to instruct the jury to acquit. The court can only counsel, and the jury are not bound by the advice. "Advise" imports that it is discretionary or optional with the person addressed whether he will act on such advice or not.

Advised. Prepared to give judgment, after examination and deliberation. E.g. "The court took time to be advised."

Advisedly. With deliberation; intentionally.

Advisement. Consideration; deliberation; consultation. The consultation of a court, after the argument of a cause by counsel, and before delivering their opinion. In re Hohorst, 150 U.S. 653, 14 S.Ct. 221, 37 L.Ed. 1211.

Advising bank. A bank which gives notification of the issuance of a [letter of] credit by another bank. U.C.C. § 5-103(1)(e).

Advisory. Counselling, suggesting, or advising, but not imperative or conclusive. A verdict on an issue out of chancery is advisory.

Advisory counsel. Attorney retained to give advice as contrasted with trial counsel.

Advisory jury. In actions in Federal Court in which there is no jury trial as of right, court may try case with an advisory jury and its verdict is not binding on court. Fed.R.Civ.P. 39(c). See also Jury.

Advisory opinion. Such may be rendered by a court at the request of the government or an interested party indicating how the court would rule on a matter should adversary litigation develop. An advisory opinion is thus an interpretation of the law without binding effect. While the International Court of Justice and some state courts will render advisory opinions the federal courts will not; their jurisdiction being restricted to cases or controversies. Compare Declaratory judgment. See also Case.

Advisory trial. See Advisory jury.

Advisory verdict. See Advisory jury.

Ad vitam /æd vâytəm/. For life. In feodo, vel ad vitam; in fee, or for life.

Ad vitam aut culpam /æd vâytəm ôt kâlpəm/. For life or until fault. Words descriptive of a tenure of office "for life or good behavior," equivalent to quamdiu bene se gesserit.

Advocacy /ædvəkæsiy/. The act of pleading for, supporting, or recommending active espousal. Gitlow v. People of State of New York, 268 U.S. 652, 45 S.Ct. 625, 626, 69 L.Ed. 1138.

Advocare /ædvəkəriy/. Lat. To defend; to call to one's aid; to vouch; to warrant.

Advocassie /ædvəkæsiy/. L. Fr. The office of an advocate; advocacy.

Advocata /ædvəkéytə/. In old English law, a patroness; a woman who had the right of presenting to a church.

Advocate /ædvəkéyt/, v. To speak in favor of or defend by argument. To support, vindicate, or recommend publicly.

Advocate /ædvəkət/, n. One who assists, defends, or pleads for another. One who renders legal advice and aid and pleads the cause of another before a court or a tribunal, a counselor. A person learned in the law, and duly admitted to practice, who assists his client with advice, and pleads for him in open court. An assistant; adviser; a pleader of causes.

Advocati /ædvəkéytay/. Lat. In Roman law, patrons; pleaders; speakers.

Advocatia /ædvəkéysh(iy)ə/. In the civil law, the quality, function, privilege, or territorial jurisdiction of an advocate. The functions, duty, or privilege of an advocate.

Advocati ecclesiæ /ædvəkéytay ækliýziyiy/. Advocates of the church. A term used in the ecclesiastical law to denote the patrons of churches who presented to the living on an avoidance. This term was also applied to those who were retained to argue the cases of the church. These were of two sorts: those retained as pleaders to argue the cases of the church and attend to its law-matters; and advocates, or patrons of the advowson.

Advocati fisci /ædvəkéytay fisay/. In civil law, those chosen by the emperor to argue his cause whenever a question arose affecting his revenues. 3 Bl.Comm. 27. Advocates of the fisc, or revenue; fiscal advocates (qui causam fisci egissent). Answering, in some measure, to the king's counsel in English law.

Advocating overthrow of government. Such conduct is a federal crime. 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 2384, 2385.

Advocatione decimarum /ædvowkèyshiyówniy dèsmérəm/. A writ which lay for tithes, demanding the fourth part or upwards, that belonged to any church.

Advocator /ædvowkéytər/. In old practice, one who called on or vouched another to warrant a title; a voucher. Advocatus; the person called on, or vouched; a vouchee.

Advocatus /ædvowkéytəs/. A pleader; a narrator. In the civil law, an advocate; one who managed or assisted in managing another's cause before a judicial tribunal. Called also "patronus." But distinguished from causidicus.

Advocatus diaboli /ædvowkéytəs dayábəlay/. In ecclesiastical law, the devil's advocate; the advocate who argues against the canonization of a saint.

Advocatus est, ad quem pertinet jus advocationis alicujus ecclesiæ, ut ad ecclesiam, nomine proprio, non alieno, possit præsentare /ædvowkéytəs ést, æd kwém pærtənət jəs ædvowkèyshiyównəs æliýkyúwjs ækliýziyiy, é æd ækliýziyem, nóməniy prówpriyow, non æliýynow, pósət prezəntəriy/. A patron is he to whom appertains the right of presentation to a church, in such a manner that he may present to such a church in his own name, and not in the name of another.

Ad voluntatem /æd vóləntéytəm/. At will. Ad voluntatem domini, at the will of the lord.

Advoutrer /ædváwtrər/. In old English law, an adulterer.

Advoutry /ædváwtriy/. In old English law, adultery between parties both of whom were married. Or the offense by an adulteress of continuing to live with the man with whom she committed the adultery. Sometimes spelled "advowtry." See Advoutrer.

Advowee, or avowee /æ(d)vawiy/. The person or patron who has a right to present to a benefice.

Advowee paramount. The sovereign, or highest patron.

Advowson /ædváwzən/. In English ecclesiastical law, the right of presentation to a church or ecclesiastical benefice; the right of presenting a fit person to the bishop, to be by him admitted and instituted to a certain benefice within the diocese, which has become vacant. The person enjoying this right is called the "patron" (patronus) of the church, and was formerly termed "advocatus," the advocate or defender, or in English, "advowee." When there is no patron, or he neglects to exercise his right within six months, it is called a lapse, and a title is given to the ordinary to collate to a church: when a presentation is made by one who has no right, it is called a usurpation.

Advowsons are of different kinds:

Advowson appendant is an advowson annexed to a manor, and passing with it, as incident or appendant to it, by a grant of the manor only, without adding any other words. 2 Bl.Comm. 22.

Advowson collative. Where the bishop happens himself to be the patron, in which case (presentation being impossible, or unnecessary) he does by one act, which is termed "collation," or conferring the benefice, all that is usually done by the separate acts of presentation and institution. 2 Bl.Comm. 22, 23.

Advowson donative exists where the patron has the right to put his clerk in possession by his mere gift, or deed of donation, without any presentation to the bishop, or institution by him. Donative benefices were converted into presentative by the Benefices Act of 1898.

Advowson in gross is an advowson separated from the manor, and annexed to the person. 2 Bl.Comm. 22.

Advowson presentative is the usual kind of advowson, where the patron has the right of presentation to the bishop, or ordinary, and moreover to demand of him to institute his clerk, if he finds him canonically qualified. 2 Bl.Comm. 22.

Advowtry /ædváwtriy/. See Advoutry.

Ad waractum /æd wæréktəm/. To fallow.

Ædes /iydiyz/. Lat. In the civil law, a house, dwelling, temple, place of habitation, whether in the city or country. In the country everything upon the surface of the soil passed under the term "ædes."

Ædificare /iydfækéry/. Lat. In civil and old English law, to make or build a house; to erect a building.

Ædificare in tuo proprio solo non licet quod alteri noceat /iydfækéry in t(y)úwow prówpríow sówlow nòn láysæt kwòd æltaray nósiyæt/. To build upon your own land what may injure another is not lawful. A proprietor of land has no right to erect an edifice on his own ground, interfering with the due enjoyment of adjoining premises, as by overhanging them, or by throwing water from the roof and eaves upon them, or by obstructing ancient lights and windows.

Ædificatum solo solo cedit /iydfækéyrtəm sówlow sólow síydæt/. What is built upon land belongs to or goes with land.

Ædificia solo cedunt /iydfæfish(iy)ə sówlow síydənt/. Buildings belong to [go with] the soil.

Ædilitum edictum /iydíltəm iydíktəm/. In the Roman law, the Ædilitian Edict. An edict providing remedies for frauds in sales, the execution of which belonged to the curule ædiles. That provision by which the buyer of a diseased or imperfect slave, horse, or other animal was relieved at the expense of the vendor who had sold him as sound knowing him to be imperfect.

Æfesn. In old English law, the remuneration to the proprietor of a domain for the privilege of feeding swine under the oaks and beeches of his woods.

Ægroto /iygrówtow/. Lat. Being sick or indisposed. A term used in some of the older reports.

Ægylde. Uncompensated, unpaid for, unavenged. From the participle of exclusion, a, æ, or ex, (Goth.) and gild, payment, requital.

Æl /éyl/. A Norman French term signifying "grandfather." It is also spelled "aieul" and "ayle."

Æquior est dispositio legis quam hominis /iykwíoyr èst dispazish(iy)ow líyjs kwàm hòménæs/. The disposition of the law is more equitable than that of man.

Æquitas /iykwætàs/. In the civil law, equity, as opposed to strictum or summum jus (q.v.). Otherwise called æquum, æquum bonum, æquum et bonum, æquum et justum. See Æquum et bonum est lex legum.

Æquitas agit in personam /iykwætàs éyjt in pærsównəm/. Equity acts upon the person.

Æquitas est correctio legis generaliter lata, qua parte deficit /iykwætàs èst kærékh(iy)ow líyjs jenæréylætær léytiy, kwéy pártiy défæsæt/. Equity is the correction of that wherein the law, by reason of its generality, is deficient.

Æquitas est correctio quædam legi adhibita, quia ab eâ abest aliquid propter generalem sine exceptione comprehensionem /iykwætàs èst kærékh(iy)ow kwíydəm líyjay æd(h)íbətə, kwáyə əb iyə əbèst ælkwəd próptær jènæréyləm sáyniy eksèpshiyówniy kòmprèhènshiyównəm/. Equity is a certain correction applied to law, because on account of its general comprehensiveness, without an exception, something is absent from it.

Æquitas est perfecta quædam ratio quæ jus scriptum interpretatur et emendat; nulla scriptura comprehensa, sed solum in verâ ratione consistens /iykwætàs èst pærféktə kwíydəm réyshiyow kwíy jəs skríptəm intèrprétéyrtær et æméndæt; nálə skríptyúre kòmprèhénsə, sed sówlm in vírə réyshiyówniy kənsístènz/. Equity is a certain perfect reason, which interprets and amends the written law, comprehended in no writing, but consisting in right reason alone.

Æquitas est quasi æqualitas /iykwætàs èst kwéysay iykwólætəs/. Equity is as it were equality; equity is a species of equality or equalization.

Æquitas ignorantia opitulatur, oscitantia non item /iykwætàs ignéránshiyiy owpítýlétærtær, òsətánshiyiy nòn áytəm/. Equity assists ignorance, but not carelessness.

Æquitas non facit jus, sed juri auxiliatur /iykwætàs nòn féysæt jəs, sèd júráy ogziliyéyrtær/. Equity does not make law, but assists law.

Æquitas nunquam contravenit legis /iykwætàs nónkwəm kòntrevíynæt líyjs/. Equity never counteracts the laws.

Æquitas sequitur legem /iykwætàs sékwætær líyjm/. Equity follows the law.

Æquitas supervacua odit /iykwætàs súwperwækyuwa ówdæt/. Equity abhors superfluous things.

Æquitas uxoribus, liberis, creditoribus maxime favet /iykwætàs əxóriybəs, líbərəs, kredətóriybəs mæk-səmiy féyvæt/. Equity favors wives and children, creditors most of all.

Æquum et bonum est lex legum /iykwəm ət bównəm èst léks líygm/. What is equitable and good is the law of laws.

Æquus /iykwəs/. Lat. Equal; even. A provision in a will for the division of the residuary estate ex æquus among the legatees means equally or evenly.

Æra, or era /írə/. A fixed point of chronological time, whence any number of years is counted; thus, the Christian era began at the birth of Christ, and the Mohammedan era at the flight of Mohammed from

- Mecca to Medina. The derivation of the word has been much contested.
- Ærarium /irériyǝm/. Lat. In the Roman law, the treasury (fiscus).
- Æs /iyz/. Lat. In the Roman law, money (literally, brass); metallic money in general, including gold.
- Aes alienum /iyz æliyiǝnm/. A civil law term signifying a debt. Literally translated, the money of another. The civil law considered borrowed money as the property of another, as distinguished from æs suum, one's own money.
- Æsnecia /iysniysh(iy)ǝ/. In old English law, Esnecy; the right or privilege of the eldest born.
- Æsnecius /iysniyshiys/. See Anecius; Æsnecia.
- Æs suum /iys s(y)úwǝm/. One's own money. In the Roman law, debt; a debt; that which others owe to us (quod alii nobis debent).
- Aesthetic /ǝθétik/. Relating to that which is beautiful or in good taste.
- Aesthetic value. The artistic worth of something as contrasted with its practical value.
- Æstimatio capitis /èstáméysh(iy)ow kǝpǝtǝs/. Lat. The value of a head. In Saxon law, the estimation or valuation of the head; the price or value of a man. The price to be paid for taking the life of a human being. By the laws of Athelstan, the life of every man not excepting that of the king himself was estimated at a certain price, which was called the were, or æstimatio capitis.
- Æstimatio præteriti delicti ex postremo facto nunquam crescit /èstáméysh(iy)ow prætérǝtay dǝliktay èks powstriymow fáktow nǝjkwǝm krésǝt/. The weight of a past offense is never increased by a subsequent fact.
- Ætas /iytǝs/. Lat. In the civil law, age.
- Ætas infantia (also written infantili) proxima /iytǝs infǝnshiyiy próksǝmǝ/. The age next to infancy; the first half of the period of childhood (pueritia), extending from seven years to ten and a half. 4 Bl.Comm. 22. See Age.
- Ætas legitima /iytǝs læjítǝmǝ/. Lawful age. See Legal age; Majority.
- Ætas perfecta /iytǝs pǝrféktǝ/. Complete age; full age.
- Ætas prima /iytǝs práymǝ/. The first age; infancy (infantia).
- Ætas pubertati proxima /iytǝs pyúwbǝrtéytay próksǝmǝ/. The age next to puberty; the last half of the period of childhood (pueritia), extending from ten and a half years to fourteen, in which there might or might not be criminal responsibility according to natural capacity or incapacity. 4 Bl.Comm. 22. See Age.
- Ætate probanda /iytétyiy prowbǝndǝ/. A writ (now obsolete) which inquired whether the king's tenant holding in chief by chivalry was of full age to receive his lands. It was directed to the escheater of the county.
- Ætheling /iyðǝliŋ/. In Saxon law, a noble; generally a prince of the blood.
- A.F.D.C. Aid to Families with Dependent Children.
- Affair. (Fr.). A law suit.
- Affairs. An inclusive term, bringing within its scope and meaning anything that a person may do. Walker v. United States, C.C.A.Mo., 93 F.2d 383, 391. A person's concerns in trade or property; business. That which is done or to be done. General operations carried on by an employer. Gocs v. Thomas E. Coale Coal Co., 142 Pa.Super. 479, 16 A.2d 720, 723. See also Statement of affairs.
- Affect. To act upon; influence; change; enlarge or abridge; often used in the sense of acting injuriously upon persons and things. To lay hold of or attack (as a disease does); to act, or produce an effect or result upon; to impress or influence (the mind or feelings); to touch.
- Affecting commerce. Any activity which touches or concerns business or industry, favorably or burdensomely; commonly used within context of Labor Management Relations Act regarding a labor dispute which burdens commerce. U. S. v. Ricciardi, C.A.N.Y., 357 F.2d 91, 95.
- The term "affecting commerce" means in commerce, or burdening or obstructing commerce or the free flow of commerce, or having led or tending to lead to a labor dispute burdening or obstructing commerce or the free flow of commerce. National Labor Relations Act, § 2(7); 29 U.S.C.A. § 152.
- The term "industry affecting commerce" means any industry or activity in commerce or in which a labor dispute would burden or obstruct commerce or tend to burden or obstruct commerce or the free flow of commerce. Labor Management Relations Act, § 501(1); 29 U.S.C.A. § 142.
- Affection. The making over, pawning, or mortgaging of a thing to assure the payment of a sum of money, or the discharge of some other duty or service. In a medical sense, an abnormal bodily condition.
- Affectio tua nomen imponit operi tuo /ǝféksh(iy)ow t(y)úwǝ nówmǝn impǝwnǝt ówpǝray t(y)úwǝw/. Your disposition (or motive, intention) gives name (or character) to your work or act.
- Affectus /ǝféktǝs/. Disposition; intention, impulse or affection of the mind. One of the causes for a challenge of a juror is propter affectum, on account of a suspicion of bias or favor. 3 Bl.Comm. 363.
- Affectus punitur licet non sequatur effectus /ǝféktǝs pyuwnáyǝtǝr láysǝt nõn sǝkwéytǝr ǝféktǝs/. The intention is punished although the intended result does not follow.
- Affeer /ǝfir/. To assess, liquidate, appraise, fix in amount.
- Affeerors /ǝfirǝrz/. In common law, persons who, in court-leets, upon oath, settled and moderated the fines and amerements imposed on those who had committed offenses arbitrarily punishable, or that had no express penalty appointed by statute. They were also appointed to moderate fines, etc., in courts-baron.

Affermer /æfərméy/. L. Fr. To let to farm. Also to make sure, to establish or confirm.

Affiance. To assure by pledge. An agreement by which a man and woman promise that they will marry each other.

Affiant /əfáyənt/. The person who makes and subscribes an affidavit. The word is used, in this sense, interchangeably with "deponent." But the latter term should be reserved as the designation of one who makes a deposition.

Affidare /æfədériy/. At common law, to swear faith to; to pledge one's faith or do fealty by making oath. Used of the mutual relation arising between landlord and tenant. 1 Bl.Comm. 367. Affidavit is of kindred meaning.

Affidari /æfədéray/. To be mustered and enrolled for soldiers upon an oath of fidelity.

Affidatio /æfədéysh(iy)ow/. At common law, a swearing of the oath of fidelity or of fealty to one's lord, under whose protection the quasi-vassal has voluntarily come.

Affidatio dominorum /æfədéysh(iy)ow dômənórəm/. An oath taken by the lords in parliament.

Affidatus /æfədéytəs/. At common law one who was not a vassal, but who for the sake of protection had connected himself with one more powerful.

Affidavit /æfədéyvət/. A written or printed declaration or statement of facts, made voluntarily, and confirmed by the oath or affirmation of the party making it, taken before a person having authority to administer such oath or affirmation. State v. Knight, 219 Kan. 863, 549 P.2d 1397, 1401. See also Certification; Jurat; Verification.

Affidavit of defense. An affidavit stating that the defendant has a good defense to the plaintiff's action on the merits; e.g. affidavit filed with motion for summary judgment. Fed.R. Civil P. 56(e).

Affidavit of inquiry. By court rule in certain states, substituted service of process may be had on absent defendants if it appears by affidavit of plaintiff's attorney, or other person having knowledge of the facts, that defendant cannot, after diligent inquiry, be served within the state.

Affidavit of merits. One setting forth that the defendant has a meritorious defense (substantial and not technical) and stating the facts constituting the same. See Affidavit of defense.

Affidavit of notice. A sworn statement that affiant has given proper notice of hearing to other parties to action.

Affidavit of service. An affidavit intended to certify the service of a writ, notice, summons, or other document or process. In federal courts, if service is made by a person other than a United States Marshall or his deputy, he shall make affidavit thereof. Fed.R. Civil P. 4(g).

Affidavit to hold to bail. An affidavit required in many cases before the defendant in a civil action may be arrested. Such an affidavit must contain a statement, clearly and certainly expressed, by someone acquainted with the fact, of an indebtedness from the defendant to the plaintiff, and must show a distinct cause of action.

Affilare /əfiliyériy/. L. Lat. To put on record; to file or affile. Affiletur, let it be filed. De recordo affilatum, affiled of record.

Affile /əfáy/. A term employed in old practice, signifying to put on file. In modern usage it is contracted to file.

Affiliate /əfiliyeyt/. Signifies a condition of being united; being in close connection, allied, associated, or attached as a member or branch.

Affiliate company. Company effectively controlled by another company. A branch, division, or subsidiary. Under Investment Company Act (15 U.S.C.A. § 80a-2), company in which there is ownership (direct or indirect) of 5 percent or more of the voting stock.

Corporations which are related as parent and subsidiary, characterized by identity of ownership of capital stock. Northeastern Consol. Co. C. v. U. S., C.A.Ill., 406 F.2d 76, 79. See also Holding company.

Affiliation. Act or condition of being affiliated, allied, or associated with another person, body, or organization. Imports less than membership in an organization, but more than sympathy, and a working alliance to bring to fruition the proscribed program of a proscribed organization, as distinguished from mere co-operation with a proscribed organization in lawful activities, is essential. Bridges v. Wixon, Cal., 326 U.S. 135, 65 S.Ct. 1443, 1447, 89 L.Ed. 2103. It includes an element of dependability upon which the organization can rely which, though not equivalent to membership duty, rests upon course of conduct that could not be abruptly ended without giving at least reasonable cause for charge of breach of good faith. U. S. ex rel. Kettunen v. Reimer, C.C.A.N.Y., 79 F.2d 315, 317. See also Association.

The act of imputing or determining the paternity of a child born out of wedlock, and the obligation to maintain it. See Paternity suit or action.

Affines /əfáyniyz/. In the civil law, connections by marriage, whether of the persons or their relatives. Neighbors, who own or occupy adjoining lands. From this word is derived affinity, denoting relationship by marriage. The singular, affinis, is used in a variety of related significations—a boundary; a partaker or sharer, affinis culpæ (an aider or one who has knowledge of a crime).

Affinitas /əfínətəs/. Lat. In the civil law, affinity; relationship by marriage.

Affinitas affinitatis /əfínətəs əfínétýtəs/. Remote relationship by marriage. That connection between parties arising from marriage which is neither consanguinity nor affinity. This term signifies the connection between the kinsmen of the two persons married, as, for example, the husband's brother and the wife's sister.

Affinity /əfɪnətɪy/. A close agreement; relation; spiritual relation or attraction held to exist between certain persons. State ex inf. Norman v. Ellis, 325 Mo. 154, 28 S.W.2d 363, 367. Relation which one spouse because of marriage has to blood relatives of the other. State v. Hooper, 140 Kan. 481, 37 P.2d 52.

The connection existing, in consequence of marriage, between each of the married persons and the kindred of the other. Kest v. Lewis, 169 Ohio St. 317, 159 N.E.2d 449, 450.

Degrees of relationship by affinity are computed as are degrees of relationship by consanguinity. The doctrine of affinity grew out of the canonical maxim that marriage makes husband and wife one. The husband has the same relation, by affinity, to his wife's blood relatives as she has to them by consanguinity and vice versa. State v. Hooper, 140 Kan. 481, 37 P.2d 52.

Affinity is distinguished into three kinds: (1) Direct, or that subsisting between the husband and his wife's relations by blood, or between the wife and the husband's relations by blood; (2) secondary, or that which subsists between the husband and his wife's relations by marriage; (3) collateral, or that which subsists between the husband and the relations of his wife's relations.

In a larger sense, consanguinity or kindred.

Quasi affinity. In the civil law, the affinity which exists between two persons, one of whom has been betrothed to a kinsman of the other, but who have never been married.

Affirm. To ratify, uphold, approve, make firm, confirm, establish, reassert. To make affirmation; to make a solemn and formal declaration or asseveration that an affidavit is true, that the witness will tell the truth, etc., this being substituted for an oath in certain cases. Also, to give testimony on affirmation. See Affidavit; Jurat; Verification.

Judgment. In the practice of appellate courts, to affirm a judgment, decree, or order, is to declare that it is valid and right and must stand as rendered below; to ratify and reassert it; to concur in its correctness and confirm its efficacy. If the appellate court remanded the case, it would be sending it back to the lower court with instructions to correct the irregularities specified in the appellate opinion. If the appellate court reversed the court below, it would have changed the result reached below.

Pleading. To allege or aver a matter of fact; to state it affirmatively. The opposite of deny or traverse.

Affirmance. The confirming, or ratifying of a former law, or judgment. The confirmation and ratification by an appellate court of a judgment, order, or decree of a lower court brought before it for review. See Affirm.

The ratification or confirmation of a voidable contract or act by the party who is to be bound thereby. The term is in accuracy to be distinguished from ratification, which is a recognition of the validity or binding force as against the party ratifying, of some act performed by another person; and from confirmation, which would seem to apply more properly to cases where a doubtful authority has been exercised by another in behalf of the person ratifying; but these distinctions are not generally observed.

Affirmance day general. In the English court of exchequer, a day appointed by the judges of the common pleas, and barons of the exchequer, to be held a few days after the beginning of every term for the general affirmation or reversal of judgments.

Affirmant /əfɜːrmənt/. A person who testifies on affirmation, or who affirms instead of taking an oath. Used in affidavits and depositions which are affirmed, instead of sworn to in place of the word "deponent." See also Affirmation; Jurat; Verification.

Affirmanti, non neganti incumbit probatio /əfɜːrməntay, nɔn nəgəntay ɪnkɔmbət prɔwbéysh(iy)ow/. The [burden of] proof lies upon him who affirms, not upon one who denies.

Affirmantis est probare /əfɜːrməntəs èst prɔwbériy/. He who affirms must prove.

Affirmation. A solemn and formal declaration or asseveration that an affidavit is true, that the witness will tell the truth, etc.; this being substituted for an oath in certain cases. A solemn religious asseveration in the nature of an oath. See also Confirmation; Jurat; Oath; Verification.

Affirmation of fact. A statement concerning a subject-matter of a transaction which might otherwise be only an expression of opinion but which is affirmed as an existing fact material to the transaction, and reasonably induces the other party to consider and rely upon it, as a fact.

Affirmatio unius exclusio est alterius /əfɜːrméysh(iy)ow yuwnáyəs èksklúwzhiyow èst oltiriýs/. The affirmance of one thing is the exclusion of the other.

Affirmative. That which declares positively; that which avers a fact to be true; that which establishes; the opposite of negative.

As to affirmative Plea; Proof; Warranty, see those titles.

Affirmative action programs. Employment programs required by federal statutes and regulations designed to remedy discriminatory practices in hiring minority group members; i.e. positive steps designed to eliminate existing and continuing discrimination, to remedy lingering effects of past discrimination, and to create systems and procedures to prevent future discrimination; commonly based on population percentages of minority groups in a particular area. Factors considered are race, color, sex, creed and age. National Labor Relations Board v. Fansteel Metallurgical Corporation, 306 U.S. 240, 59 S.Ct. 490, 497, 83 L.Ed. 627; National Labor Relations Board v. Leviton Mfg. Co., C.C.A.2, 111 F.2d 619, 621.

Affirmative charge. The general "affirmative charge" is an instruction to the jury that, whatever the evidence may be, defendant cannot be convicted under the count in the indictment to which the charge is directed.

Affirmative defense. In pleading, matter asserted by defendant which, assuming the complaint to be true, constitutes a defense to it. A response to a plaintiff's claim which attacks the plaintiff's legal right to bring an action, as opposed to attacking the truth of claim. Under the Fed. Rules of Civil Procedure, and also under most state Rules, all affirmative defenses must be raised in the responsive pleading (answer); such defenses include accord and satisfaction, assumption of risk, contributory negligence, duress, statute of limitations, estoppel, etc. See Fed.R. Civil P. 8(c).

Affirmative defenses in criminal cases include insanity, intoxication, self-defense, automatism, coercion, alibi, and duress. See e.g. Model Penal Code § 3.01 (justification as affirmative defense).

Affirmative easement. An easement which gives to the owner of the dominant tenement the right to use the servient tenement, or to do some act thereon which would otherwise be unlawful. Clements v. Taylor, Tex. Civ.App., 184 S.W.2d 485, 487.

Affirmative pregnant. In common law pleading, an affirmative allegation implying some negative in favor of the adverse party.

Affirmative proof. Such evidence of the truth of matters asserted as tends to establish them, regardless of character of evidence offered.

Affirmative relief. Relief, benefit, or compensation which may be due and granted to defendant. Relief for which defendant might maintain an action independently of plaintiff's claim and on which he might proceed to recovery, although plaintiff abandoned his cause of action or failed to establish it. Specific performance (q.v.) is a type of affirmative relief that may be granted to plaintiff.

Affirmative statute. A statute couched in affirmative or mandatory terms. One which directs the doing of an act, or declares what shall be done; as a negative statute is one which prohibits a thing from being done, or declares what shall not be done.

Affirmative warranty. See Warranty.

Affix. Fix or fasten in any way; to attach physically. To attach to, inscribe, or impress upon, as a signature, a seal, a trade-mark. To attach, add to, or fasten upon, permanently, as in the case of fixtures annexed to real estate. A thing is deemed to be affixed to land when it is attached to it by the roots, as in the case of trees, vines, or shrubs; or imbedded in it, as in the case of walls; or permanently resting upon it, as in the case of buildings; or permanently attached to what is thus permanent, as by means of cement, plaster, nails, bolts, or screws. See Fixture.

Affixing. Securely attached.

Affixus /əfiksəs/. In the civil law, affixed, fixed, or fastened to.

Affliction. A distress of mind or body; that which causes continuing anguish or suffering.

Afforare /æfərəriy/. To set a price or value on a thing.

Afforatus /æfərəytəs/. Appraised or valued, as things vendible in a market.

Afforce /əförs/. To add to; to increase; to strengthen; to add force to.

Afforce the assize /əförs öy asáyz/. In old English practice, a method of securing a verdict, where the jury disagreed, either by confining them without meat and drink, or, more anciently, by adding other jurors to the panel, to a limited extent, until twelve could be found who were unanimous.

Afforciammentum /əförsäméntəm/. In old English law, a fortress or stronghold, or other fortification. The calling of a court upon a solemn or extraordinary occasion.

Afforest /əförest/. To convert land into a forest in the legal sense of the word.

Afforestation /əförestéyshən/. The turning of a part of a country into forest or woodland or subjecting it to forest law, q.v.

Affouage /äfuwázh/. In French law, the right of the inhabitants of a commune or section of a commune to take from the forest the fire-wood which is necessary for their use.

Affranchir /äfronshír/. L. Fr. To set free.

Affranchise /əfránchayz/. To liberate; to make free.

Affray. A public offense at common law, it is the mutual combat of two or more persons in a public place to the terror of the people. Matter of Drakeford, 32 N.C.App. 113, 230 S.E.2d 779, 782. It differs from a riot or duel in not being premeditated. Payne v. State, Ala.Cr.App., 391 So.2d 140. See also Disorderly conduct; Duel; Fight; Riot.

Affrectamentum /əfréktamentəm/. Affreightment; a contract for the hire of a vessel.

Affreightment /əfreymənt/. A contract of affreightment is a contract with a ship-owner to hire his ship, or part of it, for the carriage of goods. The Fred Smartley, Jr., C.C.A.Va., 100 F.2d 971, 973. Such a contract generally takes the form either of a charter-party or of a bill of lading.

Affretement /əfrètémón/. Fr. In French law, the hiring of a vessel; affreightment (q.v.). Called also nolisement.

Affri /æfry/. In old English law, plow cattle, bullocks or plow horses. Affri, or afri carucæ; beasts of the plow.

Affront /əfránt/. An insult or indignity; assault, insolence.

A fine force /ey fayn förs/. Of pure necessity.

A.F.L. American Federation of Labor. Merged with CIO (Congress of Industrial Organizations) in 1955.

A force /ey fórs/. Of necessity.

A force et armis /ey fórs et ármæs/. With force and arms.

Aforementioned. See Aforesaid.

Aforesaid. Before, or already said, mentioned, or recited; premised. Preceding; opposite of following.

Aforethought. In criminal law, deliberate; planned; premeditated; prepense. As used in the definition of murder in the first degree, means thought of beforehand and for any length of time, however short, before the doing of the act, and is synonymous with premeditation. See Malice aforethought; Premeditation.

A forfait et sans garantie /à forféy èy sòn gàròntíy/. In French law, a formula used in indorsing commercial paper, and equivalent to "without recourse."

A fortiori /èy forshiyóray/. With stronger reason; much more. A term used in logic to denote an argument to the effect that because one ascertained fact exists, therefore another, which is included in it, or analogous to it, and which is less improbable, unusual, or surprising, must also exist.

After. Later, succeeding, subsequent to, inferior in point of time or of priority or preference. Subsequent in time to. Cheney v. National Surety Corporation, 256 A.D. 1041, 10 N.Y.S.2d 706. On and after. New York Trust Co. v. Portland Ry. Co., 197 A.D. 422, 189 N.Y.S. 346, 348.

After-acquired. Acquired after a particular date or event. Thus, a judgment is a lien on after-acquired realty, i.e., land acquired by the debtor after entry of the judgment.

After acquired property. Property of debtor which is acquired after security transaction covering property already owned is perfected. Property acquired after the date of the agreement usually becomes additional security for payment of the indebtedness if an after-acquired property provision is included in the agreement. See UCC § 9-204, and After acquired property clause, infra. May also refer to property acquired by testator after execution of will.

In bankruptcy law, with certain exceptions, the bankruptcy estate includes any interest in property that the estate acquires after commencement of the case. Bankruptcy Code § 541(a).

After acquired property clause. A clause in a mortgage providing that any property acquired by the borrower after the date of the loan and mortgage will automatically become additional security for the loan.

After acquired title. Doctrine under which title acquired by grantor who previously attempted to convey title to land which he did not in fact own, inures automatically to benefit of prior grantees. Morris v. Futischa, 194 Okl. 224, 148 P.2d 986, 987. The doctrine provides that, although the sale of another's property is null, the purchaser is entitled to the benefit of any title subsequently acquired by the seller. Acree v. Shell Oil

Co., D.C.La., 548 F.Supp. 1150, 1156. See Estoppel (Estoppel by deed).

After born child. Refers to child born after execution of will or to child born after time in which class gift closes. Generally, birth of child after father has executed his will does not revoke will. See En ventre sa mere; Heirs; Posthumous child.

After born heirs. A person entitled to property born after the death of the ancestor intestate. See Descent; Heirs.

After-discovered. Discovered or made known after a particular date or event.

After-discovered evidence. See Evidence.

After-market. Term describing the market for a security after it has been initially sold by the issuer through underwriters.

Afternoon. May mean the whole time from noon to midnight (e.g. U.C.C. § 4-104(1)(b)), or it may mean the earlier part of that time as distinguished from evening, or may mean that part of day between noon and evening.

After sight. This term as used in a bill payable so many days after sight, means after legal sight; that is, after legal presentment for acceptance. The mere fact of having seen the bill or known of its existence does not constitute legal "sight."

After the fact. Subsequent to an event from which time is reckoned, e.g. accessory after fact is one who harbors, conceals or aids in concealment of the principal felon after the felony has been committed.

Afterthought. A thought composed after the event and with deliberation.

Afterward, afterwards. Subsequent in point of time; synonymous with "thereafter."

Against. Adverse to; contrary. In re Dean's Estate, 350 Mo. 494, 166 S.W.2d 529, 533. Signifies discord or conflict; opposed to; without the consent of; in conflict with. Sometimes meaning "upon," which is almost, if not altogether, synonymous with word "on." Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. Gas Development Co., 103 Mont. 214, 62 P.2d 204, 205.

Against interest. Commonly used to describe a declaration or admission by one, the content of which is adverse to his position, interest or title; e.g., an exception to hearsay rule is a declaration by one against his pecuniary or proprietary interest at the time when it was made. Fed.Evid.Rule 804. See also Admission; Declaration (Declarations against interest).

Against public interest. An agreement or act which is or has been declared to be adverse to the general good or public welfare; such that a judge may on his own declare void. See Public interest.

Against the evidence. See Against the weight of the evidence.

Against the form of the statute. Technical words which must be used in framing an indictment for a breach of the statute prohibiting the act complained of. The Latin phrase is contra formam statuti, q.v.

Against the law. A decision is "against the law" for purposes of a motion for new trial where the evidence is insufficient in law and without conflict on any material point. In re Marriage of Beilock, 81 C.A.3d 713, 146 Cal.Rptr. 675, 684. Such exists when there is a failure to find on material issue, or when findings are irreconcilable or where evidence is insufficient in law and without conflict on any material point. Schmeltzer v. Gregory, 266 C.A.2d 420, 72 Cal.Rptr. 194, 196.

Against the peace. A technical phrase used in alleging a breach of the peace.

Against the weight of the evidence. Contrary to the evidence. Russell v. Pilger, 113 Vt. 537, 37 A.2d 403, 411. A finding is "against the manifest weight of the evidence" if an opposite conclusion is clearly evident. Burke v. Board of Review, 2 Dist., 132 Ill.App.3d 1094, 87 Ill.Dec. 823, 477 N.E.2d 1351, 1356. For judgement to be considered such, it must appear that conclusions opposite to those reached by the trier of fact are clearly evident. Wood v. Illinois Liquor Control Commission, 55 Ill.App.3d 228, 13 Ill.Dec. 443, 371 N.E.2d 138, 140. If a verdict is against the weight of the evidence, a new trial may be granted under Fed.R.Civ.P. 59(a). See also Directed verdict; Non obstante verdicto; Weight of evidence.

Against the will. Technical words used in framing an indictment for robbery from the person, rape and some other offenses. See also Coercion; Duress; Force.

Agalma /əgælmə/. An impression or image of anything on a seal.

Agard /əgɑrd/. L. Fr. An award. Nul fait agard /nəl féyt agárd/; no award made.

Agarder /əgɑrdéy/. L. Fr. To award, adjudge, or determine; to sentence, or condemn.

Age. The length of time during which a person has lived. The time at which one attains full personal rights and capacities. In law the term signifies those periods in the lives of persons of both sexes which enable them to do certain acts which, before they had arrived at those periods, they were prohibited from doing. See e.g. Age of consent; Age of majority; Legal age; Majority.

As used in particular statutes, the term implies disability and, by definition, has been applied to all minors under a certain age and to others disabled by old age. Hampton v. Ewert, C.C.A.Okla., 22 F.2d 81, 87.

Age discrimination act. Federal legislation prohibiting unfair and discriminatory treatment in employment on the basis of age. The Act generally covers individuals at least 40 years of age. Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967, as amended. 29 U.S.C.A. § 621 et seq.

Aged person. One advanced in years; refers to his or her chronological, not mental age.

Agency. A relationship between two persons, by agreement or otherwise, where one (the agent) may act on behalf of the other (the principal) and bind the principal by words and actions. Relation in which one person acts for or represents another by latter's authority, either in the relationship of principal and agent, master and servant, or employer or proprietor and independent contractor. Gorton v. Doty, 57 Idaho 792, 69 P.2d 136, 139. It also designates a place at which business of company or individual is transacted by an agent. Johnson Freight Lines v. Davis, 170 Tenn. 177, 93 S.W.2d 637, 639. The relation created by express or implied contract or by law, whereby one party delegates the transaction of some lawful business with more or less discretionary power to another, who undertakes to manage the affair and render to him an account thereof. State ex rel. Cities Service Gas Co. v. Public Service Commission, 337 Mo. 809, 85 S.W.2d 890, 894. Or relationship where one person confides the management of some affair, to be transacted on his account, to other party. Or where one party is authorized to do certain acts for, or in relation to the rights or property of the other. But means more than tacit permission, and involves request, instruction, or command. Klee v. U. S., C.C.A.Wash., 53 F.2d 58, 61. The consensual relation existing between two persons, by virtue of which one is subject to other's control. Tarver, Steele & Co. v. Pendleton Gin Co., Tex.Civ.App., 25 S.W.2d 156, 159.

Agency is the fiduciary relation which results from the manifestation of consent by one person to another that the other shall act on his behalf and subject to his control, and consent by the other so to act. Restatement, Second, Agency § 1.

See also Agent; Authority.

Actual agency. Exists where the agent is really employed by the principal.

Administrative agency. See Administrative agency.

Agency by estoppel. One created by operation of law and established by proof of such acts of the principal as reasonably lead third person to the conclusion of its existence. Arises where principal, by negligence in failing to supervise agent's affairs, allows agent to exercise powers not granted to him, thus justifying others in believing agent possesses requisite authority.

Deed of agency. A revocable and voluntary trust for payment of debts.

Del credere. Type of agency in which agent is entrusted with goods, documents or securities and in which he is given broad authority to collect from the buyer and in some cases has been held responsible for the buyer's solvency.

Exclusive agency. An agreement by owner that during life of contract he will not sell property to a purchaser procured by another agent, which agreement does not preclude owner himself from selling to a purchaser of his own procuring, while a contract giving a broker "exclusive sale" is more than such exclusive agency, and is an agreement by the owner that he will not sell the property during the life of the contract to any purchaser not procured by the broker in question. See also Exclusive agency.

Executive agency. See that title.

General agency. That which exists when there is a delegation to do all acts connected with a particular trade, business or employment. It implies authority on the part of the agent to act without restriction or qualification in all matters relating to the business of his principal.

Implied agency. One created by act of parties and deduced from proof of other facts. It is an actual agency, proved by deductions or inferences from other facts, and third party need have no knowledge of the principal's acts, nor have relied on them.

One which occurs when agent and principal have no express understanding as to agent's appointment but their conduct suggests agency arrangement, and finding of implied agency depends on facts and circumstances for which principal is responsible which imply that principal intended to create agency. Stram v. Miller, Mo.App., 663 S.W.2d 269, 274.

Intervening agency. See that title.

Ostensible agency. One which exists where the principal intentionally or by want of ordinary care causes a third person to believe another to be his agent who is not really employed by him. See also Agency by estoppel, above.

Special agency. One in which the agent is authorized to conduct a single transaction or a series of transactions not involving a continuity of service.

Universal agency. One in which agent is empowered to conduct every transaction lawfully delegable by principal to agent.

Agency by operation of law. See Agency by estoppel under Agency, supra.

Agency coupled with an interest. A relationship known to the law of agency wherein the agent has an interest in the property or subject matter in which he is dealing. This special type of agency relationship will not terminate automatically upon the death of the principal.

Interest in continued existence of power or authority to act with reference to business, where secured by contract and based on consideration moving from agent to principal looking to exercise of power as means of reimbursement, creates agency coupled with an interest. Agent must have an interest or estate in the thing to be disposed of or managed under the power.

Agency in fact. An agency relationship established by agreement of principal and agent as distinguished from one imposed by law; e.g. agency by estoppel.

Agency of the United States. A department, division, or administration within the federal government.

Agency relationship. An employment for purpose of representation in establishing legal relations between principal and third persons. See Agency; Agent.

Agency shop. A union-security device whereby, in order to continue employment, any nonunion member employee is required to pay to the Union sums equivalent to those paid by union members, either in an amount equal to both union dues and initiation fees, or in an amount equal to dues alone. Ficek v. International Broth. of Boilermakers, Iron Ship Builders, Blacksmiths, Forgers and Helpers, Local # 647, N.D., 219 N.W.2d 860, 862. See also Open shop.

Agenda. Memoranda of things to be done, as items of business or discussion to be brought up at a meeting; a program consisting of such items.

Agnesia /'ɛjɹniyz(i)ɹə/. Impotentia generandi; sexual impotence; incapacity for reproduction, existing in either sex, whether arising from structural or other causes.

Agenfrida. In Saxon law, the true master or owner of a thing.

Agenthina. In Saxon law, a guest at an inn, who, having stayed there for three nights, was then accounted one of the family.

Agents /'ɛjɹnz/. Lat. An agent, a conductor, or manager of affairs. Distinguished from factor, a workman. A plaintiff.

Agent. A person authorized by another (principal) to act for or in place of him; one intrusted with another's business. Humphries v. Going, D.C.N.C., 59 F.R.D. 583, 587. One who represents and acts for another under the contract or relation of agency (q.v.). A business representative, whose function is to bring about, modify, affect, accept performance of, or terminate contractual obligations between principal and third persons. One who undertakes to transact some business, or to manage some affair, for another, by the authority and on account of the latter, and to render an account of it. One who acts for or in place of another by authority from him; a substitute, a deputy, appointed by principal with power to do the things which principal may do. One who deals not only with things, as does a servant, but with persons, using his own discretion as to means, and frequently establishing contractual relations between his principal and third persons.

One authorized to transact all business of principal, or all of principal's business of some particular kind, or all business at some particular place. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Coffin, 136 Ind.App. 12, 186 N.E.2d 180, 182.

See also Agency; Bargaining agent; Corporate agent; Foreign agent; Forwarding agent; Innocent agent; Servant; Soliciting agent; Subagent; Transfer agent.

Apparent agent or ostensible agent. One whom the principal, either intentionally or by want of ordinary care, induces third persons to believe to be his agent, though he has not, either expressly or by implication, conferred authority on him. A person who, whether or not authorized, reasonably appears to third person, because of manifestations of another, to be authorized to act as agent for such other. Restatement, Second, Agency § 8.

Bargaining agent. See Bargaining agent.

Co-agent. One who shares authority to act for the principal with another agent and who is so authorized by the principal.

Diplomatic agent. One representing government in dealings with foreign government.

Dual agent. See Co-agent, above.

Exclusive agent. The only agent permitted to act for principal in a particular territory or matter, though the principal may act for himself; i.e. exclusive sales territory given to agent does not bar principal from selling in this territory. Stahlman v. Nat'l Lead Co., C.A.Miss., 318 F.2d 388, 393.

Foreign agent. See Foreign agent.

General agency business. One not engaged as agent for single firm or person, but holding himself out to public as being engaged in business of being agent. Comer v. State Tax Commission of New Mexico, 41 N.M. 403, 69 P.2d 936.

General agent. One who is authorized to act for his principal in all matters concerning particular business or employment of particular nature. Morpul Research Corp. v. Westover Hardware, Inc., 263 N.C. 718, 140 S.E.2d 416, 418. Compare Special agent, below.

High managerial agent. An officer of a corporation or any other agent in a position of comparable authority with respect to formulation of corporate policy or the supervision in a managerial capacity of subordinate employees.

Independent agent. One who is an independent contractor exercising his own judgment and subject to the one who hired him only for the result of the work performed. Donroy, Limited v. U. S., C.A.Cal., 301 F.2d 200, 206.

Insurance agent. See Insurance.

Local agent. One appointed to act as the representative of a corporation and transact its business generally (or business of a particular character) at a given place or within a defined district.

Managing agent. A person who is invested with general power, involving the exercise of judgment and discretion, as distinguished from an ordinary agent or employee, who acts in an inferior capacity, and under the direction and control of superior authority, both in regard to the extent of the work and the manner of executing the same. One who has exclusive supervision and control of some department of a corporation's business, the management of which requires of such person the exercise of independent judgment and discretion, and the exercise of such authority that it may be fairly said that service of summons upon him will result in notice to the corporation.

Mercantile agents. Agents employed for the sale of goods or merchandise are called "mercantile agents," and are of two principal classes,—brokers and factors (q. v.); a factor is sometimes called a "commission agent," or "commission merchant."

Private agent. An agent acting for an individual in his private affairs; as distinguished from a public agent, who represents the government in some administrative capacity.

Public agent. An agent of the public, the state, or the government; a person appointed to act for the public in some matter pertaining to the administration of government or the public business. Whiteside v. United States, 93 U.S. 247, 23 L.Ed. 882.

Real-estate agent. Person whose business it is to sell, or offer for sale, real estate for others, or to rent houses, stores, or other buildings, or real estate, or to collect rent for others.

Special agent. One employed to conduct a particular transaction or piece of business for his principal or authorized to perform a specified act. An agent authorized to conduct a single transaction or a series of transactions not involving continuity of service. Rowen & Blair Electric Co. v. Flushing Operating Corp., 66 Mich.App. 480, 239 N.W.2d 633, 638. Compare Special agent, above.

Subagent. One authorized by agent to help perform functions for principal. Generally, absent express or implied authority, an agent has no authority to appoint a subagent. The subagent is subject to control by both agent and principal. Restatement, Second, Agency § 5.

Superior agent. See High managerial agent, above.

Transfer agent. Any person who engages on behalf of an issuer of securities or on behalf of itself as an issuer of securities in (A) countersigning such securities upon issuance; (B) monitoring the issuance of such securities with a view to preventing unauthorized issuance, a function commonly performed by a person called a registrar; (C) registering the transfer of such securities; (D) exchanging or converting such securities; or (E) transferring record ownership of securities by bookkeeping entry without physical issuance of securities certificates. Securities Exchange Act of 1934, § 3, 15 U.S.C.A. § 78c.

Undercover agent. See that title.

Universal agent. See Universal agency under topic Agency.

Agentes et consentientes pari poena plectentur /əjén-tiɪz ət kənsənsiɪjéntiɪz péraɪ piɪnə plekténtər/. Acting and consenting parties are liable to the same punishment.

Agent provocateur /éɪjənt prəvøkət(y)úr/. A spy; a secret agent hired to penetrate an organization to gather evidence against its members or to incite trouble.

Agent's lien. The legal right agreed in advance to payment from a principal for services rendered by an agent.

Age of consent. Age at which persons may marry without parental approval. Age at which a female is legally capable of agreeing to sexual intercourse and below which age the male commits statutory rape if he has sexual intercourse with her. See also Legal age; Majority; Statutory rape.

Age of majority. Age at which a person may contract sui juris; now 18 in most jurisdictions. Sometimes referred to as full age; legal age; majority; adulthood. Age at which one may execute a valid will or vote; age at which payments for support by parents may generally be terminated. See also Legal age; Majority.

Age of reason. Age at which a child is deemed to be capable of acting responsibly; commonly the age of 7. In general, one between the ages of 7 and 14 is rebuttably presumed to be incapable of committing a crime. Below the age of 7 a child is conclusively presumed to be incapable of committing crime. See Infancy.

Ager /éyjr/. Lat. A field; land generally. A portion of land enclosed by definite boundaries.

Aggravate. See Aggravation.

Aggravated arson. See Arson.

Aggravated assault. A person is guilty of aggravated assault if he: attempts to cause serious bodily injury to another, or causes such injury purposely, knowingly or recklessly under circumstances manifesting extreme indifference to the value of human life; or, attempts to cause or purposely or knowingly causes bodily injury to another with a deadly weapon. Model Penal Code, § 211.1(2). In all jurisdictions statutes punish such aggravated assaults as assault with intent to murder (or rob or kill or rape) and assault with a dangerous (or deadly) weapon more severely than "simple" assaults. See also Assault.

Aggravated battery. Unlawful application of force to another characterized by unusual or serious consequences or attending circumstances such as a dangerous weapon. This offense was unknown at common law. See Aggravated assault.

Aggravated robbery. See Robbery.

Aggravating circumstances. See Aggravation.

Aggravation. Any circumstance attending the commission of a crime or tort which increases its guilt or enormity or adds to its injurious consequences, but which is above and beyond the essential constituents of the crime or tort itself. People v. Robinson, 416 N.E.2d 793, 799. See e.g. Aggravated assault.

Aggregate. Entire number, sum, mass, or quantity of something; total amount; complete whole. One provision under will may be the aggregate if there are no more units to fall into that class. Composed of several; consisting of many persons united together; a combined whole. See also Joinder.

Aggregate corporation. See Corporation.

Aggregate income. Total income of husband and wife who file a joint tax return.

Aggregate theory of partnership. A partnership is the totality of persons engaged in a business and not an entity in itself as in the case of a corporation.

Aggregatio mentium /ægrægéysh(iy)ow ménsh(iy)əm/. The meeting of minds. The moment when a contract is complete. A supposed derivation of the word "agreement," (q.v.)

Aggregation /ægrægéyshən/. The combination of two or more elements in patent claims, each of which is unrelated, and each of which performs separately and without cooperation, where combination does not define a composite integrated mechanism. Bowser, Inc. v. U. S., 388 F.2d 346, 351, 181 Ct.Cl. 834. Term means that the elements of a claimed combination are incapable of co-operation to produce a unitary result, and in its true sense does not need prior art patents to support it.

Aggregation doctrine. Rule which precludes totalling of claims for Federal jurisdictional amount purposes. Georgia Ass'n of Independent Ins. Agents v. Travelers Indem. Co., D.C.Ga., 313 F.Supp. 841, 842.

Aggressor. One who first employs hostile force. Penn v. Henderson, 174 Or. 1, 146 P.2d 760, 766. The party who first offers violence or offense. He who begins a quarrel or dispute, either by threatening or striking another, that justifies like response.

Aggressor corporation. A corporation that attempts to obtain control of a publicly held corporation, often by a direct cash tender or public exchange offer to shareholders, but also possibly by way of merger, which requires agreement or assent of the target's management. See Leveraged buyout; Tender offer.

Aggrieved. Having suffered loss or injury; damaged; injured.

Aggrieved party. One whose legal right is invaded by an act complained of, or whose pecuniary interest is directly and adversely affected by a decree or judgment. One whose right of property may be established or divested. The word "aggrieved" refers to a substantial grievance, a denial of some personal, pecuniary or property right, or the imposition upon a party of a burden or obligation. See Party; Standing.

Bankruptcy. A party is "aggrieved," within meaning of Bankruptcy Code, if his property may be diminished, his burden increased, or his rights detrimentally affected by order sought to be reviewed. Klein v. Rancho Montana De Oro, Inc., C.A.Cal., 263 F.2d 764, 771.

Aggrieved person. See Aggrieved party.

Agiler /əjájylər/. In Saxon law, an observer or informer.

Agillarius /æjálériyəs/. L. Lat. In old English law, a hayward, herdward, or keeper of the herd of cattle in a common field.

Agings of accounts. Arranging the accounts (such as receivables or payables) in chronological order and grouping the accounts by intervals, such as accounts outstanding less than 30 days, 30 to 60 days, and so on. The process of classifying accounts receivable by the time elapsed since the claim came into existence for the purpose of estimating the balance of uncollectible accounts as of a given date.

Agio /əjɪjəw/. In commercial law, a term used to express the difference in point of value between metallic and paper money, or between one sort of metallic money and another.

Agiotage /əzh(i)yotəzh/. A speculation on the rise and fall of the public debt, or the public funds. The speculator is called "agioteur."

Agist /əjɪst/. An ancient law term meant to take in and give feed to the cattle of strangers in the king's forest, and to collect the money due for the same to the king's use.

Agister /əjɪstər/. A person engaged in the business of pasturing of livestock as a bailee in consideration of an agreed price to be paid by owner of cattle. Walker v. Nelson, 137 Colo. 519, 327 P.2d 285, 287.

Agistment /əjɪstmənt/. A particular kind of bailment under which a person, for consideration, takes animals for care and pasturing on his land, and the person who cares for the animals has an "agister's lien" on the animals for that care. Hatley v. West, 74 Wash.2d 409, 445 P.2d 208, 209; A contract whereby a person, called an agister, has control of animals and retains possession of land. Cox v. Pithoud, 221 C.A.2d 571, 34 Cal.Rptr. 582, 583.

There is also agistment of sea-banks, where lands are charged with a tribute to keep out the sea; and terræ agitatae are lands whose owners must keep up the sea-banks.

In canon law, a composition or mean rate at which some right or due might be reckoned.

Tithe of agistment was a small tithe paid to the rector or vicar on cattle or other produce of grass lands. It was paid by the occupier of the land and not by the person who put in his cattle to graze.

Agistor /əjɪstər/. See Agister; Agistment.

Agitator /əjɪtətər/. One who stirs up; excites; ruffles; perturbs. One who incessantly advocates a social change.

Agnates /əgneyts/əgnétytɪz/. In the law of descents, relations by the father, or on the father's side. This word is used in the Scotch law, and by some writers as an English word, corresponding with the Latin agnati (q.v.).

Agnati /əgnétyat/. In Roman law, the term included all the cognates who trace their connection exclusively through males. A table of cognates is formed by taking each lineal ancestor in turn and including all his descendants of both sexes in the tabular view. If, then, in tracing the various branches of such a genealogical table or tree, we stop whenever we come to the name of a female, and pursue that particular branch or ramification no further, all who remain after the descendants of women have been excluded are agnates, and their connection together is agnatic relationship. All persons are agnatically connected together who are under the same patria potestas, or who have been under it, or who might have been under it if their lineal ancestor had lived long enough to exercise his empire.

The agnate family consisted of all persons living at the same time, who would have been subject to the patriis potestas of a common ancestor, if his life had been continued to their time.

Cognates were all persons who could trace their blood to a single ancestor or ancestress, and agnates were those cognates who traced their connection exclusively through males. Between agnati and cognati there is this difference: that, under the name of agnati, cognati are included, but not è converso; for instance, a father's brother, that is, a paternal uncle, is both agnatus and cognatus, but a mother's brother, that is, a maternal uncle, is a cognatus but not agnatus.

Agnatic /əgnætək/. [From agnati, q.v.] Derived from or through males. 2 Bl.Comm. 236.

Agnatio /əgnéysh(i)yow/. In the civil law, relationship on the fathers' side; the relationship of agnati; agnation. Agnatio a patre est.

Agnation /əgnéyshən/. Kinship by the father's side. See Agnates; Agnati.

Agnomen /əgnówmən/. Lat. An additional name or title; a nickname. A name or title which a man gets by some action or peculiarity; the last of the four names sometimes given a Roman. Thus, Scipio Africanus (the African) from his African victories. See Nomen.

Agnomination /əgnómənéyshən/. A surname; an additional name or title; agnomen.

Agony. Extreme physical pain or mental distress.

Agraphia /agrəfɪjə/. See Aphasia.

Agrarian /əgréyən/. Relating to land, or to a division or distribution of land; as an agrarian law.

Agrarian laws. In Roman law, laws for the distribution among the people, by public authority, of the lands constituting the public domain, usually territory conquered from an enemy. In common parlance the term is frequently applied to laws which have for their object the more equal division or distribution of landed property; laws for subdividing large properties and increasing the number of landholders.

Agrarium. A tax upon or tribute payable out of land.

A gratia /èy gréysh(i)yə/. By grace; not of right.

Agreementum /əgrɪjəméntəm/. In old English law, agreement; an agreement.

Agree. To concur; come into harmony; give mutual assent; unite in mental action; exchange promises; make an agreement; arrange; to settle. Concur or acquiesce in; approve or adopt. Agreed or agreed to, are frequently used (like accord), to show the concurrence or harmony of cases; e.g. Agreed per curiam. Usually implies some contractual undertaking. To grant or covenant, as when a grantor agrees that no building shall be erected on an adjoining lot; or a mortgagor agrees to cause all taxes to be paid. See Agreement; Contract.

Agreed. Settled or established by agreement. Commonly synonymous with "contracted."

Agreed amount clause. Provision in insurance policy that the insured will carry a stated amount of insurance coverage.

Agreed case. See Case agreed on under Case.

Agreed judgment. See Judgment.

Agreed price. The consideration for sale of goods arrived at by mutual agreement as contrasted with "open price". U.C.C. § 2-305.

Agreed statement of facts. A statement of facts, agreed on by the parties as true and correct, to be submitted to a court for a ruling on the law of the case. United States Trust Co. v. New Mexico, 183 U.S. 535, 22 S.Ct. 172, 46 L.Ed. 315. See Case agreed on under Case. See also Declaratory judgment; Stipulation.

Agreed statement on appeal. Narrative statement of facts in case which may be filed on appeal in lieu of report of proceedings below. It is required that all parties agree to content of narrative.

Agreed value. The worth or value of property upon which persons agree beforehand as in a partnership contract in which the parties agree on the value of a partner's interest in a specified amount. Walraven v. Ramsay, 335 Mich. 331, 55 N.W.2d 853, 856.

Agreement. A meeting of two or more minds; a coming together in opinion or determination; the coming together in accord of two minds on a given proposition. In law, a concord of understanding and intention between two or more parties with respect to the effect upon their relative rights and duties, of certain past or future facts or performances. The consent of two or more persons concurring respecting the transmission of some property, right, or benefits, with the view of contracting an obligation, a mutual obligation.

A manifestation of mutual assent on the part of two or more persons as to the substance of a contract. Restatement, Second, Contracts, § 3.

The act of two or more persons, who unite in expressing a mutual and common purpose, with the view of altering their rights and obligations. The union of two or more minds in a thing done or to be done; a mutual assent to do a thing. A compact between parties who are thereby subjected to the obligation or to whom the contemplated right is thereby secured.

Although often used as synonymous with "contract", agreement is a broader term; e.g. an agreement might lack an essential element of a contract. The bargain of the parties in fact as found in their language or by implication from other circumstances including course of dealing or usage of trade or course of performance. U.C.C. § 1-201(c); Uniform Consumer Credit Code, § 1.301(3).

The writing or instrument which is evidence of an agreement.

See also Binding agreement; Compact; Consent; Contract; Covenant; International agreements; Meeting of minds.

Classification

Conditional agreements. The operation and effect of such depend upon the existence of a supposed state of facts, or the performance of a condition, or the happening of a contingency.

Executed agreements. Such have reference to past events, or which are at once closed and where nothing further remains to be done by the parties.

Executory agreements. Such agreements as are to be performed in the future. They are commonly preliminary to other more formal or important contracts or deeds, and are usually evidenced by memoranda, parol promises, etc.

Express agreements. Those in which the terms and stipulations are specifically declared and avowed by the parties at the time of making the agreement.

Implied agreement. (1) Implied in fact. One inferred from the acts or conduct of the parties, instead of being expressed by them in written or spoken words. (2) Implied in law; more aptly termed a constructive or quasi contract. One where, by fiction of law, a promise is imputed to perform a legal duty, as to repay money obtained by fraud or duress. Baltimore Mail S. S. Co. v. U. S., C.C.A.Md., 76 F.2d 582, 585. One inferred by the law where the conduct of the parties with reference to the subject-matter is such as to induce the belief that they intended to do that which their acts indicate they have done. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. U. S., 261 U.S. 592, 43 S.Ct. 425, 67 L.Ed. 816.

Parol agreements. At common law, such as are either by word of mouth or are committed to writing, but are not under seal. The common law draws only one great line, between things under seal and not under seal.

Agreement for insurance. An agreement often made in short terms preliminary to the filling out and delivery of a policy with specific stipulations. See also Binder.

Agreement not to be performed within a year. An agreement that necessarily must require more than year for performance. Incapable of performance within one year. Street v. Maddux, Marshall, Moss & Mallory, 58 App.D.C. 42, 24 F.2d 617, 619.

Agreement of sale; agreement to sell. An agreement of sale may imply not merely an obligation to sell, but an obligation on the part of the other party to purchase, while an agreement to sell is simply an obligation on the part of the vendor or promisor to complete his promise of sale. Treat v. White, 181 U.S. 264, 21 S.Ct. 611, 45 L.Ed. 853. It is a contract to be performed in future, and, if fulfilled, results in a sale; it is preliminary to sale and is not the actual sale.

Agreer /ãgreyéy/. Fr. In French marine law, to rig or equip a vessel.

Agrez /əgréy/. Fr. In French marine law, the rigging or tackle of a vessel.

Agri /ægrây/. Arable lands in common fields.

Aid. To support, help, assist or strengthen. Act in cooperation with; supplement the efforts of others. State v. Upton, Iowa, 167 N.W.2d 625, 628.

Distinguished from abet. "Aid" within aider and abettor statute means to help, to assist, or to strengthen while "abet" means to counsel, to encourage, to incite or to assist in commission of criminal act. State v. Trocadero, 36 Ohio App.2d 1, 301 N.E.2d 898, 902.

Aid and abet. Help, assist, or facilitate the commission of a crime, promote the accomplishment thereof, help in advancing or bringing it about, or encourage, counsel, or incite as to its commission. State v. Fetters, Iowa, 202 N.W.2d 84, 90. It comprehends all assistance rendered by words, acts, encouragement, support, or presence, actual or constructive, to render assistance if necessary. See Abet; Abettor; Accessory; Accomplice; Aider and abettor; Harbor.

Aid and comfort. Help; support; assistance; counsel; encouragement. As an element in the crime of treason (Constitution of the United States, Art. III, § 3), the giving of "aid and comfort" to the enemy may consist in a mere attempt. It is not essential to constitute the giving of aid and comfort that the enterprise commenced should be successful and actually render assistance. An act which intentionally strengthens or tends to strengthen enemies of the United States, or which weakens or tends to weaken power of the United States to resist and attack such enemies. Any intentional act furthering hostile designs of enemies of the United States. United States v. Haupt, D.C.Ill., 47 F.Supp. 836, 839.

Aid bond. See Bond.

Aider and abettor. One who assists another in the accomplishment of a common design or purpose; he must be aware of, and consent, to such design or purpose. Peats v. State, 213 Ind. 560, 12 N.E.2d 270, 277. One who advises, counsels, procures, or encourages another to commit a crime, himself being guilty of some overt act or advocacy or encouragement of his principal, actually or constructively present when crime is committed, and participating in commission thereof by some act, deed, word, or gesture, Turner v. Commonwealth, 268 Ky. 311, 104 S.W.2d 1085, and sharing the criminal intent of the principal. One who assists another to commit a crime; may be a principal, if present, or an accessory before or after fact of crime. The crime must usually be a felony because all parties to misdemeanor are generally principals. See also Abettor.

Aider by verdict. The healing or remission, by a verdict rendered, of a defect or error in pleading which might have been objected to before verdict. The presumption of the proof of all facts necessary to the verdict as it stands, coming to the aid of a record in which such facts are not distinctly alleged. Amendment of pleadings to conform to the evidence is provided for by Fed.R.Civil P. 15.

Aiding and abetting. See Aid and abet.

Aiding and abetting. Assisting in or otherwise facilitating the commission of a crime. See Aider and abettor.

Aiding an escape. Any overt act, intended and useful to assist attempted or completed departure of prisoner from lawful custody before his discharge by due process of law. See e.g. Model Pen.Code § 242.6. See Accessory (Accessory after the fact); Obstructing justice.

Aid of the king. In old English law, the king's tenant prayed this, when rent was demanded of him by others.

Aid prayer. In English practice, a proceeding formerly made use of, by way of petition in court, praying in aid of the tenant for life, etc., from the reversioner or remainderman, when the title to the inheritance was in question. It was a plea in suspension of the action. 3 Bl.Comm. 300.

Aids. In feudal law, originally mere benevolences granted by a tenant to his lord, in times of distress; but at length the lords claimed them as of right. They were principally three: (1) To ransom the lord's person, if taken prisoner; (2) to make the lord's eldest son and heir apparent a knight; (3) to give a suitable portion to the lord's eldest daughter on her. A reasonable aid was a duty claimed by the lord of the fee of his tenants, holding by knight service, to marry his daughter, etc. Abolished by Tenures Abolition Act of 1660.

Also, extraordinary grants to the Crown by the house of commons, which were the origin of the modern system of taxation. 2 Bl.Comm. 63, 64.

AIDS. Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome. A virus which attacks a person's immune system and damages his or her ability to fight other diseases. Without a functioning immune system to ward off other germs, person becomes vulnerable to becoming infected by bacteria, fungi, and other viruses and malignancies which may cause life-threatening illness, such as pneumonia, meningitis and cancer.

Alford plea. Name derived from North Carolina v. Alford, 400 U.S. 25, 91 S.Ct. 160, 27 L.Ed.2d 162 (1970), in which Supreme Court held that a guilty plea which represented a voluntary and intelligent choice among alternatives available to defendant, especially where he was represented by competent counsel, was not compelled within the meaning of the Fifth Amendment merely because the plea was entered to avoid the possibility of the death penalty. The Supreme Court also held that where strong evidence of actual guilt substantially negated defendant's claim of innocence and provided strong factual basis for the guilty plea, and the state had a strong case of first-degree murder, so that defendant, advised by competent counsel, intelligently concluded that he should plead guilty to second-degree murder rather than be tried for first-degree murder, the court committed no constitutional error in accepting guilty plea despite defendant's claim of innocence.

Algarum maris /ælgérəm mārəs/. Probably a corruption of Laganum maris, lagan being a right, in the middle ages, like jetsam and flotsam, by which goods thrown from a vessel in distress became the property of the king, or the lord on whose shores they were stranded.

Alien Registration Act. Act of Congress (1940) which requires annual registration of all aliens over the age of 13. 8 U.S.C.A. §§ 1201(b), 1301, 1302.

Alienus /æliyiynəs/. Lat. Another's; belonging to another; the property of another. Alienus homo, another's man, or slave. Aliena res, another's property.

Alignment. The act of laying out or adjusting a line. The state of being so laid out or adjusted. The ground plan of a railway or other road or work as distinguished from its profile or gradients. An adjustment to a line.

Alike. Similar to another. The term is not synonymous with "identical," which means "exactly the same."

Alimenta /æléméntə/. Lat. In the civil law, aliments; things necessary to sustain life; means of support, including food (cibaria), clothing (vestitus) and habitation (habitatio).

Alimony /æləmōni/. Comes from Latin "alimonia" meaning sustenance, and means, therefore, the sustenance or support of the wife by her divorced husband and stems from the common-law right of the wife to support by her husband. Allowances which husband or wife by court order pays other spouse for maintenance while they are separated, or after they are divorced (permanent alimony), or temporarily, pending a suit for divorce (pendente lite). Generally, it is restricted to money unless otherwise authorized by statute. But it may be an allowance out of the spouse's estate. LaChance v. LaChance, Md.App., 346 A.2d 676, 679, 680. Generally, alimony is separable from a binding property settlement agreement. Beard v. Worrell, 212 S.E.2d 598, 158 W.Va. 248. State statutes which provide for payment of alimony only to the wife have been held to be unconstitutional. Orr v. Orr, 99 S.Ct. 1102. See also Gross alimony; Lump-sum alimony; Palimony; Periodic alimony; Permanent alimony; Rehabilitation (Alimony); Trust (Alimony trust).

Alimony in gross, or in a lump sum, is in the nature of a final property settlement, and hence in some jurisdictions is not included in the term "alimony," which in its strict or technical sense contemplates money payments at regular intervals. Refers to those alimony arrangements where entire award is a vested and determined amount and not subject to change. Imbrie v. Imbrie, 94 Ill.App.2d 60, 236 N.E.2d 381, 383.

Alimony pendente lite (temporary alimony). An allowance made pending a suit for divorce or separate maintenance including a reasonable allowance for preparation of the suit as well as for support. Davis v. Davis, 15 Wash.2d 297, 130 P.2d 355, 359. See also Allowance pendente lite.

Permanent alimony. A provision for the support and maintenance of a wife during her lifetime.

Tax treatment. Alimony and separate maintenance payments are includible in the gross income of the recipient and are deductible by the payor. The payments must be periodic and made in discharge of a legal obligation arising from a marital or family relationship. Child support and voluntary payments are not treated as alimony. I.R.C. §§ 62(10), 71, 215.

Alimony trust. See Trust.

A l'impossible nul n'est tenu /à læmpoziybłə núl néy tenyúw/. No one is bound to do the impossible.

Alio intuitu /æliyow int(y)úwətuw/. Lat. In a different view; under a different aspect. With another view or object; with respect to another case or condition.

Aliquid conceditur ne injuria remaneat impunita, quod alias non concederetur /æłəkwəd kənsiydətər niy injúriyə rəmāniyət impyúwnətə, kwəd áliyəs nòn kənsiydəriytər/. Something is (will be) conceded, to prevent a wrong remaining unredressed, which otherwise would not be conceded.

Aliquid possessionis et nihil juris /æłəkwəd pəzəshiyównəs èt náyəl júrás/. Somewhat of possession, and nothing of right (but no right).

Aliquis non debet esse judex in propria causa, quia non potest esse judex et pars /æłəkwəs nòn débət ésiy júwdeks in prówpriyə kóza, kwáya nòn pówtəst ésiy júwdeks èt párz/. A person ought not to be judge in his own cause, because he cannot act as judge and party.

Aliquot /æłəkwòt/. Strictly speaking, means contained in something else an exact number of times. But as applied to resulting trusts, "aliquot" is treated as meaning fractional, and means any definite interest.

Aliquot part rule. A rule which requires that a person intend to acquire a fractional part of the ownership of property before the court can declare a resulting trust in his favor.

Aliter /ælətar/. Otherwise; as otherwise held or decided.

Aliud est celare, aliud tacere /æliyəd èst səlériy, áliyəd təsériy/. To conceal is one thing; to be silent is another.

Aliud est possidere, aliud esse in possessione /æliyəd èst pösədíriy, áliyəd ésiy in pözəshiyówniy/. It is one thing to possess; it is another to be in possession.

Aliud est vendere, aliud vendenti consentire /æliyəd èst véndəriy, áliyəd vendéntay kònsəntáiyriy/. To sell is one thing; to consent to a sale (seller) is another thing.

Aliud examen /æliyəd əgzéymən/. A different or foreign mode of trial.

Aliunde /èyliyándiy/. Lat. From another source; from elsewhere; from outside.

Evidence aliunde. Evidence from outside, from another source. In certain cases a written instrument may be explained by evidence aliunde, that is, by evidence drawn from sources exterior to the instrument itself, e.g., the testimony of a witness to conversations, admissions, or preliminary negotiations. Evidence aliunde (i.e., from outside the will) may be received to explain an ambiguity in a will. See Parol evidence.

Aliunde rule /èyliyándiy rúw/. A verdict may not be impeached by evidence of juror unless foundation for introduction thereof is first made by competent evidence aliunde, or from some other source. State v. Adams, 141 Ohio St. 423, 48 N.E.2d 861, 863.

Alius /æliyəs/. Lat. Other. The neuter form is aliud, something else; another thing.

Alive. As respects birth, it means that child has an independent life of its own for some period, even momentarily, after birth; evidenced by respiration or other indications of life, such as beating of heart and pulsation of arteries (Hydrostatic test); or heart tones in response to artificial respiration, or pulsation of umbilical cord after being severed. See also Born alive; Child; Life; Live; Viable child.

In respect of estate matters, a child en ventre sa mere is "born" and "alive" for all purposes for his benefit. In re Holthausen's Will, 175 Misc. 1022, 26 N.Y.S.2d 140, 143.

ALJ. See Administrative Law Judge.

All. Means the whole of—used with a singular noun or pronoun, and referring to amount, quantity, extent, duration, quality, or degree. The whole number or sum of—used collectively, with a plural noun or pronoun expressing an aggregate. Every member of individual component of; each one of—used with a plural noun. In this sense, all is used generically and distributively. "All" refers rather to the aggregate under which the individuals are subsumed than to the individuals themselves. State v. Hallenberg-Wagner Motor Co., 341 Mo. 771, 108 S.W.2d 398, 401. See Both.

All and singular. All without exception. A comprehensive term often employed in conveyances, wills, and the like, which includes the aggregate or whole and also each of the separate items or components.

All cases at law. Within constitutional guaranty of jury trial, refers to common law actions as distinguished from causes in equity and certain other proceedings. Breimhorst v. Beckman, 239 Minn. 409, 35 N.W.2d 719, 734.

Allegans contraria non est audiendus /ælagənz kəntreəriyə nən est òdiyéndəs/. On alleging contrary or contradictory things (whose statements contradict each other) is not to be heard. Applied to the statements of a witness.

Allegans suam turpitudinem non est audiendus /ælagənz s(y)úwəm tərptýúwdənəm nən est òdiyéndəs/. One who alleges his own infamy is not to be heard.

Allegari non debuit quod probatum non relevat /ælagəray nən déb(y)uwət kwòd pròbéytəm nən rėləvət/. That ought not to be alleged which, if proved, is not relevant.

Allegata /ælagéytə/. In Roman law, a word which the emperors formerly signed at the bottom of their rescripts and constitutions; under other instruments they usually wrote signata or testata.

Allegata et probata /ælagéytə èt pròwbéytə/. Lat. Things alleged and proved. The allegations made by a party to a suit, and the proof adduced in their support.

Allegatio contra factum non est admittenda /ælagéysh(iy)ow kóntrə fəktəm nən est ədməténda/. An allegation contrary to the deed (or fact) is not admissible.

Allegation. The assertion, claim, declaration, or statement of a party to an action, made in a pleading, setting out what he expects to prove. See e.g. Fed.R. Civil P. 8. See also Charge; Claim; Complaint.

A material allegation in a pleading is one essential to the claim or defense.

In ecclesiastical law, the statement of the facts intended to be relied on in support of the contested suit.

Allegation of fact. Generally, narration of transaction by stating details according to their legal effect, and statement of right or liability flowing from certain facts is conclusion of law.

Allegation of faculties. A statement made by the wife of the property of her husband, in order to obtain alimony. See Faculties.

Allege /əléj/. To state, recite, claim, assert, or charge; to make an allegation. See Allegation.

Alleged. Stated; recited; claimed; asserted; charged.

Allegiance /əliyjəns/. Obligation of fidelity and obedience to government in consideration for protection that government gives. U. S. v. Kuhn, D.C.N.Y., 49 F.Supp. 407, 414. See also Oath of allegiance or loyalty.

Acquired allegiance, is that binding a naturalized citizen.

Local or actual allegiance, is that measure of obedience due from a subject of one government to another government, within whose territory he is temporarily resident. From this are excepted foreign sovereigns and their representatives, naval and armed forces when permitted to remain in or pass through the country or its waters.

Natural allegiance. In English law, that kind of allegiance which is due from all men born within the king's dominions, immediately upon their birth, which is intrinsic and perpetual, and cannot be divested by any act of their own. In American law, the allegiance due from citizens of the United States to their native country, and also from naturalized citizens, and which cannot be renounced without the permission of government, to be declared by law.

Allegiare /əliyjyeriy/. To defend and clear one's self; to wage one's own law. An archaic word which simply means to define or justify by due course of law.

Alleging diminution /əléjiŋ dimən(y)úwshən/. The allegation in an appellate court, of some error in a subordinate part of the nisi prius record. See Diminution.

Allen charge. An instruction advising deadlocked jurors to have deference for each other's views, that they should listen, with a disposition to be convinced, to each other's argument; deriving its name from the case of Allen v. United States, 164 U.S. 492, 17 S.Ct. 154, 41 L.Ed. 528, wherein the instruction was approved. Green v. U. S., C.A.Fla., 309 F.2d 852. Various called dynamite charge, shotgun instruction, third degree instruction. The Allen charge is prohibited in certain states;

e.g. California, People v. Gainer, 19 Cal3d 835, 566 P.2d 997, 139 Cal.Rptr. 861; and while permissible in others, its use must be carefully examined by trial judge to determine its total effect on jury reaching verdict. Brown v. State, Del., 369 A.2d 682, 684.

Allergy. A susceptibility to disease. Vogt v. Ford Motor Co., Mo.App., 138 S.W.2d 684, 688. The condition of being hypersensitive to something.

All events test. For accrual method taxpayers, income is earned when: (1) all the events have occurred which fix the right to receive the income and (2) the amount can be determined with reasonable accuracy. Accrual of income cannot be postponed simply because a portion of the income may have to be returned in a subsequent period.

Under this test an accrual basis taxpayer may deduct taxes or any other expense items if all the events fixing the fact of, and amount of, taxpayer's liability have transpired though not paid, and this requires that each taxable year must be treated as a separate unit, and all items of gross income and deductions must be reflected in terms of their posture at close of such year. Dravo Corp. v. U.S., 348 F.2d 542, 545, 172 Ct.Cl. 200.

Alleviare /əlyv'yériy/. L. Lat. In old records, to levy or pay an accustomed fine or composition; to redeem by such payment.

All faults. A sale of goods with "all faults" covers, in the absence of fraud on the part of the vendor, all such faults and defects as are not inconsistent with the identity of the goods as the goods described. U.C.C. § 2-316. See As is.

All fours. Two cases or decisions which are alike in all material respects, and precisely similar in all the circumstances affecting their determination, are said to be or to run on "all fours."

Alliance. The relation or union between persons or families contracted by intermarriage; affinity. State of being allied.

In international law, a union, association or confederation of two or more states or nations, formed by league or treaty, for the joint prosecution of a war (offensive alliance), or for their mutual assistance and protection in repelling hostile attacks (defensive alliance). The league or treaty by which the association is formed. The act of confederating, by league or treaty, for the purposes mentioned.

The term is also used in a wider sense, embracing unions for objects of common interest to the contracting parties, as the "Holy Alliance" entered into in 1815 by Prussia, Austria and Russia for the purpose of counteracting the revolutionary movement in the interest of political liberalism.

Allision. The running of one vessel into or against another, as distinguished from a collision, i. e., the running of two vessels against each other. But this distinction is not very carefully observed.

Allocable /ələkəbəl/. Synonymous with "distributable". In analyzing accounts, the breaking down of a lump sum charged or credited to one account into several parts to be charged or credited to other accounts.

Allocable share of income. Certain entities receive conduit treatment under the Federal income tax law. This means the earned income or loss is not taxed to the entity, but such amounts are allocated to the owners or beneficiaries thereof, regardless of the magnitude or timing of corresponding distributions. The portion of the entity's income that is taxed to the owner or beneficiary is the allocable share of the entity's income or loss for the period. Such allocations are determined by (1) the partnership agreement relative to the partners, (2) a weighted-average stock ownership computation relative to shareholders of an S corporation, and (3) the controlling will or trust instrument relative to the beneficiaries of an estate or trust.

Allocation. Assignment or allotment. Jacobson v. Bowles, D.C.Tex., 53 F.Supp. 532, 534.

In taxation, the assignment of income for various tax purposes. A multistate corporation's nonbusiness income usually is allocated to the state where the nonbusiness assets are located; it is not apportioned with the rest of the entity's income. The income and expense items of an estate or trust are allocated between income and corpus components. Specific items of income, expense, gain, loss, and credit can be allocated to specific partners or shareholders in an S corporation, if a substantial economic nontax purpose for the allocation is established.

Allocacione facienda /ələkəyshiýówniy fəshiyénda/. In old English practice, a writ for allowing to an accountant such sums of money as he hath lawfully expended in his office; directed to the lord treasurer and barons of the exchequer upon application made.

Allocation of dividends. In trust accounting, cash dividends are credited or allocated to income; whereas, generally, stock dividends are credited to principal and the basis of the stock on which the dividend has been paid is changed in the portfolio. If the cash dividend is a liquidating dividend, it is commonly allocated to principal.

Allocation of income. When two or more businesses are controlled by the same interests, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may allocate or distribute income to prevent tax evasion. I.R.C. § 482. In trust accounting, the process by which income is distributed as between principal and income.

Allocation of principal and income. See Allocation of dividends; Allocation of income.

Allocatur /ələkéytər/. Lat. It is allowed. A word formerly used to denote that a writ or order was allowed. A word denoting the allowance by a master or prothonotary of a bill referred for his consideration, whether touching costs, damages, or matter of account. A special allocatur is the special allowance of a writ

Allocatur exigent /æləkýɛtər égzajənt/. A species of writ anciently issued in outlawry proceedings, on the return of the original writ of exigent. See Exigent.

Allocution /æləkýúwshən/. Formality of court's inquiry of defendant as to whether he has any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced against him on verdict of conviction; or, whether he would like to make statement on his behalf and present any information in mitigation of sentence (see e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 32(a)). State v. Pruitt, Mo., 169 S.W.2d 399, 400.

Allocutus /æləkýúwtəs/. See Allocution.

Allodarii /ælədériyay/. Owners of allodial lands. Owners of estates as large as a subject may have.

Allodial /əlówdiyəl/. Free; not holden of any lord or superior; owned without obligation of vassalage or fealty; the opposite of feudal. See also Ownership.

Allodium /əlówdiyəm/. Land held absolutely in one's own right, and not of any lord or superior; land not subject to feudal duties or burdens. An estate held by absolute ownership, without recognizing any superior to whom any duty is due on account thereof.

Allograph /ælgɹæf/. A writing or signature made for a person by another; opposed to autograph.

Allonge /əlónj/. A piece of paper annexed to a negotiable instrument or promissory note, on which to write endorsements for which there is no room on the instrument itself. Such must be so firmly affixed thereto as to become a part thereof. U.C.C. § 3-202(2).

Allot /əlót/. To apportion, distribute; to divide property previously held in common among those entitled, assigning to each his ratable portion, to be held in severalty. To set apart specific property, a share of a fund, etc., to a distinct party. In the law of corporations, to allot shares, debentures, etc., is to appropriate them to the applicants or persons who have applied for them.

Allotted land. See Allotment.

Allotment. A share or portion; that which is allotted; apportionment; division; the distribution of shares in a public undertaking or corporation. Partition; the distribution of land under an inclosure act.

The term ordinarily and commonly used to describe land held by Indians after allotment, and before the issuance of the patent in fee that deprives the land of its character as Indian country. A term of art in Indian law, describing either a parcel of land owned by the United States in trust for an Indian, i.e., a "trust allotment," or owned by an Indian subject to a restriction on alienation in favor of the United States or its officials, i.e., a "restricted fee allotment." Bear v. U.S., D.C.Neb., 611 F.Supp. 589, 599. In Indian law, means a selection of specific land awarded to an individual allottee from a common holding. Affiliated Ute Citizens of Utah v. U.S., U.S. Utah, 406 U.S. 128, 92 S.Ct. 1456, 1466, 31 L.Ed.2d 741. See Allottee.

Allotment certificate. A document issued to an applicant for shares in a company or public loan announcing the number of shares allotted or assigned and the amounts and due dates of the calls or different payments to be made on the same.

Allotment note. In English law, a writing by a seaman, made on an approved form, whereby he makes an assignment of part of his wages in favor of his wife, father or mother, grandfather or grandmother, brother or sister. Governed by Merchant Shipping Act, 1970, § 13(1).

Allotment system. Designates the practice in England of dividing land in small portions for cultivation by agricultural laborers, gardeners and others. See also Allotment.

Allotment warden. By the English general inclosure act, 1845, § 108, when an allotment for the laboring poor of a district had been made on an inclosure under the act, the land so allotted was to be under the management of the incumbent and church warden of the parish, and two other persons elected by the parish, and they were to be styled "the allotment wardens" of the parish.

Allottee. One to whom an allotment is made; who receives a ratable share under an allotment. A person to whom land under an inclosure act or shares in a corporation or public undertaking are allotted.

Allow. The word has no rigid or precise meaning, its import varying according to circumstances or context in connection with which it is used. It may mean to bestow or assign to any one as his right or due. To approve of, accept as true, admit, concede, adopt, or fix. To grant something as a deduction or an addition; to abate or deduct; as, to allow a sum for leakage. Pittsburgh Brewing Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.3, 107 F.2d 155, 156. To sanction, either directly or indirectly, as opposed to merely suffering a thing to be done; to acquiesce in; to suffer; to tolerate. See also Acquiescence; Consent.

Allowance. A deduction, an average payment, a portion assigned or allowed; the act of allowing. For Family, see that title.

Allowance pendente lite /əláwəns pendéntiy láytiy/. The court ordered provision for a spouse and children during the pendency of a divorce or separate support proceeding. See also Alimony.

Allowed claim. Against an estate it is a debt or charge which is valid in law and entitled to enforcement. Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Lyne, C.C.A.1, 90 F.2d 745, 747.

Allounour /əlóynər/. L. Fr. One who conceals, steals, or carries off a thing privately. See Eloigne.

All the estate. The name given in England to the short clause in a conveyance or other assurance which purports to convey "all the estate, right, title, interest, claim, and demand" of the grantor, lessor, etc., in the property dealt with.

Alluvio maris /əl(y)úwviyow máɹəs/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, the washing up of the sea; the soil thus formed; formation of soil or land from the sea; maritime increase.

Alluvion /ə(ly)úwvviən/. That increase of the earth on a shore or bank of a stream or the sea, by the force of the water washing up sand or soil so as to form firm ground, as by a current or by waves, which is so gradual that no one can judge how much is added at each moment of time. Garrett v. State, 118 N.J.Super. 594, 289 A.2d 542, 545. "Accretion" denotes the act. However, the terms are frequently used synonymously. Avulsion is sudden and perceptible. See Accretion; Avulsion. Compare Reliction.

All Writs Act. See Writ.

Ally. A nation which has entered into an alliance with another nation. A citizen or subject of one of two or more allied nations.

Almaria /ælmériyə/. The archives, or, as they are sometimes styled, muniments of a church or library.

Almesfeoh /á(1)mzfiy/. In Saxon law, alms-fee; alms-money. Otherwise called "Peter-pence."

Almoin /ælmóyn/. Alms; a tenure of lands by divine service. See Frankalmoign.

Almoner /ælmənər/. One charged with the distribution of alms. The office was first instituted in religious houses and although formerly one of importance is now in England almost a sinecure.

Alms. Charitable donations. Any species of relief bestowed upon the poor. That which is given by public authority for the relief of the poor.

Alms fee. Peter-pence (or Peter's pence), which see.

Almshouse. A house for the publicly or privately supported paupers of a city or county; may also be termed a "mission". In England an almshouse is not synonymous with a workhouse or poorhouse, being supported by private endowment.

Alnager /ælnəjər/ or ulnager /ólnəjər/. A sworn officer of the king whose duty it was to look to the assise of woolen cloth made throughout the land, and to the putting on the seals for that purpose ordained, for which he collected a duty called "alnage."

Alod, alode, alodes, alodis /æləd/. L. Lat. In feudal law, old forms of alodium or allodium (q.v.). A term used in opposition to feodum or fief, which means property, the use of which was bestowed upon another by the proprietor, on condition that the grantee should perform certain services for the grantor, and upon the failure of which the property should revert to the original possessor.

Alodiarii. See Allodarii.

Alone. Apart from others; singly; sole.

Along. Lengthwise of, implying motion or at or near, distinguished from across. By, on, up to, or over, according to the subject-matter and context. The term does not necessarily mean touching at all points; nor does it necessarily imply contact.

A lour foy /ə lár fwá/. In their allegiance.

Also. Besides; as well; in addition; likewise; in like manner; similarly; too; withal. Some other thing; including; further; furthermore; in the same manner; moreover; nearly the same as the word "and" or "likewise."

Alta via /æltə váyə/. L. Lat. In old English law, a highway; the highway. Alta via regia; the king's highway; "the king's high street."

Alter. To make a change in; to modify; to vary in some degree; to change some of the elements or ingredients or details without substituting an entirely new thing or destroying the identity of the thing affected. To change partially. To change in one or more respects, but without destruction of existence or identity of the thing changed; to increase or diminish. See Alteration; Amend; Change.

Alteration. Variation; changing; making different. A change of a thing from one form or state to another; making a thing different from what it was without destroying its identity. See Alter.

An act done upon an instrument by which its meaning or language is changed. Language different in legal effect, or change in rights, interests, or obligations of parties. It introduces some change into instrument's terms, meaning, language, or details. The term is not properly applied to any change which involves the substitution of a practically new document. An alteration is said to be material when it affects, or may possibly affect, the rights of the persons interested in the document. U.C.C. § 3-407. See also Fraudulent alteration; Material alteration; Mutilation; Spoliation.

Alteration of contract. A change in the provisions of a contract. If alteration is material, it extinguishes the right of the party who alters it and discharges the other party. The test of whether it is material is whether the rights of the obligee would be varied as to the party making the alteration or to a third party. Restatement of Contracts, § 434.

Alteration of trust. An act by settlor of trust changing the terms of the trust, generally pursuant to a power to alter and amend within the original trust instrument.

Altercation. Warm contentions in words. Dispute or controversy carried on with heat or anger. Ivory v. State, 128 Tex.Cr.R. 408, 81 S.W.2d 696, 698.

Alter ego /óltər íygow/. Second self. Under doctrine of "alter ego", court merely disregards corporate entity and holds individual responsible for acts knowingly and intentionally done in the name of corporation. Ivy v. Plyler, 246 Cal.App.2d 678, 54 Cal.Rptr. 894, 897. To establish the "alter ego" doctrine, it must be shown that the stockholders disregarded the entity of the corporation, made corporation a mere conduit for the transaction of their own private business, and that the separate individualities of the corporation and its stockholders in fact ceased to exist. Sefton v. San Diego Trust & Savings Bank, Cal.App., 106 P.2d 974, 984. The doctrine of "alter ego" does not create assets for or in corporation, but it simply fastens liability on the individual who uses the corporation merely as an instrumentality in conducting his own personal business, and that liability springs from fraud perpetrated not on the corporation, but on third persons dealing with corporation. Garvin v. Matthews, 193 Wash. 152, 74 P.2d 990, 992. See also Instrumentality rule.

Alterius circumventio alii non præbet actionem /æltiriýæs sårkæmvénsh(i)yow æliýay nõn priýbæt ækshiyównæm/. The deceiving of one person does not afford an action to another.

Alternat /óltærnat/. A usage among diplomatists by which the rank and places of different powers, who have the same right and pretensions to precedence, are changed from time to time, either in a certain regular order or one determined by lot. In drawing up treaties and conventions, for example, it is the usage of certain powers to alternate, both in the preamble and the signatures, so that each power occupies, in the copy intended to be delivered to it, the first place.

Alternate legacy. See Legacy.

Alternate valuation date. Property passing from a person by death may be valued for estate tax purposes as of the date of death or the alternate valuation date. The alternate valuation date is six months from the date of death or the date the property is disposed of by the estate, whichever comes first. The use of the alternate valuation date requires an affirmative election on the part of the executor or administrator of the estate. I.R.C. §§ 1014(a), 2032.

Alternatim /óltærnéytæm/. Lat. Interchangeably.

Alternativa petitio non est audienda /óltærnatáyvæ pætish(i)yow nõn est ódiyéndæ/. An alternative petition or demand is not to be heard.

Alternative. One or the other of two things; giving an option or choice; allowing a choice between two or more things or acts to be done.

Alternative contract. A contract whose terms allow of performance by the doing of either one of several acts at the election of the party from whom performance is due.

Alternative dispute resolution. Term refers to procedures for settling disputes by means other than litigation; e.g., by arbitration, mediation, mini-trials. Such procedures, which are usually less costly and more expeditious, are increasingly being used in commercial and labor disputes, divorce actions, in resolving motor vehicle and medical malpractice tort claims, and in other disputes that would likely otherwise involve court litigation. See also Arbitration; Mediation; Mini-trial; Trial (Summary jury trial).

Alternative judgment. See Judgment.

Alternative minimum tax (AMT). The tax imposed on individuals, estates, trusts, and, for tax years beginning after 1986, corporations. The tax is designed to ensure that all taxpayers pay at least a minimum amount of taxes. The AMT rate is a fixed percentage of alternative minimum taxable income. I.R.C. §§ 55-59.

Alternative obligation. An obligation allowing the obligor to choose which of two things he will do, the performance of either of which will satisfy the instrument. A promise to deliver a certain thing or to pay a specified sum of money is an example of this kind of obligation.

Alternative pleading. A form of pleading which was formerly prohibited but now recognized under Federal and state Rules of Civ.Proc. by which the pleader sets forth two or more statements by way of claim or defense which are not necessarily consistent with each other. When two or more statements are made in the alternative and one of them if made independently would be sufficient, the pleading is not made insufficient by the insufficiency of one or more of the alternative statements. See Fed.R.Civil P. 8(e)(2).

Alternative relief. Under Fed.Rules Civ.Proc. 8(a) the party seeking a judgment may demand it in the alternative, or in various forms, e.g. demand for a money judgment and for equitable relief.

Alternative remainders. Remainders in which disposition of property is made in alternative, one to take effect only in case the other does not, and in substitution of it.

Alternative remedies. See Alternative relief.

Alternative writ. A common law writ commanding the person against whom it is issued to do a specified thing, or show cause to the court why he should not be compelled to do it. Under the common-law practice, the first mandamus is an alternative writ; but in modern practice this writ is often dispensed with and its place is taken by an order to show cause. See Mandamus.

Alterum non lædere /óltæræm nõn liýðariy/. Not to injure another. This maxim, and two others, honeste vivere, and suum cuique tribuere, (q.v.) are considered by Justinian as fundamental principles upon which all the rules of law are based.

Alteruter /óltærýwtær/. Lat. One of two; either.

Altius non tollendi /æls(i)yæs nõn tæléndây/. In the civil law, a servitude due by the owner of a house, by which he is restrained from building beyond a certain height.

Altius tollendi /æls(i)yæs tæléndây/. In the civil law, a servitude which consists in the right, to him who is entitled to it, to build his house as high as he may think proper. In general, however, every one enjoys this privilege, unless he is restrained by some contrary title.

Alto et basso /æltow æt básow/. High and low. This phrase is applied to an agreement made between two contending parties to submit all matters in dispute, alto et basso, to arbitration.

Altum mare /ältəm məriy/. L. Lat. In old English law, the high sea, or seas. The deep sea. Super altum mare, on the high seas.

A lui et a ses heritiers pour toujours /a lwiy ey a séyz eriutyéy pur tuwzhúr/. To him and to his heirs forever.

Alveus /əlvíyəs/. The bed or channel through which the stream flows when it runs within its ordinary channel. Alveus derelictus, a deserted channel.

A.M. Ante meridiem, before noon. Only the abbreviation is ordinarily used. Also artium magister, master of arts. Also annus mirabilis, the wonderful year—1666, the year of the defeat of the Dutch fleet and of the great London fire. Also anno mundi, in the year of the world; that is, when the creation of the world is said to have taken place, 4004 B. C.

A.M.A. American Medical Association.

A ma intent /a ma æntón/. On my action.

Amalgamation /əmælgəməyʃən/. Union of different races, or diverse elements, societies, unions, associations, or corporations, so as to form a homogeneous whole or new body; interfusion; intermarriage; consolidation; merger; coalescence; as, the amalgamation of stock.

Amalphitan code or table /əmælfədən kowd/˚téybəl/. A collection of sea-laws, compiled about the end of the eleventh century, by the people of Amalphi. It consists of the laws on maritime subjects, which were or had been in force in countries bordering on the Mediterranean; and was for a long time received as authority in those countries. It became a part of the law of the sea. See Code.

Amanuensis /əmànyuwénsəs/. One who writes on behalf of another that which he dictates.

A manu servus /èy má(y)uw sər̀vəs/. Lat. A handservant; a scribe; a secretary.

Ambactus /əmbáktəs/. A messenger; a servant sent about; one whose services his master hired out.

Ambasciator /əmbəʃhiyéytər/. A person sent about in the service of another; a person sent on a service. A word of frequent occurrence in the writers of the middle ages.

Ambassador. A public officer clothed with high diplomatic powers, commissioned by a government to transact the international business of his government with a foreign government.

An Ambassador of the United States is the personal representative of the President and reports to the President through the Secretary of State. Ambassadors have full responsibility for implementing the U.S. foreign policy by any and all U.S. Government personnel within their country of assignment, except those under military commands. Their responsibilities include negotiating agreements between the United States and the host country, explaining and disseminating official U.S. policy, and maintaining cordial relations with that country's government and people. 22 U.S.C.A. § 3942.

A distinction was formerly made between Ambassadors Extraordinary, who were sent to conduct special business or to remain for an indeterminate period, and Ambassadors Ordinary, who were sent on permanent missions; but this distinction is no longer observed.

See also Diplomatic agent.

Ambidexter /əmbədəkstər/. Skillful with both hands; one who plays on both sides. Applied anciently to an attorney who took pay from both sides, and subsequently to a juror guilty of the same offense.

Ambigua responsio contra proferentem est accipienda /əmbígyuwə rəspónsh(iy)ow kóntrə pröfərəntəm ést əksipiýéndə/. An ambiguous answer is to be taken against (is not to be construed in favor of) him who offers it.

Ambiguus casibus semper præsumitur pro rege /əmbígyuwəs kéyzəbəs sémpər prəz(y)úwmətər pröv ri:jiy/. In doubtful cases, the presumption always is in behalf of the crown.

Ambiguitas /əmbəgyúwətəs/. Lat. From ambiguus, doubtful, uncertain, obscure. Ambiguity; uncertainty of meaning.

Ambiguitas latens, a latent ambiguity; ambiguitas patens, a patent ambiguity. See Ambiguity.

Ambiguitas contra stipulatorem est /əmbəgyúwətəs kóntrə stípyəlytórəm ést/. Doubtful words will be construed most strongly against the party using them.

Ambiguitas verborum latens verificatione suppletur; nam quod ex facto oritur ambiguum verificatione facti tollitur /əmbəgyúwətəs vərbórəm léytənz vèhrəfəkèyshiyówniy səpliytər, nəm kwód èks fàkt(y)uw óhrətər əmbígyuwəm vèhrəfəkèyshiyówniy fàktay tólətər/. A latent ambiguity in the language may be removed by evidence; for whatever ambiguity arises from an extrinsic fact may be explained by extrinsic evidence. Said to be "an unprofitable subtlety; inadequate and uninformative."

Ambiguitas verborum patens nulla verificatione excluditur /əmbəgyúwətəs vərbórəm péytənz nələ vèhrəfəkèyshiyówniy eklúwdətar/. A patent ambiguity cannot be cleared up by extrinsic evidence (or is never holpen by averment).

Ambiguity /əmbəgyúwətiy/. Doubtfulness; doubleness of meaning. Duplicity, indistinctness, or uncertainty of meaning of an expression used in a written instrument. Want of clearness or definiteness; difficult to comprehend or distinguish; of doubtful import. For Extrinsic ambiguity, see that title.

Ambiguity exists if reasonable persons can find different meanings in a statute, document, etc., Laskaris v. City of Wisconsin Dells, Inc., App., 389 N.W.2d 67, 70, 131 Wis.2d 525; when good arguments can be made for either of two contrary positions as to a meaning of a term in a document, Atlas Ready-Mix of Minot, Inc. v. White Properties, Inc., N.D., 306 N.W.2d 212, 220; when application of pertinent rules of interpretation to an instrument as a whole fails to make certain which one of two or more meanings is conveyed by the words employed by the parties, Wood v. Hatcher, 199 Kan. 238, 428 P.2d 799, 803.

Language in contract is "ambiguous" when it is reasonably capable of being understood in more than one sense. City of Sioux Falls v. Henry Carlson Co., Inc., S.D., 258 N.W.2d 676, 679. Test for determining whether a contract is "ambiguous" is whether reasonable persons would find the contract subject to more than one interpretation. Tastee-Freez Leasing Corp. v. Milwid, Ind.App., 365 N.E.2d 1388, 1390.

Ambiguity of language is to be distinguished from unintelligibility and inaccuracy, for words cannot be said to be ambiguous unless their signification seems doubtful and uncertain to persons of competent skill and knowledge to understand them. It does not include uncertainty arising from the use of peculiar words, or of common words in a peculiar sense. It is latent where the language employed is clear and intelligible and suggests but a single meaning, but some extrinsic fact or extraneous evidence creates a necessity for interpretation or a choice among two or more possible meanings, as where a description apparently plain and unambiguous is shown to fit different pieces of property. Logue v. Von Almen, 379 Ill. 208, 40 N.E.2d 73, 82. A patent ambiguity is that which appears on the face of the instrument, and arises from the defective, obscure, or insensible language used.

Ambiguity upon the factum. An ambiguity in relation to the very foundation of the instrument itself, as distinguished from an ambiguity in regard to the construction of its terms. The term is applied, for instance, to a doubt as to whether a testator meant a particular clause to be a part of the will, or whether it was introduced with his knowledge, or whether a codicil was meant to republish a former will, or whether the residuary clause was accidentally omitted.

Ambiguous. See Ambiguity.

Ambiguum pactum contra venditorem interpretandum est /æmbígyuwəm pæktəm kóntrə vëndətórəm intərpætændəm ést/. An ambiguous contract is to be interpreted against the seller.

Ambiguum placitum interpretari debet contra profertentem /æmbígyuwəm plásætəm intərpætéráy débət kóntrə prófərəntəm/. An ambiguous plea ought to be interpreted against the party pleading it.

Ambit. A boundary line, as going around a place; an exterior or inclosing line or limit. The limits or circumference of a power or jurisdiction; the line circumscribing any subject-matter.

Ambitus /æmbətəs/. The procuring of a public office by money or gifts; the unlawful buying and selling of a public office.

Amblotic /æmblótək/. Having the power to cause abortion; anything used to produce abortion.

Ambulance chaser. A popular name for one who solicits negligence cases for an attorney for a fee or in consideration of a percentage of the recovery. Also, a term descriptive of the practice of some attorneys, on hearing of a personal injury which may have been caused by the negligence or wrongful act of another, of at once seeking out the injured person with a view to securing authority to bring action on account of the injury. Laymen's acquainting themselves with occurrence of accidents and approaching injured persons or their representatives with a view toward soliciting employment for an attorney in the litigation arising from the accident. See also Runner.

Ambulatoria est voluntas defuncti usque ad vitæ supremum exitum /æmbyəlótóriyə ést volántəs dəfəŋktay áskwiy æd váytiy s(y)əpriyməm égzítəm/. The will of a deceased person was ambulatory until the latest moment of life.

Ambulatory. Lat. ambulare, to walk about. Movable; revocable; subject to change; capable of alteration.

Ambulatoria voluntas (a changeable will) denotes the power which a testator possesses of altering his will during his life-time.

Courts. The court of king's bench in England was formerly called an ambulatory court, because it followed the king's person, and was held sometimes in one place and sometimes in another. So, in France, the supreme court or parliament was originally ambulatory. 3 Bl. Comm. 38, 39, 41.

Ambulatory disposition. A judgment, decree, or sentence which is subject to change, amendment or revocation.

Ambush. To lie in wait, to surprise, to place in ambush.

A me /èy míy/. Lat. ego, I. A term in feudal grants denoting direct tenure of the superior lord. Unjustly detaining from me. He is said to withhold a me (from me) who has obtained possession of my property unjustly. To pay a me, is to pay from my money.

Ameliorating waste /æmiyl(i)yəreytiŋ wéyst/. An act of lessee, though technically constituting waste, yet in fact resulting in improving instead of doing injury to land. Generally, equity will not enjoin such waste.

Ameliorations /æmiyl(i)yərəyshənz/. Betterments; improvements.

Amenable /æmíynəbəl/°mén°/. Subject to answer to the law; accountable; responsible; liable to punishment.

Also means tractable, that may be easily led or governed; formerly applied to a wife who was governable by her husband.

Amend. To improve. To change for the better by removing defects or faults. To change, correct, revise. Texas Co. v. Fort, 168 Tenn. 679, 80 S.W.2d 658, 660. See Amendment.

Amende honorable /ə'mɒnd ɒnərəbəl/. An apology. In old English law, it was a penalty imposed upon a person by way of disgrace or infamy, as a punishment for any offense, or for the purpose of making reparation for any injury done to another, as the walking into church in a white sheet, with a rope about the neck and a torch in the hand, and begging the pardon of God, or the king, or any private individual, for some delinquency. A punishment somewhat similar to this, which bore the same name, was common in France for offenses against public decency or morality. It was abolished by the law of the 25th of September, 1791. In 1826 it was re-introduced in cases of sacrilege and was finally abolished in 1830.

Amendment. To change or modify for the better. To alter by modification, deletion, or addition.

Practice and pleading. The correction of an error committed in any process, pleading, or proceeding at law, or in equity, and which is done either as of course, or by the consent of parties, or upon motion to the court in which the proceeding is pending. Under Fed.R.Civil P., any change in pleadings, though not necessarily a correction, which a party may accomplish once as a matter of course at any time before a responsive pleading has been served. Such amendment may be necessary to cause pleadings to conform to evidence. Rule 15(a), (b). The amendment relates back to the original pleading if the subject of it arose out of the transaction set forth or attempted to be set forth in the original pleading. Fed. R.Civil P. 15(c). Compare Supplemental pleading.

Amendment of judgment. A judgment may be altered or amended for appropriate reasons on motion if served within ten days after entry of judgment. Fed.R.Civ.P. 59(e). See also Rule 60 (Relief from judgment or order).

Amendment of trust. An addition which alters the original terms of a trust, the power to accomplish which may be reserved by the settlor in the original trust instrument.

Amendment on court's own motion. A change or addition to a pleading or other document accomplished by the judge without a prior motion of a party.

Amends. A satisfaction given by a wrongdoer to the party injured, for a wrong committed.

Amenity /ə'mɛnɪti/. In real property law, such circumstances, in regard to situation, view, location, access to a water course, or the like, as enhance the pleasantness or desirability of the property for purposes of residence, or contribute to the pleasure and enjoyment of the occupants, rather than to their indispensable needs. Extras or intangible items often associated with property. They may be tangible. Often amenities in a condominium include swimming pools, landscaping, and tennis courts.

In the law of easements, an "amenity" consists in restraining the owner from doing that on his property which, but for the grant or covenant, he might otherwise lawfully have done. Sometimes called a "negative easement" as distinguished from that class of easements which compel the owner to suffer something to be done

Amens /éymenz/. See Demens.

A mensa et thoro /èy ménsə et θórow/. Lat. From table and bed, but more commonly translated, from bed and board. A kind of divorce, which is rather a separation of the parties by law, than a dissolution of the marriage. See Separation.

Amentia. Insanity; idiocy. See Insanity.

Amerce /ə'mɜrs/. To impose an amercement or fine; to publish by a fine or penalty.

Amercement /ə'mɜrsmɛnt/. A money penalty in the nature of a fine imposed upon an officer for some misconduct or neglect of duty. Sherman v. Upton, Inc., S.D., 242 N.W.2d 666, 667. At common law, it was assessed by the peers of the delinquent, or the affeerors, or imposed arbitrarily at the discretion of the court or the lord.

Early common law required complainant who lost his suit to pay his opponent "wer," monetary penalty which varied with the complainant's status, but after Norman conquest, wer gave way to "amercement," a more flexible sanction paid to court, the amount of which, at least in theory, varied according to the wrongfulness of complainant's conduct. Friedman v. Dozorc, 412 Mich. 1, 312 N.W.2d 585, 595.

American. Of or pertaining to the United States.

American Arbitration Association. National organization of arbitrators from whose panel arbitrators are selected for labor and commercial disputes. The Association has produced a Code of Ethics and Procedural Standards for use and guidance of arbitrators. See Arbitration.

American Bar Association. A National association of lawyers, a primary purpose of which is the improvement of lawyers' services and the administration of justice. Membership in the ABA is open to any lawyer who is in good standing in his or her state.

American Bar Foundation. An outgrowth of the American Bar Association involved with sponsoring and funding projects in legal research, education and social studies.

American clause. In marine insurance, a proviso in a policy to the effect that, in case of any subsequent insurance, the insurer shall nevertheless be answerable for the full extent of the sum subscribed by him, without right to claim contribution from subsequent underwriters.

American digest system. See Digest.

American experience table of mortality. A series of tables dealing with life insurance, costs and values, varying according to the age of the insured, the period during which the policy has been in force, and the term of the particular policy.

American Federation of Labor. An affiliation of labor unions.

American Law Institute. Group of American legal scholars who are responsible for the Restatements in the various disciplines of the law and who, jointly with the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, prepare some of the Uniform State Laws, e.g. Uniform Commercial Code. See Restatement of Law.

American rule. The traditional "American Rule" is that attorney fees are not awardable to the winning party (i.e. each litigant must pay his own attorney fees) unless statutorily or contractually authorized; however exceptions exist in that an award may be made to successful party if the opponent has acted in bad faith, vexatiously, wantonly or for oppressive reasons or if the litigation confers a substantial benefit on the members of an ascertainable class and the court's subject matter jurisdiction makes possible an award that will operate to spread the costs proportionately among them. Huecker v. Milburn, C.A.Ky., 538 F.2d 1241, 1245. In addition a court may in its discretion award attorney fees in civil rights actions to the prevailing defendant if the action was frivolous, unreasonable or without foundation. Christiansburg Garment Co. v. EEOC, 434 U.S. 412, 98 S.Ct. 694. Also, a number of federal statutes make provision for awards of attorney fees to prevailing plaintiffs in actions involving violations of various federal laws (e.g., Fair Labor Standards Act, § 16, 29 U.S.C.A. § 216(b)). See also Equal Access to Justice Act.

Ameublissement /əmyüwbləsmón/. In French law, a species of agreement which by a fiction gives to immovable goods the quality of movable.

Ami; amy. A friend; as alien ami, an alien belonging to a nation at peace with us; prochein ami, a next friend suing or defending for an infant, married woman, etc.

Amiables compositeurs. See Amicable compounders.

Amicable. Friendly; mutually forbearing. Agreed or assented to by parties having conflicting interests or a dispute; as opposed to hostile or adversary.

Amicable action. An action brought and carried on by the mutual consent and arrangement of the parties, to obtain judgment of court on a doubtful question of law, the facts being usually settled by agreement. See Case (Case agreed on); Declaratory judgment.

Amicable compounders. In Louisiana law and practice, amicable compounders are arbitrators authorized to abate something of the strictness of the law in favor of natural equity.

Amicable scire facias to revive a judgment /æməkəbəl sáyriy féyshiyəs/. A written agreement, signed by the person to be bound by the revival, in the nature of a writ of scire facias with a confession of judgment thereon, which must be duly docketed, but which requires no judicial action on the part of the court, and which has the force and effect of a judgment rendered upon an adverse or contested writ of scire facias.

Amicus curiæ /ə'máykəs kyúriyiy/ə'miýkəs kyúriyay/. Means, literally, friend of the court. A person with strong interest in or views on the subject matter of an action, but not a party to the action, may petition the court for permission to file a brief, ostensibly on behalf of a party but actually to suggest a rationale consistent with its own views. Such amicus curiæ briefs are commonly filed in appeals concerning matters of a broad public interest; e.g. civil rights cases. Such may be filed by private persons or the government. In appeals to the U.S. courts of appeals, such brief may be filed only if accompanied by written consent of all parties, or by leave of court granted on motion or at the request of the court, except that consent or leave shall not be required when the brief is presented by the United States or an officer or agency thereof. Fed.R.App.P. 29. See also Sup.Ct.Rule 37.

Amita /é'mətə/. Lat. An aunt on the father's side. Amita magna. A great-aunt on the father's side. Amita major. A great-great-aunt on the father's side. Amita maxima. A great-great-great-aunt, or a great-great-grandfather's sister.

Amitinus /æmətáynəs/. The child of a brother or sister; a cousin; one who has the same grandfather, but different father and mother.

Amittere /ə'mítəriy/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, to lose. Hence the old Scotch "amitt."

Amittere curiam /ə'mítəriy kyúriyem/. To lose the court; to be deprived of the privilege of attending the court.

Amittere legem terræ /ə'mítəriy líyjem tériy/. To lose the protection afforded by the law of the land.

Amittere liberam legem /ə'mítəriy líbərəm líyjem/. In old English law, to lose one's frank-law. A term having the same meaning as amittere legem terræ, (qv.). He who lost his law lost the protection extended by the law to a free man, and became subject to the same law as thralls or serfs attached to the land. To lose the privilege of giving evidence under oath in any court; to become infamous, and incapable of giving evidence. If either party in a wager of battle cried "craven" he was condemned amittere liberam legem; 3 Bl.Comm. 340.

Amnesia. Loss of memory as a result of organic trauma, delirium lesions of the diencephalon area of the brain, hysteria or epilepsy. Functionally, identity loss can represent a means of coping with neurotic conflict. Three types of amnesia are: anterograde (inability to retain new impressions; may be a feature of senility); retrograde (failure to recall prior experiences); lacunar (loss of memory for certain periods of life). Such condition is not generally sufficient for lack of competency to stand trial. U. S. ex rel. Parsons v. Anderson, 354 F.Supp. 1060, 1071-1072, aff'd 481 F.2d 94.

Amnesty /é'mnəstiy/. A sovereign act of forgiveness for past acts, granted by a government to all persons (or to certain classes of persons) who have been guilty of crime or delict, generally political offenses,—treason, sedition, rebellion, draft evasion,—and often conditioned upon their return to obedience and duty within a prescribed time. The 1986 Immigration Reform and Control Act provided amnesty for many undocumented aliens already present in the country.

Included in the concept of pardon is "amnesty," which is similar in all respects to a full pardon, insofar as when it is granted both the crime and punishment are abrogated; however, unlike pardons, an amnesty usually refers to a class of individuals irrespective of individual situations. State v. Morris, 55 Ohio St.2d 101, 9 O.O.3d 92, 378 N.E.2d 708, 711.

A declaration of the person or persons who have newly acquired or recovered the sovereign power in a nation, by which they pardon all persons who composed, supported, or obeyed the government which has been overthrown.

Amnesty is the abolition and forgetfulness of the offense; pardon is forgiveness. Knote v. U. S., 95 U.S. 149, 152, 24 L.Ed. 442. The first is usually addressed to crimes against the sovereignty of the nation, to political offenses; the second condones infractions of the peace of the nation. Burdick v. United States, 236 U.S. 79, 35 S.Ct. 267, 271, 59 L.Ed. 476.

Compare Pardon; Parole.

Express amnesty is one granted in direct terms.

Implied amnesty is one which results when a treaty of peace is made between contending parties.

Amobarbital /ə'mowbərbətòl/. Nonproprietary name for isoamyl-ethylbarbituric acid.

Among. Mingled with or in the same group or class. Intermingled with. In company or association with. In shares to each of, e.g. divided "among" the heirs. In or through the midst of.

Amortization /ə'mòrtəzèyshən/. In accounting, the allocation (and charge to expense) of the cost or other basis of an intangible asset over its estimated useful life. Intangible assets which have an indefinite life (e.g., goodwill) are not amortizable. Examples of amortizable intangibles include organization costs, patents, copyrights and leasehold interests. A reduction in a debt or fund by periodic payments covering interest and part of principal, distinguished from: (1) depreciation, which is an allocation of the original cost of an asset computed from physical wear and tear as well as the passage of time, and (2) depletion, which is a reduction in the book value of a resource (such as minerals) resulting from conversion into a salable product. The operation of paying off bonds, stock, a mortgage, or other indebtedness, commonly of a state or corporation, by installments, or by a sinking fund. An "amortization plan" for the payment of an indebtedness is one where there are partial payments of the principal, and accrued interest, at stated periods for a definite time, at the expiration of which the entire indebtedness will be extinguished. Compare Depreciation.

Amortization reserve. An account created for book-keeping purposes to extinguish an obligation gradually over a period of time.

Amortized mortgage. Repayment of a mortgage over regular specified time intervals, with equal payments. This would reduce the principal, after any monies owing for interest are applied.

Negative amortization. This occurs when monthly payments are not large enough to cover all of the interest cost of an adjustable rate mortgage. The interest rate that isn't covered is added to the loan's principal, which then could increase to more than the amount borrowed.

Amortization schedule. A schedule of periodic payments of interest and principal owed on a debt obligation.

Amotio /ə'mówsh(iy)ow/. In the civil law, a moving or taking away. "The slightest amotio is sufficient to constitute theft, if the animus furandi be clearly established." See Amotion.

Amotion /ə'mówshən/. A putting or turning out, as the eviction of a tenant or a removal from office. Dispossession of lands. Ouster is an amotion of possession. A moving or carrying away; the wrongful taking of personal chattels.

In corporation law, the common law procedure by which a director may be removed for cause by the shareholders.

Amount. The whole effect, substance, quantity, import, result, or significance. The sum of principal and interest. See also Sum certain.

Amount covered. In insurance, the amount that is insured, and for which underwriters are liable for loss under a policy of insurance.

Amount in controversy. The damages claimed or relief demanded by injured party in dispute; the amount claimed or sued for in litigation. Glenwood Light & Water Co. v. Mutual Light, Heat & Power Co., 239 U.S. 121, 36 S.Ct. 30, 60 L.Ed. 174; Wabash Ry. Co. v. Vanlandingham, C.C.A.Mo., 53 F.2d 51. Amount of alleged damages required for diversity jurisdiction in Federal courts. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1332. See Jurisdictional amount.

Amount of loss. In insurance, the diminution, destruction, or defeat of the value of, or of the charge upon, the insured subject to the assured, by the direct consequence of the operation of the risk insured against, according to its value in the policy, or in contribution for loss, so far as its value is covered by the insurance. See Damages.

Amount realized. The amount received by a taxpayer upon the sale or exchange of property. The measure of the amount received is the sum of the cash and the fair market value of any property or services received, plus any related debt assumed by the buyer. Determining the amount realized is the starting point for arriving at realized gain or loss. The amount realized is defined in I.R.C. § 1001(b) and accompanying Regulations. See Realized gain or loss; Recognized gain or loss.

Amount to. To reach in the aggregate; to rise to or reach by accumulation of particular sums or quantities.

Amove. To remove from a post or station.

Amoveas manus /əymóvwiyəs mánəs/. Lat. That you remove your hands. In old English law, after office found, the king was entitled to the things forfeited, either lands or personal property; the remedy for a person aggrieved was by "petition," or "monstrans de droit," or "traverses," to establish his superior right. Thereupon a writ issued, quod manus domini regis amoveantur.

Amparo /æmpárow/. In Spanish-American law, a document issued to a claimant of land as a protection to him, until a survey can be ordered, and the title of possession issued by an authorized commissioner.

Amphetamine /æmfétəmiyn/æmfétəmən/. A drug which stimulates the central nervous system. Com. v. Crockett, 229 Pa.Super. 80, 323 A.2d 257, 259. "Methedrine" is its trade name. Colorless, volatile, mobile liquid, inhalation of which vapor causes shrinking of nasal mucosa in head colds, sinusitis and hay fever.

Ampliation /æmpliyéyshən/. In civil law, a deferring of judgment until a cause be further examined. An order for the rehearing of a cause on a day appointed, for the sake of more ample information.

In French law, a duplicate of an acquittance or other instrument. A notary's copy of acts passed before him, delivered to the parties.

Amplius /æmpliyəs/. In the Roman law, more; further; more time. A word which the prætor pronounced in cases where there was any obscurity in a cause, and the judices were uncertain whether to condemn or acquit; by which the case was deferred to a day named.

Amputation of right hand. An ancient punishment for a blow given in a superior court; or for assaulting a judge sitting in the court.

AMT. See Alternative minimum tax.

Amtrak. National Railroad Passenger Corporation.

A multo fortiori /èy máltoŭ forshiyóray/. By far the stronger reason.

Amusement. Pastime; diversion; enjoyment. A pleasurable occupation of the senses, or that which furnishes it. Young v. Board of Trustees of Broadwater County High School, 90 Mont. 576, 4 P.2d 725, 726. See also Enjoyment.

Amusement tax. A government levy imposed on tickets sold to places of amusement, sporting events, etc.; expressed as a percentage of the price of the ticket. See also Luxury tax.

Amy. See Ami; Prochein ami.

An. The English indefinite article, equivalent to "one" or "any"; seldom used to denote plurality.

Anacrisis /ænəkráyzəs/. In the civil law, an investigation of truth, interrogation of witnesses, and inquiry made into any fact, especially by torture.

Analogous /ənələgəs/. Derived from the Greek ana, up, and logos, ratio. Means bearing some resemblance or likeness that permits one to draw an analogy.

Analogy. Identity or similarity of proportion, where there is no precedent in point. In cases on the same subject, lawyers have recourse to cases on a different subject-matter, but governed by the same general principle. This is reasoning by analogy. The similitude of relations which exist between things compared.

Analytical jurisprudence. A theory and system of jurisprudence wrought out neither by inquiring for ethical principles or the dictates of the sentiments of justice nor by the rules which may be actually in force, but by analyzing, classifying and comparing various legal conceptions. See Jurisprudence.

Anaphrodisia /ænəfrədíz(h)iyə/. Impotentia cœundi; frigidity; incapacity for sexual intercourse existing in either man or woman, and in the latter case sometimes called "dyspareunia."

Anarchist. One who professes and advocates the doctrines of anarchy, q.v. In the immigration statutes, it includes, not only persons who advocate the overthrow of organized government by force, but also those who believe in the absence of government as a political ideal, and seek the same end through propaganda.

Anarchy. Absence of government; state of society where there is no law or supreme power; lawlessness or political disorder; destructive of and confusion in government. At its best it pertains to a society made orderly by good manners rather than law, in which each person produces according to his powers and receives according to his needs, and at its worst, the word pertains to a terroristic resistance of all present government and social order. For "criminal anarchy," see Criminal.

Anathema /ənəθəmə/. An ecclesiastical punishment by which a person is separated from the body of the church, and forbidden all intercourse with the members of the same. It differs from excommunication, which simply forbids the person excommunicated from going into the church receiving Communion.

Anathematize /ənəθəmətayz/. To pronounce anathema upon; to pronounce accursed by ecclesiastical authority. See Anathema.

Anatocism /ənətəsizəm/. In the civil law, repeated or doubled interest; compound interest; usury.

Anatomical gift. Testamentary donation of a vital organ, or organs, generally for purpose of medical research or transplant. Most states have adopted the Uniform Anatomical Gift Act which authorizes the gift of all or part of a human body after death for specified purposes.

Ancestor. One from whom a person lineally descended or may be descended; a progenitor. A former possessor; the person last seised. A deceased person from whom another has inherited land. Embraces both collaterals and lineals. Correlative of "heir."

Ancestral /ənséstrəl/. Relating to ancestors, or to what has been done by them; as homage ancestral (q.v.). Derived from ancestors.

Ancestral estates are such as are transmitted by descent, and not by purchase; or such as are acquired either by descent or by operation of law. Realty which came to the intestate by descent or devise from a dead ancestor or by deed of actual gift from a living one, there being no other consideration than that of blood. Real estate coming to distributee by descent, gift, or devise from any kinsman. Allotments to members of Indian tribes or their heirs have been treated as an ancestral estate. McDougal v. McKay, 237 U.S. 372, 35 S.Ct. 605, 607, 59 L.Ed. 1001.

Ancestry. Line of descent; persons comprising such. Term which embraces the study of the antecedents of humans and animals; pedigree. May be proved by general reputation.

Anchorage. In English law, a duty paid by the owners of ships for the use of the port or harbor where they cast anchor.

Ancient. Old; that which has existed from an indefinitely early period, or which by age alone has acquired certain rights or privileges accorded in view of long continuance.

Ancient deed. A deed 30 [or 20] years old and shown to come from a proper custody and having nothing suspicious about it. See Ancient writings.

Ancient demesne. Manors which in the time of William the Conqueror were in the hands of the crown, and are so recorded in the Domesday Book. Also, in old English law, a species of copyhold, which differs, however, from common copyholds in certain privileges, but yet must be conveyed by surrender, according to the custom of the manor. There are three sorts: (1) Where the lands are held freely by the king's grant; (2) customary freeholds, which are held of a manor in ancient demesne, but not at the lord's will, although they are conveyed by surrender, or deed and admittance; (3) lands held by copy of court-roll at the lord's will, denominated copyholds of base tenure.

Ancient documents. See Ancient writings.

Ancient lights. See Lights, ancient.

Ancient readings. Readings or lectures upon the ancient English statutes, formerly regarded as of great authority in law.

Ancient records. See Ancient writings.

Ancient rent. The rent reserved at the time the lease was made, if the building was not then under lease.

Ancients /éynshənts/. In English law, gentlemen of the inns of court and chancery. In Gray's Inn the society consists of benchers, ancients, barristers, and students under the bar; and here the ancients are of the oldest barristers. In the Middle Temple, those who had passed their readings used to be termed "ancients." The Inns of Chancery consist of ancients and students or clerks; from the ancients a principal or treasurer is chosen yearly.

Ancient serjeant. In English law, the eldest of the queen's serjeants. The last holder of the office died in 1866. See Serjeant at law.

Ancient street. The doctrine is not based upon fact that streets have existed for a long time, but is invoked when it appears that common grantor owning land comprising street in question as well as property in question and other lots has given deeds to lots bounding them by street, thereby not only dedicating the street to public use but at same time creating private easements in the street, which cannot be taken without compensation. Dwornick v. State, 251 A.D. 675, 297 N.Y.S. 409, 411.

Ancient wall. A wall built to be used, and in fact used, as a party-wall, for more than twenty years, by the express permission and continuous acquiescence of the owners of the land on which it stands. Schneider v. 44-84 Realty Corporation, 169 Misc. 249, 7 N.Y.S.2d 305, 309.

Ancient water course. A water course is "ancient" if the channel through which it naturally runs has existed from time immemorial independent of the quantity of water which it discharges. Earl v. De Hart, 12 N.J.Eq. 280.

Ancient writings. Documents bearing on their face every evidence of age and authenticity, of age of 30 [or 20] years, and coming from a natural and reasonable official custody. Hartzell v. U. S., C.C.A.Iowa, 72 F.2d 569, 579. These are presumed to be genuine without express proof, when coming from the proper custody.

Under Federal Rules of Evidence, a document is admissible if it is in such condition as to create no suspicion as to its authenticity, was in a place where it, if authentic, would likely be, and has been in existence 20 years or more at the time it is offered. Fed.Evid.R. 901(b)(8).

Ancienty /éynshənti/. Eldership; seniority. Used in the statute of Ireland, 14 Hen. VIII.

Ancilla /ænsilə/. Lat. A handmaid, an auxiliary, a subordinate.

Ancillary /énsələri/. Aiding; attendant upon; describing a proceeding attendant upon or which aids another proceeding considered as principal. Auxiliary or subordinate.

Ancillary administration. Administration of estate in state where decedent has property and which is other than where decedent was domiciled. First Nat. Bank v. Blessing, 231 Mo.App. 288, 98 S.W.2d 149, 151. Administration or probate taken out in a second or subsequent jurisdiction to collect assets or to commence litigation on behalf of the estate in that jurisdiction. Ancillary administration of estates is usually governed by state statutes. See e.g., Uniform Probate Code, § 4-101 et seq.

Ancillary attachment. One sued out in aid of an action already brought; its only office being to hold the property attached under it for the satisfaction of the plaintiff's demand.

Ancillary bill or suit. One growing out of and auxiliary to another action or suit, either at law or in equity, such as a bill for discovery, or a proceeding for the enforcement of a judgment, or to set aside fraudulent transfers of property. One growing out of a prior suit in the same court, dependent upon and instituted for the purpose either of impeaching or enforcing the judgment or decree in a prior suit. Caspers v. Watson, C.C.A.Ill., 132 F.2d 614, 615.

Ancillary claim. Term "ancillary" denotes any claim that reasonably may be said to be collateral to, dependent upon, or otherwise auxiliary to a claim asserted within federal jurisdiction in action. Hartley Pen Co. v. Lindy Pen Co., D.C.Cal., 16 F.R.D. 141, 154. Claim is "ancillary" when it bears a logical relationship to the aggregate core of operative facts which constitutes main claim over which court had independent basis of federal jurisdiction. Nishimatsu Const. Co., Ltd. v. Houston Nat. Bank, C.A.Tex., 515 F.2d 1200, 1205. See also Counterclaim (Compulsory counterclaim).

Ancillary jurisdiction. Power of court to adjudicate and determine matters incidental to the exercise of its primary jurisdiction of an action.

Under "ancillary jurisdiction doctrine" federal district court acquires jurisdiction of case or controversy as an entirety and may, as incident to disposition of matter properly before it, possess jurisdiction to decide other matters raised by case, though district court could not have taken cognizance of them if they had been independently presented. Ortman v. Stanray Corp., C.A.Ill., 371 F.2d 154, 157. Such jurisdiction of federal court generally involves either proceedings which are concerned with pleadings, processes, records or judgments of court in principal case or proceedings which affect property already in court's custody. Cooperative Transit Co. v. West Penn. Electric Co., C.C.A.W.Va., 132 F.2d 720, 723.

Ancillary legislation. Legislative enactment which is auxiliary to or in aid of other and principal legislation.

Ancillary proceeding. One growing out of or auxiliary to another action or suit, or which is subordinate to or in aid of a primary action, either at law or in equity. Register v. Stone's Independent Oil Distributors, 122 Ga.App. 335, 177 S.E.2d 92, 94. In state courts, a procedural undertaking in aid of the principal action; for example, a bill for discovery in aid of a lawsuit or a garnishment proceeding.

Ancillary process. Any process which is in aid of or incidental to the principal suit or action; e.g. attachment. See Ancillary proceeding.

Ancillary receiver. One appointed in aid of, and in subordination to, a foreign receiver for purpose of collecting and taking charge of assets, as of insolvent corporation, in the jurisdiction where he is appointed.

Ancipitis usus /ænsípətəs yuwzəs/. Lat. In international law, of doubtful use; the use of which is doubtful; that may be used for a civil or peaceful, as well as military or warlike, purpose.

And. A conjunction connecting words or phrases expressing the idea that the latter is to be added to or taken along with the first. Added to; together with; joined with; as well as; including. Sometimes construed as "or." Land & Lake Ass'n v. Conklin, 182 A.D. 546, 170 N.Y.S. 427, 428.

It expresses a general relation or connection, a participation or accompaniment in sequence, having no inherent meaning standing alone but deriving force from what comes before and after. In its conjunctive sense the word is used to conjoin words, clauses, or sentences, expressing the relation of addition or connection, and signifying that something is to follow in addition to that which proceeds and its use implies that the connected elements must be grammatically co-ordinate, as where the elements preceding and succeeding the use of the words refer to the same subject matter. While it is said that there is no exact synonym of the word in English, it has been defined to mean "along with", "also", "and also", "as well as", "besides", "together with". Oliver v. Oliver, 286 Ky. 6, 149 S.W.2d 540, 542.

"And/or" means either or both of. Poucher v. State, 287 Ala. 731, 240 So.2d 695, 695. When expression "and/or" is used, that word may be taken as will best effect the purpose of the parties as gathered from the contract taken as a whole, or, in other words, as will best accord with the equity of the situation. Bobrow v. U. S. Casualty Co., 231 A.D. 91, 246 N.Y.S. 363, 367.

Androgynus /ændrójənas/. A hermaphrodite.

Androlepsy /ændrowlépsiy/. The taking by one nation of the citizens or subjects of another, in order to compel the latter to do justice to the former.

Andromania /ændrowméyniyə/. Nymphomania.

Androphomania /ændrowfōnméyniyə/. Homicidal insanity.

Anecius /əniysh(iy)əs/. Lat. Spelled also æsnecius, enitius, æneas, eneyus, Fr. aisne. The eldest-born; the first-born; senior, as contrasted with the puis-né (younger).

An et jour /ón ey zhúr/. Fr. Year and day; a year and a day.

Aneurism, or aneurysm. A sac formed by the dilatation of the weakened walls of an artery, usually resulting in a soft pulsating tumor.

Anew. To try a case or issue "anew" or "de novo" implies that the case or issue has been heard before. See De novo.

Angaria /æŋgériyə/. A term used in the Roman law to denote a forced or compulsory service exacted by the government for public purposes; as a forced rendition of labor or goods for the public service; in particular, the right of a public officer to require the service of vehicles or ships.

In feudal law, any troublesome or vexatious personal service paid by the tenant or villein to his lord.

In maritime law, a forced service (onus) imposed on a vessel for public purposes; an impressment of a vessel. See Angary, right of.

Angary, right of. In international law, formerly the right (jus angariæ) claimed by a belligerent to seize merchant vessels in the harbors of the belligerent and to compel them, on payment of freight, to transport troops and supplies to a designated port.

The right of a belligerent to appropriate, either for use, or for destruction in case of necessity, neutral property temporarily located in his own territory or in that of the other belligerent. The property may be of any description whatever, provided the appropriation of it be for military or naval purposes.

Angel. An ancient English coin, of the value of ten shillings sterling.

Angild /ængild/. In Saxon law, the single value of a man or other thing; a single weregild (q.v.); the compensation of a thing according to its single value or estimation. The double gild or compensation was called "twigild," the triple, "trigild," etc. See Angylde.

When a crime was committed, before the Conquest, the angild was the money compensation that the person who had been wronged was entitled to receive.

Anglescheria /ænglæshiriə/. In old English law, Englishery; the fact of being an Englishman.

Angliæ jura in omni casu libertatis dant favorem /ængliyi jura in ómniy kényzyw libértéytas dánt fávórəm/. The laws of England in every case of liberty are favorable (favor liberty in all cases).

Anglice /ænglæsi/. In English, a term formerly used in pleading when a thing is described both in Latin and English, inserted immediately after the Latin and as an introduction of the English translation.

Anglo-Indian. An Englishman domiciled in the Indian territory of the British crown.

Anglo-Saxon law. English law derived from those people who conquered Britain in the 5th and 6th centuries and who dominated England until the Norman Conquest.

Anguish. Extreme pain of body or mind; excruciating distress. Carson v. Thompson, Mo.App., 161 S.W.2d 995, 1000. Agony, but, as used in law, particularly mental suffering or distress of great intensity. It is not synonymous with inconvenience, annoyance, or harassment.

Angylde. In Saxon law, the rate fixed by law at which certain injuries to person or property were to be paid for; in injuries to the person, it seems to be equivalent to the "were," i.e., the price at which every man was valued. It seems also to have been the fixed price at which cattle and other goods were received as currency, and to have been much higher than the market price, or ceapgild. See Angild.

Anhote. In old English law, a single tribute or tax, paid according to the custom of the country as scot and lot.

Aniens, or anient. Null, void, of no force or effect. See Anniented.

Animal. Non-human, animate being which is endowed with the power of voluntary motion. Animal life other than man. Bernardine v. City of New York, 182 Misc. 609, 44 N.Y.S.2d 881, 883.

Domestic animals are tame as distinguished from wild; living in or near the habitations of man or by habit or special training in association with man.

Domitæ are those which have been tamed by man; domestic.

Fera naturæ are those which still retain their wild nature.

Mansuetæ naturæ are those gentle or tame by nature, such as sheep and cows.

Wild animals are those whose habitat is generally the woods or wilds; undomesticated; untamed.

Animals of a base nature. Animals in which a right of property may be acquired by reclaiming them from wildness, but which, at common law, by reason of their base nature, are not regarded as possible subjects of a larceny. Some animals which are now usually tamed come within this class, as dogs and cats; and others which, though wild by nature and often reclaimed by art and industry, clearly fall within the same rule, as bears, foxes, apes, monkeys, ferrets, and the like.

Animo /énəməw/. Lat. With intention, disposition, design, will. Quo animo, with what intention. Animo cancellandi, with intention to cancel. Furandi, with intention to steal. 4 Bl.Comm. 230. Lucrandi, with intention to gain or profit. Manendi, with intention to remain. Morandi, with intention to stay, or delay. Republicandi, with intention to republish. Revertendi, with intention to return. 2 Bl.Comm. 392. Revocandi, with intention to revoke. Testandi, with intention to make a will. Animus testandi /ánəməs tɛsténday/. Intention or purpose to make will. Also expressed as animus testandi.

An, jour, et waste. In feudal law, year, day, and waste. A forfeiture of the lands to the crown incurred by the felony of the tenant, after which time the land escheats to the lord. See Year (Year, day, and waste).

Ann. (or An.). Abr. Annual; Annotated.

Annates /áneyts/ánəts/. In ecclesiastical law, first-fruits paid out of spiritual benefices to the Pope, so called because the value of one year's profit was taken as their rate.

Annex /ənéks/. Derived from the Latin "annectere," meaning to tie or bind to. To attach, and often, specifically, to subjoin. To add to; to unite. The word expresses the idea of joining a smaller or subordinate thing with another, larger, or of higher importance. To consolidate, as school districts. To make an integral part of something larger.

It implies physical connection or physically joined to, yet physical connection may be dispensed with, and things may be annexed without being in actual contact, when reasonably practicable. Elliott Common School Dist. No. 48 v. County Board of School Trustees, Tex.Civ. App., 76 S.W.2d 786, 789. Something appended to, as a supplementary structure or wing. See also Appendant.

Annexation. The act of attaching, adding, joining, or uniting one thing to another; generally spoken of the connection of a smaller or subordinate thing with a larger or principal thing. Term is usually applied with respect to land or fixtures, as: the acquisition of territory or land by a nation, state or municipality; the legal incorporation of a town or city into another town or city.

The attaching an illustrative or auxiliary document to a deposition, pleading, deed, etc., may be called "annexing" it. See Exhibit.

In the law relating to fixtures, actual annexation includes every movement by which a chattel is joined or united to the property; constructive annexation is the union of such things as have been holden parcel of the realty, but which are not actually annexed, fixed, or fastened to the property. See also Fixture.

Anniented /ániyèntəd/. Made null, abrogated, frustrated, or brought to nothing.

Anniversary. An annual day, recurring each year on the same date; commonly to commemorate an important event. In old-ecclesiastical law, a day set apart in memory of a deceased person. Also called "year day" or "mind day."

Anniversary date. As applied to insurance policy, means yearly recurring date of the initial issuance date.

Anno domini /ænow dómənan/. In the year of the Lord. Commonly abbreviated A.D. The computation of time, according to the Christian era, dates from the birth of Christ.

Annona civiles /ənównay sívəliyz/. A species of yearly rents issuing out of certain lands, and payable to certain monasteries.

Annotatio /ænótéysh(iy)ow/. In the civil law, the sign-manual of the emperor; a rescript of the emperor, signed with his own hand. It is distinguished both from a rescript and pragmatic sanction.

Annotate; Annotated. See Annotation.

Annotation /ænótéyshən/. A remark, note, case summary, or commentary on some passage of a book, statutory provision, court decision, or the like, intended to illustrate or explain its meaning. See also Digest; Head-note.

Civil law. An imperial rescript (see Rescript) signed by the emperor. The answers of the prince to questions put to him by private persons respecting some doubtful point of law. Also summoning an absentee, and, as well the designation of a place of deportation.

Statutory. Brief summaries of the law and facts of cases interpreting or applying statutes passed by Congress or state legislatures which are included (normally following text of statute) in annotated statutes or codes.

Announced. A decision is "announced," preventing nonsuit, when court's conclusion on issue tried is made known from bench or by any publication, oral or written, even if judgment has not been rendered.

Annoy. To disturb or irritate, especially by continued or repeated acts; to weary or trouble; to irk; to offend. People v. Moore, 137 C.A.2d 197, 290 P.2d 40, 41. See also Annoyance.

Annoyance. Discomfort; vexation. Not generally synonymous with anguish, inconvenience, or harassment. Such may result from either physical or mental conditions. It includes feeling of imposition and oppression. See also Harassment; Nuisance.

Annual /ænyuwəl/. Of or pertaining to year; returning every year; coming or happening yearly. Occurring or recurring once in each year; continuing for the period of a year; accruing within the space of a year; relating to or covering the events or affairs of a year. Once a year, without signifying what time in year. See Annually.

Annual accounting period. In determining a taxpayer's income tax liability, only those transactions taking place during a particular tax year are taken into consideration. For reporting and payment purposes, therefore, the tax life of taxpayers is divided into equal annual accounting periods. See Accounting period.

Annual assay. An annual trial of the gold and silver coins of the United States, to ascertain whether the standard fineness and weight of the coinage is maintained. 31 U.S.C.A. § 363.

Annual average earnings. Term used in worker's compensation law to describe a claimant's income both from seasonal and nonseasonal employment, but for inclusion the nonseasonal income is limited to employment of the same class as the seasonal.

Annual depreciation. The annual loss, not restored by current maintenance, which is due to all the factors causing the ultimate retirement of the property. These factors embrace wear and tear, decay, inadequacy, and obsolescence. The annual loss in service value not restored by current maintenance and incurred in connection with the consumption or prospective retirement of property in the course of service from causes known to be in current operation, and whose effect can be forecast with a reasonable approach to accuracy. State v. Hampton Water Works Co., 91 N.H. 278, 18 A.2d 765, 770. See Depreciation.

Annual exclusion. The amount each year which can be excluded in computing the gift tax on the donor without using the lifetime exemption.

Annually. In annual order or succession; yearly, every year, year by year. At end of each and every year during a period of time. Imposed once a year, computed by the year. Yearly or once a year, but does not in itself signify what time in year. Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Harnly, Tex.Civ.App., 348 S.W.2d 856, 860.

Annual meeting. The meeting of stockholders each year called to elect officers and directors, to ratify actions of officers and directors and to vote on corporate matters which come before it. Generally, articles of organization or by-laws fix a date for such meeting each year. Annual meetings are required of publicly held corporations.

Annual percentage rate. The actual cost of borrowing money, expressed in form of annual interest rate to make it easy for one to compare cost of borrowing money among several lenders or sellers on credit. Full disclosure of interest rate and other charges is required by the Truth-in-Lending Act (q.v.). Commonly abbreviated APR.

Annual permit. Yearly requirement in certain states for domestic corporations to do business in state. The fee is set according to the capitalization of the corporation.

Annual report. A report for stockholders and other interested parties prepared by corporation once a year; includes a balance sheet, an income statement, a statement of changes in financial position, a reconciliation of changes in owners' equity accounts, a summary of significant accounting principles, other explanatory notes, the auditor's report, and often comments from management about the year's business and prospects for the next year. By law, any public corporation that holds an annual stockholders meeting is required to issue an annual report. See also 10-K.

Annual statement. See Annual report.

Annual value. The net yearly income derivable from a given piece of property. Its fair rental value for one year, deducting costs and expenses; the value of its use for a year.

Annua nec debitum iudex non separat ipsum /ænyuwə nèk débətəm jùwdeks nòn sèpərat ipsəm/. A judge (or court) does not divide annuities nor debt. Debt and annuity cannot be divided or apportioned by a court.

Annua pensione /ænyuwə pènshiyówniy/. An ancient writ to provide the king's chaplain, if he had no preference, with a pension.

Annuitant. The party entitled to receive payments from an annuity contract. See also Annuity.

Annuity /ən(y)úwətíy/. A right to receive fixed, periodic payments, either for life or for a term of years. Moore v. O'Cheskey, App., 87 N.M. 66, 529 P.2d 292, 293. A fixed sum payable to a person at specified intervals for a specific period of time or for life. Payments represent a partial return of capital and a return (interest) on the capital investment. Therefore, an exclusion ratio must generally be used to compute the amount of nontaxable income. Special rules apply to employee retirement plan annuities.

The payment or receipt of a series of equal amounts of money per period for a specified amount of time. In an ordinary annuity, payments are made at the end of each period; in an annuity due, payments are made at the beginning.

Annuity bond. A bond without a maturity date, that is, perpetually paying interest.

Annuity certain. Payable for specified period; no matter the time of death of the annuitant.

Annuity trust. See that title.

Cash refund annuity. Policy which provides for the lump sum payment at the death of the annuitant of the difference between the total received and the price paid.

Contingent annuity. Funded annuity with payments to commence on the happening of an uncertain event; e.g. death of named person other than annuitant. An annuity whose number of payments depends upon the outcome of an event whose timing is uncertain at the time the annuity is set up.

Deferred annuity. Payments begin at some specified future date provided the beneficiary is alive at such date. See also Deferred annuity contract.

Fixed annuity. Annuity that guarantees fixed payments, either for life or for a specified period, to annuitant.

Group annuity contract. A contract to make periodic payments to a member of a group covered by such contract. The usual type is a pension plan providing annuities upon retirement for individual employees under a master contract.

Joint and survivorship annuity. An annuity which is payable to the named annuitants during the period of their joint lives, with the annuity to continue to the survivor when the first annuitant dies.

Joint annuity. An annuity which is paid to the two named persons until the first one dies, at which time the annuity ceases.

Life annuity. Provides for payment of income to annuitant only during his lifetime; even though death is premature.

Private annuity. A contract for periodic payments to the annuitant from private as distinguished from public or life insurance company.

Refund annuity. Annuitant is assured a specified annual sum during his life, with the further assurance that in the event of his premature death there will be paid to his estate an additional amount which represents the difference between the purchase price and the amount paid out during annuitant's life.

Retirement annuity. Policy in which payments to annuitant commence at some future date; e.g. after retirement. If annuitant dies in interval or surrender is desired, an agreed upon amount is refunded to annuitant's estate.

Straight annuity. A contract usually by an insurance company to make periodic payments at monthly or yearly intervals; distinguishable from life insurance contract which looks to longevity, while annuity looks to transiency. Helvering v. LeGierse, 312 U.S. 531, 541, 61 S.Ct. 646, 85 L.Ed. 996. Straight annuity contract calls for a fixed amount of payment as distinguished from the variable annuity.

Straight life annuity. See Life annuity; Straight annuity, above.

Variable annuity. A contract calling for payments to the annuitant in varying amounts depending on the success of the investment policy of the insurance company; unlike a straight annuity which requires the payment of a fixed amount. Purpose of this type of annuity is to offset deflated value of dollar caused by inflation.

Annuity policy. An insurance policy providing for monthly or periodic payments to insured to begin at fixed date and continue through insured's life. Hamilton v. Penn Mut. Life Ins. Co., 196 Miss. 345, 17 So.2d 278, 280.

Annuity trust. A form of trust calling for payment of a fixed amount of income regardless of the amount of principal. In re McQueen's Will, 65 N.Y.S.2d 201, 205. See also Trust (Annuity trust).

Annul /ənəl/. To reduce to nothing; annihilate; obliterate; to make void or of no effect; to nullify; to abolish; to do away with. To cancel; destroy; abrogate. To annul a judgment or judicial proceeding is to deprive it of all force and operation, either ab initio or prospectively as to future transactions.

Annulment. To nullify, to abolish, to make void by competent authority. An "annulment" differs from a divorce in that a divorce terminates a legal status, whereas an annulment establishes that a marital status never existed. Wheaton v. Wheaton, 67 Cal.2d 656, 63 Cal.Rptr. 291, 294, 432 P.2d 979. Grounds and procedures for annulment of marriage are governed by state statutes.

Annun /ænəm/. Year.

Annun, diem, et vastum /ænəm, dáyəm, ət véystəm/. See Year, day, and waste.

Annus /énəs/. Lat. In civil and old English law, a year; the period of three hundred and sixty-five days. See Annual.

Annus, dies, et vastum /énəs, dáyiz, ət véystəm/. In old English law, year, day, and waste. See (Year, day, and waste).

Annus est mora motus quo suum planeta pervolvat circulum /énəs èst mórə mówtəs kwòw s(y)úwəm pláneytə pərvólvət sòrk(y)ələm/. A year is the duration of the motion by which a planet revolves through its orbit.

Annus et dies /énəs ət dáyiz/. A year and a day.

Annus inceptus pro completo habetur /énəs ɔnséptəs pròw kəmplýtow həbýtər/. A year begun is held as completed.

Annus luctus /énəs lówktəs/. The year of mourning. It was a rule among the Romans, and also the Danes and Saxons, that widows should not marry infra annum luctūs (within the year of mourning).

Annus utilis /énəs yúwtələs/. A year made up of available or serviceable days. In the plural, anni utiles signifies the years during which a right can be exercised or a prescription grow. In prescription, the period of incapacity of a minor, etc., was not counted; it was no part of the anni utiles.

Annus reditus /énəs rédtəs/. A yearly rent; annuity. 2 Bl.Comm. 41.

Anomalous /ənomələs/. Deviating from common rule, method, or type. Irregular; exceptional; abnormal; unusual.

Anomalous indorser /ənomələs ɛndórsər/. A stranger to a note, who indorses it after its execution and delivery but before maturity, and before it has been indorsed by the payee.

Anomalous plea /ənomələs plý/. One which is partly affirmative and partly negative.

Anon., An., A /ənón/. Abbreviations for anonymous.

A non posse ad non esse sequitur argumentum necessarie negative, licet non affirmative /éy nòn pòsiy ɛd nòn ésiy sékwətar ɔrgyéməntəm nəsəsəriyiy nègətáyviy, láysət nòn əfərmətáyviy/. A literal translation—From impossibility to non-existence the inference follows necessarily in the negative, though not in the affirmative—is as ambiguous as the original. It could be translated thus: The negative inference of non-existence necessarily follows from impossibility of existence, but the affirmative inference of existence cannot be drawn from mere possibility.

Anonymous. Nameless; lacking a name or names; e.g. a publication, article, or the like, without any designation of authorship; an unsigned letter; a tip from an unknown service.

Another. Additional. Distinct or different.

Another action pending. See Autre action pendant.

Arnoyance /ənoyzəns/. Annoyance; nuisance.

Ansel, ansul, or auncel /ónsəl/. In old English law, an ancient mode of weighing by hanging scales or hooks at either end of a beam or staff, which, being lifted with one's finger or hand by the middle, showed the equality or difference between the weight at one end and the thing weighed at the other.

Answer. As a verb, the word denotes an assumption of liability, as to "answer" for the debt or default of another.

Discovery. A person who fails to answer, or answers evasively or incompletely, deposition or interrogatory questions, may be compelled to do so under Fed.R. Civil P. 37.

Frivolous answer. See Sham answer, below.

Irrelevant answer. One that has no substantial relation to the controversy; distinguishable from a sham answer. Such may be ordered stricken under Fed.R. Civil P. 12(f).

Pleading. The response of a defendant to the plaintiff's complaint, denying in part or in whole the allegations made by the plaintiff. A pleading by which defendant endeavors to resist the plaintiff's demand by an allegation of facts, either denying allegations of plaintiff's complaint or confessing them and alleging new matter in avoidance, which defendant alleges should prevent recovery on facts alleged by plaintiff. In pleading, under the Codes and Rules of Civil Procedure, the answer is the formal written statement made by a defendant setting forth the grounds of his defense; corresponding to what in actions under the common-law practice is called the "plea." See Fed.R. Civil P. 8 and 12.

Under Fed.R.Civil P. 12, a person may use an answer to set up all defenses, but he also has the option to use a motion to assert certain defenses.

See also Affirmative defense; Defense; Denial; Supplemental answer.

In chancery pleading, the term denotes a defense in writing, made by a defendant to the allegations contained in a bill or information filed by the plaintiff against him.

Sham answer. One sufficient on its face but so clearly false that it presents no real issue to be tried. One good in form, but false in fact and not pleaded in good faith. A frivolous answer, on the other hand, is one which on its face sets up no defense, although it may be true in fact. On motion of a party, the court may order stricken from the pleading any insufficient defense. Fed.R. Civil P. 12(f).

Answerable. See Liability.

Antapocha /æntápəkə/. In the Roman law, a transcript or counterpart of the instrument called "apocha" (q.v.), signed by the debtor and delivered to the creditor.

Ante. Lat. Before. Usually employed in old pleadings as expressive of time, as præ (before) was of place, and coram (before) of person.

Occurring in a report or a text-book, it is used to refer the reader to a previous part of the book. Synonymous to "supra"; opposite of "post" or "infra."

Antea /æntiyə/. Lat. Formerly; heretofore.

Antecedent /æntəsiydənt/. Prior in point of time.

Antecedent claim. A preexisting claim. In law of negotiable instruments, a holder takes for value if he takes the instrument for an antecedent claim against any person whether or not the claim is due. U.C.C. § 3-303(b).

Antecedent creditors. Those whose debts are created before the debtor makes a transfer not lodged for record.

Antecedent debt. In contract law, that which may or may not furnish consideration for a new contract to pay. A negotiable instrument given for an antecedent debt is supported by adequate consideration. U.C.C. § 3-408.

In former bankruptcy law, a debt which was incurred before four months prior to filing of bankruptcy petition and hence not a preference. Bankruptcy Act (1898), § 60a.

Antecessor /æntəsésər/. An ancestor (q.v.).

Antedate. To affix an earlier date; to date an instrument as of a time before the time it was written. Such does not affect the negotiability of the instrument. U.C.C. § 3-114.

Ante exhibitionem billæ /æntiy eksəbishiýównəm bíliy/. Before the exhibition of the bill. Before suit begun.

Ante-factum /æntiy-fáktəm/ or ante-gestum /æntiy-jéstəm/. Done before. A Roman law term for a previous act, or thing done before.

Antejuramentum /æntiyjurəméntəm/. In Saxon law, a preliminary or preparatory oath (called also "præjuramentum," and "juramentum calumniæ," (q.v.), which both the accuser and accused were required to make before any trial or purgation; the accuser swearing that he would prosecute the criminal, and the accused making oath on the very day that he was to undergo the ordeal that he was innocent of the crime with which he was charged.

Ante litem motam /æntiy láytəm mówtəm/. At time when declarant had no motive to distort truth. Before suit brought, before controversy instituted. Also, before the controversy arose.

Ante mortem interest /æntiy mòrtəm ínt(ə)rəst/. Interests existing only prior to, and not after, transferor's death.

Antenati /æntiynéytay/. See Ante natus.

Ante natus /æntiy néytəs/. Born before. A person born before another person or before a particular event. The term is particularly applied to one born in a country before a revolution, change of government or dynasty, or other political event, such that the question of his rights, status, or allegiance will depend upon the date of his birth with reference to such event. In England, the term commonly denotes one born before the act of union with Scotland; in America, one born before the declaration of independence. Its opposite is post natus, one born after the event.

Antenuptial /æntiynáphshəl/. Made or done before a marriage.

Antenuptial agreement. An agreement between prospective spouses made in contemplation of marriage and to be effective upon marriage. Uniform Premarital Agreement Act, § 1. Antenuptial agreements are generally entered into by people about to enter marriage in an attempt to resolve issues of support, distribution of wealth and division of property in the event of the death of either or the failure of the proposed marriage resulting in either separation or divorce. The Uniform Act, which has been adopted by a number of states, sets forth the formalities of execution, amendment or revocation (any of which do not require consideration for enforcement), the matters that can be contracted for, enforcement, etc.

Antenuptial gift. A transfer of property from one party to the marriage to the other before the marriage without consideration.

Antenuptial settlements. See Antenuptial agreement; Palimony.

Antenuptial will. A will executed by a person prior to his marriage. Such will is generally deemed revoked unless it appears on the face of the will that it is in contemplation of marriage.

Anthropometry /ænθrəpómətriý/. In criminal law and medical jurisprudence, the measurement of the human body. A system of measuring the dimensions of the human body, both absolutely and in their proportion to each other, the facial, cranial, and other angles, the shape and size of the skull, etc., for purposes of comparison with corresponding measurements of other individuals, and serving for the identification of the subject in cases of doubtful or disputed identity. It was largely adopted after its introduction in France in 1883, but fell into disfavor as being costly and as liable to error. It has given place to the "finger print" system devised by Francis Galton and to such identification procedures as DNA testing. See Bertillon System; DNA identification.

Antichresis /æntəkrizəs/. In the civil law, a species of mortgage, or pledge of immovables. An agreement by which the debtor gives to the creditor the income from the property which he has pledged, in lieu of the interest on his debt. In the French law, if the income was more than the interest, the debtor was entitled to demand an account of the income, and might claim any excess.

By the law of Louisiana, there are two kinds of pledges,—the pawn and the antichresis. A pawn relates to movables, and the antichresis to immovables. The antichresis must be reduced to writing; and the creditor thereby acquires the right to the fruits, etc., of the immovables, deducting yearly their proceeds from the interest, in the first place, and afterwards from the principal of his debt. He is bound to pay taxes on the property, and keep it in repair, unless the contrary is agreed. The creditor does not become the proprietor of the property by failure to pay at the agreed time, and any clause to that effect is void. He can only sue the debtor, and obtain sentence for sale of the property. The possession of the property is, however, by the contract, transferred to the creditor. La.Civil Code Arts. 3176-3181. The "antichresis" is an antiquated contract, and has been resorted to in Louisiana in but a few instances.

Anticipation. Act of doing or taking a thing before its proper time. To do, take up, or deal with, before another; to preclude or prevent by prior action; to be before in doing.

In conveyancing, the act of assigning, charging, or otherwise dealing with income before it becomes due.

In patent law, an invention is anticipated by prior art when the invention is not new or lacks novelty over that art. Topliff v. Topliff, 145 U.S. 156, 12 S.Ct. 825, 36 L.Ed. 658. Defense of "anticipation" in suit for patent infringement is made out when, except for insubstantial differences, the prior patent contains all of the same elements operating in the same fashion to perform an identical function. Ropat Corp. v. West Bend Co., D.C. Ill., 382 F.Supp. 1030, 1036. Unless all of same elements are found in exactly same situation and are united in same way to perform identical function in a single prior art reference, there is no "anticipation" which will invalidate that patent. Ceramic Tilers Supply, Inc. v. Tile Council of America, Inc., C.A.Cal., 378 F.2d 283, 284.

In law of negligence, "anticipation" is not confined to expectation. It means probability, not possibility, as applied to duty to anticipate consequences of conduct attacked as negligent. Empire Dist. Electric Co. v. Harris, C.C.A.Mo., 82 F.2d 48, 52.

Anticipation note. Discount or rebate for prepayment.

Anticipatory assignment of income. See Assignment (Assignment of income).

Anticipatory breach of contract. The assertion by a party to a contract that he or she will not perform a future obligation as required by the contract. Such occurs when a party to an executory contract manifests a definite and unequivocal intent prior to time fixed in contract that it will not render its performance under the contract when that time arrives, and in such a case the other party may treat the contract as ended. Leazzo v. Dunham, 95 Ill.App.3d 847, 51 Ill.Dec. 437, 440, 420 N.E.2d 851, 854.

The right of one party to a contract to sue for breach before the date set for performance when the other party conveys his intention not to perform (U.C.C. § 2-610), though the repudiating party may retract his repudiation prior to date for performance if the other party has not acted on the repudiation (U.C.C. § 2-611). Some jurisdictions require the aggrieved party to wait for the date for performance before commencing suit.

Anticipatory nuisance. The right in equity to prevent a condition from becoming a nuisance by injunction or other order of the court.

Anticipatory offense. A crime which has as its object a further crime, such as an attempt, a conspiracy, a solicitation, all of which are crimes in themselves.

Anticipatory repudiation. See Anticipatory breach of contract.

Anticipatory search warrant. A warrant based upon an affidavit showing probable cause that at some future time, but not presently, certain evidence of crime will be located at specified place; such warrant is to be distinguished from a premature search.

Anti-deficiency legislation. Statutes which are enacted to provide revenue when a budget deficiency is created.

Anti-dilution provision. A provision appearing in convertible securities to guarantee that the conversion privilege is not affected by share reclassifications, share splits, share dividends, or similar transactions that may increase the number of outstanding shares without increasing the corporate capital.

Anti-Dumping Act. See Dumping Act.

Anti-dumping duty. Tariff, purpose of which is to prevent imports of goods for sale at a lower price than that charged in the country of origin. See Dumping Act.

Antigraphus /æntigrəfəs/. In Roman law, an officer whose duty it was to take care of tax money. A comptroller.

Antigraphy. A copy or counterpart of a deed.

Anti-lapse statute. Legislation enacted in most jurisdictions to provide for the testamentary passing of property to heirs and next of kin of the designated legatee or devisee if he dies before the testator, thus preventing a lapse of the legacy and the passing of such property through intestacy to the heirs and next of kin of the testator.

Anti manifesto. A term used in international law to denote a proclamation or manifesto published by one of two belligerent powers, alleging reasons why the war is defensive on its part.

Antinomia /æntənowmiyə/. In Roman law, a real or apparent contradiction or inconsistency in the laws. Conflicting laws or provisions of law; inconsistent or conflicting decisions or cases.

Antinomy /æntinəmiy/. A term used in logic and law to denote a real or apparent inconsistency or conflict between two authorities or propositions; same as antino- mia (q.v.).

Antiqua custuma /æntáykwə kást(y)əmə/. In old English law, an export duty on wool, woollens, and leather, imposed during the reign of Edw. I. It was so called by way of distinction from an increased duty on the same articles, payable by foreign merchants, which was imposed at a later period of the same reign and was called "custuma nova."

Antiquare /æntákwériy/. In Roman law, to restore a former law or practice; to reject or vote against a new law; to prefer the old law. Those who voted against a proposed law wrote on their ballots the letter "A," the initial of antiquo, I am for the old law.

Antiqua statuta /æntáykwə státyúwtə/. Also called "Vetera Statuta." English statutes from the time of Richard I to Edward III. See Nova statuta.

Antiquum dominicum /æntáykwəm dæmínəkəm/. In old English law, ancient demesne.

Anti-Racketeering Act. Federal act prohibiting robbery, extortion, or other unlawful interference with interstate commerce. See Hobbs Act.

Antithetarius /æntəθatériyas/. In old English law, a man who endeavors to discharge himself of the crime of which he is accused, by retorting the charge on the accuser. He differs from an approver in this: that the latter does not charge the accuser, but others.

Antitrust acts. Federal and state statutes to protect trade and commerce from unlawful restraints, price discriminations, price fixing, and monopolies. Most states have mini-antitrust acts patterned on the federal acts. The principal federal antitrust acts are: Sherman Act (1890); Clayton Act (1914); Federal Trade Commission Act (1914); Robinson-Patman Act (1936). See Boycott; Combination in restraint of trade; Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvement Act; Per se violations; Price-fixing; Restraint of trade; Rule (Rule of reason).

Antitrust Civil Process Act. Federal statute permitting antitrust action by way of a petition in U.S. District Court for an order for enforcement of law. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1314.

Antitrust injury. Such injury, which must be established in order to have standing to bring antitrust claim under Clayton Act, is injury the antitrust laws were designed to prevent and that flows from that which makes a defendant's acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. RJM Sales & Marketing, Inc. v. Banfi Products Corp., D.C.Minn., 546 F.Supp. 1368, 1379.

Anxiety. An unpleasant affective state with the expectation but not the certainty of something happening; sometimes manifested as a sense of fear, poorly understood by the subject, which arises without justifiable cause; anxious state may have overtones of "impending" danger rather than present danger.

Any. Some; one out of many; an indefinite number. One indiscriminately of whatever kind or quantity. Federal Deposit Ins. Corporation v. Winton, C.C.A.Tenn., 131 F.2d 780, 782. One or some (indefinitely). Slegel v. Slegel, 135 N.J.Eq. 5, 37 A.2d 57, 58. "Any" does not necessarily mean only one person, but may have reference to more than one or to many. Doherty v. King, Tex.Civ.App., 183 S.W.2d 1004, 1007.

Word "any" has a diversity of meaning and may be employed to indicate "all" or "every" as well as "some" or "one" and its meaning in a given statute depends upon the context and the subject matter of the statute. Donohue v. Zoning Bd. of Appeals of Town of Norwalk, 155 Conn. 550, 235 A.2d 643, 646, 647.

It is often synonymous with "either", "every", or "all". Its generality may be restricted by the context; thus, the giving of a right to do some act "at any time" is commonly construed as meaning within a reasonable time; and the words "any other" following the enumeration of particular classes are to be read as "other such like," and include only others of like kind or character.

A.O.C. Anno orbis conditi, the year of the creation of the world.

A.P.A. Administrative Procedure Act.

A pais. To the country; at issue.

Apanage /æpənáj/. In old French law, a provision of lands or feudal superiorities assigned by the kings of France for the maintenance of their younger sons. An allowance assigned to a prince of the reigning house for his proper maintenance out of the public treasury.

Apartment house. A building arranged in several suites of connecting rooms, each suite designed for independent housekeeping, but with certain mechanical conveniences, such as heat, light, or elevator services, in common to all persons occupying the building. A building containing multiple residential rental units. Sometimes called a flat or flat house.

Apatisatio /æpätázéysh(iy)ow/. An agreement or compact.

A.P.C. Alien Property Custodian.

A.P.C.N. Anno post Christum natum, the year after the birth of Christ.

Aperta brevia /æpártə bríyviyə/. Open, unsealed writs.

Apertum factum /æpártəm fáktəm/. An overt act.

Apertura testamenti /æpártýúrə těstáméntay/. In the civil law, a form of proving a will, by the witnesses acknowledging before a magistrate their having sealed it.

Apex. The summit or highest point of anything; the top; e.g., in mining law, "apex of a vein." See Larkin v. Upton, 144 U.S. 19, 12 S.Ct. 614, 36 L.Ed. 330. An "apex" is all that portion of a terminal edge of a mineral vein from which the vein has extension downward in the direction of the dip. Stewart Mining Co. v. Ontario Mining Co., 237 U.S. 350, 35 S.Ct. 610, 614, 59 L.Ed. 989. Or it is the juncture of two dipping limbs of a fissure vein. Jim Butler Tonopah Mining Co. v. West End Consol. Mining Co., 247 U.S. 450, 38 S.Ct. 574, 576, 62 L.Ed. 1207. See Apex rule.

Apex juris /éypéks júras/. The summit of the law; a legal subtlety; a nice or cunning point of law; close technicality; a rule of law carried to an extreme point, either of severity or refinement. A term used to denote a stricter application of the rules of law than is indicated by the phrase summum jus (q.v.).

Apex rule. In mining law, the mineral laws of the United States give to the locator of a mining claim on the public domain the whole of every vein the apex of which lies within his surface exterior boundaries, or within perpendicular planes drawn downward indefinitely on the planes of those boundaries; and he may follow a vein which thus apexes within his boundaries, on its dip, although it may so far depart from the perpendicular in its course downward as to extend outside the vertical side-lines of his location; but he may not go beyond his end-lines or vertical planes drawn downward therefrom. This is called the apex rule. 30 U.S.C.A. § 26.

Aphasia /əféyzh(iy)ə/. Loss of the faculty or power of articulate speech. A condition in which the patient, while retaining intelligence and understanding and with the organs of speech unimpaired, is unable (in "motor aphasia") to utter articulate words, or unable to vocalize the particular word which is in his mind and which he wishes to use, or utters words different from those he believes himself to be speaking, or (in "sensory aphasia" or apraxia) is unable to understand spoken or written language. Sensory aphasia includes word blindness and word deafness, visual and auditory aphasia. Motor aphasia often includes agraphia, or the inability to write words of the desired meaning. The seat of the disease is in the brain, but it is not a form of insanity.

Aphonia /əfówniyə/. Loss of the power of articulate speech in consequence of defective conditions of some of the vocal organs. It may be incomplete, in which case the patient can whisper. It is to be distinguished from congenital inability to speak, and from temporary loss of voice through extreme hoarseness or minor affections of the vocal cords, as also from aphasia, the latter being a disease of the brain without impairment of the organs of speech.

Apices juris non sunt jura [jus] /éypəsiyz júras nón sànt júra ("jás)/. Extremities, or mere subtleties of law are not rules of law [are not law]. Legal principles must not be carried to their extreme consequences, without regard for equity and good sense. See Apex juris.

Apices litigandi /éypəsiyz lidэгənday/. Extremely fine points, or subtleties of litigation. Nearly equivalent to the modern phrase "sharp practice." "It is unconscionable in a defendant to take advantage of the apices litigandi, to turn a plaintiff around and make him pay costs when his demand is just." Per Lord Mansfield, in 3 Burr. 1243.

A piratis aut latronibus capti liberi permanent /éy pəréytəs ót lətrónəbəs kəptay libəray pərmənant/. Persons taken by pirates or robbers remain free.

A piratis et latronibus capta dominum non mutant /éy pəréytəs èt lətrónəbəs kəptə dəminiyəm nòn myúwtənt/. Capture by pirates and robbers does not change title. No right to booty vests in piratical captors; no right can be derived from them by recaptors to the prejudice of the original owners.

Apocha (also Apoca) /əpəkə/. Lat. In the civil law, a writing acknowledging payments; acquittance. It differs from acceptance in this: that acceptance imports a complete discharge of the former obligation whether payment be made or not; apocha, discharge only upon payment being made. See Antapocha.

Apochæ oneratoriæ /əpəkíy ònəreytóriy/. In old commercial law, bills of lading.

Apocrisarius /əpəkrísériyəs/. In civil law, a messenger; an ambassador.

In ecclesiastical law, one who answers for another. An officer whose duty was to carry to the emperor messages relating to ecclesiastical matters, and to take back his answer to the petitioners. An officer who gave advice on questions of ecclesiastical law. An ambassador or legate of a pope or bishop. A messenger sent to transact ecclesiastical business and report to his superior; an officer who had charge of the treasury of a monastic edifice; an officer who took charge of opening and closing the doors.

Apocrisarius cancellarius /əpəkrísériyəs kənsəlériyəs/. In the civil law, an officer who took charge of the royal seal and signed royal dispatches. Called, also, secretarius, consiliarius (from his giving advice); referendarius; a consiliis (from his acting as counsellor); a responsis, or responsalis.

Apographia /əpəgrəfiyə/. In civil law, an examination and enumeration of things possessed; an inventory.

Apostacy (also spelled Apostasy). The total renunciation of Christianity, by embracing either a false religion or no religion at all. In old English law, this offense could take place only in such as had once professed the Christian religion. 4 Bl.Comm. 43.

Apostata /əpəstéytə/. In civil and old English law, an apostate; a deserter from the faith; one who has renounced the Christian faith; apostate.

Apostata capiendo /əpəstéytə kəpiyéndow/. An obsolete English writ which issued against an apostate, or one who had violated the rules of his religious order. It was addressed to the sheriff, and commanded him to deliver the defendant into the custody of the abbot or prior.

A posteriori /éy postiriyóray/. Lat. From the effect to the cause; from what comes after. A term used in logic to denote an argument founded on experiment or observation, or one which, taking ascertained facts as an effect, proceeds by synthesis and induction to demonstrate their cause.

Apostille, or apostille /əpóstəl/. L. Fr. An addition; a marginal note or observation. A standard certification provided under the Hague Convention of 1961 for purpose of authenticating documents for use in foreign countries.

Apostles. In English admiralty practice, a term borrowed from the civil law, denoting brief dismissory letters granted to a party who appeals from an inferior to a superior court, embodying a statement of the case and a declaration that the record will be transmitted.

Apostoli /əpóstəlây/. In civil law, certificates of the inferior judge from whom a cause is removed, directed to the superior. See Apostles.

Apostolus /əpóstəlas/. A messenger; an ambassador, legate, or nuncio.

Apotheca /əpəθiýkə/. In the civil law, a repository; a place of deposit, as of wine, oil, books, etc.

Apparator /əpərəytər/. A furnisher or provider. Formerly the sheriff, in England, had charge of certain county affairs and disbursements, in which capacity he was called "apparator comitatus" (apparator for the county), and received therefor a considerable emolument.

Apparent. That which is obvious, evident, or manifest; what appears, or has been made manifest. That which appears to the eye or mind; open to view; plain; patent. In respect to facts involved in an appeal or writ of error, that which is stated in the record. See also Appear on face.

Apparent agency. See Agency.

Apparent authority. In the law of agency, such authority as the principal knowingly or negligently permits the agent to assume, or which he holds the agent out as possessing. Such authority as he appears to have by reason of the actual authority which he has. Such authority as a reasonably prudent man, using diligence and discretion, in view of the principal's conduct, would naturally suppose the agent to possess. Finnegan Constr. Co. v. Robino-Ladd Co., 354 A.2d 142, 144. Such authority as a principal intentionally or by want of ordinary care causes or allows third person to believe that agent possesses. Lewis v. Michigan Milers Mut. Ins. Co., 154 Conn. 660, 228 A.2d 803, 806. It includes the power to do whatever is usually done and necessary to be done in order to carry into effect the principal power conferred.

The power to affect the legal relations of another person by transactions with third persons, professedly as agent for the other, arising from and in accordance with the other's manifestations to such third persons. Restatement, Second, Agency § 8.

Apparent danger. As used with reference to the doctrine of self-defense in homicide, means such overt actual demonstration, by conduct and acts, of a design to take life or do some great personal injury, as would make the killing apparently necessary to self-preservation. See Self defense.

Apparent defects. Those defects in goods which can be discovered by simple inspection; see U.C.C. § 2-605.

Also, may refer to title defects which appear on the record. See Patent; Patent defect.

Apparent easement. See Easement.

Apparent heir. One whose right of inheritance is indefeasible, provided he outlives the ancestor. To be contrasted with presumptive heir whose claim to inheritance is defeated on the birth of an heir closer in relationship to the ancestor, though at a given point in time the heir presumptive is entitled to the inheritance.

Apparent necessity. See Apparent danger.

Apparitor /əpærətər/. In old English law, an officer or messenger employed to serve the process of the spiritual courts and summon offenders.

In the civil law, an officer who waited upon a magistrate or superior officer, and executed his commands.

Apparlement /əpárl(ə)mənt/. In old English law, resemblance; likelihood; as apparlement of war.

Apparura /əpərúrá/. In old English law, the apparura were furniture, implements, tackle, or apparel.

App. Ct. Appellate Court.

Appeal. Resort to a superior (i.e. appellate) court to review the decision of an inferior (i.e. trial) court or administrative agency. A complaint to a higher tribunal of an error or injustice committed by a lower tribunal, in which the error or injustice is sought to be corrected or reversed. Board of Ed. of Cleveland City School Dist. v. Cuyahoga County Bd. of Revision, 34 Ohio St.2d 231, 298 N.E.2d 125, 128. There are two stages of appeal in the federal and many state court systems; to wit, appeal from trial court to intermediate appellate court and then to Supreme Court. There may also be several levels of appeal within an administrative agency; e.g. appeal from decision of Administrative Law Judge to Appeals Council in social security case. In addition, an appeal may be taken from an administrative agency to a trial court (e.g. from Appeals Council in social security case to U.S. district court). Also, an appeal may be as of right (e.g. from trial court to intermediate appellate court) or only at the discretion of the appellate court (e.g. by writ of certiorari to U.S. Supreme Court). Provision may also exist for joint or consolidated appeals (e.g. Fed.R.App.P. 3) and for cross appeals (where both parties to a judgment appeal therefrom).

Appeal was also the name formerly given to the proceeding in English law where a person, indicted of treason or felony, and arraigned for the same, confessed the fact before plea pleaded, and appealed, or accused others, his accomplices in the same crime, in order to obtain his pardon. In this case he was called an "approver" or "prover," and the party appealed or accused, the "appellee."

See also Consolidated appeal; Courts of Appeals, U.S.; Cross appeal; Interlocutory appeal; Interlocutory Appeals Act; Limited appeal.

Appealable order. A decree or order which is sufficiently final to be entitled to appellate review, as con-trusted with an interlocutory order which generally is not appealable until the case has been tried and judgment entered, e.g. a denial of motion for summary judgment is not appealable but the allowance of such motion is a final judgment and hence appealable. Fed.R. Civil P. 56.

Appeal bond. The court in its discretion may require the appellant to file a bond or provide other security to ensure payment of costs on appeal. See e.g., Fed.R. App.P. 7.

Appeal in forma pauperis /əˈpiːl ɪn fɔːrmə ˈpɔːpərəs/. A privilege given indigent person to prosecute an appeal, otherwise and independently allowable, without payment of fees and costs incident to such prosecution. See e.g. Fed.R.App.P. 24.

Appeal record. See Record (Record on appeal).

Appeals council. Body to which appeal is taken from finding and ruling of administrative law judge in social security matters. 42 U.S.C.A. § 405(b).

Appeals courts. See Appellate court; Court of Appeals, U.S.; Court of Customs and Patent Appeals; Court of Military Appeals; Supreme court.

Appear. To be properly before a court; as a fact or matter of which it can take notice. To be in evidence; to be proved. Coming into court by a party to a suit, whether plaintiff or defendant. See Appearance.

Appear on face. That which is clear and apparent from a reading of the document. A defect in process or venue which can be gleaned from examining the pleadings and which does not require going outside the record. See also Apparent.

Appearance. A coming into court as party to a suit, either in person or by attorney, whether as plaintiff or defendant. The formal proceeding by which a defendant submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court. The voluntary submission to a court's jurisdiction.

In civil actions the parties do not normally actually appear in person, but rather through their attorneys (who enter their appearance by filing written pleadings, or a formal written entry of appearance). Also, at many stages of criminal proceedings, particularly involving minor offenses, the defendant's attorney appears on his behalf. See e.g., Fed.R.Crim.P. 43.

An appearance may be either general or special; the former is a simple and unqualified or unrestricted submission to the jurisdiction of the court, the latter a submission to the jurisdiction for some specific purpose only, not for all the purposes of the suit. A special appearance is for the purpose of testing or objecting to the sufficiency of service or the jurisdiction of the court over defendant without submitting to such jurisdiction; a general appearance is made where the defendant waives defects of service and submits to the jurisdiction of court. Insurance Co. of North America v. Kunin, 175 Neb. 260, 121 N.W.2d 372, 375, 376.

See also General appearance; Notice to appear.

Appearance by attorney. An act of an attorney in prosecuting an action on behalf of his client. Document filed in court in which attorney sets forth fact that he is representing a party to the action.

Appearance docket. A docket kept by the clerk of the court in which appearances are entered, containing also a brief abstract of all the proceedings in the cause.

Common law classifications. At common law an appearance could be either compulsory or voluntary, the former where it was compelled by process served on the party, the latter where it was entered by his own will or consent, without the service of process, though process may be outstanding. Also, optional when entered by a person who intervened in the action to protect his own interests, though not joined as a party; conditional, when coupled with conditions as to its becoming or being taken as a general appearance; gratis, when made by a party to the action, but before the service of any process or legal notice to appear; de bene esse, when made provisionally or to remain good only upon a future contingency; or when designed to permit a party to a proceeding to refuse to submit his person to the jurisdiction of the court unless it was finally determined that he had forever waived that right; subsequent, when made by a defendant after an appearance had already been entered for him by the plaintiff; corporal, when the person was physically present in court.

Initial appearance. A court proceeding for a defendant charged with a felony, during which the judge advises the defendant of the charges against him and of his rights, decides upon bail and/or other conditions of release, and sets the date for a preliminary hearing. See e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 5.

Notice of appearance. A notice given by defendant to a plaintiff that he appears in the action in person or by attorney.

Appearance doctrine. This doctrine is a special rule designed to afford a right of self-defense to defendant based upon which "appears" to the defendant to be a situation which justifies use of force in self-defense. State v. Ferguson, Mo.App., 581 S.W.2d 132, 136. See Self-defense.

Appellant. The party who takes an appeal from one court or jurisdiction to another. Used broadly or non-technically, the term includes one who sues out a writ of error.

Appellate. Pertaining to or having cognizance of appeals and other proceedings for the judicial review of adjudications. The term has a general meaning, and it has a specific meaning indicating the distinction between original jurisdiction and appellate jurisdiction. Woodruff v. Bell, 143 Kan. 110, 53 P.2d 498, 499.

Appellate court. A court having jurisdiction of appeal and review; a court to which causes are removable by appeal, certiorari, error or report. A reviewing court, and, except in special cases where original jurisdiction is conferred, not a "trial court" or court of first instance.

See e.g. Court of Appeals; Court of Customs and Patent Appeals; Court of Military Appeals; Supreme court.

Appellate division. An intermediate appellate court for hearing civil appeals. See e.g., Mass.G.L. c. 231, § 108. Also, in Mass., a three judge panel to consider appeals of sentences for felonies. Mass.G.L. c. 278, §§ 28A, 28B. In New York, an intermediate appellate court which also has the power to make rules and regulations governing the administration of the courts. Seidenberg v. County Court of Rockland County, 34 N.Y.2d 499, 358 N.Y.S.2d 416, 315 N.E.2d 475. See N.Y. Judiciary Law, Article 4, § 70-109. In New Jersey, most civil appeals are to the Appellate Division of the Superior Court.

Appellate jurisdiction. The power vested in an appellate court to review and revise the judicial action of an inferior court, evidenced by an appealable order or an appealable judgment rendered by such court. Trengen v. Mongeon, N.D., 200 N.W.2d 50, 53. The power and authority to take cognizance of a cause and proceed to its determination, not in its initial stages (i.e. original jurisdiction) but only after it has been finally decided by an inferior court, i.e., the power of review and determination on appeal, writ of error, certiorari, or other similar process. Jurisdiction on appeal; jurisdiction to revise or correct the proceedings in a cause already instituted and acted upon by an inferior court, or by a tribunal having the attributes of a court. Limits of appellate jurisdiction are governed by statutes (e.g. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1291 et seq.) or constitutions.

Appellate review. Examination of lower court proceeding by an appellate court brought about by appeal, bill of exceptions, report or certiorari. Such may also embrace review of administrative board's decision by an inferior court; e.g. review by federal district court of social security administration decision.

Appellate rules. Rules governing procedure in taking appeals and in practicing before appellate courts; e.g. Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure; Massachusetts Rules of Appellate Procedure. See Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure.

Appellatio /əpələyʃh(iy)ow/. Lat. An appeal.

Appellator /əpələytər/. An old law term having the same meaning as "appellant" (q.v.).

In the civil law, the term was applied to the judge ad quem, or to whom an appeal was taken.

Appellee. The party in a cause against whom an appeal is taken; that is, the party who has an interest adverse to setting aside or reversing the judgment. Sometimes also called the "respondent." It should be noted that a party's status as appellant or appellee does not necessarily bear any relation to his status as plaintiff or defendant in the lower court.

Appello /əpələw/. Lat. In the civil law, "I appeal." The form of making an appeal apud acta.

Appellor /əpələr/. In old English law, a criminal who accused his accomplices, or who challenged a jury. See Approver.

Append. To add or attach. See Appendix.

Appendage. Something added as an accessory to or the subordinate part of another thing. See Appendant; Appendix.

Appendant. A thing annexed to or belonging to another thing and passing with it. Something added or attached.

At common law, a thing of inheritance belonging to another inheritance which is more worthy; as an advowson, common, etc., which may be appendant to a manor, common of fishing to a freehold, a seat in a church to a house, etc. It differs from appurtenance, in that appendant must ever be by prescription, i.e., a personal usage for a considerable time, while an appurtenance may be created at this day; for if a grant be made to a man and his heirs, of common in such a moor for his beasts levant or couchant upon his manor, the commons are appurtenant to the manor, and the grant will pass them.

See also Appendix; Appurtenance; Appurtenant.

Appenditia /əpəndish(iy)ə/. The appendages or appurtenances of an estate or house, dwelling, etc.; thus, penthouses are the appenditia domus.

Appendix. Supplementary materials added to appellate brief; e.g. record on appeal. In federal appellate procedure, the appellant is required to file an appendix to the briefs which shall contain the following: (1) the relevant portions of the pleadings, charge, findings or opinion; (2) the judgment, order or decision in question; and (3) any other parts of the record to which the parties wish to direct the particular attention of the court. Fed.R. App.P. 30.

Appensura /əpens(y)úrə/. Payment of money by weight instead of by count.

Appertain. To belong to; to have relation to; to be appurtenant to. See Appurtenance; Appurtenant.

Appertaining. Connected with in use or occupancy.

Applicable. Fit, suitable, pertinent, related to, or appropriate; capable of being applied.

Applicable local law. Term used to determine the persons who come within the term heirs and is the law which would be used to ascertain the heirs of the designated ancestor if he had owned the property and had died intestate. Restatement of Law of Property, § 305, Comment e.

Applicant. An applicant, as for letters of administration, is one who is entitled thereto, and who files a petition asking that letters be granted. For purposes of letters of credit, the customer in the credit transaction. Synonymous also with "account party."

Appicare /əpləkəriy/. Lat. In old English law, to fasten to; to moor (a vessel). Anciently rendered, "to apply."

Applicatio est vita regulæ /əpləkəriy(iy)ow èst váyta régyəliy/. Application is the life of a rule.

Application. A putting to, placing before, preferring a request or petition to or before a person. The act of making a request for something. A petition. The use or disposition made of a thing. A bringing together, in order to ascertain some relation or establish some connection; as the application of a rule or principle to a case or fact. An appeal or petition, especially as written or presented; a putting to, placing before; preferring a request or petition to or before a person; the act of making a request for something. Sparacino v. Feroni, 9 Ill.App.2d 422, 133 N.E.2d 753, 755. See also, Apply; Motion; Petition.

Insurance. The preliminary request, declaration, or statement made by a party applying for an insurance policy, such as one on his life, or against fire.

Payments. Appropriation of a payment to some particular debt; or the determination to which of several demands a general payment made by a debtor to his creditor shall be applied.

Purchase money. The disposition made of the funds received by a trustee on a sale of real estate held under the trust.

Application of rules. Refers to area of practice governed by rules of procedure and not left to common law or statutory law.

Apply. To make a formal request or petition, usually in writing, to a court, officer, board, or company, for the granting of some favor, or of some rule or order, which is within his or their power or discretion. For example, to apply for an injunction, for a pardon, for a policy of insurance, or for a receiver. See Application; Petition.

To use or employ for a particular purpose; to appropriate and devote to a particular use, object, demand, or subject-matter. Thus, to apply payments to the reduction of interest. See Appropriate.

To put, use, or refer, as suitable or relative; to co-ordinate language with a particular subject-matter; as to apply the words of a statute to a particular state of facts.

The word "apply" is used in connection with statutes in two senses. When construing a statute, in describing the class of persons, things, or functions which are within its scope; as that the statute does not "apply" to transactions in interstate commerce. When discussing the use made of a statute, in referring to the process by which the statute is made operative; as where the jury is told to "apply" the statute of limitation if they find that the cause of action arose before a given date.

Appoint. To designate, choose, select, assign, ordain, prescribe, constitute, or nominate. To allot or set apart. To assign authority to a particular use, task, position, or office.

Term is used where exclusive power and authority is given to one person, officer, or body to name persons to hold certain offices. It is usually distinguished from "elect," meaning to choose by a vote of the qualified voters of the city; though this distinction is not invariably observed.

See also Appointment.

Appointee. A person who is appointed or selected for a particular purpose; as the appointee under a power of appointment is the person who is to receive the benefit of the power.

Appointment. The designation of a person, by the person or persons having authority therefor, to discharge the duties of some office or trust. In re Nicholson's Estate, 104 Colo. 561, 93 P.2d 880, 884. See Illusory appointment; Power of appointment.

The exercise of a right to designate the person or persons who are to take the use of real estate. The act of a person in directing the disposition of property, by limiting a use, or by substituting a new use for a former one, in pursuance of a power granted to him for that purpose by a preceding deed, called a "power of appointment"; also the deed or other instrument by which he so conveys. Where the power embraces several permitted objects, and the appointment is made to one or more of them, excluding others, it is called "exclusive."

Appointment may signify an appropriation of money to a specific purpose. It may also mean the arranging of a meeting.

Office or public function. The selection or designation of a person, by the person or persons having authority therefor, to fill an office or public function and discharge the duties of the same. The term "appointment" is to be distinguished from "election." "Election" to office usually refers to vote of people, whereas "appointment" relates to designation by some individual or group. Board of Education of Boyle County v. McChesney, 235 Ky. 692, 32 S.W.2d 26, 27.

Appointment, power of. See Power of appointment.

Appointor. The person who appoints, or executes a power of appointment; as appointee is the person to whom or in whose favor an appointment is made. One authorized by the donor, under the statute of uses, to execute a power.

Apport. L. Fr. In old English law, tax; tallage; tribute; imposition; payment; charge; expenses.

Apportion. To divide and distribute proportionally.

Apportionment /əpɔrʃənmənt/. The process by which legislative seats are distributed among units entitled to representation. Determination of the number of representatives which a State, county, or other subdivision may send to a legislative body. The U.S. Constitution provides for a census every ten years, on the basis of which Congress apportions representatives according to population; but each State must have at least one representative. "Districting" is the establishment of the precise geographical boundaries of each such unit or constituency. Seaman v. Fedourich, 16 N.Y.2d 94, 262 N.Y.S.2d 444, 209 N.E.2d 778, 779. Apportionment by state statute which denies the rule of one-man, one-vote is violative of equal protection of laws. Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 82 S.Ct. 691, 7 L.Ed.2d 663. See also Legislative apportionment; Reapportionment.

The allocation of a charge or cost such as real estate taxes between two parties, often in the same ratio as the respective times that the parties are in possession or ownership of property during the fiscal period for which the charge is made or assessed.

Contracts. The allowance, in case of a severable contract, partially performed, of a part of the entire consideration proportioned to the degree in which the contract was carried out.

Corporate shares. The pro tanto division among the subscribers of the shares allowed to be issued by the charter, where more than the limited number have been subscribed for.

Estate taxes. Unless the will otherwise provides, taxes shall be apportioned among all persons interested in the estate. The apportionment is to be made in the proportion that the value of the interest of each person interested in the estate bears to the total value of the interests of all persons interested in the estate. The values used in determining the tax are to be used for that purpose. If the decedent's will directs a method of apportionment of tax different from the method described in the Probate Code, the method described in the will controls. Uniform Probate Code, § 3-916(b).

Incumbrances. Where several persons are interested in an estate, apportionment, as between them, is the determination of the respective amounts which they shall contribute towards the removal of the incumbrance.

Liability. Legal responsibility of parties to a transaction or tort may be distributed or apportioned among them by statute or by agreement. See Comparative negligence; Contribution.

Rent. The allotment of shares in a rent to each of several parties owning it. The determination of the amount of rent to be paid when the tenancy is terminated at some period other than one of the regular intervals for the payment of rent.

Representatives. The determination upon each decennial census of the number of representatives in congress which each state shall elect, the calculation being based upon the population. See U.S.Const., Art. 1, § 2; Amend. 14, § 2.

Taxes. The apportionment of a tax consists in a selection of the subjects to be taxed, and in laying down the rule by which to measure the contribution which each of these subjects shall make to the tax.

The assignment of the business income of a multistate corporation to specific states for income taxation. Usually, the apportionment procedure accounts for the property, payroll, and sales activity levels of the various states, and a proportionate assignment of the entity's total income is made thereby, using a three-factor apportionment formula. These activities indicate the commercial domicile of the corporation, relative to that income. Some states exclude nonbusiness income from the apportionment procedure; they allocate nonbusiness income to the states where the nonbusiness assets are located.

Apportionment clause. Insurance policy clause which distributes insurance in proportion to the total coverage.

Apports en nature /əpórts òn nətyúr/. In French law, that which a partner brings into the partnership other than cash; for instance, securities, realty or personalty, cattle, stock, or even his personal ability and knowledge.

Apportum /əpórtəm/. In old English law, the revenue, profit, or emolument which a thing brings to the owner. Commonly applied to a corody or pension.

Apposer /əpówzər/. In old English law, an officer in the exchequer, clothed with the duty of examining the sheriffs in respect of their accounts. Usually called the "foreign apposer." The office is now abolished.

Appostille, or apostille /əpóstəl/. In French law, an addition or annotation made in the margin of a writing.

Appraisal. A valuation or an estimation of value of property by disinterested persons of suitable qualifications. The process of ascertaining a value of an asset or liability that involves expert opinion rather than explicit market transactions. See also Appraise.

In corporate law, a limited statutory right granted to minority shareholders who object to certain fundamental transactions such as mergers. In an appraisal proceeding a court determines the appraised value of their shares and the corporation pays such appraised value to the shareholder in cash. The Revised Model Business Corporation Act uses the term "dissenters' rights to obtain payment for their shares" to describe this right. An appraisal right exists only to the extent specifically provided by statute. See Appraisal remedy.

Appraisal clause. Clause in insurance policy providing that the insurer has the right to demand an appraisal of the loss or damage.

Appraisal remedy. The dissenting shareholder's appraisal remedy is essentially a statutory creation to enable shareholders who object to certain extraordinary matters to dissent and to require the corporation to buy their shares at the value immediately prior to the approval of such matter and thus to withdraw from the corporation. In different jurisdictions, the appraisal remedy often applies to sales of substantially all corporate assets other than in the regular course of business, mergers, and consolidations, more rarely to certain amendments of the articles of incorporation or miscellaneous matters, but usually not to dissolution. The appraisal remedy is often limited to shareholders of record entitled to vote on the matter.

Appraisal rights. See Appraisal remedy.

Appraise. To fix or set a price or value upon; to fix and state the true value of a thing, and, usually, in writing. To value property at what it is worth. To "appraise" money means to count. See also Appraisal.

Appraisement. A just and true valuation of property. A valuation set upon property under judicial or legislative authority. A valuation or estimation of the value of property. See also Appraisal.

Appraiser. A person selected or appointed by competent authority or interested party to make an appraisal; to ascertain and state the true value of goods or real estate. Frequently appointed in probate and condemnation proceedings; also used by condemnation authorities, banks and real estate companies to ascertain market value of real property.

Appreciable. Capable of being estimated, weighed, judged of, or recognized by the mind. Capable of being perceived or recognized by the senses. Perceptible but not a synonym of substantial.

Appreciate. To estimate justly; to set a price or value on. When used with reference to the nature and effect of an act, "appreciate" may be synonymous with "know" or "understand" or "realize."

Appreciation in value. Increase in the market value of an asset (e.g., real estate) over its value at some earlier time. May be due from inflation and/or increased market demand for asset.

Apprehend. To take hold of, whether with the mind (as to conceive, believe, fear, dread, understand, be conscious or sensible of), or actually and bodily (as to seize or arrest a person). See Arrest.

Apprehensio /æprəhénsh(iy)ow/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, a taking hold of a person or thing; apprehension; the seizure or capture of a person.

One of the varieties or subordinate forms of occupatio, or the mode of acquiring title to things not belonging to any one.

Apprehension. The seizure, taking, or arrest of a person on a criminal charge. See Arrest.

Civil law. A physical or corporal act (corpus), on the part of one who intends to acquire possession of a thing, by which he brings himself into such a relation to the thing that he may subject it to his exclusive control; or by which he obtains the physical ability to exercise his power over the thing whenever he pleases. One of the requisites to the acquisition of judicial possession, and by which, when accompanied by intention, (animus) possession is acquired.

Apprendre. A fee or profit taken or received.

Apprentice en la ley /əprɛntəs ɔn lə léy/. An ancient name for students at law, and afterwards applied to counsellors, apprentici ad barras, from which comes the more modern word "barrister." In some of the ancient law-writers the terms apprentice and barrister are synonymous.

Apprenticeship. An apprentice is a person who agrees to work for an employer for a specified time for the purpose of learning the craft, trade or profession in which the employer agrees to instruct him. In a more popular sense the term is used to convey the idea of a learner in any field of employment or business. The requirements of an apprenticeship contract both as to contents and manner of execution are prescribed by statute in a number of states. See also Articles of apprenticeship.

The term during which an apprentice is to serve; the status of an apprentice; the relation subsisting between an apprentice and his master.

Apprenticius ad legem /əprɛntishiyəs əd liyjam/. An apprentice to the law; a law student; a counsellor below the degree of serjeant. See Apprentice en la ley.

Approach. To come nearer in place or time.

An access or a way, passage, or avenue by which a place may be approached. Clutts v. Jefferson County Bd. of Zoning Adjustment, 282 Ala. 204, 210 So.2d 679, 684.

Approaches. A way, passage, street, or avenue by which a place or building can be approached; an access.

Approach, right of. In international maritime law, the right of a ship of war, upon the high sea, to draw near to another vessel for the purpose of ascertaining the nationality of the latter. The Marianna Flora, 24 U.S. 1, 11 Wheat. 1, 6 L.Ed. 405. At present the right of approach has no existence apart from the right of visit.

Approbation /əprəbéyshən/. Denotes approval and generally includes commendation. Application of N. Y. Soul Clinic, 208 Misc. 612, 144 N.Y.S.2d 543, 545.

Appropriate. To make a thing one's own; to make a thing the subject of property; to exercise dominion over an object to the extent, and for the purpose, of making it subserve one's own proper use or pleasure. To prescribe a particular use for particular moneys; to designate or destine a fund or property for a distinct use, or for the payment of a particular demand. Also used in the sense of distribute. In this sense it may denote the act of an executor or administrator who distributes the estate of his decedent among the legatees, heirs, or others entitled, in pursuance of his duties and according to their respective rights. See Appropriation; Expropriation.

Appropriated surplus. In accounting, portion of surplus set aside for specific purpose other than for existing liability.

Appropriation. The act of appropriating or setting apart; prescribing the destination of a thing; designating the use or application of a fund. McKenzie Const. Co. v. City of San Antonio, Tex.Civ.App., 50 S.W.2d 349, 352. In tort law, the act of making a thing one's own or exercising or making use of an object to subserve one's own interest. When the act is wrongful, a tort is committed.

In governmental accounting, an expenditure authorized for a specified amount, purpose, and time.

See also Appropriate; Misappropriation.

Appropriation of land. The act of selecting, devoting, or setting apart land for a particular use or purpose, as where land is appropriated for public buildings, military reservations, or other public uses. Taking of private property for public use in the exercise of the power of eminent domain. In this sense it may refer merely to physical occupation and contemplate payment prior thereto, in contra-distinction to "taking," referring to a legal taking and presupposing payment after damages are due. See Condemnation; Eminent domain; Expropriation.

Appropriation of payments. The application of a payment to the discharge of a particular debt. Thus, if a creditor has two distinct debts due to him from his debtor, and the latter makes a general payment on account, without specifying at the time to which debt he intends the payment to apply, it is optional for the creditor to appropriate (apply) the payment to either of the two debts he pleases.

Appropriation of water. An appropriation of water flowing on the public domain consists in the capture, impounding, or diversion of it from its natural course or channel and its actual application to some beneficial use private or personal to the appropriator, to the entire exclusion (or exclusion to the extent of the water appropriated) of all other persons. To constitute a valid appropriation, there must be an intent to apply the water to some beneficial use existing at the time or contemplated in the future, a diversion from the natural channel by means of a ditch or canal, or some other open physical act of taking possession of the water, and an actual application of it within a reasonable time to some useful or beneficial purpose. In re Manse Spring and Its Tributaries, Nye County, 60 Nev. 262, 108 P.2d 311, 314; State of Neb. v. State of Wyo., 325 U.S. 589, 65 S.Ct. 1332, 1349, 89 L.Ed. 1815. It follows water to its original source whether through surface or subterranean streams or through percolation, Justesen v. Olsen, 86 Utah 158, 40 P.2d 802, 809; and entitles appropriator to continuing right to use water to extent of appropriation, but not beyond that reasonably required and actually used. State of Arizona v. State of California, Ariz. & Cal., 298 U.S. 558, 56 S.Ct. 848, 852, 80 L.Ed. 1331.

Public law. The act by which the legislative department of government designates a particular fund, or sets apart a specified portion of the public revenue or of the money in the public treasury, to be applied to some general object of governmental expenditure, or to some individual purchase or expense. Authority given by legislature to proper officers to apply distinctly specified sum from designated fund out of treasury in given year for specified object or demand against state. State ex rel. Murray v. Carter, 167 Okl. 473, 30 P.2d 700, 702.

The legislative designation of a certain amount of money as being set apart, allotted, or assigned for a specific purpose. Purpose of a general appropriation bill is to fund programs that have been separately authorized by other legislation. Colorado General Assembly v. Lamm, Colo., 704 P.2d 1371, 1382. A specific appropriation is an act of the legislature by which a named sum of money has been set apart in the treasury, and devoted to the payment of a particular demand.

Appropriation bill. A measure before a legislative body authorizing the expenditure of public moneys and stipulating the amount, manner, and purpose of the various items of expenditure. Appropriation bills in Congress must originate in the House. U.S.Const. Art. I, Sec. 7. See also Appropriation (Public law).

Appropriator. One who makes an appropriation; as, an appropriator of water.

Approval. The act of confirming, ratifying, assenting, sanctioning, or consenting to some act or thing done by another. "Approval" implies knowledge and exercise of discretion after knowledge. McCarten v. Sanderson, 111 Mont. 407, 109 P.2d 1108, 1112. The act of a judge or magistrate in sanctioning and accepting as satisfactory a bond, security, or other instrument which is required by law to pass his inspection and receive his approbation before it becomes operative. See Affirm; Approve; Assent; Condonation; Confirmation; Connivance; Consent; Ratification. For sale on approval, see Sale.

Approval sales. A buyer may, by agreement, accept goods on approval, and title does not pass until he has indicated his approval. Approval is a condition precedent to passing of title and risk. U.C.C. § 2-326.

Approve. To be satisfied with; to confirm, ratify, sanction, or consent to some act or thing done by another. To sanction officially; to ratify; to confirm; to pronounce good; think or judge well of; admit the propriety or excellence of; be pleased with. Distinguishable from "authorize," meaning to permit a thing to be done in future. To take to one's proper and separate use. To improve; to enhance the value or profits of anything. To inclose and cultivate common or waste land. See also Approval; Confirmation; Ratification.

Approved indorsed notes. Notes indorsed by another person than the maker, for additional security, the indorser being satisfactory to the payee. See Accommodation paper; Accommodation party.

Approved list. See, Legal list.

Improvement. In English law, the improvement or partial enclosure of a common. The profits arising from the improvement of land approved. Now requires consent of the government by Law of Property Act, 1925, § 194.

In old English law, a practice of criminal prosecutions by which a person accused of treason or felony was permitted to exonerate himself by accusing others and escaping prosecution himself. The custom existed only in capital cases, and consisted in the accused, called "approver", being arraigned and permitted to confess before plea and appeal or accuse another as his accomplice of the same crime in order to obtain his pardon. See Approver.

Approver. L. Fr. To approve or prove; to vouch.

In old English law, an accomplice in crime who accused others of the same offense, and was admitted as a witness at the discretion of the court to give evidence against his companions in guilt. He was vulgarly called "King's Evidence." One who confessed himself guilty of felony and accused others of the same crime to save himself from punishment. If he failed to convict those he accused he was at once hung. See also Antithetarius.

At common law, one who brought formal charges against and privately prosecuted one's accomplices. Oliver v. State, 454 A.2d 856, 863, 53 Md.App. 490.

In old English law, certain men sent into the several counties to increase the farms (rents) of hundreds and wapentakes, which formerly were let at a certain value to the sheriff. See Hundred; Wapentake.

Approximate. Used in the sense of an estimate merely, meaning more or less, but about and near the amount, quantity, or distance specified. Near to; about; a little more or less; close. "Approximately" is very nearly synonymous with "proximately", meaning very nearly, but not absolutely.

Approximation. Equitable doctrine by which precise terms of charitable trust can be varied under certain circumstances. Applicable to charitable trusts and employed only where on failure of trust the court finds a general charitable intent. Under this doctrine, the general intent of the donor is carried out as nearly as may be even if the particular method pointed out by him cannot be followed. Harris v. Attorney General, 31 Conn.Sup. 93, 324 A.2d 279, 283. See Cy-Pres.

Appruare /əpruwəriy/. To take to one's use or profit.

Appurtenance /əpɜrtənəns/. That which belongs to something else; an adjunct; an appendage. Something annexed to another thing more worthy as principal, and which passes as incident to it, as a right of way or other easement to land; an outhouse, barn, garden, or orchard, to a house or messuage. Joplin Waterworks Co. v. Jasper County, 327 Mo. 964, 38 S.W.2d 1068, 1076. An article adapted to the use of the property to which it is connected, and which was intended to be a permanent accession to the freehold. A thing is deemed to be incidental or appurtenant to land when it is by right used with the land for its benefit, as in the case of a way, or watercourse, or of a passage for light, air, or heat from or across the land of another. See also Appendant.

Appurtenant. Belonging to; accessory or incident to; adjunct, appended, or annexed to; answering to accessorium in the civil law. Employed in leases for the purpose of including any easements or servitudes used or enjoyed with the demised premises. A thing is "appurtenant" to something else when it stands in relation of an incident to a principal and is necessarily connected with the use and enjoyment of the latter. A thing is deemed to be incidental or appurtenant to land when it is by right used with the land for its benefit, as in the case of a way, or water-course, or of a passage for light, air, or heat from or across the land of another. See also Easement.

APR. See Annual percentage rate.

A.P.R.C. Anno post Romam conditam, year after the foundation of Roman.

A prendre /à prɔndɜr/. L. Fr. To take; to seize. Bref à prendre la terre, a writ to take the land. A right to take something out of the soil of another is a profit à prendre, or a right coupled with a profit. Distinguished from an easement. Sometimes written as one word, apprendre, apprender. See Profit (Profit à prendre).

A priori /èy prayóray/. Lat. From the cause to the effect; from what goes before. A term used in logic to denote an argument founded on analogy, or abstract considerations, or one which, positing a general principle or admitted truth as a cause, proceeds to deduce from it the effects which must necessarily follow.

Arabant /ərəybənt/. They plowed. A term of feudal law, applied to those who held by the tenure of plowing and tilling the lord's lands within the manor.

Arable land /ərəbəl lænd/. That which is fit for plowing or tillage, and thus is distinguishable from swamp land, which is land that is too wet for cultivation.

Araho. In feudal law, to make oath in the church or some other holy place. All oaths were made in the church upon the relics of saints, according to the Riparian laws.

Aralia /ərəyliyə/. Plowlands. Land fit for the plow. Denoting the character of land, rather than its condition.

Arator /ərəytər/. A plowman; a farmer of arable land.

Aratrum terræ /ərəytrəm tériy/. In old English law, a plow of land; a plowland; as much land as could be tilled with one plow (or by a single "arator" or plowman).

Aratura terræ /ərətyúra tériy/. The plowing of land by the tenant, or vassal, in the service of his lord.

Araturia /ərət(y)úriyə/. Land suitable for the plow; arable land.

ARB. See Accounting Research Bulletin.

Arbiter /ərbətər/. A person chosen to decide a controversy; an arbitrator, referee. A person bound to decide according to the rules of law and equity, as distinguished from an arbitrator, who may proceed wholly at his own discretion, so that it be according to the judgment of a sound man. See Arbitrator.

In the Roman law, a judge invested with a discretionary power. A person appointed by the prætor to examine and decide that class of causes or actions termed bonæ fidei, "and who had the power of judging according to the principles of equity, (ex æquo et bono) distinguished from the judex, (q.v.) who was bound to decide according to strict law.

Arbitrage /ərbətrəj/. The simultaneous purchase in one market and sale in another of a security or commodity in hope of making a profit on price differences in the different markets. See Arbitration of exchange; Arbitragers. For Arbitrage bond, see Bond.

Arbitragers /ərbətrèyjərz/'zhərz/. Market investors who take off-setting positions in the same or similar securities in order to profit from small price variations. An arbitrager, for example, may buy shares on the Pacific Coast Exchange and simultaneously sell the same shares on the New York Stock Exchange if any price discrepancy occurs between the quotations in the two markets. By taking advantage of momentary disparities in prices between markets, arbitragers perform the economic function of making those markets more efficient.

Arbitrament /ərbitrəmənt/. The award or decision of arbitrators upon a matter of dispute, which has been submitted to them.

Arbitrament and award /ərbitrəmənt ənd əwórd/. A plea to an action brought for the same cause which had been submitted to arbitration and on which an award had been made.

Arbitramentum æquum tribuit cuique suum /ərbitrəməntəm íykwəm tribuywət káykwiy s(y)úwəm/. A just arbitration renders to every one his own.

Arbitrarily. See Arbitrary.

Arbitrariness. Conduct or acts based alone upon one's will, and not upon any course of reasoning and exercise of judgment. Garman v. Myers, 183 Okl. 141, 80 P.2d 624, 626.

Arbitrary. In an unreasonable manner, as fixed or done capriciously or at pleasure. Without adequate determining principle; not founded in the nature of things; nonrational; not done or acting according to reason or judgment; depending on the will alone; absolutely in power; capriciously; tyrannical; despotic; Cornell v. Swisher County, Tex.Civ.App., 78 S.W.2d 1072, 1074. Without fair, solid, and substantial cause; that is, without cause based upon the law, U. S. v. Lotempio, D.C. N.Y., 58 F.2d 358, 359; not governed by any fixed rules or standard. Willful and unreasoning action, without consideration and regard for facts and circumstances presented. In re West Laramie, Wyo., 457 P.2d 498, 502. Ordinarily, "arbitrary" is synonymous with bad faith or failure to exercise honest judgment and an arbitrary act would be one performed without adequate determination of principle and one not founded in nature of things. Huey v. Davis, Tex.Civ.App., 556 S.W.2d 860, 865.

Arbitrary and capricious. Characterization of a decision or action taken by an administrative agency or inferior court meaning willful and unreasonable action without consideration or in disregard of facts or law or without determining principle. Elwood Investors Co. v. Behme, 79 Misc.2d 910, 361 N.Y.S.2d 488, 492. See also, Rational basis test.

Arbitrary power. Power to act according to one's own will; especially applicable to power conferred on an administrative officer, who is not furnished any adequate determining principle. Fox Film Corporation v. Trumbull, D.C.Conn., 7 F.2d 715, 727.

Arbitrary punishment. That punishment which is left to the decision of the judge, in distinction from those defined by statute. See Sentence.

Arbitration /ärbätreyshän/. A process of dispute resolution in which a neutral third party (arbitrator) renders a decision after a hearing at which both parties have an opportunity to be heard. Where arbitration is voluntary, the disputing parties select the arbitrator who has the power to render a binding decision.

An arrangement for taking and abiding by the judgment of selected persons in some disputed matter, instead of carrying it to established tribunals of justice, and is intended to avoid the formalities, the delay, the expense and vexation of ordinary litigation. Wauregan Mills Inc. v. Textile Workers Union of America, A.F.L.-C.I.O., 21 Conn.Sup. 134, 146 A.2d 592, 595. Such arbitration provisions are common in union collective bargaining agreements.

The majority of the states have adopted the Uniform Arbitration Act.

Agreements to arbitrate have been declared to be valid and fully enforceable by statute. 9 U.S.C.A. § 2.

An organization that provides arbitration services is the American Arbitration Association (q.v.).

See also Alternative dispute resolution; Conciliation; Mediation; Mediation and Conciliation Service; Reference.

Compulsory arbitration is that which occurs when the consent of one of the parties is enforced by statutory provisions. Examples of such are state statutes requiring compulsory arbitration of labor disputes involving public employees. See Arbitration clause.

Final offer arbitration. In this type of arbitration, the arbitrator must choose the final offer of either one party or the other and is, therefore, not permitted to compromise.

Interest and grievance arbitration distinguished. Interest arbitration involves settlement of terms of a contract between the parties as contrasted with grievance arbitration which concerns the violation or interpretation of an existing contract. School Committee of Boston et al. v. Boston Teachers Union etc., 363 N.E.2d 485.

Voluntary arbitration is by mutual and free consent of the parties.

Arbitration Acts. Federal and state laws which provide for submission of disputes to process of arbitration, including labor grievances and disputes of public employees. An example of a federal Act is Title 9, U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq. which governs settlement of disputes involved in maritime transactions and commerce under federal statutes. Most states have arbitration acts, many of which are patterned on the Uniform Arbitration Act. The purpose of such acts, in general, is to validate arbitration agreements, make the arbitration process effective, provide necessary safeguards, and provide an efficient procedure when judicial assistance is necessary.

Arbitration and award. An affirmative defense to the effect that the subject matter of the action has been settled by a prior arbitration. Fed.R. Civil P. 8(c).

Arbitration board. A panel of arbitrators appointed to hear and decide a dispute according to rules of arbitration. See e.g. American Arbitration Association.

Arbitration clause. A clause inserted in a contract providing for compulsory arbitration in case of dispute as to rights or liabilities under such contract; e.g. disputes arising under union collective bargaining agreement, or disputes between consumer and retailer or manufacturer. The purpose of such clause is to avoid having to litigate disputes that might arise.

Arbitration of exchange. This takes place where a merchant pays his debts in one country by a bill of exchange upon another. The business of buying and selling exchange (bills of exchange) between two or more countries or markets, and particularly where the profits of such business are to be derived from a calculation of the relative value of exchange in the two countries or markets, and by taking advantage of the fact that the rate of exchange may be higher in the one place than in the other at the same time. See Arbitrage.

Arbitrator. A neutral person either chosen by the parties to a dispute or appointed by a court, to hear the parties claims and render a decision. Many arbitrators are members of the American Arbitration Association. See also Referee; Umpire.

Arbitrium /ärbítriyəm/. The decision of an arbiter, or arbitrator; an award; a judgment.

Arbitrium est iudicium /ärbítriyəm èst juwdishiyəm/. An award is a judgment.

Arbitrium est iudicium boni viri, secundum æquum et bonum /ärbítriyəm èst juwdishiyəm bównay váray, səkándəm iykwəm ət bównəm/. An award is the judgment of a good man, according to justice.

Arbor civilis /ärbər sívələs/. A genealogical tree.

Arbor consanguinitatis /ärbər kónsængwiniyétýtəs/. A table, formed in the shape of a tree, showing the genealogy of a family; e.g. the arbor civilis of the civilians and canonists.

Arbor finalis /ärbər fənélyəs/. In old English law, a boundary tree; a tree used for making a boundary line.

Arcana imperii /arkéynə impíriyà/. State secrets. 1 Bl.Comm. 337.

Archdeaconry /archdiýkənriy/. A division of a diocese, and the circuit of an archdeacon's jurisdiction.

Archdeacon's court. In English ecclesiastical law, a court held before a judge appointed by the archdeacon, and called his official. Its jurisdiction comprised the granting of probates and administrations, and ecclesiastical causes in general, arising within the archdeaconry. It was the most inferior court in the whole ecclesiastical polity of England. Appeal was to the bishops' courts.

Archery. In feudal law, a service of keeping a bow for the lord's use in the defense of his castle.

Arches Court /árchəz kórt/. In English ecclesiastical law, a court of appeal belonging to the Archbishop of Canterbury, the judge of which is called the "Dean of the Arches", because his court was anciently held in the church of Saint Mary-le-Bow (Sancta Maria de Arcubus), so named from the steeple, which is raised upon pillars built archwise. The court was afterwards held in the hall belonging to the College of Civilians, commonly called "Doctors' Commons". It is now held in Westminster Hall. Its proper jurisdiction is only over the thirteen peculiar parishes belonging to the archbishop in London, but, the office of Dean of the Arches having been for a long time united with that of the archbishop's principal official, the Judge of the Arches, in right of such added office, it receives and determines appeals from the sentences of all inferior ecclesiastical courts within the province. Many original suits are also brought before him from which the inferior judge has waived jurisdiction. From the Court of Arches an appeal lies to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

Archetype /árkətəyp/. The original from which a copy is made.

Archicapellanus /árkiykəpələynəs/. L. Lat. In old European law, a chief or high chancellor (summus cancellarius).

Architect's lien. A lien on real estate created by statute in favor of the architect who drew the plans and supervised the construction of the real estate for purpose of insuring payment of his fee.

Archives. Place where old books, manuscripts, records, etc. are kept.

Archivist /árkəvist/. Custodian of archives.

Arcifinious /ársəfíniyəs/. (Lat. arcifinius or arcifinalis; Fr. arcifinie). Pertaining to landed estates having natural boundaries, such as woods, mountains, or rivers. The owners of such estates, unlike the owners of "agri limitati" (q.v.), have the right of alluvion. Also, having a frontier forming a natural defense.

Arcta et salva custodia /árktə èt sálvə kəstówdíyə/. Lat. In strict (or close) and safe custody or keeping. When a defendant is arrested on a capias ad satisfaciendum (ca.sq.), he is to be kept arcta et salva custodi. 3 Bl.Comm. 415.

Ardent spirits. Synonymous with distilled or spirituous liquors and, sometimes, with intoxicating liquors generally, though the term is properly applied only to liquors obtained by distillation, such as rum, whiskey, brandy, and gin. Sarlls v. U. S., 152 U.S. 570, 572, 14 S.Ct. 720, 38 L.Ed. 556.

Ardour /árdər/. In old English law, an incendiary; a house burner. An arsonist.

Area. A surface, a territory, a region. Any plane surface, also the inclosed space on which a building stands. A particular extent of space or surface or one serving a special purpose. In the civil law, a vacant space in a city; a place not built upon. For "common area", see Common.

Area bargaining. Negotiation of collective bargaining agreement between a union and more than one employer within a given geographical area.

Area variance. In zoning law, a variance which authorizes deviations from restrictions upon construction and placement of buildings and structures which are employed to serve permitted statutory use. Biens v. City of Dayton, 29 Or.App. 761, 566 P.2d 904, 919. See also Variance (Zoning).

Area wide bargaining. See Area bargaining.

A remenaunt /à rəméynənt/. Forever.

A rendre /à rándər/. Fr. To render, to yield. That which is to be rendered, yielded, or paid. Profits à rendre comprehend rents and services.

Arg. An abbreviation of arguendo.

Argent. In heraldry, silver.

Argentarius /'arjénteriyəs/ (pl., argentarii /'arjénteriyáy/). In the Roman law, a money lender or broker; a dealer in money; a banker. Argentarium, the instrument of the loan, similar to the modern word "bond" or "note."

Argentarius miles /'arjénteriyəs máyliyz/. A money porter in the English exchequer, who carried the money from the lower to the upper exchequer to be examined and tested.

Argenteus /arjéntiyəs/. An old French coin, similar to the English shilling.

Argentum /arjéntəm/. Silver; money.

Argentum album /arjéntəm élbəm/. Bullion; uncoined silver; common silver coin; silver coin worn smooth.

Argentum dei /arjéntəm diyay/. God's money; God's penny; money given as earnest in making a bargain.

Arguendo /'argyuéndow/. In arguing; in the course of the argument. A statement or observation made by a judge or attorney as a matter of argument or hypothetical illustration, is said to be made arguendo, or in the abbreviated form, arg.

Argument. An effort to establish belief by a course of reasoning. In rhetoric and logic, an inference drawn from premises, the truth of which is indisputable, or at least highly probable. See also Oral argument.

Argument by counsel. Remarks addressed by attorney to judge or jury on the merits of case or on points of law. Oral presentation to appellate court in which attorney's brief is argued; generally limited in time, order, and content by court rule (see e.g. Fed.R.App.P. 34). See Opening statement of counsel.

Argument to jury. Closing remarks of attorney to jury in which he strives to persuade jury of merits of case; generally limited in time by rules of court. The argument is not evidence. See also Closing argument.

Argumentative. Characterized by argument; controversial; given to debate or dispute. A pleading is so called in which the statement on which the pleader relies is implied instead of being expressed, or where it contains, in addition to proper statements of facts, reasoning or arguments upon those facts and their relation to the matter in dispute, such as should be reserved for presentation at the trial.

Argumentative instruction. A jury instruction which singles out or unduly emphasizes a particular issue, theory, or defense, or one which tends to invade the province of the jury with regard to the weight, probative effect, or sufficiency of the evidence or the inferences to be drawn therefrom.

Argumentative question. A faulty form of examination of witness by propounding a question which suggests answer in a manner favorable to party who advances the question or which contains a statement in place of a question. See Leading question.

Argumentum ab auctoritate est fortissimum in lege /'argyaméntəm əb októrətéyiy ést fortisəməm in líjjiy/.

An argument from authority is the strongest in the law. "The book cases are the best proof of what the law is."

Argumentum ab impossibili valet in lege /'argyaméntəm əb imposíbalay vélət in líjjiy/. An argument drawn from an impossibility is forcible in law.

Argumentum ab inconuenienti /'argyaméntəm əb ínkənvíyniyéntay/. An argument arising from the inconvenience which the proposed construction of the law would create.

Where the constitutionality of a statute is concerned, it is only when the question is close and doubtful that this doctrine will be applied and consideration taken of the consequences of declaring the statute unconstitutional. Calhoun County v. Early County, 205 Ga. 169, 52 S.E.2d 854; Smith v. City Council of Augusta, 203 Ga. 511, 47 S.E.2d 582, 587.

Argumentum ab inconuenienti est validum in lege; quia lex non permittit aliquod inconueniens /'argyaméntəm əb ínkənvíyniyéntay ést vélədəm in líjjiy; kwáyə léks non pərmítət ələkwođ ínkənvíyniyenz/. An argument drawn from what is inconvenient is good in law, because the law will not permit any inconvenience.

Argumentum ab inconuenienti plurimum valet [est validum] in lege /'argyaméntəm əb ínkənvíyniyéntay pl(y)úrəməm vélət in líjjiy/'ést vélədəm'/. An argument drawn from inconvenience is of the greatest weight [is forcible] in law. If there be in any deed or instrument equivocal expressions, and great inconvenience must necessarily follow from one construction, it is strong to show that such construction is not according to the true intention of the grantor; but where there is no equivocal expression in the instrument, and the words used admit only of one meaning, arguments of inconvenience prove only want of foresight in the grantor.

Argumentum a communiter accidentibus in jure frequens est /'argyaméntəm əy kəmyúwnətər əksədéntəbəs in júriy friýkwenz ést/. An argument drawn from things commonly happening is frequent in law.

Argumentum a divisione est fortissimum in jure /'argyaméntəm əy divízhíyówniy ést fortisəməm in júriy/. An argument from division [of the subject] is of the greatest force in law.

Argumentum a majori ad minus negative non valet; valet e converso /'argyaméntəm əy məjórəy əd máynəs negətáyviy nòn vélət; vélət iy kənvórsov/. An argument from the greater to the less is of no force negatively; affirmatively (or conversely) it is.

Argumentum a simili valet in lege /'argyaméntəm əy símləy vélət in líjjiy/. An argument from a like case (from analogy) is good in law.

Aribannum /'ærəbənəm/. In feudal law, a fine for not setting out to join the army in obedience to the summons of the king.

Arierban, or arriere-ban /'ær(i)yéy bán/. An edict of the ancient kings of France and Germany, commanding all their vassals, the noblesse, and the vassals' vassals, to enter the army, or forfeit their estates on refusal. See Arrier ban.

Arimanni /ärəmáynay/. A mediæval term for a class of agricultural owners of small allodial farms, which they cultivated in connection with larger farms belonging to their lords, paying rent and service for the latter, and being under the protection of their superiors. Military tenants holding lands from the emperor.

Arise. To spring up, originate, to come into being or notice; to become operative, sensible, visible, or audible; to present itself. Bergin v. Temple, 111 Mont. 539, 111 P.2d 286, 289, 290.

A cause of action or suit "arises", so as to start running of limitation, when party has a right to apply to proper tribunal for relief, Washington Security Co. v. State, 9 Wash.2d 197, 114 P.2d 965, 967; and it arises at time when and place where act is unlawfully omitted or committed. State ex rel. Birnamwood Oil Co. v. Shaughnessy, 243 Wis. 306, 10 N.W.2d 292, 295. See Limitation (Statute of limitations).

Arise under. An action "arises under" the laws of the United States, for purposes of federal question jurisdiction, if, and only if, the complaint seeks a remedy expressly granted by a federal statute or if resolution of the issue requires construction of the statute or if the statute embodies a distinct policy which requires that federal legal principles control its disposition. Comtronics, Inc. v. Puerto Rico Tel. Co., D.C.Puerto Rico, 409 F.Supp. 800, 813.

A case "arises" under the Constitution or a law of the United States, so as to be within the jurisdiction of a federal court, whenever its correct decision depends on the construction of either. Blease v. Safety Transit Co., C.C.A.S.C., 50 F.2d 852, 854.

Arising out of and in the course of own employment. Workers' compensation acts provide for compensating an employee whose injury is one "arising out of and in the course of the employment." These words describe an injury directly and naturally resulting in a risk reasonably incident to the employment. Trudenich v. Marshall, D.C.Wash., 34 F.Supp. 486, 488. They mean that there must be some causal connection between the conditions under which the employee worked and the injury which he received.

The words "arising out of employment" refer to the origin of the cause of the injury, while "course of employment" refers to the time, place, and circumstances under which the injury occurred. An injury arises "out of" employment if it arises out of nature, conditions, obligations and incidents of the employment. Newman v. Bennett, 212 Kan. 562, 512 P.2d 497, 501.

See also Course of employment; In the course of employment.

Aristocracy. A government in which a class of persons, believed to be superior, rules supreme. A form of government which is lodged in a minority consisting of those believed to be best qualified; a privileged class of the people; nobles, dignitaries, people of wealth and station.

Aristo-democracy. A form of government where the power is divided between the nobles (or the more powerful) and the people.

ARM. Adjustable Rate Mortgage. See Mortgage.

Arma /ärmə/. Lat. Arms; weapons, offensive and defensive; armor; arms or cognizances of families.

Arma dare /ärmə dériy/. To dub or make a knight.

Arma in armatos sumere jura sinunt /ärmə in arméy-tos s(y)úwməriy júrə sáynt/. The laws permit the taking up of arms against armed persons.

Arma moluta /ärmə məl(y)úwtə/. Sharp weapons that cut, in contradistinction to such as are blunt, which only break or bruise.

Arma reversata /ärmə riyvərséy-tə/. Reversed arms, a punishment for a traitor or felon.

Armata vis /arméy-tə vis/. In the civil law, armed force.

Armed. Furnished or equipped with weapons of offense or defense. People ex rel. Griffin v. Hunt, 150 Misc. 163, 270 N.Y.S. 248, 254.

Armed neutrality. An attitude of neutrality between belligerents which the neutral state is prepared to maintain by armed force if necessary.

Armed peace. A situation in which two or more nations, while actually at peace with each other, are armed for possible or probable hostilities.

Armed robbery. An aggravated form of robbery in which the defendant is armed with a dangerous weapon, though it is not necessary to prove that he used the weapon to effectuate the robbery. The taking of property from person or presence of another by use of force or by threatening use of force while armed with a dangerous weapon. People v. Redding, 43 Ill.App. 1024, 2 Ill.Dec. 784, 357 N.E.2d 1227, 1230.

Armiger /ärməjər/. An armor-bearer; an esquire. A title in old English law of dignity belonging to gentlemen authorized to bear arms. In its earlier meaning, a servant who carried the arms of a knight. A tenant by scutage; a servant or valet; applied, also, to the higher servants in convents.

Arming one's self. Equipping one's self with a weapon or weapons.

Armiscara /ärməskérə/. An ancient mode of punishment, which was to carry a saddle at the back as a token of subjection.

Armistice. A suspending or cessation of hostilities between belligerent nations or forces for a considerable time. An armistice differs from a mere "suspension of arms" (q.v.) in that the latter is concluded for very brief periods and for local military purposes only, whereas an armistice not only covers a longer period, but is agreed upon for political purposes. It is said to be general if it relates to the whole area of the war, and partial if it relates to only a portion of that area. Partial armistices are sometimes called truces (q.v.) but there is no hard and fast distinction.

Arm of the sea. A portion of the sea projecting inland, in which the tide ebbs and flows. It is considered as extending as far into the interior of a country as the water of fresh rivers is propelled backwards by the ingress of the tide. See Fauces terræ.

Armorial bearings /armóriyál bérinqz/. In English law, a device depicted on the (now imaginary) shield of one of the nobility, of which gentry is the lowest degree. The criterion of nobility is the bearing of arms, or armorial bearings, received from ancestry.

Armorum appellatione, non solum scuta et gladii et galeæ, sed et fustes et lapides continentur /armóram æpələyshiyówniy, nòn sówłəm sk(y)úwtə èt gládiyay et gáliiy, sèd et fástiyz et ləpədiyaz kontánéntər/. Under the name of arms are included, not only shields and swords and helmets, but also clubs and stones.

Armory. A building where arms, ammunition, and instruments of war are stored.

Arms. Anything that a man wears for his defense, or takes in his hands as a weapon. See also Bear arms.

Arms, law of. Agreements (as established e.g. by Geneva Convention) which give precepts and rules concerning conditions of war; e.g. treatment of prisoners, wounded, etc.

Arm's length transaction. Said of a transaction negotiated by unrelated parties, each acting in his or her own self interest; the basis for a fair market value determination. A transaction in good faith in the ordinary course of business by parties with independent interests. Commonly applied in areas of taxation when there are dealings between related corporations, e.g. parent and subsidiary. Inecto, Inc. v. Higgins, D.C.N.Y., 21 F.Supp. 418. The standard under which unrelated parties, each acting in his or her own best interest, would carry out a particular transaction. For example, if a corporation sells property to its sole shareholder for $10,000, in testing whether $10,000 is an "arm's length" price it must be ascertained for how much the corporation could have sold the property to a disinterested third party in a bargained transaction.

Arms, right to. Right guaranteed by Second Amendment, U.S. Constitution, to keep and bear arms. This right does not, however, permit a person to carry gun in violation of state or federal gun law. Com. v. Jackson, Mass., 344 N.E.2d 166.

Army. Armed forces of a nation intended for military service on land.

Regular army. The permanent military establishment, which is maintained both in peace and war according to law. Compare Militia.

Around. In the vicinity of; near or close-by.

Arpen, arpent, arpennus. A civil and French measure of land equal to about an acre.

Arpentator /àrpəntéytər/. A measurer or surveyor of land.

Arra /árə/. In the civil law, earnest; earnest-money; evidence of a completed bargain. Used of a contract of marriage, as well as any other. Spelled, also, Arrha, Arrhæ, Arræ. Cf. Arles.

Arraign /əhréyn/. In old English law, to order; or set in order; to conduct in an orderly manner; to prepare for trial. To arraign an assise was to cause the tenant to be called to make the plaint, and to set the cause in such order as the tenant might be enforced to answer thereunto. See Arraignment.

Arraignment /əhréynmənt/. Procedure whereby the accused is brought before the court to plead to the criminal charge against him in the indictment or information. The charge is read to him and he is asked to plead "guilty" or "not guilty" or, where permitted, "nolo contendere." State v. McCotter, 288 N.C. 227, 217 S.E.2d 525, 529.

Arraignment shall be conducted in open court and shall consist of reading the indictment or information to the defendant or stating to him the substance of the charge and calling on him to plead thereto. He shall be given a copy of the indictment or information before he is called upon to plead. Fed.R.Crim.P. 10.

See also Information; Preliminary hearing; Plea.

Arraigns, clerk of. In old English law, an assistant to the clerk of assise.

Arrangement with creditors. A plan of a debtor for the settlement, satisfaction, or extension of the time of payment of his debts. Chapter 11 of the federal Bankruptcy Code provides for a device whereby, under the protection and supervision of the court, a financially troubled business may work out an agreement with its creditors under a reorganization plan permitting it to stay in business, rather than going bankrupt. Arrangements of individual debtors with their creditors are provided for under Chapter 13 of the Code. See also Bankruptcy proceedings (Business reorganizations; Wage earner's plan); Composition with creditors.

Array /əhréy/. The whole body of persons summoned to serve as jurors, from which the final trial jury is selected. Also, the list of jurors impaneled. See Jury panel.

Arrears, arrearages. Money which is overdue and unpaid; e.g. overdue mortgage or rent payments.

Term used to describe cumulative preferred stock dividends that have not been declared on time.

Arrent /əhrént/. In old English law, to let or demise at a fixed rent. Particularly used with reference to the public domain or crown lands; as where a license was granted to inclose land in a forest with a low hedge and a ditch, under a yearly rent, or where an encroachment, originally a purpresture, was allowed to remain on the fixing and payment of a suitable compensation to the public for its maintenance.

Arrest. To deprive a person of his liberty by legal authority. Taking, under real or assumed authority, custody of another for the purpose of holding or detaining him to answer a criminal charge or civil demand. State v. Ferraro, 81 N.J.Super. 213, 195 A.2d 227; People v. Wipfler, 37 Ill.App.3d 400, 346 N.E.2d 41, 44.

Arrest involves the authority to arrest, the assertion of that authority with the intent to effect an arrest, and the restraint of the person to be arrested. Village of Hoffman Estates v. Union Oil Co. of California, 13 Ill.Dec. 277, 370 N.E.2d 1304, 1308. All that is required for an "arrest" is some act by officer indicating his intention to detain or take person into custody and thereby subject that person to the actual control and will of the officer; no formal declaration of arrest is required. Com. v. Brown, 230 Pa.Super. 214, 326 A.2d 906, 907.

See also Booking; Citizen's arrest; Custodial arrest; False arrest; Lawful arrest; Probable cause; Reasonable grounds; Warrantless arrest.

Citizen's arrest. See Citizen's arrest.

Civil arrest. The apprehension of a person by virtue of a lawful authority to answer the demand against him in a civil action. Also includes arrest of a ship or cargo in maritime in rem actions. Fed.R. Civil P., Supp. Admir.R. C(3), D.

Parol arrest. One ordered by a judge or magistrate from the bench, without written complaint or other proceedings, of a person who is present before him, and which is executed on the spot; as in case of breach of the peace in open court.

Privilege from arrest. See Privilege.

Rearrest. Right of officer to take without warrant one who has escaped after arrest, or violated parole, or failed to respond to bond for appearance.

Warrantless arrest. Seizure of a person without warrant but based on probable cause that he has committed felony. May also be made for commission of misdemeanor amounting to breach of peace in presence of officer. Wong Sun v. U. S., 371 U.S. 471, 83 S.Ct. 407, 9 L.Ed.2d 441.

Warrant of arrest. See Warrant.

Arrestandis bonis ne dissipentur /əˈrɛstəndəs bɔːnəs ni dɪsɪpɛntər/. In old English law, a writ which lay for a person whose cattle or goods were taken by another, who during a contest was likely to make away with them, and who had not the ability to render satisfaction.

Arrestando ipsum qui pecuniam recepit /əˈrɛstəndɔw ɪpsɔw kwɪ pɛkjuːniyəm rɛsɪpɛt/. In old English law, a writ which issued for apprehending a person who had taken the king's prest money to serve in the wars, and then hid himself in order to avoid going.

Arrestatio /əˈrɛstɛjš(i)ɔw/. In old English law, an arrest (q.v.).

Arresto facto super bonis mercatorum alienigenorum /əˈrɛstɔw fæktɔw s(y)úwpər bɔːnəs mɛrkətɔrəm əliɪjɪnəjɔnɔrəm/. In old English law, a writ against the goods of aliens found within this kingdom, in recompense of goods taken from a denizen in a foreign country, after denial of restitution. The ancient civilians called it "clarigatio," but by the moderns it is termed "reprisalia."

Arrest of inquest. Pleading in arrest of taking the inquest upon a former issue, and showing cause why an inquest should not be taken.

Arrest of judgment. The act of staying a judgment, or refusing to render judgment in an action at law and in criminal cases, after verdict, for some matter intrinsic appearing on the face of the record, which would render the judgment, if given, erroneous or reversible. The court on motion of a defendant shall arrest judgment if the indictment or information does not charge an offense or if the court was without jurisdiction of the offense charged. Fed.R.Crim.P. 34.

Arrest record. Official form completed by police department when a person is arrested. Also, cumulative record of instances in which a person has been arrested, commonly maintained by probation office and useful to judge in setting sentences for second, third, etc. offenders.

Arrest warrant. See Warrant.

Arret /arét/aréy/. Fr. A judgment, sentence, or decree of a court of competent jurisdiction. The term is derived from the French law, and is used in Canada and Louisiana.

Saisie arrêt is an attachment of property in the hands of a third person.

Arretted /əhrétəd/. Convened before a judge and charged with a crime.

Arrhabe /əhréybow/. In the civil law, earnest money given to bind a bargain.

Arrhæ /əriy/. In the civil law, money or other valuable things given by the buyer to the seller, for the purpose of evidencing the contract; earnest money. See Arra; Pot-de-vin.

Arrhæ sponsalitiæ were the earnest or present given by one betrothed to the other at the betrothal.

Arriage and carriage /əˈrɛj ən kɛrɛj/. In English and Scotch law, indefinite services formerly demandable from tenants, but prohibited by statute.

Arrier ban /əri(y)ər bæŋ/. In feudal law, a second summons to join the lord, addressed to those who had neglected the first. A summons of the inferiors or vassals of the lord. See Arierban.

Arriere fief, or fee /əri(y)ər fiy(f)/. In feudal law, a fief or fee dependent on a superior one; an inferior fief granted by a vassal of the king, out of the fief held by him.

Arriere vassal /əri(y)ər vɛsəl/. In feudal law, the vassal of a vassal.

Arrival. To come to, or reach, a particular place. The attainment of an end or state. The act of arriving.

In marine insurance, arrival of a vessel means an arrival for purposes of business, requiring an entry and clearance and stay at the port so long as to require some of the acts connected with business, and not merely touching at a port for advices, or to ascertain the state of the market, or being driven in by an adverse wind and sailing again as soon as it changes. F. S. Royster Guano Co. v. U. S., C.C.A.Va., 18 F.2d 469, 470.

Arrogation. In the civil law, the adoption of a person who was of full age or sui juris.

Arsæ et pensatæ /ársiy èt pønsétyiy/. Burnt and weighed. A term formerly applied to money tested or assayed by fire and by weighing.

Arsenals /ársønəlz/. Store-houses for arms; dock-yards, magazines, and other military stores.

Arser in le main /arséy òn læ mæn/. Fr. Burning in the hand. The punishment by burning or branding the left thumb of lay offenders who claimed and were allowed the benefit of clergy, so as to distinguish them in case they made a second claim of clergy.

Arson. At common law, the malicious burning of the house of another. This definition, however, has been broadened by state statutes and criminal codes. For example, the Model Penal Code, § 220.1(1), provides that a person is guilty of arson, a felony of the second degree, if he starts a fire or causes an explosion with the purpose of: (a) destroying a building or occupied structure of another; or (b) destroying or damaging any property, whether his own or another's, to collect insurance for such loss. Other statutes include the destruction of property by other means; e.g., explosion.

In several states, this crime is divided into arson in the first, second, and third degrees, the first degree including the burning of an inhabited dwelling-house in the nighttime; the second degree, the burning (at night) of a building other than a dwelling-house, but so situated with reference to a dwelling-house as to endanger it; the third degree, the burning of any building or structure not the subject of arson in the first or second degree, or the burning of property, his own or another's with intent to defraud or prejudice an insurer thereof. See Aggravated arson, below.

Aggravated arson. The burning or blowing up of property when the actor foresees or anticipates the presence of persons at site, or in such close proximity thereto, so that their lives might be endangered by the act. State v. Bonfanti, 254 La. 877, 227 So.2d 916, 918.

Arson clause. Clause in insurance policy voiding coverage if fire is set under direction or by insured.

Arsura /ars(y)úrs/. The trial of money by heating it after it was coined. The loss of weight occasioned by this process. A pound was said to burn so many pence (tot ardere denarios) as it lost by the fire. The term is now obsolete.

Art. Systematic application of knowledge or skill in effecting a desired result; also an employment, occupation or business requiring such knowledge or skill; a craft, as industrial arts.

In the law of patents, this term means a useful art or manufacture which is beneficial and which is described with exactness in its mode of operation. Such an art can be protected only in the mode and to the extent thus described. It is synonymous with process or method when used to produce a useful result, and may be either a force applied, a mode of application, or the specific treatment of a specific object, and must produce physical effects. Emmett v. Metals Processing Corporation, C.C. A.Ariz., 118 F.2d 796, 798.

In seduction cases, "art" means the skillful and systematic arrangement of means for the attainment of a desired end.

Arteriosclerosis. Abnormal thickening and hardening of the arteries.

Artesian basin. A body of water more or less compact, moving through soils with more or less resistance.

Arthel, ardhel, or arddelio. In old English law, to avouch; as if a man were taken with stolen goods in his possession he was allowed a lawful arthel, i.e., vouchee, to clear him of the felony.

Article. A separate and distinct part of an instrument or writing; one of several things presented as connected or forming a whole. A particular object or substance, a material thing or a class of things. Material or tangible object. See Articles.

In English ecclesiastical law, a complaint exhibited in the ecclesiastical court by way of libel. The different parts of a libel, responsive allegation, or counter allegation in the ecclesiastical courts.

Articled clerk. In English law, a clerk bound to serve in the office of a solicitor in consideration of being instructed in the profession. This is the general acceptance of the term; but it is said to be equally applicable to other trades and professions.

Articles. A connected series of propositions; a system of rules. The subdivisions of a document, code, book, etc. A specification of distinct matters agreed upon or established by authority or requiring judicial action.

A statute; as having its provisions articulately expressed under distinct heads.

A system of rules established by legal authority; as articles of war, articles of the navy, articles of faith. (See infra.)

A contractual document executed between parties, containing stipulations or terms of agreement; as articles of agreement, articles of partnership.

A naval term meaning employment contract. South Chicago Coal & Dock Co. v. Bassett, C.C.A.Ill., 104 F.2d 522, 526.

In chancery practice, a formal written statement of objections filed by a party, after depositions have been taken, showing ground for discrediting the witnesses.

In ecclesiastical law, a complaint in the form of a libel exhibited to an ecclesiastical court. See Article.

Articles of agreement. A written memorandum of the terms of an agreement. See Memorandum.

Articles of amendment. Terms and conditions of corporate management enacted subsequent to articles of incorporation. See Articles of incorporation.

Articles of apprenticeship. Written agreement between master and minor under which minor agrees to work for master for stated period of time in return for instruction in a trade by the master.

Articles of association. Basic instrument filed with the appropriate governmental agency (e.g. Sec. of State) on the incorporation of a business. It sets forth the purposes of the corporation, its duration, the rights and liabilities of shareholders and directors, classes of stock, etc. Such document is referred to as "articles of incorporation" in many states. Certificate (similar to one of incorporation) used by non-stock companies such as charitable and mutual corporations. Articles of association are to be distinguished from a charter, in that the latter is a grant of power from the sovereign or the legislature. See Articles of incorporation; Articles of partnership; Certificate of incorporation.

Articles of Confederation. The name of the instrument embodying the compact made between the thirteen original states of the Union, operative from March 1, 1781 to March 4, 1789, before the adoption of the present Constitution.

Articles of dissolution. Document required to be filed with secretary of state (or other designated official) after corporation has settled all its debts and distributed all of its net assets prior to dissolution. See, e.g., Rev. Model Bus. Corp. Act § 14.03.

Articles of faith. In English law, the system of faith of the Church of England, more commonly known as the "Thirty-Nine Articles." Drafted in 1562.

Articles of impeachment. A formal written allegation of the causes for impeachment; answering the same office as an indictment in an ordinary criminal proceeding. See Impeachment.

Articles of incorporation. The basic instrument filed with the appropriate governmental agency (e.g., Sec. of State) on the incorporation of a business; sometimes also called "certificate of incorporation," "articles of organization," "articles of association," or other similar name. The contents thereof are prescribed in the general incorporation statutes (but commonly include the corporation's name, period of existence, purpose and power, authorized number of shares, classes of stock, and other conditions of operation). See e.g., Rev. Model Bus. Corp. Act § 2.02. In many jurisdictions official forms are prescribed. In most jurisdictions, corporate existence begins with the filing, usually with the secretary of state, of the articles or certificate of incorporation. In some jurisdictions, duplicate articles of incorporation are filed, and corporate existence begins with the issue of a formal certificate appended thereto called a "certificate of incorporation." Various conditions precedent to doing business might also be imposed. See Articles of association; Certificate of incorporation.

Articles of merger, consolidation, or share exchange. Document filed with Secretary of State setting forth terms and conditions of merger consolidation, or share exchange. See e.g., Rev. Model Bus. Corp. Act § 11.05.

Articles of partnership. A written agreement by which the parties enter into a partnership upon the terms and conditions therein stipulated.

Articles of the clergy. The title of a statute passed in the ninth year of Edward II for the purpose of adjusting and settling the great questions of cognizance then existing between the ecclesiastical and temporal courts.

Articles of the Navy. Articles (statutes) for the government of the Navy.

Articles of the peace. In English law, a complaint made or exhibited to a court by a person who makes oath that he is in fear of death or bodily harm from some one who has threatened or attempted to do him injury. The court may thereupon order the person complained of to find sureties for the peace, and, in default, may commit him to prison. This is known as "being bound over to keep the peace". Such articles were formerly issued in the High Court; but since 1938 the procedure has only been available in courts of summary jurisdiction. Now covered by Magistrates' Courts Act, 1980, §§ 115, 116.

Articles of union. In English law, articles agreed to, A.D. 1707, by the parliaments of England and Scotland, for the union of the two kingdoms. They were twenty-five in number.

Articles of war. Codes framed for the government of a nation's army or navy; e.g. Code of Military Justice.

Articulated pleading. The stating in separate paragraphs, separately numbered, of each material fact of the petition, complaint, answer, etc. See e.g. Fed. R. Civil P. 10(b).

Articulately /artikyələtli/. Article by article; by distinct clauses or articles; by separate propositions.

Articuli /artikyəlay/. Lat. Articles; items or heads. A term applied to some old English statutes, and occasionally to treatises.

Articuli cleri /artikyəlay kliray/. "Articles of the clergy" (q.v.). See Circumspecte agatis.

Articuli de moneta /artikyəlay diy məniytə/. Articles concerning money, or the currency. The title of a statute passed in the twentieth year of Edward I.

Articuli magnæ chartæ /artikyəlay məgniɪ kærtiy/. The preliminary articles, forty-nine in number, upon which the Magna Charta was founded.

Articuli super chartas /artikyəlay s(y)ūwpər kærtəs/. Articles upon the charters. The title of a statute passed in the twenty-eighth year of Edward I, st. 3, confirming or enlarging many particulars in Magna Charta, and the Charta de Foresta, and appointing a method for enforce-ing the observance of them, and for the punishment of offenders.

Articulo mortis /artikyəlow mɔrtəs/. (Or more commonly in articulo mortis.) At the point of death; in the article of death, which means at the moment of death; in the last struggle or agony.

Artifice /ártəfəs/. An ingenious contrivance or device of some kind, and, when used in a bad sense, it corresponds with trick or fraud. It implies craftiness and deceit, and imports some element of moral obliquity. See also Scheme or artifice to defraud; Sham.

Artificer /artifəsər/. One who buys goods in order to reduce them, by his own art or industry, into other forms, and then to sell them.

One who is actually and personally engaged or employed to do work of a mechanical or physical character, not including one who takes contracts for labor to be performed by others, i.e. a mechanic or workman as contrasted from the employer of such. One who is master of his art, and whose employment consists chiefly in manual labor. A craftsman; an artisan.

Artificial. As opposed to "natural", means created or produced by man. California Casualty Indemnity Exchange v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, 13 Cal.2d 529, 90 P.2d 289. Created by art, or by law; existing only by force of or in contemplation of law. Humanly contrived. A will or contract is described as "artificially" drawn if it is couched in apt and technical phrases and exhibits a scientific arrangement.

Artificial force. In patent law, a natural force so transformed in character or energies by human power as to possess new capabilities of action; this transformation of a natural force into a force practically new involves a true inventive act.

Artificial insemination. Method by which a female is impregnated through injection of semen from a donor other than her husband; and other than through sexual intercourse.

Artificially developed water. Artificially developed water, to which one may acquire right superior to adjudicated rights of earlier appropriators of natural waters of stream into which he turns it, is water produced and contributed by him, which would not have reached stream if left to flow in accordance with natural laws. In re Nix, 96 Colo. 540, 45 P.2d 176, 178.

Artificial persons. Persons created and devised by human laws for the purposes of society and government, as distinguished from natural persons. Corporations are examples of artificial persons.

Artificial presumptions. Also called "legal presumptions;" those which derive their force and effect from the law, rather than their natural tendency to produce belief. See Presumption.

Artificial succession. The succession between predecessors and successors in a corporation aggregate or sole.

Artificial water course. See Water course.

Artisan. One skilled in some kind of trade, craft, or art requiring manual dexterity; e.g. a carpenter, plumber, tailor, mechanic.

Artisan's lien. A possessory lien given to a person who has made improvements and added value to another person's personal property as security for payment for services performed. The statutory right of an artisan to keep possession of the object that he has worked on until he has been paid for such labor.

Art, words of. Words used in a technical sense; words scientifically fit to carry the sense assigned them.

A rubro ad nigrum /èy rúwbrow æd náygrəm/. Lat. From the red to the black; from the rubric or title of a statute (which, anciently, was in red letters), to its body, which was in the ordinary black.

Arura /ə'rúərə/. An old English law term, signifying a day's work in plowing.

AS or A/S or A/s. Account sales; also after sight, at sight.

As. Lat. In the Roman and civil law, a pound weight; and a coin originally weighing a pound, (called also "libra") divided into twelve parts, called "unciae". The parts were reckoned as follows: uncia, 1 ounce; sextans, 2 ounces; triens, 3 ounces; quadrans, 4 ounces; quin-cunx, 5 ounces; semis, 6 ounces; septunx, 7 ounces; bes, 8 ounces; dodrans, 9 ounces; dextans, 10 ounces; deunx, 11 ounces. Frequently applied in the civil law to inheritances; the whole inheritance being termed "as", and its several proportionate parts "sextans", "quadrans", etc. The term "as", and the multiples of its unciae, were also used to denote the rates of interest. 2 Bl.Comm. 462, note m.

Any integral sum, subject to division in certain proportions.

As. Used as an adverb, etc., means like, similar to, of the same kind, in the same manner, in the manner in which. It may also have the meaning of because, since, or it being the case that; in the character or under the name of with significance of in degree; to that extent; so far.

As against; as between. These words contrast the relative position of two persons, with a tacit reference to a different relationship between one of them and a third person. For instance, the temporary bailee of a chattel is entitled to it as between himself and a stranger, or as against a stranger; reference being made by this form of words to the rights of the bailor.

Ascend. To go up; to pass up or upwards; to go or pass in the ascending line.

Ascendants. Persons with whom one is related in the ascending line; one's parents, grandparents, great-grandparents, etc.

Asphyxia carbonica /æsfiksijə kərbónəkə/. A suffocation from inhalation of coal gas, water gas, or carbon monoxide.

Asphyxiation /æsfiksijéyʃən/. A state of asphyxia.

Asportation /æspɔrtéyʃən/. The removal of things from one place to another. The carrying away of something; in kidnapping, the carrying away of the victim; in larceny, the carrying away of the victim's property. The carrying away of goods; one of the circumstances requisite to constitute the offense of larceny. The distance away which the property must be moved to constitute the crime need not be substantial; a slight distance will do. Smith v. United States, C.A.Nev., 291 F.2d 220. But the entire property must be moved.

Asportation was an essential element of common-law kidnapping.

Asportavit /æspɔrtéyvat/. He carried away. Sometimes used as a noun to denote a carrying away. An "asportavit of personal chattels".

ASPR. Armed Services Procurement Regulations. See also Federal Acquisition Regulations.

ASR. Accounting Series Release.

Assart /əsárt/. In English law, the offense committed in the forest, by pulling up the trees by the roots that are thickets and coverts for deer, and making the ground plain as arable land. It differs from waste, in that waste is the cutting down of coverts which may grow again, whereas assart is the plucking them up by the roots and utterly destroying them, so that they can never afterward grow. This is not an offense if done with license to convert forest into tillage ground.

Assart rents. Rents paid to the Crown for assorted lands.

Assassination /əsəsnéyʃən/. Murder committed, usually, though not necessarily, for hire, without direct provocation or cause of resentment given to the murderer by the person upon whom the crime is committed; though an assassination of a public figure might be done by one acting alone for personal, social or political reasons. It is a federal crime, punishable as a homicide, to assassinate the President, President-elect, Vice President, or if there is no Vice President, the officer next in order of succession to the office of President, the Vice-President-elect, or any individual who is acting as President under the Constitution. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1751. In addition, advocating the overthrow of the government by assassination of any officer of such government is a crime under 18 U.S.C.A. § 2385.

Assault. Any willful attempt or threat to inflict injury upon the person of another, when coupled with an apparent present ability so to do, and any intentional display of force such as would give the victim reason to fear or expect immediate bodily harm, constitutes an assault. An assault may be committed without actually touching, or striking, or doing bodily harm, to the person of another. State v. Murphy, 7 Wash.App. 505, 500 P.2d 1276, 1281.

Frequently used to describe illegal force which is technically a battery. For crime of assault victim need not be apprehensive of fear if the outward gesture is menacing and defendant intends to harm, though for tort of assault, element of victim's apprehension is required. Com. v. Slaney, 345 Mass. 135, 185 N.E.2d 919. It is unlawful attempt to commit a battery. People v. Lopez, 271 C.A.2d 754, 77 Cal.Rptr. 59, 63.

In some jurisdictions degrees of the offense are established as first, second and even third degree assault.

See also Aggravated assault; Aggravated battery; Battery; Conditional assault; Felonious assault; Fresh complaint rule; Malicious assault with deadly weapon.

Aggravated assault. One committed with the intention of committing some additional crime; or one attended with circumstances of peculiar outrage or atrocity. This class includes assault with a dangerous or deadly weapon (q.v.).

A person is guilty of aggravated assault if he: (a) attempts to cause serious bodily injury to another, or causes such injury purposely, knowingly or recklessly under circumstances manifesting extreme indifference to the value of human life; or (b) attempts to cause or purposely or knowingly causes bodily injury to another with a deadly weapon. Model Penal Code, § 211.1.

Simple assault. An assault unaccompanied by any circumstances of aggravation. A person is guilty of simple assault if he (a) attempts to cause or purposely, knowingly or recklessly causes bodily injury to another; or (b) negligently causes bodily injury to another with a deadly weapon; or (c) attempts by physical menace to put another in fear of imminent serious bodily injury. Model Penal Code, § 211.1. An unlawful attempt coupled with present ability to commit violent injury on person of another. People v. Gholston, 164 Colo. 58, 432 P.2d 636, 637. See also Menace.

Assault and battery. Any unlawful touching of another which is without justification or excuse. It is both a tort, Trogun v. Fruchtman, 58 Wis.2d 569, 207 N.W.2d 297, as well as a crime, Scruggs v. State, Ind.App., 317 N.E.2d 807, 809. The two crimes differ from each other in that battery requires physical contact of some sort (bodily injury or offensive touching), whereas assault is committed without physical contact. In most jurisdictions, statutes have created aggravated assaults and batteries, punishable as felonies, and worded in various ways. See Battery.

Assault with dangerous or deadly weapon. An unlawful attempt or offer to do bodily harm without justification or excuse by use of any instrument calculated to do harm or cause death. An aggravated form of assault as distinguished from a simple assault; e.g. pointing loaded gun at one is an assault with dangerous weapon. State v. Gregory, 108 Ariz. 445, 501 P.2d 387, 390.

Assault with intent to commit manslaughter. An unlawful assault committed in such manner and with such means as would have resulted in commission of crime of manslaughter if person assaulted had died from effects of assault.

Assault with intent to commit murder. To constitute this assault, specific intent to kill, actuated by malice aforethought, must concur. Perez v. State, 114 Tex. Cr.R. 473, 22 S.W.2d 309, 310.

Assault with intent to commit rape. Crime is constituted by the existence of the facts which bring the offense within the definition of an assault, coupled with an intention to commit the crime of rape. Steptoe v. State, 134 Tex.Cr.R. 320, 115 S.W.2d 916, 917.

Assay /əsey/əsey/. The proof or trial, by chemical experiments, of the purity or fineness of metals; particularly of the precious metals, gold and silver. West v. State, 140 Tex.Cr.R. 493, 145 S.W.2d 580, 584. Examination and determination as to characteristics (as weight, measure, or quality).

Assayer. One whose business it is to make assays of the precious metals. West v. State, 140 Tex.Cr.R. 493, 145 S.W.2d 580, 584.

Assayer of the king. An officer of the royal mint, appointed by St. 2 Hen. VI, c. 12, who received and tested the bullion taken in for coining; also called "assayator regis."

Assay office. The U.S. Assay Office, under the Bureau of the Mint, is responsible for the process of assaying gold and silver, required by government, incidental to maintaining the coinage.

Assecurare /əsəkjærériy/. To assure, or make secure by pledges, or any solemn interposition of faith.

Assesuration /əsəkjæréyshən/. In European law, assurance; insurance of a vessel, freight, or cargo.

Assesurator /əsəkjæréytər/. In maritime law, an insurer.

Assemblage. A collection of persons. Also the act of coming together. Public address upon public grounds. In re Whitney, 57 Cal.App.2d 167, 134 P.2d 516, 521. Combining of adjoining lots into single large lot.

Assembly. The concourse or meeting together of a considerable number of persons at the same place. Also the persons so gathered.

Political assemblies are those required by the constitution and laws: for example, the general assembly.

The lower or more numerous branch of the legislature in many of the states (e.g. N.Y.) is also called the "Assembly" or "House of Assembly." See also House of Representatives.

Popular assemblies are those where the people meet to deliberate upon their rights; these are guaranteed by the Constitution. See Assembly, right of.

Assemblyman. Member of state Assembly (q.v.).

Assembly, right of. Right guaranteed by First Amendment, U.S. Constitution, allowing people to meet for any purpose connected with government; it encompasses meeting to protest governmental policies and actions and the promotion of ideas. See Unlawful assembly.

Assembly, unlawful. The congregating of people which results in antisocial behavior of the group, e.g. blocking a sidewalk, obstructing traffic, littering streets; but, a law which makes such congregating a crime because people may be annoyed is violative of the right of free assembly. Coates v. City of Cincinnati, 402 U.S. 611, 91 S.Ct. 1686, 29 L.Ed.2d 214. See Unlawful assembly.

Assent. Compliance; approval of something done; a declaration of willingness to do something in compliance with a request; acquiescence; agreement. To approve, ratify and confirm. It implies a conscious approval of facts actually known, as distinguished from mere neglect to ascertain facts. Sometimes it is equivalent to "authorize". See Approval; Approve; Consent.

Express assent. That which is openly declared.

Implied assent. That which is presumed by law, and proved by conduct of the parties. See Consent (Implied consent).

Mutual assent. The meeting of the minds of both or all the parties to a contract; the fact that each agrees to all the terms and conditions, in the same sense and with the same meaning as the others.

Assert. To state as true; declare; maintain.

Assertory covenant /əsártəriý kóvənənt/. One which affirms that a particular state of facts exists; an affirming promise under seal. See Affirmation; Jurat.

Assertory oath /əsártəriý ówθ/. See Oath.

Assess /əsés/. To ascertain; fix the value of. To fix the amount of the damages or the value of the thing to be ascertained. To impose a pecuniary payment upon persons or property. To ascertain, adjust, and settle the respective shares to be contributed by several persons toward an object beneficial to them all, in proportion to the benefit received. To tax.

In connection with taxation of property, means to make a valuation and appraisal of property, usually in connection with listing of property liable to taxation, and implies the exercise of discretion on the part of officials charged with duty of assessing, including the listing or inventory of property involved, determination of extent of physical property, and placing of a value thereon. To adjust or fix the proportion of a tax which each person, of several liable to it, has to pay; to apportion a tax among several; to distribute taxation in a proportion founded on the proportion of burden and benefit. To calculate the rate and amount of taxes. To levy a charge on the owner of property for improvements thereto, such as for sewers or sidewalks.

"Access" is sometimes used as synonymous with "levy".

See also Assessment.

Assessable insurance. Insurance policy under which insured is liable for additional premium if losses are unusually large.

Assessable stock. Stock where the stockholder may have to pay more than his original investment if corporate affairs so require.

Assessed. Term is equivalent to "imposed." To value or appraise. Abrams v. City and County of San Francisco, 48 Cal.App.2d 1, 119 P.2d 197, 199.

Assessed valuation. Value on each unit of which a prescribed amount must be paid as property taxes. The worth or value of property established by taxing authorities on the basis of which the tax rate is applied. Commonly, however, it does not represent the true or market value of the property.

Assessment. In a general sense, the process of ascertaining and adjusting the shares respectively to be contributed by several persons towards a common beneficial object according to the benefit received. A valuation or a determination as to value of property. It is often used in connection with assessing property taxes or levying of property taxes. Also the amount assessed. See also Assess; Equalization.

Corporations. Installments of the money subscribed for shares of stock, called for from the subscribers by the directors, from time to time as the company requires money, are called "assessments," or, in England, "calls." While the terms "call" and "assessment" are generally used synonymously, the latter term applies with peculiar aptness to contributions above the par value of stock or the subscription liability of the stockholders; whereas "call" or "installments" means action of the board of directors demanding payment of all or portion of unpaid subscriptions.

Damages. Fixing the amount of damages to which the successful party in a suit is entitled after judgment has been taken; also the name given to the determination of the sum which a corporation proposing to take lands for a public use must pay in satisfaction of the demand proved or the value taken.

Insurance. An apportionment made in general average upon the various articles and interests at risk, according to their value at the time and place of being in safety, for contribution for damage and sacrifices purposely made, and expenses incurred for escape from impending common peril.

A sum specially levied in mutual benefit insurance upon a fixed and definite plan within the limit of the company's or society's fundamental law of organization to pay losses, or losses and expenses incurred, being to a certain degree substantially the equivalent of premiums. The periodical demands made by a mutual insurance company, under its charter and by-laws, upon the makers of premium notes, are also denominated "assessments." Meaning "premiums," Ancient Order of United Workmen of Kansas v. Hobbs, 136 Kan. 708, 18 P.2d 561, 562; and being the consideration for the insurance contracts.

Special assessment. An assessment in the nature of a tax levied upon property according to benefits conferred on the property. Davies v. City of Lawrence, 218 Kan. 551, 545 P.2d 1115, 1120. A levy upon the owners of property adjacent to a public improvement (e.g., sidewalks) to defray the capital cost thereof. A tax, intended to offset cost of local improvements such as sewer, water and streets, which is selectively imposed upon beneficiaries. Dosedel v. City of Ham Lake, Minn.App., 414 N.W.2d 751, 755. It differs from a general tax in that it is levied for a specific purpose and in an amount proportioned to the direct benefit of the property assessed. City of Plymouth v. Elsner, 28 Wis.2d 102, 135 N.W.2d 799, 803.

Persons convicted of federal crimes are required to pay special assessments under 18 U.S.C.A. § 3013.

Taxation. The listing and valuation of property for the purpose of apportioning a tax upon it, either according to value alone or in proportion to benefit received. Simikins v. City of Spartanburg, 269 S.C. 243, 237 S.E.2d 69, 70. Also determining the share of a tax to be paid by each of many persons; or apportioning the entire tax to be levied among the different taxable persons, establishing the proportion due from each. Northwestern Imp. Co. v. Henneford, 184 Wash. 502, 51 P.2d 1083, 1085. It fixes the liability of the taxpayer and ascertains the facts and furnishes the data for the proper preparation of the tax rolls. Dallas Joint Stock Land Bank of Dallas v. State, Tex.Civ.App., 118 S.W.2d 941, 942.

The process whereby the Internal Revenue Service imposes an additional tax liability. If, for example, the IRS audits a taxpayer's income tax return and finds gross income understated or deductions overstated, it will assess a deficiency in the amount of the tax that should have been paid in light of the adjustments made. See also, Deficiency; Deficiency assessment; Jeopardy assessment.

Assessment base. Total assessed value of all property in an assessment district.

Assessment company. In life insurance, a company in which a death loss is met by levying an assessment on the surviving members of the association.

Assessment contract. One wherein the payment of the benefit is in any manner or degree dependent on the collection of an assessment levied on persons holding similar contracts. See also Assessment insurance.

Assessment district. In taxation, any subdivision of territory, whether the whole or part of any municipality, in which by law a separate assessment of taxable property is made by the officers elected or appointed therefor.

Assessment for benefits. A burden levied under the power of taxation. Jackson v. City of Lake Worth, 156 Fla. 452, 23 So.2d 526, 528. See Assessment.

Assessment fund. The assessment fund of a mutual benefit association is the balance of the assessments, less expenses, out of which beneficiaries are paid.

Assessment insurance. Exists when benefit to be paid is dependent upon collection of such assessments as may be necessary for paying the amounts to insured. Keen v. Bankers Mut. Life Co., 230 Mo.App. 1072, 93 S.W.2d 85, 90. Type of mutual insurance where the policyholders are assessed whenever there is a loss.

Assessment list. The list of taxable persons and property furnished by the assessor to the board of equalization, board of assessment, or similar body. See Assessment roll.

Assessment period. Means taxable period. Johnson City v. Clinchfield R. Co., 163 Tenn. 332, 43 S.W.2d 386, 387.

Assessment ratio. For purposes of taxation of property is the ratio of assessed value to fair market value. Campbell Chain Co. of Cal. v. Alameda County, 12 C.A.3d 248, 90 Cal.Rptr. 501, 504.

Assessment roll. In taxation, the list or roll of taxable persons and property, completed, verified, and deposited by the assessors.

Assessment work. Under the mining laws of the United States, the holder of an unpatented mining claim on the public domain is required, in order to hold his claim, to do labor or make improvements upon it to the extent of at least one hundred dollars in each year. 30 U.S.C.A. § 28. This is commonly called by miners "doing assessment work."

Assessor. An officer chosen or appointed to appraise, value, or assess property. A person learned in some particular science or industry, who sits with the judge on the trial of a cause requiring such special knowledge and gives his advice.

Asset Depreciation Range (ADR). The range of depreciable lives allowed by the Internal Revenue Service for a specified depreciable asset. The ADR system applies to assets placed in service after 1970 and before 1980, at which time the ADR system was replaced by the Accelerated Cost Recovery System (ACRS). However, the ADR system has been revived under The Tax Reform Act of 1986 and is now used to assign class lives to assets depreciated under Modified Accelerated Cost Recovery System (MACRS). See Accelerated Cost Recovery System.

Asset dividend. See Dividend.

Assets /ˈæzets/. Property of all kinds, real and personal, tangible and intangible, including, inter alia, for certain purposes, patents and causes of action which belong to any person including a corporation and the estate of a decedent. The entire property of a person, association, corporation, or estate that is applicable or subject to the payment of his or her or its debts.

See also Dead asset; Marshalling assets.

Accrued assets. Assets arising from revenues earned but not yet due.

Assets entre mains. L. Fr. Assets in hand; assets in the hands of executors or administrators, applicable for the payment of debts.

Assets per descent. That portion of the ancestor's estate which descends to the heir, and which is sufficient to charge him, as far as it goes, with the specialty debts of his ancestors.

Bankruptcy. The property or effects of debtor in bankruptcy proceedings available for payment of his debts.

Capital assets. For income tax purposes, a capital asset is defined as all property held by a taxpayer (e.g. house, car, stocks, bonds), except for certain assets listed in I.R.C. § 1221. Under the tax laws however, a given asset may be treated as a capital asset for one purpose, and as an ordinary asset for another.

Broadly speaking, all assets are capital except those specifically excluded by Internal Revenue Code. Major categories of non-capital assets include: property held for resale in the normal course of business (i.e. inventory), trade accounts and notes receivable, depreciable property and real estate used in a trade or business (i.e. I.R.C. "§ 1231 assets"). I.R.C. § 1221.

Commercial assets. The aggregate of available property, stock in trade, cash, etc., belonging to a merchant or mercantile company.

Current assets. Assets readily convertible into cash, e.g. marketable securities, notes, inventories, accounts receivable. See also Quick assets, below.

Equitable assets. All assets which are chargeable with the payment of debts or legacies in equity, and which do not fall under the description of legal assets. Those portions of the property which by the ordinary rules of law are exempt from debts, but which the testator has voluntarily charged as assets, or which, being non-existent at law, have been created in equity. They are so called because they can be reached only by the aid and instrumentality of a court of equity, and because their distribution is governed by a different rule from that which governs the distribution of legal assets.

Fixed assets. Assets of a permanent or long-term nature used in operation of business and not intended for sale; e.g. property, plant, equipment.

Frozen assets. Assets which are difficult to convert into cash (e.g. real estate for which there is no market); also, assets which cannot be used because of legal restriction.

Intangible assets. Assets lacking physical existence; e.g. patents, trademarks, organization costs, goodwill.

Legal assets. See Legal assets.

Liquid assets. See Current assets, above.

Net assets. Excess of assets over liabilities.

Net operating assets. The excess of cash and other assets which will be converted into cash in near future through normal operation over current liabilities.

Nominal assets. Assets whose value is difficult to determine, e.g. a judgment or claim; also, book value of asset in contrast to actual value.

Personal assets. Chattels, money, and other personal property belonging to a bankrupt, insolvent, or decedent estate, which go to the assignee or executor. See also Personal effects.

Probate assets. Property of a decedent available for the payment of debts and legacies. The estate coming to the heir or personal representative which is chargeable, in law or equity, with the obligations which such heir or representative is required, in his representative capacity, to discharge.

Quick assets. Accounting term used to describe cash and receivables, including notes and sometimes marketable securities, which will be converted into cash as part of normal operations. See also Current assets, above.

Real assets. Land and real estate.

Wasting assets. Assets exhausted through use or loss of value; e.g. patents, oil wells, coal deposits.

Asseveration /əsəvərəyʃən/. An affirmation; a positive assertion; a solemn declaration. This word is seldom, if ever, used for a declaration made under oath, but denotes a declaration accompanied with solemnity or an appeal to conscience, whereas by an oath one appeals to God as a witness of the truth of what one says.

Assign. To transfer, make over, or set over to another. To appoint, allot, select, or designate for a particular purpose, or duty. To point at, or point out; to set forth, or specify; to mark out or designate; to particularize, as to assign errors on a writ of error; to assign breaches of a covenant. See also Assignment.

Assignability. Quality or legal attribute which permits a thing to be transferred or negotiated.

Assignable. See Assignability.

Assignable lease. A lease which contains a provision permitting its transfer by lessee or one which is silent as to lessee's right to transfer his interest and hence a lease which may be transferred. Assignment of lease is distinguishable from sublease to extent, inter alia, that in assigning, lessee transfers his entire estate in the demised premises, whereas in sublease the sublessee acquires something less than the lessee's entire interest. Spears v. Canon de Carnue Land Grant, 80 N.M. 766, 461 P.2d 415, 417 See also Assignment (Assignment of lease).

Assignment house. A bawdy house; a house of prostitution.

Assignatus utitur jure auctoris /ə'səgnéytəs yúwtətər júryi óktórəs/. An assignee uses the right of his principal; an assignee is clothed with the rights of his principal.

Assigned account. Pledge of account receivable to bank or factor as security for loan.

Assigned counsel. An attorney appointed by court to represent an indigent person; most commonly in criminal cases. See U.S. Constitution, Sixth Amendment (right to counsel); Fed.R.Crim.P. 44; 18 U.S.C.A. § 3006A. See also Assistance of counsel; Counsel, right to.

Assigned risk. As relating to motor vehicles nuisance, a risk which is not ordinarily acceptable to insurers but for which coverage is required by state statute and which is, therefore, assigned to insurers participating in an assigned risk pool.

Assigned risk plan. In those states having compulsory motor vehicle insurance laws (i.e. financial responsibility laws), such statutes provide that persons who are otherwise unable to buy coverage (because of, e.g., poor driving records) may secure insurance through a statutory plan under which insurers are compelled to write coverage for such persons. The insurance is handled through a pool of insurers.

See Financial responsibility acts.

Assignee /ə'səgníy/asəyníy/. A person to whom an assignment is made; grantee.

Under U.C.C., assignee is subject to all defenses which may be asserted against assignor by account debtor. U.C.C. § 9-318.

Assignee in fact is one to whom an assignment has been made in fact by the party having the right.

Assignee in law is one in whom the law vests the right; as an executor or administrator.

Assignee clause. A provision in Judiciary Act of 1789 preventing one who could not show diversity of citizenship to bring suit in Federal Court from assigning his claim to one who had the required diversity; modified in 28 U.S.C.A. § 1359 to prevent only assignment made collusively to invoke diversity jurisdiction. See Caribbean Mills, Inc. v. Kramer, C.A.5th, 392 F.2d 387.

Assignment. The act of transferring to another all or part of one's property, interest, or rights. A transfer or making over to another of the whole of any property, real or personal, in possession or in action, or of any estate or right therein. It includes transfers of all kinds of property (Higgins v. Monckton, 28 Cal.App.2d 723, 83 P.2d 516, 519), including negotiable instruments. The transfer by a party of all of its rights to some kind of property, usually intangible property such as rights in a lease, mortgage, agreement of sale or a partnership. Tangible property is more often transferred by possession and by instruments conveying title such as a deed or a bill of sale. See also Collateral assignment.

Assignment for benefit of creditors. A general assignment for benefit of creditors is transfer of all or substantially all of debtor's property to another person in trust to collect any money owing to debtor, to sell property, to distribute the proceeds to his creditors and to return the surplus, if any, to debtor. Under Bankruptcy Act of 1898, such assignment was an "act of bankruptcy" if made within 4 months of bankruptcy. Bankruptcy Act (1898) § 3a(4). See also Preferential assignment.

Assignment of account. Transfer to assignee giving him a right to have moneys when collected applied to payment of his debt. Nanny v. H. E. Pogue Distillery Co., 56 Cal.App.2d 817, 133 P.2d 686, 688.

Assignment of counsel. See Assigned counsel; Assistance of counsel; Counsel, right to.

Assignment of dower. The act by which the share of a widow in her deceased husband's real estate is ascertained and set apart to her.

Assignment of error. See Error.

Assignment of income. A procedure whereby a taxpayer attempts to avoid the recognition of income by assigning the property that generates the income to another. Such a procedure will not avoid the recognition of income by the taxpayer making the assignment if it can be said that the income was earned at the point of the transfer. In this case, usually referred to as an anticipatory assignment of income, the income will be taxed to the person who earns it.

Assignment of lease. Such occurs where lessee transfers entire unexpired remainder of term created by lease as distinguished from sublease which transfers only part of remainder. Dayenian v. American Nat. Bank and Trust

Co. of Chicago, 91 Ill.App.3d 622, 47 Ill.Dec. 83, 85, 414 N.E.2d 1199, 1201. See also Assignable lease.

Assignment of wages. Transfer of right to collect wages from wage earner to creditor; generally, statutes govern the extent to which such assignment may be made.

Assignment pro tanto. Where an order is drawn upon a third party and made payable out of a particular fund then due or to become due to the drawer, the delivery of the order to the payee operates as an assignment pro tanto of the fund. Doyle v. East New York Sav. Bank, 44 N.Y.S.2d 318, 323.

Assignment with preferences. An assignment for the benefit of creditors, with directions to the assignee to prefer a specified creditor or class of creditors, by paying their claims in full before the others receive any dividend, or in some other manner. More usually termed a "preferential assignment." Such assignments formerly constituted an "act of bankruptcy" (q.v.). See Assignment for benefit of creditors, above.

Foreign assignment. An assignment made in a foreign country, or in another state.

General assignment. An assignment made for the benefit of all the assignor's creditors, instead of a few only; or one which transfers the whole of his estate to the assignee, instead of a part only.

Voluntary assignment. An assignment for the benefit of his creditors made by a debtor voluntarily, as distinguished from a compulsory assignment which takes place by operation of law in proceedings in bankruptcy. Such constitutes an assignment of a debtor's property in trust to pay his debts generally, in distinction from a transfer of property to a particular creditor in payment of his demand, or to a conveyance by way of collateral security or mortgage.

Assignor /ə'sáynər/. A person who assigns or transfers property to another. See Grantor.

Assignor estoppel. In patent law this doctrine precludes one who has assigned rights in a patent from later contending that what he has assigned was invalid. Diamond Scientific Co. v. Ambico Inc., C.A.Fed., 848 F.2d 1220.

Assigns. Assignees; those to whom property is, will, or may be assigned. Used e.g. in the phrase, in deeds, "heirs, administrators, and assigns to denote the assignable nature of the interest or right created." It generally comprehends all those who take either immediately or remotely from or under the assignor, whether by conveyance, devise, descent, or act of law.

Assisa /ə'sáyzə/. In old English and Scotch law, an assize or assise; a kind of jury or inquest; a writ; a sitting of a court; an ordinance or statute; a fixed or specific time, number, quantity, quality, price, or weight; a tribute, fine, or tax; a real action; the name of a writ. See Assize.

Assisa armorum /ə'sáyzə armórəm/. Assize of arms. A statute or ordinance requiring the keeping of arms for the common defense.

Assisa cadere /əsáyzə kédəriy/. To fail in the assize; i.e., to be nonsuited. 3 Bl.Comm. 402.

Assisa cadit in juratum /əsáyzə kádət ən jéréytam/. The assize falls (turns) into a jury; hence to submit a controversy to trial by jury.

Assisa continuanda /əsáyzə kəntinyuwándə/. An ancient writ addressed to the justices of assize for the continuation of a cause, when certain facts put in issue could not have been proved in time by the party alleging them.

Assisa de Clarendon /əsáyzə diy klárəndən/. The assize of Clarendon. A statute or ordinance passed in the tenth year of Henry II, by which those that were accused of any heinous crime, and not able to purge themselves, but must abjure the realm, had liberty of forty days to stay and try what succor they could get of their friends towards their sustenance in exile.

Assisa de foresta /əsáyzə diy foréstə/. Assize of the forest; a statute concerning orders to be observed in the royal forests.

Assisa de mensuris /əsáyzə diy mens(y)úrəs/. Assize of measures. A common rule for weights and measures, established throughout England by Richard I, in the eighth year of his reign.

Assisa de nocumento /əsáyzə diy nòkyəméntow/. An assize of nuisance; a writ to abate or redress a nuisance.

Assisa de utrum /əsáyzə diy yúwtram/. An obsolete writ, which lay for the parson of a church whose predecessor had alienated the land and rents of it.

Assisa friscæ fortis /əsáyzə frískiy fòrshiyiy/. Assize of fresh force, which see.

Assisa mortis d'ancestoris /əsáyzə mórtəs dən-séstóras/. Assize of mort d'ancestor, which see.

Assisa novæ disseysinæ /əsáyzə nówviiy dəsíyzeniy/. Assize of novel disseisin, which see.

Assisa panis et cerevisiæ /əsáyzə pánas èt sərəvishiyiy/. Assize of bread and ale, or beer. The name of a statute passed in the fifty-first year of Henry III, containing regulations for the sale of bread and ale; sometimes called the "statute of bread and ale."

Assisa proroganda /əsáyzə pròwrowgándə/. An obsolete writ, which was directed to the judges assigned to take assizes, to stay proceedings, by reason of a party to them being employed in the king's business.

Assisa ultimæ præsentationis /əsáyzə áltəmiy prè-zəntèyshiyównəs/. Assize of darrein presentment (q.v.).

Assisa venalium /əsáyzə vənéyliyam/. The assize of salable commodities, or of things exposed for sale.

Assise. See Assize.

Assist. To help; aid; succor; lend countenance or encouragement to; participate in as an auxiliary. To contribute effort in the complete accomplishment of an ultimate purpose intended to be effected by those engaged.

Assistance, or (assistants) court of. See Court of assistants.

Assistance of counsel. Sixth Amendment to Federal Constitution, guaranteeing accused in criminal prosecution "assistance of counsel" for his defense, means effective assistance, as distinguished from bad faith, sham, mere pretense or want of opportunity for conferences and preparation. Fed.R.Crim.P. 44; 18 U.S.C.A. § 3006A; Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335, 83 S.Ct. 792, 9 L.Ed.2d 799; Geders v. U. S., 425 U.S. 80, 96 S.Ct. 1330, 47 L.Ed.2d 592. See Assigned counsel; Counsel, right to; Miranda Rule.

Assistance, writ of. See Writ of assistance.

Assistant. A deputy, aide, or subordinate; as an assistant assessor. One who stands by and aids or helps another. Ordinarily refers to employee whose duties are to help his superior, to whom he must look for authority to act. State ex rel. Dunn v. Ayers, 112 Mont. 120, 113 P.2d 785, 788.

Assisus /əsáyzəs/. Rented or farmed out for a specified assize; that is, a payment of a certain assessed rent in money or provisions.

Assize, or assise (obsolete) /əsáyz/. An ancient species of court, consisting of a certain number of men, usually twelve, who were summoned together to try a disputed cause, performing the functions of a jury, except that they gave a verdict from their own investigation and knowledge and not upon evidence adduced. From the fact that they sat together (assideo), they were called the "assize." A court composed of an assembly of knights and other substantial men, with the baron or justice, in a certain place, at an appointed time. The verdict or judgment of the jurors or recognitors of assize. 3 Bl. Comm. 57, 59.

In later English law, the name "assizes" or "assises" was given to the court, time, or place where the judges of assize and nisi prius, who were sent by special commission from the crown on circuits through the kingdom, proceeded to take indictments, and to try such disputed causes issuing out of the courts at Westminster as were then ready for trial, with the assistance of a jury from the particular county. These judges of assize were the successors of the ancient "justices in eyre." They sat by virtue of four separate authorities: (1) Commission of Oyer and Terminer, (2) of goal delivery, (3) of nisi prius, and (4) Commission of Peace. In 1971 the Crown Court was established which superseded the criminal jurisdiction of courts of assize and all the jurisdiction of quarter sessions. The assize courts were accordingly abolished.

Anything reduced to a certainty in respect to time, number, quantity, quality, weight, measure, etc.

A species of writ, or real action, said to have been invented by Glanville, chief justice to Henry II, and having for its object to determine the right of possession of lands, and to recover the possession. 3 Bl.Comm. 184, 185.

The whole proceedings in court upon a writ of assize. The verdict or finding of the jury upon such a writ. 3 Bl.Comm. 57.

See also Certificate of assize.

Assize of Clarendon. See Assisa de Clarendon.

Assize of darrein presentment. A writ of assize which formerly lay when a man or his ancestors under whom he claimed presented a clerk to a benefice, who was instituted, and afterwards, upon the next avoidance, a stranger presented a clerk and thereby disturbed the real patron. 3 Bl.Comm. 245. It has given way to the remedy by quare impedit.

Assize of fresh force. In old English practice, a writ which lay by the usage and custom of a city or borough, where a man was disseised of his lands and tenements in such city or borough. It was called "fresh force," because it was to be sued within forty days after the party's title accrued to him.

Assize of mort d'ancestor. A real action which lay to recover land of which a person had been deprived on the death of his ancestor by the abatement or intrusion of a stranger. 3 Bl.Comm. 185. It was abolished by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 27.

Assize of Northampton. A re-enactment and enlargement (1176) of the Assise of Clarendon.

Assize of novel disseisin. A writ of assize which lay for the recovery of lands or tenements, where the claimant had been lately disseised.

Assize of nuisance. A writ of assize which lay where a nuisance had been committed to the complainant's freehold; either for abatement of the nuisance or for damages.

Assize of the forest. A statute touching orders to be observed in the king's forests.

Assize of utrum. A writ of assize which lay for a parson to recover lands which his predecessor had improperly allowed the church to be deprived of. 3 Bl.Comm. 257.

An assize for the trial of the question of whether land is a lay fee, or held in frankalmoigne.

Assize rents. The certain established rents of the freeholders and ancient copyholders of a manor; so called because they are assized, or made precise and certain.

Grand assize. A peculiar species of trial by jury, introduced in the time of Henry II, giving the tenant or defendant in a writ of right the alternative of a trial by battle, or by his peers. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 42, § 13. 3 Bl.Comm. 341. See Battel.

Assizer /əsáyzər/. An assessor; juror; an officer who has the care and oversight of weights and measures.

Assizes de Jerusalem /əsáyzəz də jərúwzələm/. A code of feudal jurisprudence prepared by an assembly of barons and lords A.D. 1099, after the conquest of Jerusalem. It was compiled principally from the laws and customs of France.

Assizors /əsáyzərz/. In Scotch law, jurors; the persons who formed that kind of court which in Scotland was called an "assize," for the purpose of inquiring into and judging divers civil causes, such as perambulations, cognitions, molestations, purprestures, and other matters; like jurors in England.

Associate. Signifies confederacy or union for a particular purpose, good or ill. To join together, as e.g. partners. Partner or colleague. See Association.

Having subordinate status; e.g. associate professor.

An officer in each of the English courts of common law, appointed by the chief judge of the court, and holding his office during good behavior, whose duties were to superintend the entry of causes, to attend the sittings of nisi prius, and there receive and enter verdicts, and to draw up the postea and any orders of nisi prius. The associates were later officers of the Supreme Court of Judicature, and are styled "Masters of the Supreme Court". Duties of associates are now carried out by clerks in the Crown Office and Associates Department of the Central Office of the Supreme Court.

Associate justices. Judges of courts, other than the presiding or chief justice.

Associates in office. Those who are united in action; who have a common purpose; who share the responsibility or authority and among whom is reasonable equality. Those who are authorized by law to perform the duties jointly or as a body.

Association. The act of a number of persons in uniting together for some special purpose or business. It is a term of vague meaning used to indicate a collection or organization of persons who have joined together for a certain or common object. Also, the persons so joining; the state of being associated.

An unincorporated society; a body of persons united and acting together without a charter, but upon the methods and forms used by incorporated bodies for the prosecution of some common enterprise. Penrod Drilling Co. v. Johnson, C.A.Tex., 414 F.2d 1217, 1222. It is not a legal entity separate from the persons who compose it. See also Affiliation.

An organization treated as a corporation for Federal tax purposes even though it may not qualify as such under applicable state law. What is designated as a trust or a partnership, for example, may be classified as an association if it clearly possesses corporate attributes. Corporate attributes include: centralized management, continuity of existence, free transferability of interests, and limited liability. I.R.C. § 7701(a)(3).

A "business trust" is an "association" when it has a continuing entity throughout trust period, centralized management, continuity of trust uninterrupted by death among beneficial owners, means for transfer of beneficial interests, and limitation of personal liabilities of participants to property embarked in undertaking. Fletcher v. Clark, D.C.Wyo., 57 F.Supp. 479, 480.

To prove "association" with a criminal venture, for purpose of convicting upon evidence that defendant aided and abetted illegal enterprise, there must be evidence to establish defendant shared in principal's criminal intent. U.S. v. Cowart, C.A.Ga., 595 F.2d 1023, 1035.

See also Articles of association; Confederacy; Cooperative; Joint stock association or company; Non-profit association; Professional association; Unincorporated association.

Partnership association. See Partnership.

Professional association. See Corporation (Professional corporation).

Unincorporated association. A confederation of individuals organized for a specific purpose which may or may not be profit making but which is not chartered as a corporation.

Association, freedom of. See Assembly, right of.

Association of American Law Schools, The. AALS is literally an association of law schools. After a school has graduated at least three annual classes it is eligible to apply for membership. Compliance with the rules of membership are determined through a three or four person inspection team. Recommendations for admission to membership are made by the Executive Committee, upon advice of the Accreditation Committee. Membership is attained by action of the House of Representatives.

Assoil /əsóyl/. (Spelled also assoile, absoile, assoilye.) To absolve; acquit; to set free; to deliver from excommunication.

As soon as. This term has a relative meaning according to the thing which is to be done. It may denote merely a reasonable time; or may be equivalent to "whenever", or may mean "immediately".

As soon as may be. Promptly and with due diligence; as soon as was reasonably possible; within a reasonable time; as soon as possible; forthwith; as soon as they conveniently can. George A. Fuller Co. v. Jersey City, 21 N.J.Misc. 38, 29 A.2d 720, 722.

As soon as practicable. Means reasonable time. These words are not synonymous with "as soon as possible"; they mean ordinarily as soon as reasonably can be expected in the particular circumstances; or "in due time". But the words have also been construed as practically synonymous with speedily.

The words "as soon as practicable" within liability policy requirement that insured will notify the insurer of an occurrence as soon as practicable means within reasonable time in view of all the facts and circumstances of each particular case. Greenway v. Selected Risks Ins. Co., D.C.App., 307 A.2d 753, 755.

As speedily as possible. Means within reasonable time or without unreasonable delay having regard to all the circumstances of the case and the things to be done. Tatum v. Levi, 117 Cal.App. 83, 3 P.2d 963, 967.

Assume. To pretend. To undertake; engage; promise. To take to or upon one's self. Also taking up, receiving, adopting, taking to oneself, or to put on deceitfully, take appearance of, affect, or outwardly seem. To take on, become bound as another is bound, or put oneself in place of another as to an obligation or liability. Texas Employers' Ins. Ass'n v. Texas & P. Ry. Co., Tex.Civ. App., 129 S.W.2d 746, 749. See also Assumption.

Assumed facts. Facts concerning which no evidence has been introduced at trial and hence no rulings of law or jury instructions are required. In argument, a hypothetical set of facts used to illustrate a point of law. See Stipulation.

Assumed name. See Alias.

Assumed risk. See Assumption of risk.

A summo remedio ad inferiorem actionem non habetur regressus, neque auxilium /éy sámow rəmyd(i)yow əd infriyórəm əkshiyównəm nòn həbíytər rəgrésəs, nékwiy ogzíl(i)yəm/. From (after using) the highest remedy, there can be no recourse (going back) to an inferior action, nor assistance (derived from it). A maxim in the old law of real actions, when there were grades in the remedies given; the rule being that a party who brought a writ of right, which was the highest writ in the law, could not afterwards resort or descend to an inferior remedy. 3 Bl.Comm. 193, 194.

Assumpsit /əsám(p)sət/. Lat. He undertook; he promised.

A promise or engagement by which one person assumes or undertakes to do some act or pay something to another. It may be either oral or in writing, but is not under seal. It is express if the promisor puts his engagement in distinct and definite language; it is implied where the law infers a promise (though no formal one has passed) from the conduct of the party or the circumstances of the case. Dukes v. Rogers, 67 Ga.App. 661, 21 S.E.2d 295, 297.

A common law form of action which lies for the recovery of damages for the non-performance of a parol or simple contract; or a contract that is neither of record nor under seal. A liberal and equitable action, applicable to almost every case where money has been received which in equity and good conscience ought to be refunded; express promise is not necessary to sustain action, but it may be maintained whenever anything is received or done from the circumstances of which the law implies a promise of compensation. The action of assumpsit differs from trespass and trover, which are founded on a tort, not upon a contract; from covenant and debt, which are appropriate where the ground of recovery is a sealed instrument, or special obligation to pay a fixed sum; and from replevin, which seeks the recovery of specific property, if attainable, rather than of damages.

Express assumpsit. See Express assumpsit.

General (common or indebitatus) assumpsit is an action of assumpsit brought upon the promise or contract implied by law in certain cases. It is founded upon what the law terms an implied promise on the part of defendant to pay what, in good conscience, he is bound to pay to plaintiff.

Special assumpsit is an action of assumpsit brought upon an express contract or promise.

Assumpsit for money had and received. Is of equitable character and lies, in general, whenever defendant has received money which in equity and good conscience he ought to pay to plaintiff.

Assumpsit on quantum meruit /əsəm(p)sət òn kwóntəm méruwət/. When a person employs another to do work for him, without any agreement as to his compensation, the law implies a promise from the employer to the workman that he will pay him for his services as much as he may deserve or merit. In such case, the plaintiff may suggest in his declaration that the defendant promised to pay him as much as he reasonably deserved, and then aver that his trouble was worth such a sum of money, which the defendant has omitted to pay. This is called an "assumpsit on quantum meruit". Travis v. Kennedy, Tex.Civ.App., 66 S.W.2d 444, 446. See also Quantum meruit.

Assumption. The act of conceding or taking for granted. Laying claim to or taking possession of.

The act or agreement of assuming or taking upon one's self. The undertaking or adoption of a debt or obligation primarily resting upon another, as where the purchaser of real estate "assumes" a mortgage resting upon it, in which case he adopts the mortgage debt as his own and becomes personally liable for its payment. The difference between the purchaser of land assuming a mortgage on it and simply buying subject to the mortgage, is that in the former case he makes himself personally liable for the payment of the mortgage debt, while in the latter case he does not. When he takes the conveyance subject to the mortgage, he is bound only to the extent of the property. Where one "assumes" a lease, he takes to himself the obligations, contracts, agreements, and benefits to which the other contracting party was entitled under the terms of the lease. See Assumption of mortgage.

Assumption clause. In mortgages, a provision that the mortgage may not be assumed without written consent of mortgagee. See Assumption of mortgage. Also a provision in an instrument of transfer in which the transferee agrees to assume an obligation of the transferor.

Assumption fee. Lender's charge for processing records for new buyer assuming an existing loan (mortgage).

Assumption of care. See Good Samaritan doctrine.

Assumption of indebtedness. Exists when person binds himself to pay debt incurred by another. Pawnee County Excise Board v. Kurn, 187 Okl. 110, 101 P.2d 614, 618. See also Subrogation.

Assumption of mortgage. To take or acquire a mortgage or deed of trust from some prior holder. Thus, a purchaser may assume or take over the mortgage of the seller. Often this requires permission of the mortgagee. This is distinguishable from taking equity of redemption subject to mortgage because in latter case grantee is not contractually bound to pay mortgage, whereas if he assumes the mortgage, he binds himself to mortgagor to pay the mortgage and to fulfill all other terms and conditions of mortgage. See also Assumption.

Assumption of risk. The doctrine of assumption of risk, also known as volenti non fit injuria, means legally that a plaintiff may not recover for an injury to which he assents, i.e., that a person may not recover for an injury received when he voluntarily exposes himself to a known and appreciated danger. The requirements for the defense of volenti non fit injuria are that: (1) the plaintiff has knowledge of facts constituting a dangerous condition, (2) he knows the condition is dangerous, (3) he appreciates the nature or extent of the danger, and (4) he voluntarily exposes himself to the danger. An exception may be applicable even though the above factors have entered into a plaintiff's conduct if his actions come within the rescue or humanitarian doctrine. Clarke v. Brockway Motor Trucks, D.C.Pa., 372 F.Supp. 1342, 1347.

A defense to action of negligence which consists of showing that the plaintiff, knowing the dangers and risk involved, chose to act as he did. An affirmative defense which the defendant in a negligence action must plead and prove. Fed.R.Civil P. 8(c). It is not a defense under state workers' compensation laws or in FELA actions. Many states have abolished the defense of assumption of risk in automobile cases with the enactment of no-fault insurance acts or comparative negligence acts.

See also Volenti non fit injuria.

Secondary assumption of risk. Such occurs when individual voluntarily encounters known, appreciated risk without an intended manifestation by that individual that he consents to relieve another of his duty. Calvert v. Garvey Elevators, Inc., 236 Kan. 570, 694 P.2d 433, 437.

Assurance. The act or action of assuring; e.g. a pledge, guaranty, or surety. A declaration tending to inspire full confidence.

The deed or instrument by which real property is conveyed; also, the act of conveying such.

Same as "Insurance"; term used in Canada and England.

In England, the legal evidences of the transfer of property are called the "common assurances" of the kingdom, whereby every man's estate is assured to him, and all controversies, doubts, and difficulties are either prevented or removed.

Assurance, further, covenant for. See Covenant (Covenant for further assurance).

Assure. To make certain and put beyond doubt. To declare, aver, avouch, assert, or ensure positively. To declare solemnly; to assure to any one with design of inspiring belief or confidence. Used interchangeably with "insure" in insurance law. In real property documents it means a warranty; and in business documents, generally, it means a pledge or security. Utilities Engineering Institute v. Kofod, 185 Misc. 1035, 58 N.Y.S.2d 743, 745.

Assured. A person who has been insured by some insurance company, or underwriter, against losses or perils mentioned in the policy of insurance. Ordinarily synonymous with "insured".

Assured clear distance ahead. Requires driver to keep motor vehicle under such control that he can stop in distance that he can clearly see; the distance varying with circumstances. Smiley v. Arrow Spring Bed Co., 138 Ohio St. 81, 33 N.E.2d 3, 5, 6, 7, 9.

Assurer. An insurer against certain perils and dangers; an underwriter; an indemnifier.

Astipulation /əstɪpəleɪʃən/. A mutual agreement, assent, and consent between parties; also a witness or record.

Astitrarius hæres /æstrətəriyəs híriyz/. An heir apparent who has been placed, by conveyance, in possession of his ancestor's estate during such ancestor's lifetime.

Astitution /əstət(y)úwshən/. An arraignment (q.v.)

Astrarius /æstrəriyəs/. In old English law, a householder; belonging to the house; a person in actual possession of a house.

Astrarius hæres /æstrəriyəs híriyz/. Where the ancestor by conveyance hath set his heir apparent and his family in a house in his lifetime.

Astrer /æstrər/. In old English law, a householder, or occupant of a house or hearth.

Astrihiltet. In Saxon law, a penalty for a wrong done by one in the king's peace. The offender was to replace the damage twofold.

Astrum /æstrəm/. A house, or place of habitation.

Asylum /əsáyləm/. A sanctuary, or place of refuge and protection, where criminals and debtors found shelter, and from which they could not be taken without sacrilege. Shelter; refuge; protection from the hand of justice. The word includes not only place, but also shelter, security, protection. While a foreign country has the right to offer an asylum to fugitives from other countries, there is no corresponding right on the part of the alien to claim asylum. This right of asylum has been voluntarily limited by most countries by treaties providing for the extradition (q.v.) of fugitive criminals (international extradition).

In time of war, a place of refuge in neutral territory for belligerent warships.

An institution for the protection and relief of unfortunates, as asylums for the poor, or for the insane; though this term is no longer generally used for such institutions.

Aliens. An alien may be considered for asylum or refugee status in the United States if the alien has a well-founded fear of persecution in his or her home country. To be eligible for either asylum or refugee status, the applicant must qualify as a refugee, as defined by 8 U.S.C.A. § 1101(a)(42). Also, under the Refugee Act of 1980, "an alien physically present in the United States or at a land border or port of entry ...

may be granted asylum in the discretion of the Attorney General if the Attorney General determines that such alien is a refugee ..." 8 U.S.C.A. § 1158(a).

At. A term of considerable elasticity of meaning, and somewhat indefinite. A function word to describe or indicate presence or occurrence in, on, or near; or to indicate the means, cause, or manner; or to indicate that with which one is occupied or employed. As used to fix a time, it does not necessarily mean eo instante or the identical time named, or even a fixed definite moment. Often expresses simply nearness and proximity, and consequently may denote a reasonable time.

Atamita /ətámətə/. In the civil law, a great-great-great-grandfather's sister.

At any time. Grant of time without limit. Haworth v. Hubbard, 220 Ind. 611, 44 N.E.2d 967, 970. Period of time limited by circumstances. Imes v. Globe Oil & Refining Co., 184 Okl. 79, 84 P.2d 1106, 1107, 1108. Within a reasonable time.

At any time prior to. Synonymous with "not later than". Hughes v. United States, C.C.A.Tenn., 114 F.2d 285, 287.

At arm's length. Beyond the reach of personal influence or control. Parties are said to deal "at arm's length" when each stands upon the strict letter of his rights, and conducts the business in a formal manner, without trusting to the other's fairness or integrity, and without being subject to the other's control or overmastering influence. See Arm's length transaction.

Atavia /ətáyviyə/. In the civil law, a great-grandmother's grandmother.

Atavunculus /ətávŋkyləs/. The brother of a great-grandfather's grandmother, or a great-great-great-grandfather's brother.

Atavus /ətávəs/. The male ascendant in the fifth degree. The great-grandfather's or great-grandmother's grandfather; a fourth grandfather.

Ataxia /ətáksiyə/. Condition involving impaired coordinative control over the extremities; power present in the extremities, but control is lacking.

At bar. Before the court. "The case at bar," etc.

A tempore cujus contrarii memoria non existet /èy témpəriy kyúwjas kantrériyay memóriyá non egzístət/. From a time of which there is no memory to the contrary.

A teneris annis /èy ténərəs ánəs/. By reason of youth.

A terme /a térm/. For a or the term.

A terme de sa vie /a térm də sa viy/. For the term of his life.

A terme que n'est mye encore passe. For a term that has not yet passed.

A terme que passe est /a térm kə paséy/. For a term that has passed.

Atha /áθə/. (Spelled also Atta, Athe, Atte.) In Saxon law, an oath; the power or privilege of exacting and administering an oath.

Atheist. One who does not believe in the existence of a God.

Atia /éysh(iy)ə/. Hatred or ill-will. See De odio et atia.

Atilian law. See Lex Atilia.

Atinian law. See Lex Atinia.

At issue. Whenever the parties come to a point in the pleadings which is affirmed on one side and denied on the other, they are said to be at an issue. Criminal case is "at issue" when defendant enters a plea. State v. Padilla, App., 88 N.M. 160, 538 P.2d 802, 804.

ATLA. American Trial Lawyers Association.

At large. Not limited to any particular place, district, person, matter, or question; open to discussion or controversy; not precluded. Free; unrestrained; not under corporal control, as a ferocious animal so free from restraint as to be liable to do mischief. Fully; in detail; in an extended form.

Elected officials chosen by the voters of the State as a whole rather than from separate congressional or legislative districts.

At law. According to law; by, for, or in law. Particularly in distinction from that which is done in or according to equity; or in titles such as sergeant at law, barrister at law, attorney or counsellor at law.

At least. In deed of trust covenant specifying amount of fire insurance, means at lowest estimate, at smallest concession or claim, in smallest or lowest degree, at smallest number. Browne v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co., 225 Mo.App. 665, 37 S.W.2d 977, 979.

Atmatertera /ætmeýtörtərə/. A great-grandfather's grandmother's sister (atavia soror), called by Bracton "atmatertera magna."

At once. In contracts of various kinds the phrase is construed as synonymous with "immediately" and "forthwith," where the subject-matter is the giving of notice. The use of such term does not ordinarily call for instantaneous action, but rather that notice shall be given within such time as is reasonable in view of the circumstances. Likewise, contracts or statutes requiring the performance of a particular act "at once" are usually held to mean simply within a reasonable time. An order to "ship at once" is synonymous with "as soon as possible". Myers v. Hardin, 208 Ark. 505, 186 S.W.2d 925, 928.

A tort. Without reason; unjustly; wrongfully. See Tort.

A tort et a travers. Without consideration or discernment.

A tort ou a droit. Right or wrong.

At par. Said of a bond or preferred stock issued or selling at its face value.

Atpatruus /ætpátruwəs/. The brother of a great-grandfather's grandfather.

At-risk amount. The taxpayer has an amount at risk in a business or investment venture to the extent that it has subjected personal assets to the risks of the business. Typically, the taxpayer's at-risk amount includes (1) the amount of money or other property that the investor contributed to the venture for the investment, (2) the amount of any of the entity's liabilities for which the taxpayer personally is liable and that relate to the investment, and (3) an allocable share of nonrecourse debts incurred by the venture from third parties in arm's length transactions, with respect to real estate investments. See At-risk rules.

At-risk rules. The at-risk rules limit a taxpayer's deductible losses to the amount the taxpayer has at risk. Amounts at risk include the cash investment, and the debt for which the taxpayer is personally liable. The objective of the at-risk rules is to prevent investors from sheltering income through losses incurred in activities financed substantially through non-recourse debt. See also At-risk amount.

Atrocious assault and battery. An assault by maiming and wounding. Aggravated assault.

Atrocity. A word implying conduct that is outrageously or wantonly wicked, criminal, vile, cruel; extremely horrible and shocking.

Atrophy /étrəfiy/. Degeneration or wasting away of tissues, organs or parts due to lack of use; disease or interference with nerve supply.

ATS. At suit of.

At sea. Out of the limits of any port or harbor on the sea-coast. U. S. v. Symonds, 120 U.S. 46, 7 S.Ct. 411, 30 L.Ed. 557.

Attach. Seizure of property under a writ of attachment. See Attachment.

To bind, fasten, tie, or connect, to make fast or join; its antonyms are separate, detach, remove.

Attaché /ətəshéy/ətəshèy/. A person attached to an embassy, to the office of an ambassador, or to a foreign legation. One connected with an office, e.g., a public office.

Attached. A term describing the physical union of two otherwise independent structures or objects, or the relation between two parts of a single structure, each having its own function. As applied to buildings, the term is often synonymous with "annexed." See also Fixture.

Attached account. Account against which court order has been issued; payments can only be made with consent of court.

Attachiamenta /ətəch(iy)éméntə/. L. Lat. Attachment.

Attachiamenta bonorum /ətəch(iy)éméntə bownórəm/. A distress formerly taken upon goods and chattels, by the legal attachiators or bailiffs, as security to answer an action for personal estate or debt.

Attachiamenta de placitus coronæ /ətæch(iy)əménta diy plásətəs kərówniy/. Attachment of pleas of the crown.

Attachiamenta de spinis et boscis /ətæch(iy)əménta diy spáyнас èt bóskəs/. A privilege granted to the officers of a forest to take to their own use thorns, brush, and windfalls, within their precincts.

Attachiamentum /ətæch(iy)əméntəm/. L. Lat. An attachment.

Attaching creditor. See Creditor.

Attachment. The legal process of seizing another's property in accordance with a writ or judicial order for the purpose of securing satisfaction of a judgment yet to be rendered. The act or process of taking, apprehending, or seizing persons or property, by virtue of a writ, summons, or other judicial order, and bringing the same into the custody of the court for the purpose of securing satisfaction of the judgment ultimately to be entered in the action. While formerly the main objective of attachment was to coerce the defendant debtor to appear in court by seizure of his property, today the writ of attachment is used primarily to seize the debtor's property in order to secure the debt or claim of the creditor in the event that a judgment is rendered. The remedy of attachment is governed strictly by state statutes, with such differing considerably as to when attachment is available (the majority of states providing that such is available at or after the commencement of the main action until entry of judgment). Federal courts follow the local rules or statutes relating to attachment. Fed. R.Civil P. 64.

A remedy ancillary to an action by which plaintiff is enabled to acquire a lien upon property or effects of defendant for satisfaction of judgment which plaintiff may obtain. Lipscomb v. Rankin, C.C.A.Tex., 139 S.W.2d 367, 369.

See also Execution; Garnishment; Levy; Lien of attachment.

Commercial law. When the three basic prerequisites of a security interest exist (agreement, value, and collateral), the security agreement becomes enforceable between the parties and is said to "attach." U.C.C. § 9-203.

Distinguished from execution. See Execution.

Domestic and foreign. In some jurisdictions it is common to give the name "domestic attachment" to one issuing against a resident debtor (upon the special ground of fraud, intention to abscond, etc.), and to designate an attachment against a non-resident, or his property, as "foreign."

Where the defendant is a non-resident, or beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the court, his goods or land within the territory may be seized upon process of attachment; whereby he will be compelled to enter an appearance, or the court acquires jurisdiction so far as to dispose of the property attached. This is sometimes called "foreign attachment." In such a case, the proceeding becomes in substance one in rem against the attached property.

Persons. A writ issued by a court of record, commanding the sheriff to bring before it a person who has been guilty of contempt of court, either in neglect or abuse of its process or of subordinate powers. A capias (q.v.).

Property. A species of mesne process, by which a writ is issued at the institution or during the progress of an action, commanding the sheriff to seize the property, rights, credits, or effects of the defendant to be held as security for the satisfaction of such judgment as the plaintiff may recover. It is principally used against absconding, concealed, or fraudulent debtors. Mass.R. Civil P. 4.1.

Attachment bond. A bond used to dissolve an attachment so as to free the property subject to the attachment for sale or other disposition; may be surety company bond or personal bond with sureties. Plaintiff then looks to bond for satisfaction of his judgment.

Attachment execution. A name given in some states to a process of garnishment for the satisfaction of a judgment. As to the judgment debtor it is an execution; but as to the garnishee it is an original process—a summons commanding him to appear and show cause, if any he has, why the judgment should not be levied on the goods and effects of the defendant in his hands.

Attachment of privilege. In old English law, a process by which a man, by virtue of his privilege, calls another to litigate in that court to which he himself belongs, and who has the privilege to answer there. A writ issued to apprehend a person in a privileged place.

Attachment of risk. Used to describe point in time, generally when title passes, when risk of loss for destruction of property which is subject of sale passes to buyer from seller. U.C.C. § 2-509.

Attachment of the forest. In old English law, one of the three courts formerly held in forests. The highest court was called "justice in eyre's seat;" the middle, the "swainmote;" and the lowest, the "attachment."

Attain. To reach or come to by progression or motion; to arrive at; as, to attain a ripe old age. Watkins v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 156 Kan. 27, 131 P.2d 722, 723.

Attainder /ətéyndər/. At common law, that extinction of civil rights and capacities which took place whenever a person who had committed treason or felony received sentence of death for his crime.

The effect of "attainder" upon such felon was, in general terms, that all his estate, real and personal, was forfeited. At the common law, attainder resulted in three ways, viz.: by confession, by verdict, and by process or outlawry. The first case was where the prisoner pleaded guilty at the bar, or having fled to sanctuary, confessed his guilt and abjured the realm to save his life. The second was where the prisoner pleaded not guilty at the bar, and the jury brought in a verdict against him.

The third, when the person accused made his escape and was outlawed.

In England, by statute 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, attainder upon conviction, with consequent corruption of blood, forfeiture, or escheat, was abolished. In the United States, the doctrine of attainder is now scarcely known, although during and shortly after the Revolution acts of attainder were passed by several of the states. The passage of such bills is expressly forbidden by the Constitution (Art. I, Sec. 9).

Bills of attainder. Such special acts of the legislature as inflict capital punishments upon persons supposed to be guilty of high offenses, such as treason and felony, without any conviction in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings. If an act inflicts a milder degree of punishment than death, it is called a "bill of pains and penalties," but both are included in the prohibition in the Constitution (Art. I, Sec. 9). Losier v. Sherman, 157 Kan. 153, 138 P.2d 272, 273; State v. Graves, 352 Mo. 1102, 182 S.W.2d 46, 54. See also Bill.

Attaint /ətéynt/. Attainted, stained, or blackened.

In old English practice, a writ which lay to inquire whether a jury of twelve men had given a false verdict, in order that the judgment might be reversed. 3 Bl. Comm. 402. This inquiry was made by a grand assise or jury of twenty-four persons, usually knights, and, if they found the verdict a false one, the judgment was that the jurors should become infamous, should forfeit their goods and the profits of their lands, should themselves be imprisoned, and their wives and children thrust out of doors, should have their houses razed, their trees extirpated, and their meadows plowed up, and that the plaintiff should be restored to all that he lost by reason of the unjust verdict. 3 Bl. Comm. 404.

Attaint d'une cause /ətéyn d(y)ùwn kówz/. In French law, the gain of a suit.

Attempt. In statutes and in cases other than criminal prosecutions an "attempt" ordinarily means an intent combined with an act falling short of the thing intended. It may be described as an endeavor to do an act, carried beyond mere preparation, but short of execution.

Criminal law. An intent to commit a crime coupled with an act taken toward committing the offense. An effort or endeavor to accomplish a crime, amounting to more than mere preparation or planning for it, which, if not prevented, would have resulted in the full consummation of the act attempted, but which, in fact, does not bring to pass the party's ultimate design. The requisite elements of an "attempt" to commit a crime are: (1) an intent to commit it, (2) an overt act toward its commission, (3) failure of consummation, and (4) the apparent possibility of commission. State v. Stewart, Mo.App., 537 S.W.2d 579, 581.

A person is guilty of an attempt to commit a crime if, acting with the kind of culpability otherwise required for commission of the crime, he: (a) purposely engages in conduct which would constitute the crime if the attendant circumstances were as he believes them to be; or (b) when causing a particular result is an element of the crime, does or omits to do anything with the purpose of causing or with the belief that it will cause such result without further conduct on his part; or (c) purposely does or omits to do anything which, under the circumstances as he believes them to be, is an act or omission constituting a substantial step in a course of conduct planned to culminate in his commission of the crime. Model Penal Code, § 5.01.

Attendant, n. One who owes a duty or service to another, or in some sort depends upon him. One who follows and waits upon another.

Attendant, adj. Accompanying, or connected with.

Attendant circumstances. Facts surrounding an event; e.g. the time, place and declarations of a testator prior to and immediately following execution of his will.

Attendant terms. In English law, terms (usually mortgages), for a long period of years, which are created or kept outstanding for the purpose of attending or waiting upon and protecting the inheritance. A phrase used in conveyancing to denote estates which are kept alive, after the objects for which they were originally created have ceased, so that they might be deemed merged or satisfied, for the purpose of protecting or strengthening the title of the owner. By the Satisfied Terms Act of 1845, any attendant term becoming satisfied after the Act immediately ceased. But the Act did not apply to leaseholds. That Act was repealed and replaced by Sec. 5 of the Law of Property Act of 1925, which applies to terms created out of leaseholds as well as terms created out of freeholds.

Attentat /əténtət/. Lat. He attempts.

In the civil and canon law, anything wrongfully innovated or attempted in a suit by an inferior judge (or judge a quo) pending an appeal.

Attention. Consideration with a view to action; notice; attentiveness; the act or state of attending.

Atterminare /ətèrmənériy/. In old English law, to put off to a succeeding term; to prolong the time of payment of a debt.

Attermining /ətórmənín/. In old English law, a putting off; the granting of a time or term, as for the payment of a debt.

Attermoient. In canon law, a making terms; a composition, as with creditors.

Attest. To bear witness to; to bear witness to a fact; to affirm to be true or genuine; to act as a witness to; to certify; to certify to the verity of a copy of a public document formally by signature; to make solemn declaration in words or writing to support a fact; to signify by subscription of his name that the signer has witnessed the execution of the particular instrument. Lindsey v. Realty Trust Co., Tex.Civ.App., 75 S.W.2d 322, 324; City Lumber Co. of Bridgeport v. Borsuk, 131 Conn. 640, 41 A.2d 775, 778. Also the technical word by which, in the practice in many of the states, a certifying officer gives assurance of the genuineness and correctness of a copy. Thus, an "attested" copy of a document is one which has been examined and compared with the original, with a certificate or memorandum of its correctness, signed by the persons who have examined it. See Affirmation; Jurat; Oath; Verification.

Attestation. The act of witnessing an instrument in writing, at the request of the party making the same, and subscribing the name of the witness in testimony of such fact. In re Carlson's Estate, 156 Or. 597, 68 P.2d 119, 121. See Affirmation; Jurat; Oath; Verification.

Attestation clause. That clause (e.g. at the end of a will) wherein the witnesses certify that the instrument has been executed before them, and the manner of the execution of the same. A certificate certifying as to facts and circumstances attending execution of will. In re Bragg's Estate, 106 Mont. 132, 76 P.2d 57, 62. See Uniform Probate Code, § 2-502.

Attestation of will. Act of witnessing performance of statutory requirements to valid execution. Zaruba v. Schumaker, Tex.Civ.App., 178 S.W.2d 542, 543. See Attestation clause.

Attested copy. See Attest.

Attesting witness. One who signs his name to an instrument, at the request of the party or parties, for the purpose of proving and identifying it.

Attestor. One who attests or vouches for.

At the courthouse door. In proximity of courthouse door. At place provided for posting of legal notices in courthouse. Matson v. Federal Farm Mortg. Corporation, Tex.Civ.App., 151 S.W.2d 636, 640, 641.

At the end of the will. The words "at the end of the will" within statute providing that every will shall be subscribed by testator at the end of the will mean the end of the language and not paper on which it is written. In re Hildreth's Will, 36 N.Y.S.2d 938, 939, 940.

At the market. Order to broker to buy or sell a stock at the current market price, rather than at a specified price. See Market order.

At time cause of action accrues. Term is sometimes applied to present enforceable demand, but more often simply means to arise or come into existence. Stone v. Phillips, 142 Tex. 216, 176 S.W.2d 932, 933.

Attincta /ətɪŋktə/. L. Lat. An attain, stain, or blackening; a conviction or finding of guilty of some offense.

Attorn /ətɔrn/. To turn over; to transfer to another money or goods; to assign to some particular use or service. To consent to the transfer of a rent or reversion. To agree to become tenant to one as owner or landlord of an estate previously held of another, or to agree to recognize a new owner of a property or estate and promise payment of rent to him.

Attornare /ətɔrnəri/. Lat. To attorn; to transfer or turn over; to appoint an attorney or substitute.

Attornare rem /ətɔrnəri rém/. To turn over money or goods, i.e., to assign or appropriate them to some particular use or service.

Attornato faciendo vel recipiendo /ətɔrnédow fəshiyéndow vél rəsipiyéndow/. An obsolete writ, which commanded a sheriff or steward of a county court or hundred court to receive and admit an attorney to appear for the person that owed suit of court.

Attornatus /ətɔrnéytəs/. One who is attorned, or put in the place of another; a substitute; hence, an attorney.

Attornatus fere in omnibus personam domini representat /ətɔrnéytəs firiy in ómnabəs pərsównam dómənay rəprézéntət/. An attorney represents the person of his master in almost all respects.

Attorne /ətɔrn/. L. Fr. In old English law, an attorney.

Attorney. In the most general sense this term denotes an agent or substitute, or one who is appointed and authorized to act in the place or stead of another. An agent, or one acting on behalf of another. Sherts v. Fulton Nat. Bank of Lancaster, 342 Pa. 337, 21 A.2d 18. In its most common usage, however, unless a contrary meaning is clearly intended, this term means "attorney at law", "lawyer" or "counselor at law".

"Attorney" means attorney, professional law association, corporation, or partnership, authorized under applicable law to practice law. Bankruptcy Code, § 101.

The word "attorney" includes a party prosecuting or defending an action in person. New York C.P.L.R. § 105.

See also Attorney for government; Attorney General; Barrister; District (District attorney); House counsel; Lawyer; Prosecuting attorney; State's attorney; United States Attorney.

Attorney ad hoc. See Ad hoc.

Attorney at large. In old practice, an attorney who practiced in all the courts.

Attorney at law. Person admitted to practice law in his respective state and authorized to perform both civil and criminal legal functions for clients, including drafting of legal documents, giving of legal advice, and representing such before courts, administrative agencies, boards, etc.

In English law, a public officer belonging to the superior courts of common law at Westminster, who conducted legal proceedings on behalf of others, called his clients, by whom he was retained; he answered to the solicitor in the courts of chancery, and the proctor of the admiralty, ecclesiastical, probate, and divorce courts. An attorney was almost invariably also a solicitor. It was provided by the judicature act, 1873, § 87, that solicitors, attorneys, or proctors of, or by law empowered to practice in, any court the jurisdiction of which is by that act transferred to the high court of justice or the court of appeal, shall be called "solicitors of the supreme court."

Attorney ethics. See Code of Professional Responsibility; Rules of Professional Conduct.

Attorney fees. See American rule; Attorney's lien; Common fund doctrine; Equal Access to Justice Act; Fee; Lodestar Rule; Minimum fee schedules; Retainer.

Attorney in fact. A private attorney authorized by another to act in his place and stead, either for some particular purpose, as to do a particular act, or for the transaction of business in general, not of a legal character. This authority is conferred by an instrument in writing, called a "letter of attorney," or more commonly a "power of attorney." See Power of attorney.

Attorney of record. Attorney whose name must appear somewhere in permanent records or files of case, or on the pleadings or some instrument filed in the case, or on appearance docket. Person whom the client has named as his agent upon whom service of papers may be made. Reynolds v. Reynolds, 21 Cal.2d 580, 134 P.2d 251, 254.

An attorney who has filed a notice of appearance (e.g., through a praecipe) and who hence is formally mentioned in court records as the official attorney of the party. Once an attorney becomes an attorney of record, he often cannot withdraw from the case without court permission.

Every pleading of a party represented by an attorney shall be signed by at least one attorney of record in his individual name, whose address shall be stated. Fed.R. Civil P. 11.

Attorney's license. A formal document issued by a state supreme court, normally after passage of a bar examination, which permits one to practice law in that jurisdiction. Also, a similar document issued by federal courts to attorneys admitted to practice in state courts. Such licenses may be revoked because of disbarment or suspended for attorney misconduct.

Attorney's lien. See Attorney's lien.

Letter of attorney. A power of attorney; a written instrument by which one person constitutes another his true and lawful attorney, in order that the latter may do for the former, and in his place and stead, some lawful act. An instrument of writing, appointing an attorney in fact for an avowed purpose and setting forth his powers and duties. It is, in effect, a mere contract of agency. A general power authorizes the agent to act generally in behalf of the principal. A special power is one limited to particular acts.

Power of attorney. The instrument by which authority of one person to act in place and stead of another as attorney in fact is set forth. See also Power of attorney.

Practice of law. See Practice.

Public attorney. A name sometimes given to an attorney at law, as distinguished from a private attorney, or attorney in fact.

Right to attorney. See Counsel, right to.

Attorney-client privilege. In law of evidence, client's privilege to refuse to disclose and to prevent any other person from disclosing confidential communications between he and his attorney. Such privilege protects communications between attorney and client made for purpose of furnishing or obtaining professional legal advice or assistance. Levingston v. Allis-Chalmers Corp., D.C.Miss., 109 F.R.D. 546, 550. That privilege which permits an attorney to refuse to testify as to communications from client to him though it belongs to client, not to attorney, and hence client may waive it. In federal courts, state law is applied with respect to such privilege. Fed.Evid. Rule 501. See also Client's privilege; Joint defense doctrine.

Attorney for government. Includes the Attorney General, an authorized assistant of the Attorney General, a United States Attorney, an authorized assistant of a United States Attorney and when applicable to cases arising under the laws of Guam means the Attorney General of Guam or such other person or persons as may be authorized by the laws of Guam to act therein. Fed.R.Crim.P. 54(c).

Attorney General. The Attorney General, as head of the Department of Justice and chief law officer of the Federal Government, represents the United States in legal matters generally and gives advice and opinions to the President and to the heads of the executive departments of the Government when so requested. The Attorney General appears in person to represent the Government in the U.S. Supreme Court in cases of exceptional gravity or importance. See also Solicitor General.

In each state there is also an attorney general, who is the chief law officer of the state. He gives advice and opinions to the governor and to executive and administrative departments or agencies.

In England, the principal law officer of the Crown, and head of the bar of England.

Private Attorney General. The "private attorney general" concept holds that a successful private party plaintiff is entitled to recovery of his legal expenses, including attorney fees, if he has advanced the policy inherent in public interest legislation on behalf of a significant class of persons. Dasher v. Housing Authority of City of Atlanta, Ga., D.C.Ga., 64 F.R.D. 720, 722. See also Equal Access to Justice Act.

Attorney general's bill. An indictment presented to grand jury by leave of court without prior complaint before magistrate and holding for court. Commonwealth v. Wilson, 134 Pa.Super. 222, 4 A.2d 324, 327.

Attorney general's opinion. An opinion furnished by U.S. Attorney General to President, members of executive department or governmental agencies on request concerning question of law. Also, opinion rendered by state attorney general to Governor or state agencies on request concerning an interpretation of law.

Attorney, right to. See Counsel, right to.

Attorneyship. The office of an agent or attorney.

Attorney's lien. The right of an attorney at law to hold or retain in his possession the money or property of a client until his proper charges have been adjusted and paid. It requires no equitable proceeding for its establishment. Also a lien on funds in court payable to the client, or on a judgment or decree or award in his favor, recovered through the exertions of the attorney, and for the enforcement of which he must invoke the equitable aid of the court.

Charging lien. An attorney's lien, for his proper compensation, on the fund or judgment which his client has recovered by means of his professional aid and services. It is a specific lien covering only the services rendered by an attorney in the action in which the judgment was obtained, whereas a retaining lien is a general lien for the balance of the account between the attorney and his client, and applies to the property of the client which may come into the attorney's possession in the course of his employment.

Retaining lien. The lien which an attorney has upon all his client's papers, deeds, vouchers, etc., which remain in his possession, entitling him to retain them until satisfaction of his claims for professional services. It is a general lien.

Attorney's work product. See Work product rule.

Attornment /ə'tɔːnmənt/. In feudal and old English law, a turning over or transfer by a lord of the services of his tenant to the grantee of his seignior.

Attornment is the act of a person who holds a leasehold interest in land, or estate for life or years, by which he agrees to become the tenant of a stranger who has acquired the fee in the land, or the remainder or reversion, or the right to the rent or services by which the tenant holds. It is an act by which a tenant acknowledges his obligation to a new landlord.

The agreement of a person to recognize a third party as a permissible successor party to a contract; most often, the agreement of a tenant to pay rent to a new landlord, especially a mortgagee who has foreclosed.

Attractive agencies doctrine. See Attractive nuisance doctrine.

Attractive instrumentalities doctrine. See Attractive nuisance doctrine.

Attractive nuisance doctrine. The doctrine is that person who has an instrumentality, agency, or condition upon his own premises, or who creates such condition on the premises of another, or in a public place, which may reasonably be apprehended to be a source of danger to children, is under a duty to take such precautions as a reasonably prudent man would take to prevent injury to children of tender years whom he knows to be accustomed to resort there, or who may, by reason of something there which may be expected to attract them, come there to play. See Restatement, Second, Torts § 339.

Attribution. Under certain circumstances, the tax law applies attribution rules to assign to one taxpayer the ownership interest of another taxpayer. If, for example, the stock of X Corporation is held 60% by M and 40% by S, M may be deemed to own 100% of X Corporation if M and S are mother and son. In such a case, the stock owned by S is attributed to M. Stated differently, M has a 60% "direct" and a 40% "indirect" interest in X Corporation. It can also be said that M is the "constructive" owner of S's interest.

Attrition. In general, natural and gradual decrease. Term is used to describe decline in public utility's actual rate of return, after test year, caused by growth in its rate base or operating expenses, or both, which outstrips any increase in revenues. South Central Bell Tel. Co. v. Louisiana Public Service Commission, La., 373 So.2d 478, 486. Term used to describe the phenomenon present when factors, other than extraordinary growth, are forcing costs upward without a concomitant increment in revenues. Southern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Florida Public Service Com'n, Fla., 443 So.2d 92, 95.

Att'y. Attorney.

Aubaine /ɔːwbeɪn/. See Droit d'aubaine.

A.U.C. Ab urbe condita. From the founding of the city.

Auction /ɔːkʃən/. An auction is a public sale of property to the highest bidder by one licensed and authorized for that purpose. The auctioneer is employed by the seller and is primarily his agent. However, when the property is struck off he is also the agent of the buyer to the extent of binding the parties by his memorandum of sale, thus satisfying the statute of frauds. Hawaii Jewelers Ass'n v. Fine Arts Gallery, Inc., 51 Hawaii 502, 463 P.2d 914, 916.

A sale by auction is complete when the auctioneer so announces by the fall of the hammer or in other customary manner. Such a sale is with reserve unless the goods are in explicit terms put up without reserve. U.C.C. § 2-328.

Dutch auction. A method of sale by auction which consists in the public offer of the property at a price beyond its value, and then gradually lowering the price until some one becomes the purchaser.

Auctionaria /ɔːkʃ(ɪ)ənəriyɪ/. Catalogues of goods for public sale or auction.

Auctionarius /ɔːkʃ(ɪ)ənəriyəs/. A seller; a regrator; a retailer; one who bought and sold; an auctioneer, in the modern sense. One who buys poor, old, worn-out things to sell again at a greater price.

Auctioneer. A person authorized or licensed by law to sell lands or goods of other persons at public auction. One who sells goods at public auction for another on commission, or for a recompense.

Auctioneers differ from brokers, in that the latter may both buy and sell, whereas auctioneers can only sell; also brokers may sell by private contract only, and auctioneers by public auction only.

Auctor /ɔːktər/. In the Roman law, an auctioneer. In the civil law, a grantor or vendor of any kind. In old French law, a plaintiff.

Auctoritas /ɔːktɔːrətəs/. In the civil law, authority. In old European law, a diploma, or royal charter.

Auctoritates philosophorum, medicorum, et poetarum, sunt in causis allegandæ et tenendæ /ɔːktɔːrətɛy-diɪz fəlozəfɔːrəm mɛdɔːkɔːrəm ɛt pɔːwɛtɛrəm sánt in kɔːzəs əlɛgændiɪ ɛt tənændiɪ/. The opinions of philosophers, physicians, and poets are to be alleged and received in causes.

Aucupia verborum sunt iudice indigna /òkyúwpiyà vërbòrəm sànt júwdësiy indígnə/. Catching at words is unworthy of a judge. Applied in State v. Flemming, 66 Me. 142, 151.

Audi alteram partem /òdày àltərəm pàrtəm/. Hear the other side; hear both sides. No man should be condemned unheard. Lowry v. Inman, 46 N.Y. 119; Shaw v. Stone, 55 Mass. (1 Cush.) 228.

Audience. In international law, a hearing; interview with the sovereign. The king or other chief executive of a country grants an audience to a foreign minister who comes to him duly accredited; and, after the recall of a minister, an "audience of leave" ordinarily is accorded to him.

Audience court. In English law, a court belonging to the Archbishop of Canterbury, having jurisdiction of matters of form only, as the confirmation of bishops, and the like. This court has the same authority with the Court of Arches, but is of inferior dignity and antiquity. The Dean of the Arches is the official auditor of the Audience court. The Archbishop of York has also his Audience court. These courts, as separate courts, have long since been disused.

Audiendo et terminando /òdiyéndow èt tərmenéndow/. A writ or commission to certain persons to appease and punish any insurrection or great riot.

Audit. Systematic inspection of accounting records involving analyses, tests, and confirmations.

The hearing and investigation had before an auditor. An audience; a hearing; an examination in general. A formal or official examination and authentication of accounts, with witnesses, vouchers, etc. Green-Boots Const. Co. v. State Highway Commission, 165 Okl. 288, 25 P.2d 783.

See also Auditor; Generally Accepted Auditing Standards (GAAS).

Audit opinion. Report of certified public accountant after an examination of financial statements, expressing opinion on the fairness of presentation of such statements. The opinion may take one of the following forms: unqualified opinion; qualified opinion; adverse opinion; disclaimer of opinion.

Audit trail. Chain of evidence connecting account balances or other summary results to original transactions and calculations. The flow of events between the original transaction and the account balances in the financial statements.

Correspondence audit. See Correspondence audit.

Desk audit. Review of civil service positions to determine if duties and responsibilities of position fit job classification and pay grade.

Field audit. An audit by the Internal Revenue Service conducted on the business premises of the taxpayer or in the office of the tax practitioner representing the taxpayer. To be distinguished from a correspondence audit or an office audit (q.v.).

Independent audit. One conducted by an outside person or firm not connected in any way with the company being audited. See also Audit committee.

Internal audit. Audit performed by personnel of company to assure that internal procedures, operations, and accounting practices are in proper order—in contrast to an audit by outside, independent auditors.

Office audit. See Office (Office audit).

Tax audit. An examination of books, vouchers and records, or other transactions possessing tax consequences, of a taxpayer conducted by agents of the I.R.S. See Correspondence audit; Office (Office audit); RAR.

Audita querela /òdáydə kwəriylə/. The name of a common law writ constituting the initial process in an action brought by a judgment defendant to obtain relief against the consequences of the judgment on account of some matter of defense or discharge arising since its rendition and which could not be taken advantage of otherwise. Barnett v. Gitlitz, 290 Ill.App. 212, 8 N.E.2d 517, 520. May also lie for matters arising before judgment where defendant had no opportunity to raise such matters in defense. Louis E. Bower, Inc. v. Silverstein, 298 Ill.App. 145, 18 N.E.2d 385, 387.

This writ has been abolished in most states that have adopted Rules of Civil Procedure, being supplanted by motion for relief from judgment. Rule of Civil Procedure 60(b).

Audit committee. A committee of the board of directors of a corporation usually consisting of outside directors who nominate the independent auditors and discuss their work with them. If the auditors believe certain matters should be brought to the attention of stockholders, the auditors first bring these matters to the attention of the audit committee.

Auditor. One who checks the accuracy, fairness, and general acceptability of accounting records and statements and then attests to them; e.g. a Certified Public Accountant.

A State official whose duty is to examine the accounts of state agencies to determine if expenditures were made in accordance with authorizations by the legislature. See also General Accounting Office.

An officer of a business who examines and verifies accounts for accuracy.

An officer (or officers) of the court, assigned to state the items of debit and credit between the parties in a suit where accounts are in question, and exhibit the balance. Under the Rules of Civil Procedure in many states, the term "master" is used to describe those persons formerly known as auditors; e.g. Mass.R. Civil P. 53. See Master; Reference.

Auditor of the impost. Any of several officers in the English exchequer, who formerly had the charge of auditing the accounts of the customs, naval and military expenses, etc., now performed by the commissioners for auditing public accounts.

Auditor of the receipts. An officer of the English exchequer.

Public auditor. Examines account records of private businesses for a fee.

State auditor. See first general definition above.

Augmentation /ɔ̃gməntéyshən/. The increase of the crown's revenues from the suppression of religious houses and the appropriation of their lands and revenues. Also the name of a court (now abolished) erected 27 Hen. VIII, to determine suits and controversies relating to monasteries and abbey-lands. The court was dissolved in the reign of Mary, but the office of augmentations remained long after.

A share of the great tithes temporarily granted to the vicars by the appropriators, and made perpetual by statute 29 Car. II, c. 8. The word is used in a similar sense in the Canadian law.

Augmented estate. Estate reduced by funeral and administration expenses, homestead allowance, family allowances, exemptions, and enforceable claims to which is added value of property transferred to anyone other than bona fide purchaser and value of property owned by surviving spouse at decedent's death. Uniform Probate Code, § 2-202.

Augusta legibus soluta non est /əgəstə líyjbəs səl(y)úwtə nòn ést/. The empress or queen is not privileged or exempted from subjection to the laws. 1 Bl. Comm. 219.

Aula /ólə/. In old English law, a hall, or court; the court of a baron, or manor; a court baron. This word was employed in mediæval England along with curia; it was used of the meetings of the lord's men held there in the same way that the word court was used.

Aula ecclesiæ /ólə əklízyiy/. A nave or body of a church where temporal courts were anciently held.

Aula regis /ólə riyjəs/. (Called also Aula Regia.) The king's hall or palace. The chief court of England in early Norman times. It was established by William the Conqueror in his own hall. It was composed of the great officers of state, resident in the palace, and followed the king's household in all his expeditions. See also Curia regis.

Aulic /ólək/. Pertaining to a royal court.

Aulnage. See Alnager.

Aulnager. See Alnager.

Aumone, service in. Where lands are given in alms to some church or religious house, upon condition that a service or prayers shall be offered at certain times for the repose of the donor's soul.

Aunt. The sister of one's father or mother, and a relation in the third degree, correlative to niece or nephew.

Aunt Minnie. An arrangement whereby a stockbroker, with memberships on both New York Stock Exchange and regional exchange, gives up part of his or her commission on the regional exchange in consideration of the recipient arranging to place a trade on the New York Stock Exchange so that recipient pays for the New York Stock Exchange trade not the regular commission but that amount less the give-up on the regional exchange; it is an unlawful rebate. Moses v. Burgin, D.C.Mass., 316 F.Supp. 31, 47.

Aures /óhriyz/. A Saxon punishment by cutting off the ears, inflicted on those who robbed churches, or were guilty of any other theft.

Aurum reginæ /óhrəm rəjányiy/. Queen's gold. A royal revenue belonging to every queen consort during her marriage with the king.

Australian ballot. An official ballot on which the names of all the candidates are printed. Its use is accompanied by safeguards designed to maintain secrecy in voting. The so-called Australian ballot laws, widely adopted in various forms in the United States, have generally been sustained by the courts.

Auter /ówtər/, autre /'trə/. L. Fr. Another; other. See Autre.

Authentic /əθéntik/. Genuine; true; real; pure; reliable; trustworthy; having the character and authority of an original; duly vested with all necessary formalities and legally attested. Competent, credible, and reliable as evidence.

Authentic act. In the civil law, an act which has been executed before a notary or public officer authorized to execute such functions, or which is testified by a public seal, or has been rendered public by the authority of a competent magistrate, or which is certified as being a copy of a public register.

Authentic copy. A copy which is of such authority as to prove the form and contents of the original from which it is taken. See also Authentication.

Authentication /əθéntəkéyshən/. In the law of evidence, the act or mode of giving authority or legal authenticity to a statute, record, or other written instrument, or a certified copy thereof, so as to render it legally admissible in evidence. Verifications of judgments. An attestation made by a proper officer by which he certifies that a record is in due form of law, and that the person who certifies it is the officer appointed so to do. Acts done with a view of causing an instrument to be known and identified. See also Verification.

Authentication of a writing means (a) the introduction of evidence sufficient to sustain a finding that it is the writing that the proponent of the evidence claims it is or (b) the establishment of such facts by any other means provided by law. Calif.Evid.Code, § 1400.

The requirement of authentication as a condition precedent to admissibility of evidence is satisfied by evidence sufficient to support a finding that the matter in question is what its proponent claims. Fed.Evid.Rule 901.

Self authentication. Statutes frequently provide that certain classes of writings shall be received in evidence "without further proof." The following fall into this category: (1) deeds, conveyances or other instruments, which have been acknowledged by the signers before a notary public, (2) certified copies of public records, and (3) books of statutes which purport to be printed by public authority. See Fed.Evid.Rule 902.

Authenticum /oθéntakəm/. In the civil law, an original instrument or writing; the original of a will or other instrument, as distinguished from a copy.

Author. One who produces, by his own intellectual labor applied to the materials of his composition, an arrangement or compilation new in itself. A beginner or mover of anything; hence efficient cause of a thing; creator; originator; a composer, as distinguished from an editor, translator or compiler.

Authorities. Citations to constitutions, statutes, precedents, judicial decisions, rules, regulations, textbooks, articles, and the like made on the argument of questions of law (e.g., in briefs, motions, etc.) on the trial of causes before a court, in support of the legal positions contended for, or adduced to fortify the opinion of a court or of a text writer upon any question. Authorities may be either primary (e.g., statutes, court decisions, regulations), or secondary (e.g., Restatements, treatises).

Authority. Permission. Right to exercise powers; to implement and enforce laws; to exact obedience; to command; to judge. Control over; jurisdiction. Often synonymous with power. The power delegated by a principal to his agent. The lawful delegation of power by one person to another. Power of agent to affect legal relations of principal by acts done in accordance with principal's manifestations of consent to agent. See Restatement, Second, Agency § 7.

Refers to the precedential value to be accorded an opinion of a judicial or administrative body. A court's opinion is binding authority on other courts directly below it in the judicial hierarchy. Opinions of lower courts or of courts outside the hierarchy are governed by the degree to which it adheres to the doctrine of stare decisis. See Stare decisis.

Legal power; a right to command or to act; the right and power of public officers to require obedience to their orders lawfully issued in the scope of their public duties.

See also Actual authority; Apparent authority; Binding authority; Commission; Competent authority; Constructive authority; Control; Credentials; Implied authority; Power; Precedent; Real authority; Scope of authority.

Actual express authority. Actual authority derived from written or spoken words of principal. See also Actual authority.

Actual implied authority. Actual authority inferred from words or conducted manifested to agent by principal. See also Implied authority.

Apparent authority. That which, though not actually granted, the principal knowingly permits the agent to exercise, or which he holds him out as possessing. The power to affect the legal relations of another person by transactions with third persons, professedly as agent for the other, arising from and in accordance with the other's manifestations to such third persons. Restatement, Second, Agency, § 8. See Authority by estoppel, below.

Authority by estoppel. Not actual, but apparent only, being imposed on the principal because his conduct has been such as to mislead, so that it would be unjust to let him deny it. See Apparent authority, above.

Authority coupled with an interest. Authority given to an agent for a valuable consideration, or which forms part of a security.

Express authority. That given explicitly, either in writing or orally. See Express authority.

General authority. That which authorizes the agent to do everything connected with a particular business. It empowers him to bind his principal by all acts within the scope of his employment; and it cannot be limited by any private direction not known to the party dealing with him.

Implied authority. Actual authority circumstantially proved. That which the principal intends his agent to possess, and which is implied from the principal's conduct. It includes only such acts as are incident and necessary to the exercise of the authority expressly granted.

Incidental authority. Such authority as is necessary to carry out authority which is actually or apparently given, e.g. authority to borrow money carries with it as an incidental authority the power to sign commercial paper to effectuate the borrowing.

Inherent authority. Such power as reposes in an agent by virtue of the agency itself.

Limited authority. Such authority as the agent has when he is bound by precise instructions.

Naked authority. That arising where the principal delegates the power to the agent wholly for the benefit of the former.

Special authority. That which is confined to an individual transaction. Such an authority does not bind the principal, unless it is strictly pursued.

Unlimited authority. That possessed by an agent when he is left to pursue his own discretion.

Authorize. To empower; to give a right or authority to act. To endow with authority or effective legal power, warrant, or right. People v. Young, 100 Ill.App.2d 20, 241 N.E.2d 587, 589. To permit a thing to be done in the future. It has a mandatory effect or meaning, implying a direction to act.

"Authorized" is sometimes construed as equivalent to "permitted"; or "directed", or to similar mandatory language. Possessed of authority; that is, possessed of legal or rightful power, the synonym of which is "competency." Doherty v. Kansas City Star Co., 143 Kan. 802, 57 P.2d 43, 45.

Authorized capital. See Authorized stock issue.

Authorized stock issue. Total number of shares of capital stock which charter or articles of incorporation permits corporation to sell. The shares of all classes a domestic or foreign corporation is authorized to issue. Rev. Model Bus. Corp. Act, § 140.

Autocracy /ótókrasíy/. The name of an unlimited monarchical government. A government at the will of one man (called an "autocrat"), unchecked by constitutional restrictions or limitations.

Autograph. One's handwriting; written with one's own hand.

Automatic stay. Immediately upon the filing of a voluntary petition under the Bankruptcy Code a stay arises which generally bars all debt collection efforts against the debtor or property of his bankruptcy estate although the collection of postpetition debts against the debtor is not stayed. Code § 362(a). The court need not sign any order to give rise to the stay; the mere filing of the petition, with supporting documentation, with the clerk is sufficient. In re Artishon, Bkrtcy.Minn., 39 B.R. 890, 893; Jones v. Wood (In re Wood), Bkrtcy.Idaho, 33 B.R. 320, 321.

Automatism /átómætízəm/. Behavior performed in a state of mental unconsciousness or dissociation without full awareness, i.e., somnambulism, fugues. Term is applied to actions or conduct of an individual apparently occurring without will, purpose, or reasoned intention on his part; a condition sometimes observed in persons who, without being actually insane, suffer from an obscuration of the mental faculties, loss of volition or of memory, or kindred affections. "Ambulatory automatism" describes the pathological impulse to purposeless and irresponsible wanderings from place to place often characteristic of patients suffering from loss of memory with dissociation of personality. Automatism may be asserted as a criminal defense to negate the requisite mental state of voluntariness for commission of a crime. See e.g. Model Penal Code, § 2.01.

Automobile guest. See Family automobile doctrine; Family purpose doctrine; Guest; Guest statute.

Automobile insurance. A comprehensive term which embraces insurance coverage for all risks involved in owning and operating an automobile, such as personal injury protection, property damage to another and to the insured, fire, theft and vandalism. See Insurance.

Autonomy. The political independence of a nation; the right (and condition) of power of self-government. The negation of a state of political influence from without or from foreign powers. Green v. Obergfell, 73 App.D.C. 298, 121 F.2d 46, 57.

Autopsy /ótópsíy/. The dissection of a dead body for the purpose of inquiring into the cause of death. A post mortem examination to determine the cause, seat, or nature of a disease. Such is normally required by statute for deaths by violent, unexplained, or unnatural means. See also Inquest.

Autoptic evidence. An exhibit of a thing offered before jury as evidence to be seen through jury's own eyes. Johnson v. State, 139 Tex.Cr.R. 279, 139 S.W.2d 579, 581. See Autoptic profference; Demonstrative evidence.

Autoptic profference. Proffering or presenting in open court of articles for observation or inspection of the tribunal. See Autoptic evidence; Demonstrative evidence.

Auto theft. A form of larceny, the subject matter of which is a motor vehicle. The taking and carrying away of a motor vehicle from the owner or possessor with intent to deprive him permanently of it. The intent distinguishes larceny from a lesser offense of use without authority. See also Joyriding.

Autre /ówtrə/. (Fr.) Another.

Autre action pendant /ówtrə àksíyówn pòndón/. In common law pleading, another action pending. A species of plea in abatement.

Autre droit /ówtrə dr(w)ó/. In right of another, e.g., a trustee holds trust property in right of his cestui que trust. A prochein amy sues in right of an infant. 2 Bl.Comm. 176.

Autrefois /ówtrəsfwó/. L. Fr. At another time; formerly; before; heretofore.

Autrefois acquit /ówtrəfwó àkíy'əkwtít/. Fr. Formerly acquitted. The name of a plea in bar to a criminal action, stating that the defendant has been once already indicted and tried for the same alleged offense and has been acquitted. See Double jeopardy.

Autrefois attaint /ówtrəfwó átæn/'ətəynt/. In criminal law, formerly attained. An old English plea (now obsolete) that the defendant has already been attained for one felony, and therefore cannot be criminally prosecuted for another.

Autrefois convict /ówtrəfwó kənvíkt/. Fr. Formerly convicted. A plea by a criminal in bar to an indictment that he has been formerly convicted of the same crime. 4 Bl.Comm. 336.

Autre vie /ówtrə víy/. Another's life. A person holding an estate for or during the life of another is called a tenant "pur autre vie," or "pur terme d'autre vie." See Estate pur autre vie.

Auxiliary /ogzil(iy)əriy/. Aiding; attendant on; ancillary (q.v.); as, an auxiliary bill in equity, an auxiliary receiver. Synonymous with "subsidiary." Baker v. Fenley, 233 Mo.App. 998, 128 S.W.2d 295, 298.

Auxiliator /ogziliyétər/. Lat. Helper or assistant; the word is closely related to the English word auxiliary.

Auxilium /ogziliyəm/. In feudal and old English law, aid; compulsory aid, hence a tax or tribute; a kind of tribute paid by the vassal to his lord, being one of the incidents of the tenure by knight's service.

Auxilium ad filium militem faciendum et filiam maritandam /ɔgziliyəm æd filiyəm milətəm fæshiyəndəm èt filiyəm mārətəndəm/. An ancient writ which was addressed to the sheriff to levy compulsorily an aid towards the knighting of a son and the marrying of a daughter of the tenants in capite of the crown.

Auxilium curiæ /ɔgziliyəm kyúriyiy/. In old English law, a precept or order of court citing and convening a party, at the suit and request of another, to warrant something.

Auxilium regis /ɔgziliyəm riyjəs/. In old English law, the king's aid or money levied for the royal use and the public service, as taxes granted by parliament. A subsidy paid to the king.

Auxilium vice comiti /ɔgziliyəm váysiy kómətay/. An ancient duty paid to sheriffs.

Available. Suitable; useable; accessible; obtainable; present or ready for immediate use. Having sufficient force or efficacy; effectual; valid.

Available for work. To be considered "available" for purposes of eligibility for unemployment compensation, claimant must be ready, willing and able to accept either temporary or permanent suitable employment at any time by another employer and be actually and currently attached to labor force. Craig v. Com. Unemployment Compensation Bd. of Review, 65 Pa.Cmwlth. 305, 442 A.2d 400, 402.

Avail of marriage. In feudal law, the right of marriage, which the lord or guardian in chivalry had of disposing of his infant ward in matrimony. A guardian in socage had also the same right, but not attended with the same advantage. 2 Bl.Comm. 88.

Aval /əvəl/. In French law, the guaranty of a bill of exchange; so called because usually placed at the foot or bottom (aval) of the bill.

In Canadian law, the act of subscribing one's signature at the bottom of a promissory note or of a bill of exchange; properly an act of suretyship, by the party signing, in favor of the party to whom the note or bill is given.

Avanture /əvònt(y)úr/. L. Fr. Chance; hazard; mischance.

Avaria, avarie /əvériyəs/. Average; the loss and damage suffered in the course of a navigation. See Average.

Avarice. Excessive greed or desire for wealth or gain.

Avenage. A certain quantity of oats paid by a tenant to his landlord as rent, or in lieu of some other duties.

Adventure, or adventure /ə(d)vénchər/. A mischance causing the death of a man, as where a person is suddenly drowned or killed by any accident, without felony.

Aver /əvər/, v. In pleading, to declare or assert; to set out distinctly and formally; to allege. See also Averment.

In old pleading, to avouch or verify; to make or prove true; to make good or justify a plea.

Aver /éyvər/, n. In old English and French, property; substance, estate and particularly live stock or cattle; hence a working beast, a horse or bullock.

Aver corn. A rent reserved to religious houses, to be paid in corn. Corn drawn by the tenant's cattle.

Aver land. In feudal law, land plowed by the tenant for the proper use of the lord of the soil.

Aver penny. Money paid towards the king's averages or carriages, and so to be freed thereof.

Aver silver. A custom or rent formerly so called.

Avera /əvīrə/. A day's work of a ploughman, formerly valued at eight pence.

Average. A mean proportion, medial sum or quantity, made out of unequal sums or quantities. Brisendine v. Skousen Bros., 48 Ariz. 416, 62 P.2d 326, 329. In ordinary usage the term signifies the mean between two or more quantities, measures, or numbers. If applied to something which is incapable of expression in terms of measure or amount, it signifies that the thing or person referred to is of the ordinary or usual type.

In maritime law, loss or damage accidentally happening to a vessel or to its cargo during a voyage. Also a small duty paid to masters of ships, when goods are sent in another man's ship, for their care of the goods, over and above the freight. See subdefinitions below.

In old English law, a service by horse or carriage, anciently due by a tenant to his lord. A labor or service performed with working cattle, horses, or oxen, or with wagons and carriages.

General average. A contribution by the several interests engaged in a maritime venture to make good the loss of one of them for the voluntary sacrifice of a part of the ship or cargo to save the residue of the property and the lives of those on board, or for extraordinary expenses necessarily incurred for the common benefit and safety of all. The law of general average is part of the maritime law, and not of the municipal law, and applies to maritime adventures only. Ralli v. Troop, 157 U.S. 386, 15 S.Ct. 657, 39 L.Ed. 742.

Gross average. More commonly called "general average" (q.v.). Where loss or damage occurs to a vessel or its cargo at sea, average is the adjustment and apportionment of such loss between the owner, the freight, and the cargo, in proportion to their respective interests and losses, in order that one may not suffer the whole loss, but each contribute ratably.

Particular average is a loss happening to the ship, freight, or cargo which is not to be shared by contribution among all those interested, but must be borne by the owner of the subject to which it occurs. It is thus called in contradistinction to general average.

Petty average denotes such charges and disbursements as, according to occurrences and the custom of every place, the master necessarily furnishes for the benefit of the ship and cargo, either at the place of loading or unloading, or on the voyage; such as the hire of a pilot for conducting a vessel from one place to another, tow-age, light money, beaconage, anchorage, bridge toll, quarantine and such like.

Simple average is the same as "particular average" (q.v.).

Average clause. A clause providing that similar items in one location or at several locations which are covered by one insurance policy shall each be covered in the proportion that the value in each bears to the value in all.

Average daily balance. Average amount of money that a depositor keeps on deposit in a bank, or average balance on which finance charge is computed on consumer credit account, on any given day.

Average man test. Used to determine bias of prospective juror who asserts that he is without prejudice but who is so connected with case that ordinary man under circumstances would be biased without recognition of his prejudice. U. S. v. Haynes, C.A.Conn., 398 F.2d 980, 984.

Averaging up or down. Practice of purchasing the same security at different price levels, thus realizing a higher or lower average cost than the first purchase.

A verbis legis non est recedendum /ey vǎrbis liyjis nón est rǎséndéndǎm/. The words of a statute must not be departed from. A court is not at liberty to disregard the letter of a statute, in favor of a supposed intention.

Averis captis in withernam /ǎviriyaš kǎptǎš in wiðǎrnǎm/. In old English pleading, a writ granted to one whose cattle were unlawfully distrained by another and driven out of the county in which they were taken, so that they could not be replevied by the sheriff.

Averium /ǎviriyaǎm/. Lat. Goods; property. A beast of burden.

Avow /ǎvǎw/. In pleading, to acknowledge and justify an act done. To make an avowry. See Avowal; Avowry; Justification.

Avowal /ǎvǎwǎl/. An open declaration. Purpose is to enable the court to know what the witness would have stated in answer to the question propounded, and to inform the court what the interrogator would prove contrary to the testimony given at the trial. See Offer of proof.

Avowant. One who makes an avowry.

Avowry /ǎvǎwry/. A common law pleading in the action of replevin, by which the defendant avows, that is, acknowledges and justifies the taking of the distress or

B

Baby Act. A plea of infancy, interposed for the purpose of defeating an action upon a contract made while the person was a minor, is vulgarly called "pleading the baby act". By extension, the term is applied to a plea of the statute of limitations.

Bachelor. One who has taken the first undergraduate degree (baccalaureate) in a college or university.

An unmarried man. A kind of inferior knight; an esquire.

Back, v. To indorse; to sign on the back; to sign generally by way of acceptance or approval; to substantiate; to countersign; to assume financial responsibility for. In old English law where a warrant issued in one county was presented to a magistrate of another county and he signed it for the purpose of making it executory in his county, he was said to "back" it.

Back, adv. To the rear; backward; in a reverse direction. Also, in arrear.

Backadation. See Backwardation.

Backbencher. A junior member of Parliament or other legislative body who sits in the rear benches, leaving the front benches for leaders of the assembly or other dignitaries.

Backberend (also Backberende) /bækberænd/. Sax. Bearing upon the back or about the person. Applied to a thief taken with the stolen property in his immediate possession. Used with handhabend, having in the hand.

Backbond. A bond of indemnification given to a surety.

Back carry. In forest law, the crime of having, on the back, game unlawfully killed. See Backberend.

Backdating. Predating a document or instrument prior to the date it was actually drawn. The negotiability of an instrument is not affected by the fact that it is backdated. U.C.C. § 3-114.

Backhaul. In freight transportation, to carry a shipment back over a segment of a route already covered.

Backing. Indorsement.

Backing a warrant. See Back.

Back lands. A term of no very definite import, but generally signifying lands lying back from (not contiguous to) a highway or a water course.

Backlog. Accumulation of unfilled orders.

Back order. An unfilled customer order or commitment, normally occurring because inventory is not sufficient to fill the order upon receipt from the customer.

Back pay award. Difference between wages already paid an employee and higher wages granted retroactively. A determination by a judicial or quasi judicial body that an employee is entitled to accrued but uncollected salary, wages or fringe benefits. Such may be awarded in employment discrimination cases.

Back-seat driver. A highly nervous passenger whether sitting in rear or by driver, who by unwarranted advice and warnings interferes in careful operation of motor vehicle.

Backside. In English law, a term formerly used in conveyances and also in pleading; it imports a yard at the back part of or behind a house, and belonging thereto.

Backspread. Less than normal price difference in arbitrage.

Back taxes. Those assessed for a previous year or years and remaining due and unpaid from the original tax debtor.

Back title letter. Letter given by title insurance company to an attorney advising of condition of title as of a certain date. Attorney then starts examination of title as of that date.

Back to work agreement. Agreement between union and employer covering terms and conditions upon which employees will return to work following settlement of strike.

Backwardation (also called Backadation) /bæk-wærdéyshən/. In the language of the stock exchange, this term signifies a consideration paid for delay in the delivery of stock contracted for, when the price is lower for time than for cash.

Backwards. In a policy of marine insurance, the phrase "forwards and backwards at sea" means from port to port in the course of the voyage, and not merely from one terminus to the other and back.

Backwater. Water in a stream which, in consequence of some dam or obstruction below, is detained or checked in its course, or flows back.

Bacon-Davis Act. Federal law (1931) granting Secretary of Labor power to set wage rates on public construction work to meet wages in private sector. 40 U.S.C.A. § 276a.

Baculus /bæk(y)ələs/. A rod, staff, or wand, used in old English practice in making livery of seisin where no building stood on the land. A stick or wand, by the erection of which on the land involved in a real action the defendant was summoned to put in his appearance; this was called "baculus nuntiatorius." 3 Bl.Comm. 279.

Bad. Vicious, evil, wanting in good qualities; the opposite of good. Defective, faulty, inferior, or imperfect. Kniffley v. Reid, 287 Ky. 212, 152 S.W.2d 615, 616.

Bad character. Absence of moral virtue; the predominance of evil habits in a person. In law of evidence, such character may be shown to affect credibility of witness by introduction of record of convictions for crimes or by reputation. Fed.Evid.R. 608, 609.

Bad check. A check which is dishonored on presentation for payment because of no, or insufficient, funds or closed bank account. Writing or passing of bad checks is a misdemeanor in most states. Model Penal Code § 224.5. See also Check kiting; Worthless (Worthless check).

Bad debt. A debt which is uncollectible; a permissible deduction for tax purposes in arriving at taxable income. I.R.C. § 166. Different tax treatment is afforded business and non-business bad debts. A business debt is defined by the Internal Revenue Code as a debt created or acquired in connection with a trade or business of the taxpayer, or a debt which becomes worthless in the taxpayer's trade or business. Loans between related parties (family members) generally are classified as non-business.

A deduction is permitted if a business account receivable subsequently becomes worthless providing the income arising from the debt was previously included in income. The deduction is allowed only in the year of worthlessness.

Bad-debt loss ratio. The proportion of the total receivables volume that is never collected by a business.

Bad debt reserve. An account used in bookkeeping to reflect the true worth of receivables in the balance sheet by estimating those debts which may not be collected and which ultimately will be written off as bad debts and claimed as a deduction for tax purposes. See also Reserve.

Bad faith. The opposite of "good faith," generally implying or involving actual or constructive fraud, or a design to mislead or deceive another, or a neglect or refusal to fulfill some duty or some contractual obligation, not prompted by an honest mistake as to one's rights or duties, but by some interested or sinister motive. Term "bad faith" is not simply bad judgment or negligence, but rather it implies the conscious doing of a wrong because of dishonest purpose or moral obliquity; it is different from the negative idea of negligence in that it contemplates a state of mind affirmatively operating with furtive design or ill will. Stath v. Williams, Ind. App., 367 N.E.2d 1120, 1124. An intentional tort which results from breach of duty imposed as consequence of relationship established by contract. Davis v. Allstate Ins. Co., 101 Wis.2d 1, 303 N.W.2d 596, 599.

Insurance. "Bad faith" on part of insurer is any frivolous or unfounded refusal to pay proceeds of policy; it is not necessary that such refusal be fraudulent. State Farm General Ins. Co. v. Clifton, 86 N.M. 757, 527 P.2d 798, 800. For purposes of an action against an insurer for failure to pay a claim, such conduct imports a dishonest purpose and means a breach of a known duty (i.e., good faith and fair dealing), through some motive of self-interest or ill will; mere negligence or bad judgment is not bad faith. Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Alabama v. Granger, Ala., 461 So.2d 1320, 1327.

Badge. A mark or cognizance worn to show the relation of the wearer to any person or thing; the token of anything; a distinctive mark of office or service.

Badger. To harass, pester, or bedevil persistently especially in a manner likely or designed to confuse, annoy or wear down. Eaton v. Klopman Mills, Inc., 2 N.C.App. 363, 163 S.E.2d 17, 18. See also Harassment.

In old English law, one who made a practice of buying corn or victuals in one place, and carrying them to another to sell and make profit by them.

Badges of fraud. A circumstance or other fact accompanying a transfer of property that the courts recognize as an especially reliable indicator of the transferor's actual intention to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors in making the transfer. It is defined as a fact tending to throw suspicion upon a transaction, and calling for an explanation. It is a suspicious circumstance that overhangs a transaction, or appears on the face of the papers. A circumstance which does not alone prove fraud, but which warrants inference of fraud, especially where there is a concurrence of many such badges. Brennecke v. Riemann, Mo., 102 S.W.2d 874, 877. Recognized "badges of fraud" include fictitious consideration, false statements as to consideration, transactions different from usual course of doing business, transfer of all of a debtor's property, insolvency, confidential relationship of parties, and transfers in anticipation of suit or execution. Hendrix v. Goldman, Mo., 92 S.W.2d 733, 736.

Badges of servitude. Congressional power to eliminate all vestiges of involuntary servitude pursuant to Thirteenth Amendment to U.S.Const.; Civil Rights Act of 1866. Jones v. Alfred H. Mayer Co., 392 U.S. 409, 88 S.Ct. 2186, 20 L.Ed.2d 1189.

Bad motive. Intentionally doing a wrongful act knowing at the time that it is wrongful. Davis v. Nash Central Motors, Mo.App., 332 S.W.2d 475, 480. See Bad faith.

Bad title. One which conveys no property to the purchaser of the estate. One which is so radically defective that it is not marketable, and hence such that a purchaser cannot be legally compelled to accept it. Compare Marketable title.

Baga /bægə/. In old English law, a bag or purse. Thus there was the petty-bag-office in the common-law jurisdiction of the court of chancery, because all original writs relating to the business of the crown were formerly kept in a little sack or bag, in parvâ bagâ.

Bagavel. In old English law, the citizens of Exeter had granted to them by charter from Edward I the collection of a certain tribute or toll upon all manner of wares brought to that city to be sold, toward the paving of the streets, repairing of the walls, and maintenance of the city, which was commonly called bagavel, bethugavel and chippinggavel.

Bail, v. To procure release of one charged with an offense by insuring his future attendance in court and compelling him to remain within jurisdiction of court. Manning v. State ex rel. Williams, 190 Okl. 65, 120 P.2d 980, 981. To deliver the defendant to persons who, in the manner prescribed by law, become security for his appearance in court. To set at liberty a person arrested or imprisoned, on security being taken for his appearance on a day and a place certain, which security is called "bail," because the party arrested or imprisoned is delivered into the hands of those who bind themselves for his forthcoming. See also Release on own recognizance.

The object of "bail" in civil cases is either directly or indirectly to secure payment of a debt or performance of other civil duties, while in criminal cases object is to secure appearance of principal before the court when his presence is needed. Johnson v. Shaffer, 64 Ohio App. 236, 28 N.E.2d 765, 767. In its more ancient signification, the word includes the delivery of property, real or personal, by one person to another.

See also Civil bail; Excessive bail; Jump bail.

Bail, n. Monetary amount for or condition of pretrial release from custody, normally set by a judge at the initial appearance. The purpose of bail is to ensure the return of the accused at subsequent proceedings. If the accused is unable to make bail, or otherwise unable to be released on his or her own recognizance, he or she is detained in custody. The Eighth Amendment (U.S. Const.) provides that excessive bail shall not be required.

The surety or sureties who procure the release of a person under arrest, by becoming responsible for his appearance at the time and place designated. Those persons who become sureties for the appearance of the defendant in court.

Bail absolute. Sureties whose liability is conditioned upon the failure of the principal to duly account for money coming to his hands as administrator, guardian, etc.

Bail bond. A three-party contract which involves state, accused and surety and under which surety guarantees state that accused will appear at subsequent proceedings. Accredited Surety & Cas. Co., Inc. v. State, for Use and Benefit of Hillsborough County, Fla.App., 383 So.2d 308.

A written undertaking, executed by the defendant or one or more sureties, that the defendant designated in such instrument will, while at liberty as a result of an order fixing bail and of the execution of a bail bond in satisfaction thereof, appear in a designated criminal action or proceeding when his attendance is required and otherwise render himself amenable to the orders and processes of the court, and that in the event he fails to do so, the signers of the bond will pay to the court (i.e. forfeit) the amount of money specified in the order fixing bail. Fed.R.Crim.P. 46; 18 U.S.C.A. § 3141 et seq. See also Release on own recognizance.

Cash bail bond. A sum of money, in the amount designated in an order fixing bail, posted by a defendant or by another person on his behalf (surety) with a court or other authorized public officer upon condition that such money will be forfeited if the defendant does not comply with the directions of a court requiring his attendance at the criminal action or proceeding involved and does not otherwise render himself amenable to the orders and processes of the court.

Unsecured bail bond. A bail bond for which the defendant is fully liable upon failure to appear in court when ordered to do so or upon breach of a material condition of release, but which is not secured by any deposit of or lien upon property. See Release on own recognizance.

Bail common. At common law a fictitious proceeding, intended only to express the appearance of a defendant, in cases where special bail is not required. It is put in in the same form as special bail, but the sureties are merely nominal or imaginary persons, as John Doe and Richard Roe. 3 Bl.Comm. 287.

Bail court. In old English law and practice, an auxiliary court of the court of queen's bench at Westminster, wherein points connected more particularly with pleading and practice are argued and determined. It has been abolished.

Bail dock. Formerly at the Old Bailey, in London, a small room taken from one of the corners of the court, and left open at the top, in which certain malefactors were placed during trial.

Bail in error. That given by a defendant who intends to bring a writ of error on the judgment and desires a stay of execution in the meantime.

Bail piece. A formal entry or memorandum of the recognizance or undertaking of special bail in civil actions, which, after being signed and acknowledged by the bail before the proper officer, is filed in the court in which the action is pending. 3 Bl.Comm. 291.

Bail point scale. System whereby a predetermined number of points are given for all positive aspects of the defendant's background. The total number of points determine whether the defendant will be released on his own recognizance or the amount of bail to be set for his release.

Bail to the action or bail above. See Special bail, below.

Bail to the sheriff or bail below. Persons who undertake that a defendant arrested upon mesne process in a civil action shall duly appear to answer the plaintiff; such undertaking being in the form of a bond given to the sheriff, termed a "bail bond" (q.v.). 3 Bl.Comm. 290.

Sureties who bind themselves to the sheriff to secure the defendant's appearance, or his putting in bail to the action on the return-day of the writ.

Civil bail. See that title.

Common bail. Fictitious sureties formally entered in the proper office of the court. See Bail common, above.

Special bail. Responsible sureties who undertake as bail above. Persons who undertake jointly and severally in behalf of a defendant arrested on mesne process in a civil action that, if he be condemned in the action, he shall pay the costs and condemnation (that is, the amount which may be recovered against him), or render himself a prisoner, or that they will pay it for him. 3 Bl.Comm. 291. See Bail to the sheriff or bail below, above.

Straw bail. Nominal or worthless bail. In English law, irresponsible persons, or men of no property, who make a practice of posting bail for any one who will pay them a fee therefor, and who originally, as a mark of their purpose, wore straw in their shoes.

Bailable. Capable of being bailed; admitting of bail; authorizing or requiring bail.

Bailable action. One in which the defendant is entitled to be discharged from arrest only upon giving bond to answer.

Bailable offense. One for which the prisoner may be admitted to bail.

Bailable process. Such as requires the officer to take bail, after arresting the defendant. That under which the sheriff is directed to arrest the defendant and is required by law to discharge him upon his tendering suitable bail as security for his appearance.

Bail bond. See Bail.

Bailee. In the law of contracts, one to whom goods are bailed; one to whom goods are entrusted by a bailor; the party to whom personal property is delivered under a contract of bailment. A species of agent to whom something movable is committed in trust for another. Smith v. State, 78 Okl.Cr. 343, 148 P.2d 206, 208. Under U.C.C., a person who by warehouse receipt, bill of lading or other document of title acknowledges possession of goods and contracts to deliver them. The transferee of goods under a bailment, including a warehouseperson or a carrier. U.C.C. § 7-102. See Gratuitous bailee.

Bailee for hire. A person to whom possession of personal property is transferred and who is compensated for caring for such property; e.g. a mechanic to whom an automobile is entrusted for repairs is a bailee for hire. See also Bailment (Bailment for mutual benefit).

Bailee policies. Floating insurance policies which cover goods while in possession of bailee without particular description in the policy. Gillespie v. Federal Compress & Warehouse Co., 37 Tenn.App. 476, 265 S.W.2d 21, 27.

Bailee's lien. Bailee's right (usually statutory) to retain bailed goods for payment of services.

Bailiff. A court officer or attendant who has charge of a court session in the matter of keeping order, custody of the jury, and custody of prisoners while in the court. One to whom some authority, care, guardianship, or jurisdiction is delivered, committed, or intrusted. One who is deputed or appointed to take charge of another's affairs; an overseer or superintendent; a keeper, protector, or guardian; a steward.

A person acting in a ministerial capacity who has by delivery the custody and administration of lands or goods for the benefit of the owner or bailor, and is liable to render an account thereof.

Bailiff-errant. A bailiff's deputy.

Bailiffs of franchises. In old English law, officers who performed the duties of sheriffs within liberties or privileged jurisdictions, in which formerly the king's writ could not be executed by the sheriff.

Bailiffs of hundreds. In old English law, officers appointed over hundreds, by the sheriffs, to collect fines therein, and summon juries; to attend the judges and justices at the assises and quarter sessions; and also to execute writs and process in the several hundreds. 1 Bl.Comm. 345.

Bailiffs of manors. In old English law, stewards or agents appointed by the lord (generally by an authority under seal) to superintend the manor, collect fines, and quit rents, inspect the buildings, order repairs, cut down trees, impound cattle trespassing, take an account of wastes, spoils, and misdemeanors in the woods and demesne lands, and do other acts for the lord's interest.

High bailiff. An officer formerly attached to an English county court. His duties were to attend the court when sitting; to serve summonses; and to execute orders, warrants, writs, etc. He also had similar duties under the bankruptcy jurisdiction of the county courts.

Special bailiff. A deputy sheriff, appointed at the request of a party to a suit, for the special purpose of serving or executing some writ or process in such suit.

Bailivia /beyliviyə/. In old law, a bailiff's jurisdiction, a bailiwick; the same as bailium. See Bailiwick.

In old English law, a liberty, or exclusive jurisdiction, which was exempted from the sheriff of the county, and over which the lord of the liberty appointed a bailiff with such powers within his precinct as an under-sheriff exercised under the sheriff of the county.

Bailiwick /béyləwɪk/. A territorial segment over which a bailiff or sheriff has jurisdiction; not unlike a county in today's governmental divisions.

Bailment. A delivery of goods or personal property, by one person (bailor) to another (bailee), in trust for the execution of a special object upon or in relation to such goods, beneficial either to the bailor or bailee or both, and upon a contract, express or implied, to perform the trust and carry out such object, and thereupon either to redeliver the goods to the bailor or otherwise dispose of the same in conformity with the purpose of the trust.

The bailee is responsible for exercising due care toward the goods.

Delivery of personalty for some particular use, or on mere deposit, upon a contract, express or implied, that after purpose has been fulfilled it shall be redelivered to the person who delivered it, or otherwise dealt with according to his directions, or kept until he reclaims it, as the case may be. Simpkins v. Ritter, 189 Neb. 644, 204 N.W.2d 383, 385.

Generally, no fiduciary relationship is created by a bailment and hence it is not accurate to refer to the transfer as "in trust", because no trustee-beneficiary relationship is created.

See also Pawn; Pledge.

Actual bailment. One which exists where there is either: (a) an "actual delivery," consisting in giving to the bailee or his agent the real possession of the chattel, or (b) a "constructive delivery," consisting of any of those acts which, although not truly comprising real possession of the goods transferred, have been held by legal construction equivalent to acts of real delivery.

Bailment for hire. A contract in which the bailor agrees to compensate the bailee. See also Bailee for hire, supra; and Bailment for mutual benefit, below.

Bailment for mutual benefit. One in which the parties contemplate some price or compensation in return for benefits flowing from the bailment, necessarily involving an express or implied agreement or undertaking to that effect. For example, delivery of automobile to one who, for a consideration, undertakes to repair it.

Bailment lease. A legal method by which one desiring to purchase an article but unable to pay therefor at the time, may secure possession thereof with the right to use and enjoy it as long as he pays stipulated rentals and becomes absolute owner after completing such installment payments, on payment of an additional sum which may be nominal. This right or option is common in auto lease agreements.

Constructive bailment. One arising where the person having possession of a chattel holds it under such circumstances that the law imposes upon him the obligation to deliver it to another. Wentworth v. Riggs, 159 App.Div. 899, 143 N.Y.S. 955, 956. See also Involuntary bailment, below.

Gratuitous bailment. Another name for a depositum or naked bailment, which is made only for the benefit of the bailor and is not a source of profit to the bailee.

Involuntary bailment. One arising by the accidental leaving of personal property in the possession of any person without negligence on the part of its owner. See Constructive bailment, above.

Lucrative bailment. One which is undertaken upon a consideration and for which a payment or recompense is to be made to the bailee, or from which he is to derive some advantage. See Bailment for hire, above.

Special bailment. In general, a bailment in which by law a bailee is given greater duties and liabilities than those imposed on an ordinary bailee. Innkeepers and common carrier bailees are examples.

Bailor. The party who bails or delivers goods to another (bailee) in the contract of bailment. The transferor of goods under a bailment.

Bailout. Various procedures whereby the owners of an entity can obtain its profits with favorable tax consequences. With corporations, for example, the bail-out of corporate profits without dividend consequences might be the desired objective. The alternative of distributing the profits to the shareholders as dividends generally is less attractive, since dividend income is taxed as ordinary income. See Preferred stock (Preferred stock bail-out).

Acquisition of a corporation for the principal purpose of favorable tax consequences by securing benefits of deduction, credit or other allowance which the acquiring corporation would not otherwise enjoy. I.R.C. § 269.

Bailout stock. When preferred stock is issued as a stock dividend and is non-taxable, it is called bailout stock. I.R.C. § 305.

Bait and switch. A deceptive sales practice. Such tactic usually involves advertising a low-priced product to lure customers to a store, then inducing them to buy higher-priced models by failing to stock sufficient quantities of the lower-priced item to satisfy demand, or by disparaging the less-expensive product. Such practices are prohibited by statute in most states. See Model Penal Code § 224.7(5). Tashof v. F. T. C., 437 F.2d 707, 709.

Balance. The difference between the sum of debit entries minus the sum of credit entries in an account. If positive, the difference is called a debit balance; if negative, a credit balance.

Often used in the sense of residue or remainder, and, in a general sense, may be defined as what remains or is left over.

See also Average daily balance.

Balance of payments. The difference between all payments made by one nation to all other nations in the world and the payments made to that nation by all other nations. An official accounting record that follows double-entry bookkeeping practices and records all of a country's foreign transactions. The country's exports are recorded as credits and imports as debits.

Balance of power. In international law, a distribution and an opposition of forces, forming one system, so that no nation or country shall be in a position, either alone or united with others, to impose its will on any other nation or country or interfere with its independence. See also Separation of powers.

Balance of trade. Part of the balance of payments. It shows the net figure for the value of all the goods imported and exported by one nation. An excess of imports over exports constitutes a trade deficit.

Balance sheet. A statement of financial position of any economic unit, disclosing as at a given moment of time, the value of its assets, liabilities, and equity of the owners in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles. See also Profit and loss statement.

Consolidated balance sheet. A statement of financial position which combines the assets, liabilities, and stockholders equity of a parent corporation and its subsidiary.

Net balance. In commercial usage, the balance of the proceeds, as from a sale of stock, after deducting the expenses incident to the sale.

Balancing of interests. Constitutional doctrine invoked when court is examining interplay between state action involving intrastate commerce and federal laws regarding interstate commerce. If there is legitimate state interest and if there is no clear congressional intent to preempt the field, state action will be upheld. Southern Pacific Co. v. State of Arizona ex rel., 325 U.S. 761, 65 S.Ct. 1515, 89 L.Ed. 1915.

Balancing test. A constitutional doctrine in which the court weighs the right of an individual to certain rights guaranteed by the Constitution with the rights of a state to protect its citizens from the invasion of their rights; used in cases involving freedom of speech and equal protection.

Balancing the equities. Doctrine commonly invoked in cases involving, for example, encroachment of building on another's land in which court will deny equitable relief to offended party in favor of money damages if the encroachment was made innocently and by mistake (not intentionally) and if encroachment is slight as compared with injury to offending party if he is required to remove. Adamec v. McCray, 63 Wash.2d 217, 386 P.2d 427, 428.

Baliva /bəˈlɪvə/. (Spelled also Balliva; equivalent to Balivatús, Balivia). L. Lat. In old English law, a bailiwick; the jurisdiction of a sheriff; the whole district within which the trust of the sheriff was to be executed. 3 Bl.Comm. 283.

Balivo amovendo. See Ballivo amovendo.

Ballastage. A toll paid for the privilege of taking up ballast from the bottom of a port or harbor. This arises from the property in the soil.

Ballistics /bəˈlɪstəks/. The science of gun examination frequently used in criminal cases, especially cases of homicide, to determine the firing capacity of a weapon, its fireability, and whether a given bullet was fired from a particular gun.

Ballium /béyl(i)yəm/. A fortress or bulwark; also bail.

Ballivo amovendo /bəˈlɪvəw èmowvëndow/. An ancient writ to remove a bailiff from his office for want of sufficient land in the bailiwick.

Balloon mortgage. A mortgage providing for specific payments at stated regular intervals, with the final payment considerably more than any of the periodic payments.

Balloon note. A form of promissory note which commonly calls for minimum payments of principal, if any, and the payment of interest at regular intervals, but which requires a substantial payment of principal at the end of the term; the final payment frequently representing essentially all the principal.

Balloon payment. The final payment of principal under a balloon note; commonly representing essentially the entire principal. See Balloon mortgage; Balloon note.

Ballot. Derived from ballotta, a round bullet, used for casting a vote. Process or means of voting, usually in secret, by written or printed tickets or slips of paper, or voting machine. Piece of paper or levers on voting machine on which the voter gives expression to his choice. Sawyer Stores v. Mitchell, 103 Mont. 148, 62 P.2d 342, 348. A means, or instrumentality, by which a voter secretly indicates his will or choice so that it may be recorded as being in favor of a certain candidate or for or against a certain proposition or measure. Porter v. Oklahoma City, Okl., 446 P.2d 384, 391.

The whole amount of votes cast. Also, list of candidates running for office.

Australian ballot. See Australian ballot.

Joint ballot. In parliamentary practice, an election or vote by ballot participated in by the members of both houses of a legislative assembly sitting together as one body, the result being determined by a majority of the votes cast by the joint assembly thus constituted, instead of by concurrent majorities of the two houses.

Massachusetts ballot. See that title.

Mutilated ballot. One from which the name of the candidate is cut out. One which is destitute or deprived of some essential or valuable part; greatly shortened.

Office block ballot. A ballot form on which the names of all candidates for a particular office are listed under the office title. Listings are made under various titles regardless of the various party affiliations of the candidates.

Official ballot. Depending on its use in local statutes, this term has a varied meaning. It may refer to a ballot which has been furnished by the clerk; or it may contemplate that a ballot must have been printed under the supervision of a designated member of the electoral board, sealed by the board, and by resolution declared to be one of the official ballots for the election to be held.

Party column ballot. Ballot form on which the names of all candidates of each political party are placed in separate columns under party names and symbols, regardless of the offices sought by the candidates.

Secret ballot. The expression by ballot, voting machine, or otherwise, but in no event by proxy, of a choice with respect to any election or vote taken upon any matter, which is cast in such a manner that the person expressing such choice cannot be identified with the choice expressed.

Ballot-box. A locked box wherein ballots are deposited.

Balnearii /bælniériyay/. In the Roman law, those who stole the clothes of bathers in the public baths. 4 Bl.Comm. 239.

Ban. In old English and civil law, a proclamation; a public notice; the announcement of an intended marriage. An excommunication; a curse, publicly pronounced. A proclamation of silence made by a crier in court before the meeting of champions in combat. A statute, edict, or command; a fine, or penalty. An expanse; an extent of space or territory; a space inclosed within certain limits; the limits or bounds themselves. An open field; the outskirts of a village. A privileged space or territory around a town, monastery, or other place.

Banc /bæŋk/báŋk/. Bench; the place where a court permanently or regularly sits; the seat of judgment; as, banc le roy, the king's bench; banc le common pleas, the bench of common pleas.

The full bench, full court. A "sitting en banc" is a meeting of all the judges of a court as distinguished from the sitting of a single judge or panel of judges.

Banci narratores /bænsay nārətóriyz/. In old English law, advocates; countors; serjeants. Applied to advocates in the common pleas courts. 1 Bl.Comm. 24.

Banco /bæŋkow/. Ital. A seat or bench of justice; also, in commerce, a word of Italian origin signifying a bank. Also a small tract of land on opposite side of river from country to which it belongs, and so existing by virtue of an avulsive change in the river. San Lorenzo Title & Improvement Co. v. City Mortgage Co., Tex.Civ.App., 48 S.W.2d 310, 314. See also Banc.

Bancus /bæŋkəs/. A high seat, or seat of distinction; a seat of judgment, or tribunal for the administration of justice. Often used for the court itself; thus, the English court of common pleas was formerly called Bancus.

Bancus reginæ /bæŋkəs rəjányŋy/. The queen's bench. See Queen's bench.

Bancus regis /bæŋkəs riyjəs/. The king's bench; the supreme tribunal of the king after parliament. 3 Bl. Comm. 41.

Bancus superior /bæŋkəs səpíriyər/. The upper bench. The king's bench was so called during the Protectorate.

Bandit. An outlaw; a man banned, or put under a ban; a brigand or robber. Banditti, a band of robbers.

Banditry. Organized robbery; brigandage; form of crime practiced by outlaws and plunderers.

Bane. A malefactor. Also a public denunciation of a malefactor; the same with what was called "hutesium," hue and cry.

Baneret, or banneret /bænərət/. In old English law, a knight made in the field, by the ceremony of cutting off the point of his standard, and making it, as it were, a banner. Knights so made were accounted so honorable that they were allowed to display their arms in the royal army, as barons did, and could bear arms with supporters. They were sometimes called "vexillarii."

A degree of honor next after a baron's, when conferred by the king; otherwise, it ranks after a baronet. 1 Bl.Comm. 403.

Bani /béynay/. Deodands (q.v.).

Banishment. A punishment inflicted upon criminals, by compelling them to leave a country for a specified period of time, or for life. Synonymous with exilement or deportation, importing a compulsory loss of one's country. See also Deportation.

Bank. A bank is an institution, usually incorporated, whose business it is to receive money on deposit, cash checks or drafts, discount commercial paper, make loans, and issue promissory notes payable to bearer, known as bank notes. U.C.C. § 1-201(4). American commercial banks fall into two main categories: state chartered banks and federally chartered national banks. See also Banking.

A bench or seat; the bench of justice; the bench or tribunal occupied by the judges; the seat of judgment; a court. The full bench, or full court; the assembly of all the judges of a court. See Banc.

An acclivity; an elevation or mound of earth, especially that which borders the sides of a water course. The land adjacent to a river. That part of a stream which retains the water. The elevation of land which confines the waters of a stream in their natural channel when they rise the highest and do not overflow the banks. A water-washed and relatively permanent elevation or acclivity at the outer line of a river bed which separates the bed from the adjacent upland, and serves to confine the waters within the bed and to preserve the course of the river. The land lying between the edge of the water of a stream at its ordinary low stage and the line which the edge of the water reaches in its ordinary high stage. An elevation of land which confines the waters of a stream when they rise out of the bed. Neither the line of ordinary high-water mark, nor of ordinary low-water mark, nor of a middle stage of water can be assumed as the line dividing the bed from the banks. Banks are fast land, on which vegetation appropriate to such land in the particular locality grows wherever the bank is not too steep to permit such growth, and bed is soil of a different character, and having no vegetation, or only such as exists, when commonly submerged in water. On the borders of navigable streams, where there are levees established according to law, the levees form the "banks of the river."

Advising bank. A bank which gives notification of the issuance of a credit by another bank. U.C.C. § 5-103(e).

Bank acceptance. Draft drawn on and accepted by bank.

Bank-account. A sum of money placed with a bank or banker, on deposit, by a customer, and subject to be drawn out on the latter's check. The statement or computation of the several sums deposited and those drawn out by the customer on checks, entered on the books of the bank and the depositor's passbook. Any account with a bank, including a checking, time, interest or savings account. U.C.C. § 4-104(a). See also Joint bank account.

Bank bill. See Bank note, below.

Bank book. A book kept by a customer of a bank, showing the state of his account with it. See Pass-book.

Bank call. Demand made on bank by state or federal supervisory personnel for examination of balance sheets.

Bank charter. Document issued by appropriate federal or state authority which permits corporation to commence business as a bank.

Bank credit. A credit with a bank by which, on proper credit rating or proper security given to the bank, a person receives liberty to draw to a certain extent agreed upon.

Bank debit. Total of checks and other commercial paper charged to deposit accounts.

Bank deposit. Cash, checks, or drafts placed with bank for credit to depositor's account. Placement of money in bank thereby creating contract between bank and depositor. U.C.C. § 4-103.

Demand deposit. Right to withdraw deposit at any time.

Time deposit. Deposit which is subject to notice (e.g. thirty days) before withdrawal.

Bank depositor. One who delivers to or leaves with a bank a sum of money subject to his order. Wharton v. Poughkeepsie Sav. Bank, 262 App.Div. 598, 31 N.Y.S.2d 311, 313.

Bank draft. A check, draft, or other order for payment of money, drawn by an authorized officer of a bank upon either his own bank or some other bank in which funds of his bank are deposited. Perry v. West, 110 N.H. 351, 266 A.2d 849, 852. An order to pay that is similar to a check, except that it is not payable on demand. Instead, a bank draft is payable when the issuing firm accepts it.

Bank note. A promissory note issued by a bank or banker authorized to do so, payable to bearer on demand, and intended to circulate as money. See Federal reserve notes.

Bank of circulation. One which issues bank notes payable to bearer. See Bank of issue, below.

Bank of deposit. A savings bank or any other bank which receives money on deposit.

Bank of discount. One which lends money on collateral or by means of discounts of commercial paper.

Bank of issue. Bank with authority to issue notes intended to circulate as currency.

Bank rate. Interest rate charged customers on loans. See Interest; Legal interest.

Bank statement. Financial statement showing financial condition of bank at a given time. Federal (national banks) and state laws require that such statements be published several times a year.

Bank stock. Shares in the capital of a bank; shares in the property of a bank.

Bank teller. See Teller.

Branch banking. See Branch bank.

Central banks. Federal Reserve banks.

Collecting bank. Any bank handling the item for collection except the payor bank. U.C.C. § 4-105(d). See also Collecting bank.

Commercial bank. See Commercial bank.

Confirming bank. A bank which engages either that it will itself honor a credit already issued by another bank or that such a credit will be honored by the issuer or a third bank. U.C.C. § 5-103(f). See also Confirming bank.

Correspondent bank. Bank which acts as agent for another bank, or engages in an exchange of services with that bank, in a geographical area to which the other does not have direct access.

Custodian bank. Any bank or trust company which is supervised and examined by state or federal authority having supervision over banks and which is acting as custodian for a clearing corporation. U.C.C. § 8-102(4).

Depository bank. The first bank to which an item is transferred for collection even though it is also the payor bank. U.C.C. § 4-105(a).

Export-import bank. See Export-Import Bank.

Federal land bank. See Federal Land Banks.

Federal reserve bank. See Federal Reserve System.

Intermediary bank. Any bank to which an item is transferred in course of collection except the depository or payor bank. U.C.C. § 4-105(c). See also Intermediary bank.

Land bank. See Land bank.

Member bank. See Member bank.

Mutual savings bank. See Mutual savings bank.

National bank. See National bank.

Non-member bank. Bank that is not a member of the Federal Reserve Board and, as such, is only governed by laws of state where chartered.

Payor bank. A bank by which an item is payable as drawn or accepted. U.C.C. § 4-105(b).

Presenting bank. Any bank presenting an item except a payor bank. U.C.C. § 4-105(e).

Remitting bank. Any payor or intermediary bank remitting for an item. U.C.C. § 4-105(f).

Savings and loan bank. See Mutual savings bank; Savings and loan association.

Savings bank. Type of bank that receives deposits, and pays interest thereon, and makes certain types of loans (e.g. home financing loans), but does not provide checking services. See Mutual savings bank; Savings and loan association. Compare Commercial bank.

World bank. See that title.

Bankable paper. Notes, checks, bank bills, drafts and other securities for money, received as cash by banks.

Bank bill. See Bank (Bank note).

Bank clearings. See Clearinghouse.

Banker. In general sense, person that engages in business of banking. In narrower meaning, a private person who keeps a bank; one who is engaged in the business of banking without being incorporated. One who carries on the business of banking by receiving money on deposit with or without interest, by buying and selling bills of exchange, promissory notes, bonds or stock, or other securities, and by loaning money without being incorporated.

Under some statutes, an individual banker, as distinguished from a "private banker" (q.v.), is a person who, having complied with the statutory requirements, has received authority from the state to engage in the business of banking, while a private banker is a person engaged in banking without having any special privileges or authority from the state.

See also Investment banker.

Person who holds stake in gambling game or wager.

Bankerout. Eng. Bankrupt; insolvent; indebted beyond the means of payment.

Banker's acceptance. A draft accepted by a bank usually for the purpose of financing a sale of goods to or by the bank's customer. A bill of exchange draft payable at maturity that is drawn by a creditor against his or her debtor. Banker's acceptances are short-term credit instruments most commonly used by persons or firms engaged in international trade. They are comparable to short-term government securities (for example, Treasury Bills) and may be sold on the open market at a discount.

Banker's lien. A lien which a banker has by virtue of which he can appropriate any money or property in his possession belonging to a customer to the extinguishment of any matured debt of such customer to the bank, provided such property or money has not been charged, with the knowledge of the bank, with the subservience of a special burden or purpose, or does not constitute a trust fund of which the banker has notice.

Banker's note. A commercial instrument resembling a bank note in every particular except that it is given by a private banker or unincorporated banking institution.

Bank holding company. Any company which has control over any bank or over any company that is or becomes a bank holding company. A company is considered to have control if it directly or indirectly or acting through one or more other persons owns, controls, or has power to vote 25% or more of any class of voting securities of the bank or company; the company controls in any manner the election of a majority of the directors or trustees of the bank or company; or, it is determined that the company directly or indirectly exercises a controlling influence over the management or policies of the bank or company. 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 1841-1850.

Bank Holding Company Act. Federal law which governs any company which directly or indirectly owns or controls, with power to vote, more than 25% of voting shares of each of two or more banks. See 12 U.S.C.A. § 184 et seq.

Bank holiday of 1933. Presidential Proclamations No. 2039, issued March 6, 1933, and No. 2040, issued March 9, 1933, temporarily suspended banking transactions by member banks of the Federal Reserve System. Normal banking functions were resumed on March 13, subject to certain restrictions. The first proclamation, it was held, had no authority in law until the passage on March 9, 1933, of a ratifying act (12 U.S.C.A. § 95b). The present law forbids member banks of the Federal Reserve System to transact banking business, except under regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury, during an emergency proclaimed by the President. 12 U.S.C.A. § 95.

Banking. The business of banking, as defined by law and custom, consists in the issue of notes payable on demand intended to circulate as money when the banks are banks of issue; in receiving deposits payable on demand; in discounting commercial paper; making loans of money on collateral security; buying and selling bills of exchange; negotiating loans, and dealing in negotiable securities issued by the government, state and national, and municipal and other corporations. Mercantile Bank v. New York, 121 U.S. 138, 156, 7 S.Ct. 826, 30 L.Ed. 895; In re Prudence Co., D.C.N.Y., 10 F.Supp. 33, 36.

Investment banking. Business of underwriting or distributing bond, stock or other securities issues.

Banking Act of 1933. See Glass-Steagall Act.

Banking a deal. Means making to one who wishes to consummate a deal a loan of money on collateral for a consideration which may consist of interest, a fee, or a part of the securities or property involved in the deal. Cray, McFawn & Co. v. Hegarty, Conroy & Co., D.C.N.Y., 27 F.Supp. 93, 99.

Banking commission. State regulatory body charged with supervision of banking institutions. See also Federal Reserve Board of Governors with respect to regulation of national banks.

Banking day. That part of any day on which a bank is open to the public for carrying on substantially all of its banking functions. U.C.C. § 4-104(c).

Banking game. Gambling game at which money is bet or hazarded.

Banking hours. A term which, in addition to the regular hours, includes time to allow presentment, after closing, to the bank returning a check, if such presentment is necessary in fact. Columbia-Knickerbocker Trust Co. v. Miller, 156 A.D. 810, 142 N.Y.S. 440, 445.

Bank night. A device by which a theater provides a registration book which any person over eighteen years of age, whether a patron of the theater or not, may sign.

The book is placed in the lobby or outside the doors of the theater and no charge is made for registration nor need one who does so buy a ticket to the theater. A number is given to each name. On stated occasions, the numbers representing all the names registered are placed in a container on the stage of the theater and one number is drawn. The name of the person having that registration number is announced both inside and outside the theater and on coming forward within a certain time, he receives a sum of money which the theater provides from its own funds. If the person whose number is drawn is outside the theater, he is permitted to enter and claim the award without paying the admission. If he does not come forward within the time set, the money is added to the sum to be awarded on the next bank night. Under the plan, various safeguards are imposed on the operation to insure fairness in the allotment of the money. If not a lottery, a bank night is at least a gift enterprise. But it is generally considered to be a lottery. Furst v. A. & G. Amusement Co., 128 N.J.L. 311, 25 A.2d 892, 893; Commonwealth v. Lund, 142 Pa.Super. 208, 15 A.2d 839, 846.

Bankrupt. The state or condition of a person (individual, partnership, corporation, municipality) who is unable to pay its debts as they are, or become, due. The condition of one whose circumstances are such that he is entitled to take the benefit of the federal bankruptcy laws. The term includes a person against whom an involuntary petition has been filed, or who has filed a voluntary petition, or who has been adjudged a bankrupt. The word "bankrupt" is not used in the federal Bankruptcy Code. "Debtor" is now the term used. See Code § 101.

See Arrangement with creditors; Bankruptcy Code; Bankruptcy proceedings; Composition with creditors; Contemplation of bankruptcy; Insolvency.

Bankruptcy Code. A federal law (11 U.S.C.A.) for the benefit and relief of creditors and their debtors in cases in which the latter are unable or unwilling to pay their debts. The Bankruptcy Code of 1978 substantially revised and replaced the Bankruptcy Act of 1898. Straight bankruptcy is in the nature of a liquidation proceeding and involves the collection and distribution to creditors of all the bankrupt's non-exempt property by the trustee in the manner provided by the Code (Chapter 7). The debtor rehabilitation provisions of the Code (Chapters 11, 12 and 13) differ, however, from the straight bankruptcy in that the debtor looks to rehabilitation and reorganization, rather than liquidation, and the creditor looks to future earnings of the bankrupt, rather than property held by the bankrupt to satisfy their claims; see, e.g., Bankruptcy proceedings (Business reorganizations, Wage earner's plan).

Bankruptcy proceedings. General term for the various types of proceedings under the Bankruptcy Code (11 U.S.C.A.) that are initiated either by an insolvent individual or business (termed a voluntary bankruptcy) or by creditors (termed an involuntary bankruptcy) seeking to either have the debtor's remaining assets distributed among the creditors and to thereby discharge the debtor from any further obligation or to restructure and reorganize the insolvent's debt structure. See Bankruptcy Code, supra, and various types of bankruptcy below. See also Adequate protection; Automatic stay; Composition with creditors; Core proceeding; Cram down; Debtor in possession; Workout.

Adjudication of bankruptcy. The judgment or decree of the bankruptcy court that a person against whom a petition in bankruptcy has been filed, or who has filed his voluntary petition, be ordered and adjudged to be a bankrupt. See Bankruptcy discharge, below.

Bankruptcy courts. Federal courts which are concerned exclusively with the administration of bankruptcy proceedings and presided over by a bankruptcy judge. Legal bankruptcy is declared by such courts. 28 U.S.C.A. § 151. Bankruptcy courts exercise jurisdiction as generally provided in 28 U.S.C.A. § 1334. See also 11 U.S.C.A. § 105.

Bankruptcy discharge. Order of Bankruptcy Court which discharges debtor from all dischargeable obligations and debts. For effect of, and exceptions to, discharge, see Bankruptcy Code §§ 523, 524, 727.

Bankruptcy distribution. After payment of administration, priority and other debts and expenses of bankrupt estate, trustee in bankruptcy makes pro rata distribution to creditors. See Bankruptcy Code § 726.

Bankruptcy estate. The "bankruptcy estate" is comprised of all legal and equitable interests in property of debtors as of filing of bankruptcy petition. Matter of Madden, Bkrcty.N.J., 18 B.R. 18, 19. 11 U.S.C.A. § 541 et seq.

Bankruptcy forms. Official forms used in Bankruptcy Court for most matters (e.g. petitions, schedules).

Bankruptcy rules. Rules governing proceedings in bankruptcy courts; many of which make the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and Evidence applicable in adversary proceedings.

Bankruptcy schedules. Official forms for listing of debtor's assets, liabilities, and all unsecured creditors.

Bankruptcy trustee. Person appointed by Bankruptcy Court to take charge of debtor estate, to collect assets, to bring suit on debtor's claims, to defend actions against it, and otherwise administer debtor's estate; he has power to examine debtor, to initiate actions to set aside preferences, etc. 11 U.S.C.A. § 321 et seq., 704; 28 U.S.C.A. § 581 et seq.

Business reorganizations (Chapter 11). When a debtor business entity realizes that it will become insolvent or will be unable to pay its debts as they mature, it can petition for reorganization under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. The debtor business normally is permitted to continue its operations under court supervision until some plan of reorganization is approved by two-thirds of the creditors. If the business is insolvent at the time a petition for reorganization is filed, a majority of the shareholders must also approve the plan.

If agreement cannot be reached, then the court will supervise liquidation proceedings for the business as in any other situation of bankruptcy. See also Family Farmer Bankruptcy, below.

Family farmer bankruptcy (Chapter 12). Chapter 12 of the Bankruptcy Code provides special debt repayment relief for a "family farmer with regular income" whose annual income is sufficiently stable and regular to enable such farmer to make payments under a plan as provided under this Chapter.

Involuntary proceedings. Creditors of an insolvent debtor may initiate proceedings under the Bankruptcy Code, thereby in effect forcing the debtor into bankruptcy. See Straight bankruptcy, below.

Straight bankruptcy (Chapter 7). A proceeding designed to liquidate the debtor's property, pay off his or her creditors, and discharge the debtor from his or her other debts. It can be either voluntary (started by the debtor himself or herself) or involuntary (started by the debtor's creditors). Compare Business reorganizations (Chapter 11); Wage earner's plan (Chapter 13, this topic, which are rehabilitative proceedings.

Voluntary proceedings. A proceeding under the Bankruptcy Code by which a debtor initiates action either to rehabilitate his business (e.g., Chapter 11 reorganization) or to liquidate (e.g., Chapter 7 liquidation).

Wage earner's plan (Chapter 13). Under Chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code, any insolvent debtor who is a wage earner (earns wages, salary, or commission) can formulate and file a plan with the court that provides the debtor with additional time to pay off unsecured creditors. The debtor's plan must provide that future earnings will be subject to the supervision and control of the trustee until these debts are satisfied. A plan made in good faith and acceptable to the unsecured creditors will be confirmed by the court. Should the wage earner ultimately be unable to pay the debts, Chapter 7 liquidation is still an available alternative.

Bank Secrecy Act. Enacted in 1970, this statute authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to prescribe by regulation certain recordkeeping and reporting requirements for banks and other financial institutions in the United States. The purpose of the Act is to require the maintenance of records, and the making of certain reports which are highly useful in criminal, tax, or regulatory investigations or proceedings.

Title I of the Act, and the implementing regulations, require financial institutions to maintain records of the identities of their customers, to make microfilm copies of certain checks drawn on them, and to keep records of certain other items. Title II of the Act and its implementing regulations require reports of certain domestic and foreign currency transactions. California Bankers Assn. v. Shultz, 1974, 416 U.S. 21, 94 S.Ct. 1494, 39 L.Ed.2d 812. 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 1730d, 1829b, 1951-1959, and 31 U.S.C.A. §§ 1051-1062, 1081-1083, 1101-1105, 1121-1122.

Banleuca /bæn(y)úwka/. (Same as the French banlieue). An old law term, signifying a space or tract of country around a city, town, or monastery, distinguished and protected by peculiar privileges.

Banni /bénay/ or bannitus /bénédəs/. In old law, one under a ban (q.v.); an outlaw or banished man.

Banni nuptiarum /bénay nəpshiyérəm/. L. Lat. In old English law, the banns of matrimony.

Bannitio /bənish(iy)ow/. Banishment; expulsion by a ban or public proclamation.

Bannitus /bénəts/. See Banni.

Banns of matrimony. Public notice or proclamation of a matrimonial contract, and the intended celebration of the marriage of the parties in pursuance of such contract. Such announcement is required by certain religions to be made in a church or chapel, during service, on three consecutive Sundays before the marriage is celebrated. The object is to afford an opportunity for any person to interpose an objection if he knows of any impediment or other just cause why the marriage should not take place.

Bar. The court, in its strictest sense, sitting in full term. The presence, actual or constructive, of the court. Thus a trial at bar is one had before the full court, distinguished from a trial had before a single judge at nisi prius. So the "case at bar" is the case now before the court and under its consideration; the case being tried or argued.

In another sense, the whole body of attorneys and counsellors, or the members of the legal profession, collectively, who are figuratively called the "bar". They are thus distinguished from the "bench," which term denotes the whole body of judges. Bar associations of attorneys may be either national, state, or local. See Bar association. Compare Bench.

In the practice of legislative bodies, the outer boundary of the house; therefore, all persons, not being members, who wish to address the house, or are summoned to it, appear at the bar for that purpose.

In the law of contracts, an impediment, obstacle, or preventive barrier. Thus, relationship within the prohibited degrees is a bar to marriage. In this sense also we speak of the "bar of the statute of limitations."

That which defeats, annuls, cuts off, or puts an end to. Thus, a provision "in bar of dower" is one which has the effect of defeating or cutting off the dower-rights which the wife would otherwise become entitled to in the particular land.

In pleading, a special plea, constituting a sufficient answer to an action at law; so called because it barred, i.e., prevented, the plaintiff from further prosecuting it with effect, and, if established by proof, defeated and destroyed the action altogether. Called a special "plea in bar." It may be further described as a plea or peremptory exception of a defendant to destroy the plaintiff's action. Under Fed.Rules Civ.Proc., pleas in bar are abolished in favor of affirmative pleading of defenses in answer. Rule 8(c). See Plea (Plea in bar).

With respect to claim preclusion, a valid and final personal judgment on the merits against a claimant precludes (bars) a later suit on the same claim or cause of action. It is the principle that a party may not relitigate a cause of action which has been determined previously. In re Johnson, Bkrtcy.Minn., 13 B.R. 342, 346.

A judgment rendered in a case is a "bar" to further action in the state in which it was rendered and in all other jurisdictions if the court which rendered it has required jurisdiction and if the subsequent action is brought by a party to first action or his privy. See Collateral estoppel doctrine; Double jeopardy; Issue preclusion; Res judicata.

A particular part of the court-room; for example, the place where prisoners stand at their trial, hence the expression "prisoner at the bar."

In England, a partition or railing running across a court-room, intended to separate the general public from the space occupied by the judges, counsel, jury, and others concerned in the trial of a cause. In the English courts it is the partition behind which all outer-barristers and every member of the public must stand. Solicitors being officers of the court, are admitted within it; as are also queen's counsel, barristers with patents of precedence, and serjeants, in virtue of their ranks. Parties who appear in person also are placed within the bar on the floor of the court.

Bar admission. Act by which one is licensed to practice before courts of a particular state or jurisdiction after satisfying requirements such as bar examination, period of residency or admission on grounds of reciprocity after period of years as member of bar of another jurisdiction.

Baragaria. Span. A concubine, whom a man keeps alone in his house, unconnected with any other woman.

Bar association. An association of members of the legal profession. Such associations have been organized on the national (American Bar Association; Federal Bar Association), state, county, and even on city levels (e.g., New York City Bar Ass'n). The first was established in Mississippi in 1825, but it is not known to have had a continued existence. An association of Grafton and Coos counties in New Hampshire had an existence before 1800, and probably a more or less continuous life since then, having finally merged into a state association. Membership may be either compulsory (integrated bar) or voluntary.

Bar integration. See Integrated bar.

Barat. See Berat.

Baratriam committit qui propter pecuniam justitiam baractat /bərətriyəm kəmitət kwáy próptər pək(y)úwniyəm jəstishiyəm bərəktət/. He is guilty of barratry who for money sells justice. (This maxim, however, is one pertaining more to the meaning of "barratry" as used in Scotch law than to its common-law meaning.) See Barratry.

Barbiturate /barbityərət/. A general term denoting a derivative of barbituric acid formed by the substitution of an aliphatic or aromatic group on a carbon or nitrogen atom in the acid; used in medicine as hypnotic and sedative drugs.

Bareboat charter. A document under which one who charters or leases a boat becomes for the period of the charter the owner for all practical purposes. Reed v. The Yaka, 373 U.S. 410, 83 S.Ct. 1349, 10 L.Ed.2d 448. Lease of vessel without a crew. Gillentine v. McKeand, C.A.Mass., 426 F.2d 717, 719. One whereby charterer assumes full possession and control of the vessel and constitutes the only form of charter that purports to invest temporary powers of ownership in the charterer. Baker v. Raymond Intern., Inc., C.A.La., 656 F.2d 173, 182.

Bare or mere licensee. One whose presence on premises is merely tolerated; while a "licensee" or "invitee" is one who is on the premises by invitation, express or implied. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. McCleary, 175 Okl. 347, 53 P.2d 555, 557.

Bare patent license. A grant of authority to make, use or vend patented product throughout the United States or in a given part thereof, with no right of exclusion.

Baret. L. Fr. A wrangling suit.

Bare trustee. One whose trust is to convey, and the time has arrived for a conveyance by him. Trustee of a dry trust; or a trustee to whose office no duties were originally attached, or who, although such duties were originally attached to his office, would, on the requisition of his cestuis que trust, be compellable in equity to convey the estate to them or by their direction.

Bar fee. In old English law, a fee taken by the sheriff, time out of mind, for every prisoner who is acquitted. "Extortion." Abolished by St. 14 Geo. III, c. 26; 55 Geo. III, c. 50; 8 & 9 Vict., c. 114.

Bargain. A mutual undertaking, contract, or agreement. A contract or agreement between two parties, the one to sell or exchange goods or lands, and the other to buy or exchange them. To negotiate over the terms of a purchase or contract. To come to terms. A bargain is an agreement to exchange promises or to exchange a promise for a performance or to exchange performances. Restatement, Second, Contracts, § 3.

Bargain money. These words in a contract for the sale of land have much the same significance as earnest money.

Catching bargain. A bargain by which money is loaned, at an extortionate or extravagant rate, to an heir or any one who has an estate in reversion or expectancy, to be repaid on the vesting of his interest; or a similar unconscionable bargain with such person for the purchase outright of his expectancy. That kind of fraud often perpetrated upon young, inexperienced, or ignorant people. See Unconscionable bargain.

Bargain and sale. In conveyancing, the transferring of the property of a thing from one to another, upon valuable consideration, by way of sale. A contract or bargain by the owner of land, in consideration of money or its equivalent paid, to sell land to another person, called the "bargainee," whereupon a use arises in favor of the latter, to whom the seisin is transferred by force of the statute of uses. The expression "bargain and sale" is also applied to transfers of personalty, in cases where there is first an executory agreement for the sale (the bargain), and then an actual and completed sale.

Bargain and sale deed. A deed that has a recitation of consideration coupled with words of conveyance of real property. It is a form of deed of conveyance without any covenants; a bare conveyance to grantee of whatever interest grantor has at time of the conveyance. Borough of Wildwood Crest v. Smith, 210 N.J.Super. 127, 509 A.2d 252, 259. See also Deed.

Bargainee. The grantee of an estate in a deed of a bargain and sale. The party to a bargain to whom the subject-matter of the bargain or thing bargained for is to go.

Bargaining agent. Union recognized and certified as such by NLRB as the exclusive representative of employees in a bargaining unit.

Bargaining for plea. Commonly referred to as plea bargaining in which defendant seeks a lesser sentence in return for plea of guilty; or an attempt to plead guilty to lesser included offense which carries a less severe penalty. See Plea bargaining.

Bargaining unit. Labor union or group of jobs authorized to carry on collective bargaining in behalf of employees. A particular group of employees with a similar community of interest appropriate for bargaining.

Bargain money. See Earnest money.

Bargainor. The person who makes a bargain. The party to a bargain who is to receive the consideration and perform the contract by delivery of the subject matter.

Bargain or contract in restraint of trade. Any bargain or contract which purports to limit in any way right of either party to work or to do business.

Bargain sale or purchase. A sale of property for less than the fair market value of such property. The difference between the sale or purchase price and the fair market value of the property is required to be accounted for in terms of its tax consequences. Bargain sales and purchases among members of the same family may lead to gift tax consequences. See Dividend (Constructive dividend).

Bark. Term is sometimes figuratively used to denote the mere words or letter of an instrument, or outer covering of the ideas sought to be expressed, as distinguished from its inner substance or essential meaning.

Barnard's inn. An inn of chancery. See Inns of Chancery.

Baro /bárow/. In old law, a man, whether slave or free. In later usage, a freeman or freedman; a strong man; a good soldier; a hired soldier; a vassal; a baron; a feudal tenant or client. A man of dignity and rank; a knight.

A magnate in the church. A judge in the exchequer (baro scaccarii). The first-born child. A husband.

Baron /báran/. A lord or nobleman; the most general title of nobility in England. 1 Bl.Comm. 398, 399. A particular degree or title of nobility, next to a viscount. The lowest title in Great Britain. A judge of the court of exchequer. 3 Bl.Comm. 44. A freeman. Also a vassal holding directly from the king. A husband; occurring in this sense in the phrase "baron et feme," husband and wife. The term has essentially the same meanings as baro (q.v.).

Baronage. In English law, the collective body of the barons, or of the nobility at large.

Baron court. See Court-baron.

Barones scaccarii. See Barons of the exchequer.

Baronet. An English name or hereditary title of dignity or rank (but not a title of nobility, being next below that of baron), established in 1611 by James I. It is created by letters patent, and descends to the male heir.

Baron et feme /báran ey fém/. Man and woman; husband and wife. A wife being under the protection and influence of her baron, lord, or husband, is styled a "feme-covert" (fœmina viro cooperta), and her state of marriage is called her "coverture."

Barons of the Exchequer. The six judges of the Court of Exchequer in England, of whom one is styled the "Chief Baron;" answering to the justices and chief justice of other courts. Its jurisdiction was transferred to the Exchequer Division of High Court of Justice in 1873; the barons becoming justices of the High Court.

Barony. The dignity of a baron; a species of tenure; the territory or lands held by a baron.

Barony of land. In England, a quantity of land amounting to 15 acres. In Ireland, a subdivision of a county.

Barra, or barre. In old practice, a plea in bar. The bar of the court. A barrister.

Barrator /bárətar/. One who commits barratry. See Barretor.

Barratrous /bárətrəs/. Fraudulent; having the character of barratry.

Barratry /bárətriy/. Also spelled "Barretry." The offense of frequently exciting and stirring up quarrels and suits, either at law or otherwise. State v. Batson, 220 N.C. 411, 17 S.E.2d 511, 512, 513.

In maritime law, an act committed by master or mariners of a vessel for some fraudulent or unlawful purpose contrary to their duty to owner and resulting in injury to owner. Isbell Enterprises, Inc. v. Citizens Cas. Co. of New York, D.C.Tex., 303 F.Supp. 549, 552.

See also Barretor; Champerty.

Barred. Obstructed by a bar. Subject to hindrance or obstruction by a bar or barrier which, if interposed, will prevent legal redress or recovery; as, when it is said that a claim or cause of action is "barred by the statute of limitations."

Barrel. A measure of capacity, equal (in England) to 36 imperial gallons. The standard United States measure, except as to barrels of petroleum, equals 31½ gallons.

In agricultural and mercantile parlance, as also in the inspection laws, the term means, prima facie, not merely a certain quantity, but, further, a certain state of the article; namely, that it is in a cask.

Barren money. In the civil law, a debt which bears no interest.

Barrenness. Sterility; the incapacity to bear children.

Barretor /bárətər/. A common mover, exciter, or maintainer of suits and quarrels either in courts or elsewhere in the country; a disturber of the peace who spreads false rumors and calumnies, whereby discord and disquiet may grow among neighbors.

One who frequently excites and stirs up groundless suits and quarrels, either at law or otherwise. State v. Batson, 220 N.C. 411, 17 S.E.2d 511, 512, 513.

Barrister. In England, an advocate; a counsellor learned in the law who has been admitted to plead at the bar, and who is engaged in conducting the trial or argument of causes. A person called to the bar by the benchers of Inns of Court, giving exclusive right of audience in the Supreme Court.

Barter. The exchange of goods and productive services for other goods and productive services, without the use of money. Rosenberg v. State, 12 Md.App. 20, 276 A.2d 708, 711. See also Exchange.

Bas. Fr. Low; inferior; subordinate.

Bas chevaliers /béys shevəlírz/bá shəvalyéy/. In old English law, low, or inferior knights, by tenure of a base military fee, as distinguished from barons and bannerets, who were the chief or superior knights.

Base, adj. Low in place or position; inferior; servile; of subordinate degree; impure, adulterated, or alloyed.

Base animal. See Animal.

Base bullion. Base silver bullion is silver in bars mixed to a greater or less extent with alloys or base materials.

Base coin. Debased, adulterated, or alloyed coin (e.g. copper, nickel) as distinguished from silver or gold.

Base court. In old English law, an inferior court, that is, not of record, as the court baron.

Base estate. The estate which "base tenants" (q.v.) have in their land.

Base fee. One that may last forever if the contingency does not happen, but debased because its duration depends upon collateral circumstances which qualify it; sometimes called a conditional, determinable, or qualified fee.

In old English law, an estate or fee which has a qualification subjoined thereto, and which must be determined whenever the qualification annexed to it is at an end. Scobey v. Beckman, 111 Ind.App. 574, 41 N.E.2d 847, 850.

Base services. In feudal law, such services as were unworthy to be performed by the nobler men, and were performed by the peasants and those of servile rank. 2 Bl.Comm. 62.

Base tenants. Tenants who performed to their lords services in villenage; tenants who held at the will of the lord, as distinguished from frank tenants, or freeholders.

Base tenure. A tenure by villenage, or other customary service, as distinguished from tenure by military service; or from tenure by free service.

Base, n. Bottom, foundation, groundwork, that on which a thing rests. The locality on which a military or naval force relies for supplies or from which it initiates operations; e.g. air base; military base; marine base; naval base; submarine base.

Base line. Survey line used in the government survey to establish township lines. Horizontal elevation line used as centerline in a highway survey.

Base pay. Wages, exclusive of overtime, bonuses, etc.

Basic crops. Crops usually subject to government price supports, such as wheat, corn, oats, rice, and similar crops.

Basic or pioneer patent. One discovered in new field and recognized by scientific world or industry as startling, unexpected, and unprophesied. Northwest Engineering Corporation v. Keystone Driller Co., C.C.A. Wis., 70 F.2d 13, 16.

Basileus /bæsəlyúws/. A Greek word, meaning "king." A title assumed by the emperors of the Eastern Roman Empire. It is used by Justinian in some of the Novels; and is said to have been applied to the English kings before the Conquest. 1 Bl.Comm. 242.

Basilica /bəsíləkə/. The name given to a compilation of Roman and Greek law, prepared about A.D. 880 by the Emperor Basilius, and published by his successor, Leo the Philosopher. It was written in Greek, was mainly an abridgment of Justinian's Corpus Juris, and comprised sixty books, only a portion of which are extant. It remained the law of the Eastern Empire until the fall of Constantinople, in 1453.

Basils. In old English law, a kind of money or coin abolished by Henry II.

Basin. When speaking of a large river, ordinarily means or includes the entire area drained by the main stream and its tributaries. City of Tulsa v. Peacock, 181 Okl. 383, 74 P.2d 359, 360.

In admiralty law and marine insurance, a part of the sea inclosed in rocks.

Basis. Fundamental principle; groundwork; support; the foundation or groundwork of anything; that upon which anything may rest or the principal component parts of a thing.

Accounting. Term used in accounting, especially in tax accounting, to describe the value assigned to an asset for the purpose of determining gain (or loss) on the sale or transfer or in determining value in the hands of a donee.

Acquisition cost, or some substitute therefor, of an asset used in computing gain or loss on disposition or retirement. The amount assigned to an asset for income tax purposes. For assets acquired by purchase, the basis would be cost [I.R.C. § 1012]. Special rules govern the basis of property received by virtue of another's death [I.R.C. § 1014] or by gift [§ 1015], the basis of stock received on a transfer of property to a controlled corporation [§ 358], the basis of the property transferred to the corporation [§ 362], and the basis of property received upon the liquidation of a corporation [§§ 334 and 338].

Adjusted basis. The cost of property acquired, increased for any capital improvements and decreased by the amount of depreciation allowed or allowable. I.R.C. § 1011.

Carryover basis. The basis of property acquired from a decedent dying after December 1979 is the basis of the property in the hands of the decedent immediately preceding death. The basis is further adjusted for transfers of appreciated property, personal items, and exceptions for small estates. I.R.C. § 1023.

Stepped-up basis. In tax accounting, value placed on property which is acquired in a taxable transaction or purchase. I.R.C. § 1012.

The basis of property acquired through inheritance, bequest, or devise from a decedent, is the fair market value of the property on the date of death or the fair market value on the alternate valuation date—six months from the date of death. The value is often higher than in the hands of the decedent, resulting in a stepped-up basis. I.R.C. § 1014.

The basis of assets acquired by gift is the donors basis increased either by the amount of the gift tax paid (for gifts received before 1977) or the portion of the gift tax paid which is due to the increase in the value of the gift (for gifts received after 1976). I.R.C. § 1015.

Substituted basis. In tax accounting, the basis of property acquired in an exchange in which a gain or loss is not recognized, is the basis of the property transferred, except where the property acquired is subject to a lien. I.R.C. § 1031.

See also Accrual basis.

Basis of bargain. That on which any affirmation of fact or promise relating to goods sold is predicated, creating an express warranty. U.C.C. § 2-313(1)(a). See Essence of the contract.

Bastard. An illegitimate child; a child born before the lawful marriage of its parents; i.e. born out of lawful wedlock. See also Illegitimate child.

Bastard eigné. In old English law, bastard elder. If a child was born of an illicit connection, and afterwards the parents intermarried and had another son, the elder was called bastard eigné, or, as it is now spelled, ainé, and the second son was called puisné, or since born, or sometimes he was called mulier puisné. 2 Bl.Comm. 248.

Bastardize. To declare one a bastard, as a court does. To give evidence to prove one a bastard. A mother (married) cannot bastardize her child.

Bastardus non potest habere hæredem nisi de corpore suo legitime procreatum /bæstárdəs nɒn pɔwtəst hæbəriy hæriydiy náysay diy kórpəriy s(y)úwɔw læjítəmiy prɔwkriyéytəm/. A bastard can have no heir unless it be one lawfully begotten of his own body.

Bastardus nullius est filius, aut filius populi /bæstárdəs nəláyəs èst fíliyəs òt fíliyəs pòpyəlay/. A bastard is nobody's son, or the son of the people.

Bastardy (paternity) proceedings. Court proceeding in which the paternity of a child is determined. The method provided by statute of proceeding against the putative father to secure a proper maintenance of his child born out of wedlock. See Paternity suit.

Bastille /bæstíyl/. A prison, citadel, fortress. Prison constructed in Paris in 1369 and destroyed in 1789.

Baston /bæstən/bətɒn/. In old English law, a baton, club, or staff. A term applied to officers of the wardens of the prison called the "Fleet," because of the staff carried by them. See Trail-baston.

Batable-ground. Land that is in controversy, or about the possession of which there is a dispute, as the lands which were situated between England and Scotland before the Union.

Bataille /bætáy/. In old English law, battel; the trial by combat or duellum.

Batiment /bætəmón/. In French marine law, a vessel or ship.

Batonnier /bætɔnyéy/. The chief of the French bar in its various centres, who presides in the council of discipline.

Battel /bætəl/. Trial by combat; wager of battel. See Wager of battel.

Battered child. A child who is suffering serious physical or emotional injury resulting from abuse inflicted upon him including sexual abuse, or from neglect, including malnutrition, or who is determined to be physically dependent upon an addictive drug at birth. See also Child abuse.

Battered Child Syndrome. A medicolegal term which describes diagnosis of medical expert based on scientific studies that when child suffers certain types of continuing injuries that injuries were not caused by accidental means. Upon such finding, it is logical to presume that someone "caring" for the child was responsible for injuries. State v. Byrd, 309 N.C. 132, 305 S.E.2d 724, 729.

Battery. Intentional and wrongful physical contact with a person without his or her consent that entails some injury or offensive touching. Mason v. Cohn, 108 Misc.2d 674, 438 N.Y.S.2d 462, 464. Criminal battery, defined as the unlawful application of force to the person of another, may be divided into its three basic elements: (1) the defendant's conduct (act or omission); (2) his "mental state," which may be an intent to kill or injure, or criminal negligence, or perhaps the doing of an unlawful act; and (3) the harmful result to the victim, which may be either a bodily injury or an offensive touching. What might otherwise be a battery may be justified; and the consent of the victim may under some circumstances constitute a defense. Com. v. Hill, 237 Pa.Super. 543, 353 A.2d 870. The consummation of an unlawful assault.

The actual offer to use force to the injury of another person is assault; the use of it is battery, which always includes an assault; hence the two terms are commonly combined in the term "assault and battery."

An actor is subject to liability to another for battery if: (a) he acts intending to cause a harmful or offensive contact with the person of the other or a third person, or an imminent apprehension of such a contact, and (b) an offensive contact with the person of the other directly or indirectly results. Restatement, Second, Torts § 18.

See also Assault and battery.

Aggravated battery. An unlawful act of violent injury to the person of another, accompanied by circumstances of aggravation, such as the use of deadly weapon, great disparity between the ages and physical conditions of the parties, or the purposeful infliction of shame and disgrace.

Simple battery. One not accompanied by circumstances of aggravation, or not resulting in grievous bodily injury.

Technical battery. A technical battery occurs when a physician or dentist, in the course of treatment, exceeds the consent given by a patient. Although no wrongful intent is present, and in fact there may be a sincere purpose to aid the patient, recovery is permitted unless there is an emergency. However, if the patient benefits from the battery only nominal damages may be recovered.

Battle of the forms. In commercial law, term used to describe effect of multitude of forms used by buyers and sellers to accept and to confirm terms expressed in other forms. U.C.C. § 2-207.

Batture /bətýúr/. A marine term, used to denote a bottom of sand, stone, or rock, mixed together, and rising towards the surface of the water; as a technical word and also in common parlance, an elevation of the bed of a river, under the surface of the water. The term is, however, sometimes used to denote the same elevation of the bank, when it has risen above the surface of the water, or is as high as the land on the outside of the bank. Conkey v. Knudsen, 143 Neb. 5, 8 N.W.2d 538, 541. In this latter sense it is synonymous with "alluvion." It means, in common-law language, land formed by accretion. The term is used in Louisiana, and is applied principally to certain portions of the bed of the Mississippi river which are uncovered at time of low water but are covered annually at time of ordinary high water.

Bawd /bód/. One who procures opportunities for persons of opposite sexes to cohabit in an illicit manner; who may be, while exercising the trade of a bawd, perfectly innocent of committing in his or her own proper person the crime either of adultery or of fornication. A madam.

Bawdy-house. A house of ill fame; a house of prostitution; a brothel. A house or dwelling maintained for the convenience and resort of persons desiring unlawful sexual connection. A place for convenience of people of both sexes in resorting to lewdness, a place many may frequent for immoral purposes or a house where one may go for immoral purposes without invitation. Riley v. U. S., D.C.App., 298 A.2d 228, 231.

Bay. A pond-head made of a great height to keep in water for the supply of a mill, etc., so that the wheel of the mill may be turned by the water rushing thence, through a passage or flood-gate. (This is generally called a forebay.)

A bending or curving of the shore of the sea or of a lake, so as to form a more or less inclosed body of water. An opening into the land, or an arm of the sea, where the water is shut in on all sides except at the entrance.

Baygall. A low-lying wet land matter with vegetable fibres and often with gallberry and other thick-growing bushes.

Bayley /béyli/. In old English law, bailiff. This term was used in the laws of the colony of New Plymouth, Mass., A.D. 1670, 1671.

Bayou /báyuw/báyow/. A species of creek or stream common in Louisiana and Texas. An outlet from a swamp, pond, or lagoon, to a river, or the sea.

B.C. An abbreviation for "before Christ," "bail court," "bankruptcy cases," and "British Columbia."

B.E. An abbreviation for "Baron of the Court of Exchequer."

Beach. This term, in its ordinary signification, when applied to a place on tide waters means the space between ordinary high and low water mark; or the space over which the tide usually ebbs and flows. It is a term not more significant of a sea margin than "shore." In common parlance designates that portion of shore consisting generally of sand and pebbles, resulting usually from the action of water, as distinct from the upland, to which it often extends above normal high-water mark. Beach is synonymous with "shore," "strand," or "flats." The term may also include the sandy shore above mean high water which is washed by storms and exceptionally high tides.

To "beach" a ship is to run it upon the beach or shore; this is frequently found necessary in case of a fire, leak, etc.

See Foreshore; Seashore.

Public beach. Beach dedicated by governmental body to the common use of the public, which the unorganized public and each of its members have a right to use while it remains such.

Beacon. A light-house, or sea-mark, formerly used to alarm the country, in case of the approach of an enemy, but now used for the guidance of ships at sea, by night, as well as by day.

Beaconage. Money paid for the maintenance of a beacon or signal-light.

Beadle. In English ecclesiastical law, an inferior parish officer, who is chosen by the vestry, and whose business is to attend the vestry, to give notice of its meetings, to execute its orders, to attend upon inquests, and to assist the constables. See Bedel.

Beams and balance. Instruments for weighing goods and merchandise.

Bear. To support, sustain, or carry. To give rise to, or to produce, something else as an incident or auxiliary. To render, to manage, or direct, or to conduct; to carry on, or maintain. To produce as yield; e.g. "bear" interest. One who believes stock prices will decline; opposite of a "bull."

Bear arms. The Second Amendment, U.S. Constitution, provides that the "right of the people to bear arms, shall not be infringed." This right has been restricted however by state and federal laws regulating the transportation, sale, use, and possession of weapons.

Bearer. The person in possession of an instrument, document of title, or security payable to bearer or indorsed in blank. U.C.C. § 1-201(5). When a check, note, draft, etc., is payable to "bearer," it imports that such shall be payable to any person who may present the instrument for payment. See also Payable to bearer.

Bearer bond. Bonds payable to the person having possession of them. Such bonds do not require endorsement to transfer ownership but only the transfer of possession.

Bearer document. A document that runs to bearer upon issuance or after a blank indorsement, and that is negotiated by delivery alone. U.C.C. §§ 7-501(1) & (2)(a). Anyone in possession of a bearer document is a holder of it. U.C.C. § 1-201(20).

Bearer instrument. An instrument is payable to bearer when by its terms it is payable to (a) bearer or the order of bearer; or (b) a specified person or bearer; or (c) "cash" or the order of "cash", or any other indication which does not purport to designate a specific payee. U.C.C. §§ 3-111, 3-204(2).

Bearer paper. Commercial paper payable to bearer; i.e. to the person having possession of such. See Bearer document; Bearer instrument.

Bearer security. A security whose owner is not registered on the books of the issuer. Such security is payable to the holder. See e.g., Bearer bond.

Bearing date. Disclosing a date on its face; having a certain date. Words frequently used in pleading and conveyancing to introduce the date which has been put upon an instrument.

Bear interest. To yield, generate, or produce interest on the principal.

Bear market. A market in which prices are falling or are expected to fall.

Beat, v. To strike or hit repeatedly, as with blows. In the criminal law and the law of torts, with reference to assault and battery, the term includes any unlawful physical violence offered to another. See Battery.

Beat, n. In some of the southern states (as Alabama, Mississippi, South Carolina) the principal legal subdivision of a county, corresponding to towns or townships in other states; or a voting precinct.

Beating. The infliction of extreme force to another. See Battery; Corporal punishment.

Beating of the bounds. An ancient custom in England by which, once a year, the minister, etc., of a parish walked about its boundaries to preserve a recollection of them.

Beaupleader /bòwpliydər/. (L. Fr. fair pleading). A writ of prohibition directed to the sheriff or another, directing him not to take a fine for beaupleader. There was anciently a fine imposed called a fine for beaupleader, which is explained by Coke to have been originally imposed for bad pleading.

Bed. The hollow or channel of a water course; the depression between the banks worn by the regular and usual flow of the water. The land that is covered by the water in its ordinary low stage. Area extending between the opposing banks measured from the foot of the banks from the top of the water at its ordinary stage, including sand bars which may exist between the foot of said banks as thus defined. Town of Refugio v. Heard, Tex.Civ.App., 95 S.W.2d 1008, 1010. It includes the lands below ordinary high water mark. United States v. Chicago, M., St. P. & P. R. Co., 312 U.S. 592, 313 U.S. 543, 61 S.Ct. 772, 775, 85 L.Ed. 1064.

Also, the right of cohabitation or marital intercourse; as in the phrase "divorce from bed and board," or a mensa et thoro.

Bed and board. Divorce a mensa et thoro. See Divorce.

Bedel /bìydəl/. In English law, a crier or messenger of court, who summons men to appear and answer therein. A herald to make public proclamations. An inferior officer of a parish or liberty, to give notice of vestry meetings, etc.

An officer of the forest, similar to a sheriff's special bailiff. A collector of rents for the king.

Bedelary /bìydəlèry/. The jurisdiction of a bedel, as a bailiwick is the jurisdiction of a bailiff.

Bederepe /bìydriyp/. A service which certain tenants were anciently bound to perform, as to reap their landlord's corn at harvest.

Before. Prior to; preceding; in front of; at the disposal of; in a higher position. In the presence of; under the official purview of; as in a magistrate's jurat, "before me personally appeared," etc.

When used as a preposition, does not indicate a period of time as do the prepositions "for," "during," and "throughout," but merely an event or act preceding in time, or earlier than, or previously to, the time mentioned. First Nat. Corp. v. Perrine, 99 Mont. 454, 43 P.2d 1073, 1077.

Beg. To solicit alms or charitable aid.

Beget. To procreate as the father.

Beggar. One who lives by begging charity, or who has no other means of support than solicited alms.

Begin. To originate; to come into existence; to start; to institute; to initiate; to commence. People ex rel. Northchester Corporation v. Miller, 263 App.Div. 83, 31 N.Y.S.2d 586, 587.

Behalf. Benefit, support, defence, or advantage.

Behavior. Manner of having, holding, or keeping one's self; manner of behaving, whether good or bad; conduct; manners; carriage of one's self, with respect to propriety and morals; deportment. Schneiderman v. United States, 320 U.S. 118, 63 S.Ct. 1333, 1340, 87 L.Ed. 1796. See also Character; Reputation.

Behetria /bèyeytriya/. In Spanish law, lands situated in districts and manors in which the inhabitants had the right to select their own lords.

Behoof. Use; benefit; profit; service; advantage. It occurs in conveyances, e.g., "to his and their use and behoof."

Being struck. Collision, or striking together of two objects, one of which may be stationary. Condition of a person who has been traumatized. Business closed or affected by labor strike. See also Strike.

Belief. A conviction of the truth of a proposition, existing subjectively in the mind, and induced by argument, persuasion, or proof addressed to the judgment. Latrobe v. J. H. Cross Co., D.C.Pa., 29 F.2d 210, 212. A conclusion arrived at from external sources after weighing probability. Conviction of the mind, arising not from actual perception or knowledge, but by way of inference, or from evidence received or information derived from others.

Knowledge is an assurance of a fact or proposition founded on perception by the senses, or intuition; while "belief" is an assurance gained by evidence, and from other persons. "Suspicion" is weaker than "belief," since suspicion requires no real foundation for its existence, while "belief" is necessarily based on at least assumed facts. Cook v. Singer Sewing Mach. Co., 138 Cal.App. 418, 32 P.2d 430, 431.

Belief-action distinction. The distinction noted in analysis of cases under First Amendment, U.S. Constitution—freedom of speech and religion—to the effect that one is guaranteed the right to any belief he chooses, but when that belief is translated into action, the state also has rights under its police power to protect others from such actions. Reynolds v. U. S., 98 U.S. 145, 164.

Belligerency /bəlījərənsiy/. In international law, the status of de facto statehood attributed to a body of insurgents, by which their hostilities are legalized. The international status assumed by a state (i.e. nation) which wages war against another state. Quality of being belligerent; status of a belligerent; act or state of waging war; warfare.

Belligerent /bəlījərənt/. In international law, as an adjective, it means engaged in lawful war. As a noun, it designates either of two nations which are actually in a state of war with each other, as well as their allies actively co-operating, as distinguished from a nation which takes no part in the war and maintains a strict indifference as between the contending parties, called a "neutral."

As a personality trait, refers to one who is overly assertive, hostile or combative.

Belligerents. A body of insurgents who by reason of their temporary organized government are regarded as conducting lawful hostilities. Also, militia, corps of volunteers, and others, who although not part of the regular army of the state, are regarded as lawful combatants provided they observe the laws of war. See also Belligerency; Belligerent.

Bellum /béləm/. Lat. In public law, war. An armed contest between nations; the state of those who forcibly contend with each other. Jus belli, the law of war.

Belong. To appertain to; to be the property of; to be a member of; to be appropriate; to own.

Belonging. That which is connected with a principal or greater thing; an appendage, an appurtenance; also, ownership. Church of the Holy Faith v. State Tax Commission, 39 N.M. 403, 48 P.2d 777, 779.

Belongings. That which belongs to one; property; possessions; a term properly used to express ownership. Ford's Adm'r v. Wade's Adm'r, 242 Ky. 18, 45 S.W.2d 818, 820. See Personal effects.

Below. Inferior; of inferior jurisdiction, or jurisdiction in the first instance. The court from which a cause is removed for review is called the "court below." Preliminary; auxiliary or instrumental.

Bail to the sheriff has been called "bail below," as being preliminary to and intended to secure the putting in of bail above, or special bail. See Bail.

Below par. See Par value.

Ben Avon doctrine. Due process requires opportunity for judicial determination of reasonableness of rates for public utilities set by a Public Service Commission. Ohio Valley Water Co. v. Ben Avon Borough et al., 253 U.S. 287, 40 S.Ct. 527, 64 L.Ed. 405.

Bench. A seat of judgment or tribunal for the administration of justice. The seat occupied by judges in courts. Also, the court itself, or the aggregate of the judges composing a court, as in the phrase "before the full bench." Compare Bar.

The judges taken collectively, as distinguished from counsellors and advocates, who are called the bar.

The term, indicating originally the seat of the judges, came to denote the body of judges taken collectively, and also the tribunal itself, as the King's Bench.

Bench and bar. Term refers to judges collectively and attorneys as a whole.

Bench blotter. Record of arrests and other happenings kept by police. See also Arrest record; Booking.

Bench conference. A meeting at the judge's bench prior to, during or after a trial or hearing between counsel and the judge to discuss a matter pertaining to such proceeding. Commonly called to discuss questions of evidence out of hearing of jury; it may or may not be made part of the written record of the proceeding.

Benchers. In England, principal officers of each inn of court, in whom the government of such is vested. See Inns of Court.

Bench legislation. See Judge-made law.

Bench mark. A mark on a fixed and enduring object, indicating a particular elevation and used as a reference in topographical surveys and tidal observations. Ace Const. Co. v. U. S., 185 Ct.Cl. 487, 401 F.2d 816, 820. Standard unit for basis of comparison.

Bench trial. Trial held before judge sitting without a jury; jury waived trial.

Bench warrant. Process issued by the court itself, or "from the bench," for the attachment or arrest of a person; either in case of contempt, or where an indictment has been found, or to bring in a witness who fails to obey a subpoena.

Bene /bèyniy/. Lat. Well; in proper form; legally; sufficiently.

Benedicta est expositio quando res redimitur a destructione /benèdiktè èst èkspèzish(iy)ow kwòndow riyz ràdímàtør èy dàstrèkshiyòwniy/. Blessed is the exposition when anything is saved from destruction. It is a laudable interpretation which gives effect to the instrument, and does not allow its purpose to be frustrated.

Benefice /bènéfəs/. In ecclesiastical law, in its technical sense, this term includes ecclesiastical preferments to which rank or public office is attached, otherwise described as ecclesiastical dignities or offices, such as bishoprics, deaneries, and the like; but in popular acceptation, it is almost invariably appropriated to rectories, vicarages, perpetual curacies, district churches, and endowed chapelries. A term derived from the feudal law, in which it signified a permanent stipendiary estate, or an estate held by feudal tenure. 4 Bl.Comm. 107. See English Patronage (Benefices) Measure Act, 1986. The modern term designates an office with care for souls but not an office as vicar or in a church.

Bénéfice /bèynefìys/. Fr. In French law, a benefit or advantage, and particularly a privilege given by the law rather than by the agreement of the parties.

Bénéfice de discussion. Benefit of discussion. The right of a guarantor to require that the creditor should exhaust his recourse against the principal debtor before having recourse to the guarantor himself.

Bénéfice de division. Benefit of division; right of contribution as between co-sureties.

Bénéfice d'inventaire. A term which corresponds to the beneficium inventarii of Roman law, and substantially to the English law doctrine that the executor properly accounting is only liable to the extent of the assets received by him.

Bénéficiaire /bèynefìysyér/. The person in whose favor a promissory note or bill of exchange is payable; or any person in whose favor a contract of any description is executed.

Beneficial. Tending to the benefit of a person; yielding a profit, advantage, or benefit; enjoying or entitled to a benefit or profit. This term is applied both to estates (as a "beneficial interest") and to persons (as "the beneficial owner").

Beneficial enjoyment. The enjoyment which a man has of an estate in his own right and for his own benefit, and not as trustee for another.

Beneficial estate. An estate in expectancy is one where the right to the possession is postponed to a future period, and is "beneficial" where the devisee takes solely for his own use or benefit, and not as the mere holder of the title for the use of another.

Beneficial holders of securities. In securities law, persons who have the equitable or legal title to shares but who have not registered the shares in their names on the records of the corporation.

Beneficial interest. Profit, benefit, or advantage resulting from a contract, or the ownership of an estate as distinct from the legal ownership or control. When considered as designation of character of an estate, is such an interest as a devisee, legatee, or donee takes solely for his own use or benefit, and not as holder of title for use and benefit of another.

In trust law, refers to interest of the beneficiary in right to income or principle of trust funds, in contrast to trustee who holds legal title.

Beneficial owner. Term applied most commonly to cestui que trust who enjoys ownership of the trust or estate in equity, but not legal title which remains in trustee or personal representative. Equitable as contrasted with legal owner.

One who does not have title to property but has rights in the property which are the normal incident of owning the property. The persons for whom a trustee holds title to property are the beneficial owners of the property, and the trustee has a fiduciary responsibility to them.

Beneficial power. A power which has for its object the donee of the power, and which is to be executed solely for his benefit; as distinguished from a trust power, which has for its object a person other than the donee, and is to be executed solely for the benefit of such person.

Beneficial use. The right to use and enjoy property according to one's own liking or so as to derive a profit or benefit from it, including all that makes it desirable or habitable, as light, air, and access; as distinguished from a mere right of occupancy or possession. Such right to enjoyment of property where legal title is in one person while right to such use or interest is in another. Christiansen v. Department of Social Security, 15 Wash.2d 465, 131 P.2d 189, 191.

Beneficiary /benəfish(iy)əri/. One who benefits from act of another. A party who will benefit from a transfer of property or other arrangement. Examples include the beneficiary of a trust, the beneficiary of a life insurance policy, and the beneficiary of an estate. See also Creditor beneficiary; Primary beneficiary; Third party beneficiary.

Credit. A "beneficiary" of a credit is a person who is entitled under its terms to draw or demand payment. U.C.C. § 5-103(d). See also Creditor beneficiary.

Incidental. A person who may derive benefit from performance on contract, though he is neither the promisee nor the one to whom performance is to be rendered. Salzman v. Holiday Inns, Inc., 48 A.D.2d 258, 369 N.Y.S.2d 238, 242. See also Incidental beneficiary.

Insurance. The person entitled to take proceeds on death of insured.

Letter of credit. In a letter of credit transaction, the "person who is entitled under its terms [i.e., the terms of the credit] to draw or demand payment." U.C.C. § 5-103(l)(d).

Taxation. One who is assessed as the real owner. See also Income beneficiary.

Trust. As it relates to trust beneficiaries, includes a person who has any present or future interest, vested or contingent, and also includes the owner of an interest by assignment or other transfer and as it relates to a charitable trust, includes any person entitled to enforce the trust. Uniform Probate Code, § 1-201. A person named in a trust account as one for whom a party to the account is named as trustee. Uniform Probate Code, § 6-101. Person for whose benefit property is held in trust. Restatement, Second, Trusts § 3.

Will. Person named in will to receive specified property.

Beneficiary association. See Benevolent associations.

Beneficiary heir. In the law of Louisiana, one who has accepted the succession under the benefit of an inventory regularly made. Civ.Code La. art. 883. Also, one who may accept the succession with benefit of inventory.

Beneficio prima, or primo [ecclesiastico habendo] /benəfish(iy)əw práyməw (əkliyziyəstəkəw həbэндəw)/. In English law, an ancient writ, which was addressed by the king to the lord chancellor, to bestow the benefice that should first fall in the royal gift, above or under a specified value, upon a person named therein.

Beneficium /benəfish(iy)əm/. In feudal law, a benefice; a permanent stipendiary estate; the same with what was afterwards called a "fief," "feud," or "fee." It originally meant a "benefaction" from the king, usually to a noble.

In the civil law, a benefit or favor; any particular privilege. A general term applied to ecclesiastical livings. 4 Bl.Comm. 107.

Beneficium abstinendi /benəfish(iy)əm əbstənénday/. In Roman law, the power of an heir to abstain from accepting the inheritance.

Beneficium cedendarum actionum /benəfish(iy)əm sədendərəm əkshiyəwnəm/. In Roman law, the privilege by which a surety could, before paying the creditor, compel him to make over to him the actions which belonged to the stipulator, so as to avail himself of them.

Beneficium clericale /benəfish(iy)əm klərəkéyliy/. Benefit of clergy (q.v.).

Beneficium competentiæ /benəfish(iy)əm kəmpəténshiyiy/. In Scotch law, the privilege of competency. A privilege which the grantor of a gratuitous obligation was entitled to, by which he might retain sufficient for his subsistence, if, before fulfilling the obligation, he was reduced to indigence. In the civil law, the right which an insolvent debtor had, among the Romans, on making cession of his property for the benefit of his creditors, to retain what was required for him to live honestly according to his condition.

A defendant's privilege of being condemned only in an amount which he could pay without being reduced to a state of destitution.

Beneficium divisionis /benəfish(iy)əm dəviz(hiyəwnəs/. In civil and Scotch law, the privilege of one of several co-sureties (cautioners) to insist upon paying only his pro rata share of the debt. La.Civ.Code, arts. 3045-3051.

Beneficium inventarili /benəfish(iy)əm inventəriyay/. See Benefit of inventory.

Beneficium ordinis /benəfish(iy)əm órdənəs/. In civil and Scotch law, the privilege of order. The privilege of a surety to require that the creditor should first proceed against the principal and exhaust his remedy against him, before resorting to the surety.

Beneficium separationis /benəfish(iy)əm sèpərəyshiyəwnəs/. In the civil law, the right to have the goods of an heir separated from those of the testator in favor of creditors.

Beneficium invito non datur /benəfish(iy)əm inváytow nòn déytər/. A privilege or benefit is not granted against one's will.

Beneficium non datum nisi propter officium /benəfish(iy)əm nòn déytəm naysay próptər əfishiyəm/. A remuneration [is] not given, unless on account of a duty performed.

Beneficium non datur nisi officii causa /benəfish(iy)əm nòn déytər náysay əfishiyay kózə/. A benefice is not granted except on account or in consideration of duty.

Beneficium principis debet esse mansurum /benefish(i)yəm prinsəpəs débət ésiy mæns(y)úrəm/. The benefaction of a prince ought to be lasting.

Benefit. Advantage; profit; fruit; privilege; gain; interest. The receiving as the exchange for promise some performance or forbearance which promisor was not previously entitled to receive. Graphic Arts Finishers, Inc. v. Boston Redevelopment Authority, 357 Mass. 40, 255 N.E.2d 793, 795. Benefits are something to advantage of, or profit to, recipient. Cheltenham Tp. v. Cheltenham Tp. Police Dept., 11 Pa.Cmwth. 348, 312 A.2d 835, 838.

Financial assistance received in time of sickness, disability, unemployment, etc. either from insurance or public programs such as social security.

Contracts. When it is said that a valuable consideration for a promise may consist of a benefit to the promisor, "benefit" means that the promisor has, in return for his promise, acquired some legal right to which he would not otherwise have been entitled. Woolum v. Sizemore, 267 Ky. 384, 102 S.W.2d 323, 324. "Benefits" of contract are advantages which result to either party from performance by other. DeCarlo v. Gerryco, Inc., 46 N.C. App. 15, 264 S.E.2d 370, 375.

Eminent domain. It is a rule that, in assessing damages for private property taken or injured for public use, "special benefits" may be set off against the amount of damage found, but not "general benefits." Within the meaning of this rule, general benefits are such as accrue to the community at large, to the vicinage, or to all property similarly situated with reference to the work or improvement in question; while special benefits are such as accrue directly and solely to the owner of the land in question and not to others.

As respects eminent domain law, "general benefits" are those which arise from the fulfillment of the public object which justified taking, while "special benefits" are those which arise from the particular relation of the land in question to the public improvement. Morehead v. State Dept. of Roads, 195 Neb. 31, 236 N.W.2d 623, 627.

Benefit association. See Benefit societies.

Benefit building society. The original name for what is now more commonly called a "building society" (q.v.).

Benefit certificate. A written obligation to pay the person therein named the amount specified upon the conditions therein stipulated. Also a term usually applied to policies issued by fraternal and beneficiary societies. Chandler v. New York Life Ins. Co., 194 Ark. 6, 104 S.W.2d 1060, 1061.

Benefit-cost ratio. Such ratio is basically a comparison of anticipated benefits derived from particular public works project with anticipated costs over estimated life span of the project. Sierra Club v. Froehlke, D.C.Tex., 359 F.Supp. 1289, 1360.

Benefit of bargain rule. Under such rule a defrauded purchaser may recover the difference between the real and the represented value of the property purchased. Auffenberg v. Hafley, Mo.App., 457 S.W.2d 929, 337. This rule of damages gives damaged party equivalent of what the party would have received if the representations relied upon had been true. Asleson v. West Branch Land Co., N.D., 311 N.W.2d 533, 543.

In an action for fraud, plaintiff's recovery is limited to that measured by "out-of-pocket" rule, by which damages are measured by difference between purchase price of property and fair market value of same property on date of sale, unless actionable misrepresentation was warranty of value, in which case plaintiff may recover under "benefit-of-the-bargain" rule by which damages are determined by difference between actual value of property received and its value had representations as made been true. Galego v. Knudsen, 573 P.2d 313, 318, 281 Or. 43.

Benefit of cession. In the civil law, the release of a debtor from future imprisonment for his debts, which the law operates in his favor upon the surrender of his property for the benefit of his creditors.

Benefit of clergy. In its original sense, the phrase denoted the exemption which was accorded to clergymen from the jurisdiction of the secular courts, or from arrest or attachment on criminal process issuing from those courts in certain particular cases. Afterwards, it meant a privilege of exemption from the punishment of death accorded to such persons as were clerks, or who could read. This privilege of exemption from capital punishment was anciently allowed to clergymen only, but afterwards to all who were connected with the church, even to its most subordinate officers, and at a still later time to all persons who could read (then called "clerks"), whether ecclesiastics or laymen. It does not appear to have been extended to cases of high treason, nor did it apply to mere misdemeanors. The privilege was claimed after the person's conviction, by a species of motion in arrest of judgment, technically called "praying his clergy." As a means of testing his clerical character, he was given a psalm to read (usually, or always, the fifty-first), and, upon his reading it correctly, he was turned over to the ecclesiastical courts, to be tried by the bishop or a jury of twelve clerks. These heard him on oath, with his witnesses and compurgators, who attested their belief in his innocence. This privilege operated greatly to mitigate the extreme rigor of the criminal laws, but was found to involve such gross abuses that parliament began to enact that certain crimes should be felonies "without benefit of clergy," and finally, by the Criminal Law Act of 1827, it was altogether abolished. The act of congress of April 30, 1790, c. 9, § 31, 1 Stat. 119, provided that there should be no benefit of clergy for any capital crime against the United States, and, if this privilege formed a part of the common law of the several states before the Revolution, it no longer exists.

Sometimes used in negative sense, "without benefit of clergy", to describe status of man and woman who live together though not married to each other.

Benefit of counsel. See Assistance of counsel; Counsel, right to.

Benefit of discussion. In the civil law, the right which a surety has to cause the property of the principal debtor to be applied in satisfaction of the obligation in the first instance. Civ.Code La. arts. 3045-3051.

Benefit of division. Same as beneficium divisionis (q.v.).

Benefit of inventory. In the civil law, the privilege which the heir obtains of being liable for the charges and debts of the succession, only to the value of the effects of the succession, by causing an inventory of these effects within the time and manner prescribed by law. Civil Code La. art. 1032.

Benefit of order. See Beneficium (Beneficium ordinis).

Benefit societies. Under this and several similar names, in various states, corporations which exist to receive periodical payments from members, and hold them as a fund to be loaned or given to members needing pecuniary relief.

Benefits rule. This rule provides that where a benefit, as well as a harm, is conferred by a tort-feasor, the benefits must be weighed against the elements of claimed damage. Clapham v. Yanga, 102 Mich.App. 47, 300 N.W.2d 727, 734.

Benerth. A feudal service rendered by the tenant to his lord with plow and cart.

Benevolence. The doing of a kind or helpful action towards another, under no obligation except an ethical one.

The love of humanity; the desire to promote its prosperity or happiness. The term includes acts of well-wishing towards others, for the promotion of general happiness, and plans actuated by love of others and a desire for their well-being. In re Peabody's Estate, 124 Misc. 338, 208 N.Y.S. 664, 671. Also beneficent; doing well.

It is a broader term than "charity" which it includes, and with which it is frequently used synonymously. "Charity" in its legal sense implies giving without consideration or expectation of return, and "benevolence" applies to any act which is prompted by or has for its object the well-being of others. State v. Texas Mut. Life Ins. Co. of Texas, Tex.Civ.App., 51 S.W.2d 405, 410.

See also Benevolent; Charitable; Charity.

Benevolent /bənəvələnt/. Philanthropic; humane; having a desire or purpose to do good to men; intended for the conferring of benefits, rather than for gain or profit; loving others and actively desirous of their well being. In re Altman's Estate, 87 Misc. 255, 149 N.Y.S. 601, 605.

This word, as applied to objects or purposes, may refer to those which are in their nature charitable, and may also have a broader meaning and include objects and purposes not charitable in the legal sense of that word. Acts of kindness, friendship, forethought, or good-will might properly be described as benevolent. It has therefore been held that gifts to trustees to be applied for "benevolent purposes" at their discretion, or to such benevolent purposes as they could agree upon, do not create a public charity. But where the word is used in connection with other words explanatory of its meaning, and indicating the intent of the donor to limit it to purposes strictly charitable, it has been held to be synonymous with, or equivalent to, "charitable."

See also Charitable; Charity.

Benevolent associations. Those having a philanthropic or charitable purpose, as distinguished from such as are conducted for profit; specifically, "benefit associations" or "beneficial associations." Another name for a "benefit society," "benevolent society," and "fraternal" or "friendly society." State v. Texas Mut. Life Ins. Co. of Texas, Tex.Civ.App., 51 S.W.2d 405, 410. See also Benevolent corporation; Charitable corporation.

Benevolent corporation. A nonprofit corporation; created for charitable rather than for business purposes. One that ministers to all; the purpose may be anything that promotes the mental, physical, or spiritual welfare of man. The term may include a corporation to which a bequest is made to be used in the improvement of the social, physical, and economic condition of the employees of a business corporation. In re Altman's Estate, 87 Misc. 255, 149 N.Y.S. 601. See also Charitable corporation.

Benevolentia regis habenda /benəvələnsh(i)yə ríjəshəbéndə/. The form in ancient fines and submissions to purchase the king's pardon and favor in order to be restored to place, title or estate.

Benevolent society. See Benevolent associations; Benevolent corporation.

Benigne faciendæ sunt interpretationes chartarum, ut res magis valeat quam pereat; et quæ libet concessio fortissime contra donatorem interpretanda est /bənígniy fəshiyéndiy sənt intərpətəyshiyówniyz kartəram, ət riyz méyʃəs vəliyət kwəm péhriyət; ət kwíyləbət kənsəsh(i)yow fortisəmiy kóntrə dównətórəm intərpətəndə est/. Liberal interpretations are to be made of deeds, so that the purpose may rather stand than fall; and every grant is to be taken most strongly against the grantor.

Benigne faciendæ sunt interpretationes, propter simplicitatem laicorum, ut res magis valeat quam pereat; et verba intentioni, non e contra, debent inseruire /bənígniy fəshiyéndiy sənt intərpətəyshiyówniyz, pɔptər simplisətétəm ləykórəm, ət riyz méyʃəs vəliyət kwəm péhriyət; ət vórbə intənshiyównay, nón èy kóntrə, débət insərváryiy/. Constructions [of written instruments] are to be made liberally, on account of the simplicity of the laity [or common people], in order that the thing [or subject-matter] may rather have effect than perish [or become void]; and words must be subject to the intention, not the intention to the words. 2 Bl.Comm. 379.

Benignior sententia in verbis generalibus seu dubiis, est præferenda /bənign(i)ɔr sentəns(i)ə in vɔrbəs jənərəyləbəs syūw dyūwbiyəs ɛst prɛfərəndə/. The more favorable construction is to be placed on general or doubtful expressions.

Benignius leges interpretandæ sunt quo voluntas earum conservetur /bənign(i)ɔs liyjiyɪz intɛrprətəndi sɑnt kwɔw vɔləntəs iyərəm kɔnsərvɛtər/. Laws are to be more liberally interpreted, in order that their intent may be preserved.

Bequeath /bəkwiyð/. To give personal property by will to another. It therefore is distinguishable from "devise," which is properly used of realty. But if the context clearly shows the intention of the testator to use the word "bequeath" as synonymous with "devise," it may be held to pass real property. See Bequest.

Bequest /bəkwest/. A gift (transfer) by will of personal property; a legacy. Disposition of realty in will is termed "devise." See also Charitable bequest; Demonstrative bequest; Devise; General bequest; Legacy.

Conditional bequest. One the taking effect or continuing of which depends upon the happening or non-occurrence of a particular event.

Executory bequest. The bequest of a future, deferred, or contingent interest in personalty.

Residuary bequest. A gift of all the remainder of the testator's personal estate, after payment of debts and legacies, etc.

Specific bequest. One whereby the testator gives to the legatee all his property of a certain class or kind; as all his pure personalty.

Berat. Also barat. A warrant or patent of dignity or privilege given by an Oriental monarch.

Berbiage /bərbijəj/. A rent paid for the pasturing of sheep.

Bernet. In Saxon law, burning; the crime of house burning, now called "arson."

Bernstein test. Form of blood test used in determining child's paternity and predicated on 4 blood types.

Berry, or bury. A villa or seat of habitation of a nobleman; a dwelling or mansion house; a sanctuary.

Bertillon system /bɛrtiɔwn sistəm/. A method of anthropometry (q.v.), once used for the identification of criminals and other persons, consisting of the taking and recording of a system of numerous, minute, and uniform measurements of various parts of the human body, absolutely and in relation to each other, the facial, cranial, and other angles, and of any eccentricities or abnormalities noticed in the individual. See DNA identification.

Bes. Lat. In the Roman law, a division of the as, or pound, consisting of eight uncia, or duodecimal parts, and amounting to two-thirds of the as. 2 Bl.Comm. 462 note m. Two-thirds of an inheritance. Eight per cent. interest.

Besaile, besayle /bèséyl/. The great-grandfather, proavus. 1 Bl.Comm. 186.

Besayel, besaiel, besayle /bèséyl/. In old English law, a writ which lay where a great-grandfather died seised of lands and tenements in fee-simple, and on the day of his death a stranger abated, or entered and kept out the heir. 3 Bl.Comm. 186.

Beseech. To entreat; to implore.

Besides. In addition to; moreover; also; likewise.

Besoin /bəsóyn/bəswæn/. Fr. Need.

Besot /bəsót/. To stupefy, to make dull or senseless, to make to dote; and "to dote" is to be delirious, silly, or insane.

Best. Of the highest quality; of the greatest usefulness for the purpose intended. Most desirable, suitable, useful, or satisfactory. For example: the "best bid" of interest by a prospective depository of school funds would not necessarily be the highest bid, but, looking to the solvency of the bidder, the bond tendered, and all the circumstances surrounding the transaction, the safety and preservation of the school fund, the "best bid" might be the lowest bid.

Best-effort basis. With respect to a new securities issue, a commitment by the investment banker or group handling the new issue to sell the securities as an agent of the issuing party, rather than as an underwriting of the entire issue.

Best evidence. Primary evidence, as distinguished from secondary; original, as distinguished from substitutionary; the best and highest evidence of which the nature of the case is susceptible, not the highest or strongest evidence which the nature of the thing to be proved admits of. The original of a written instrument is itself always regarded as the primary or best possible evidence of its existence and contents; a copy, or the recollection of a witness, would be secondary evidence. "Best evidence" or "primary evidence" includes the best evidence which is available to a party and procurable under the existing situation, and all evidence falling short of such standard, and which in its nature suggests there is better evidence of the same fact, is "secondary evidence." See Best evidence rule; Original document rule; Primary evidence.

Best evidence rule. Rule which requires that best evidence available be presented in lieu of less satisfactory evidence. People v. Banks, Colo.App., 655 P.2d 1384, 1387. This rule prohibits the introduction into evidence of secondary evidence unless it is shown that original document has been lost or destroyed or is beyond jurisdiction of court without fault of the offering party; if original document is lost, then secondary evidence is properly admissible. State v. Stephens, Mo.App., 556 S.W.2d 722, 723. Fed.R.Evid. 1002 states the basic rule as follows: "To prove the content of a writing, recording, or photograph, the original writing, recording, or photograph is required, except as otherwise provided in these rules or by Act of Congress." As to what constitutes an "original writing", see Original.

Bestiality. A sexual connection between a human being and an animal. State v. Poole, 59 Ariz. 44, 122 P.2d 415, 416. At common law the term "crime against nature" embraced both "sodomy" and "bestiality". See Sodomy.

Bestow. To give, grant, confer, or impart; not necessarily limited in meaning to "devise."

Best use. In eminent domain, the value of property considering its optimum use at a given time and hence the money which should be awarded for such governmental taking; used commonly as "highest and best use". (q.v.)

Bet. An agreement between two or more persons that a sum of money or other valuable thing, to which all jointly contribute, shall become the sole property of one or some of them on the happening in the future of an event at present uncertain, or according as a question disputed between them is settled in one way or the other. A contract by which two or more parties agree that a sum of money, or other thing, shall be paid or delivered to one of them on the happening or not happening of an uncertain event. See Wager; a term generally synonymous with bet. See also Betting book; Betting slips.

Betray. Act of delivering up to an enemy something of value. To divulge a matter in breach of a confidence. To deceive, seduce or lead astray. A "betrayal," as of a professional secret on the part of a physician, signifies a wrongful disclosure in violation of the trust imposed by the patient. See Treason.

Betrothed /bətrowðd/. One who has exchanged promises to marry. The term may be synonymous with "intended wife." See also Engagement.

Betrothment, betrothal. Mutual promise of marriage; the plighting of troth; a mutual promise or contract between a man and woman competent to make it, to marry at a future time.

Better Business Bureau. Local, business-supported organizations that promote good business practices, receive complaints about specific businesses, and provide consumers with information about specific firms. The local bureaus are loosely affiliated with a national bureau.

Better equity. See Equity.

Betterment. An improvement put upon a property which enhances its value more than mere replacement, maintenance, or repairs. The improvement may be either temporary or permanent. Also applied to denote the additional value which a property acquires in consequence of some public improvement, as laying out or widening a street, etc. See also Improvement.

Betterment acts. Statutes which provide that a bona fide occupant of real estate making lasting improvements in good faith shall have a lien upon the estate recovered by the real owner to the extent that his improvements have increased the value of the land. Also called "occupying claimant acts."

Betting. Act of placing a bet or wager. See Bet; Gambling; Pari-mutuel betting; Wager.

Betting book. A book kept for registering bets on the result of a race as operated on race track. In a broader sense, the "betting book" is that book which enables the professional bettor to carry on his business, and to promote a race, and it includes the book, the making book and the bookmaker.

Betting slips. Part of gambling paraphernalia consisting of papers on which numbers or names of dogs or horses to be bet are written and which constitutes evidence for prosecution of illegal gaming.

Between. A space which separates. Strictly applicable only with reference to two things, but this may be understood as including cases in which a number of things are discriminated collectively as two wholes, or as taken in pairs, or where one thing is set off against a number of others. In re McShane's Will, 158 Misc. 777, 286 N.Y.S. 680, 682. Sometimes used synonymously with "among". In re Moore's Estate, 157 Pa.Super. 296, 43 A.2d 359. As a measure or indication of distance, this word has the effect of excluding the two termini. If an act is to be done "between" two certain days, it must be performed before the commencement of the latter day. In computing the time in such a case, both the days named are to be excluded.

Bewared. Eng. Expended. Before the Britons and Saxons had introduced the general use of money, they traded chiefly by exchange of wares.

Beyond a reasonable doubt. In evidence means fully satisfied, entirely convinced, satisfied to a moral certainty; and phrase is the equivalent of the words clear, precise and indubitable. In criminal case, the accused's guilt must be established "beyond a reasonable doubt," which means that facts proven must, by virtue of their probative force, establish guilt. See also Reasonable doubt.

Beyond control. Anything or any person who, in relationship to another person is out of reach of the latter, either physically, legally or morally; for example, a child who has reached his majority is beyond the legal control of his parents. See also Act of God.

Beyond the seas. Beyond the limits of the United States. In England, an expression to indicate that a person was outside the United Kingdom. The Limitation Act of 1939 abolished the old procedure whereby a defendant's absence beyond the seas suspended the operation of the Statutes of Limitations.

B.F. An abbreviation for bonum factum, a good or proper act, deed, or decree; signifies "approved."

BFOQ. Bona Fide Occupational Qualification. See Bona fide.

BI. Bodily injury.

BIA. Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Biannually. Twice a year; semi-annually.

Bias /báyəs/. Inclination; bent; prepossession; a preconceived opinion; a predisposition to decide a cause or an issue in a certain way, which does not leave the mind perfectly open to conviction. To incline to one side. Condition of mind, which sways judgment and renders judge unable to exercise his functions impartially in particular case. As used in law regarding disqualification of judge, refers to mental attitude or disposition of the judge toward a party to the litigation, and not to any views that he may entertain regarding the subject matter involved. State ex rel. Mitchell v. Sage Stores Co., 157 Kan. 622, 143 P.2d 652, 655.

Actual bias consists in the existence of a state of mind on the part of the juror which satisfies the court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, that the juror cannot try the issues impartially and without prejudice to the substantial rights of the party challenging.

Bible. See Family Bible.

Bicameral system /bàykámərəl sistəm/. A term applied by Jeremy Bentham to the division of a legislative body into two chambers, as in the United States government (Senate and House).

Bid. An offer by an intending purchaser to pay a designated price for property which is about to be sold at auction. An offer to perform a contract for work and labor or supplying materials or goods at a specified price. Public contracts are frequently awarded on basis of submitted, competitive bids. See also Firm bid; Invitation to bid; Let; Lowest responsible bidder; Open bid; Sealed bid.

Term may also refer to application for another job by an employee.

Best bid. One that is not necessarily the lowest, but rather fits the best interests of the issuer of the bid; taken into consideration is the solvency of the bidder, quality of his work, reputation, etc.

Bidder. One who makes a bid. One who offers to pay a specified price for an article offered for sale at a public auction or to perform a certain contract for a specified price. As to Responsible bidder see that title.

Biddings. Offers of a designated price for goods or other property put up for sale at auction.

Bidding up. Raising the price for an item being sold at an auction by a series of bids, each higher than the other. If such successive bids are made collusively by persons with an interest in raising the final bid, such practice is unlawful.

Bid in. Property sold at auction is said to be "bid in" by the owner or an incumbrancer or some one else who is interested in it, when he attends the sale and makes the successful bid. This is done so that property is not sold below actual value.

Bid off. One is said to "bid off" a thing when he bids for it at an auction sale, and it is knocked down to him in immediate succession to the bid and as a consequence of it.

By-bidding. In the law relating to sales by auction, this term is equivalent to "puffing." The practice consists in making fictitious bids for the property, under a secret arrangement with the owner or auctioneer, for the purpose of misleading and stimulating other persons who are bidding in good faith.

Competitive bidding. Bids which are submitted as the result of public notice and advertising of an intended sale or purchase.

Letting or awarding of bids. See Let.

Open bid. Offer to perform a contract together with the price, but with right to reduce the price to meet price quoted by others for same job.

Sealed bid. One submitted under seal, and which is not to be opened until a specified time at which all bids are to be opened and compared. Commonly required on construction contracts, to assure independence of bidding.

Upset bid. A bid made after a judicial sale, but before the successful bid at the sale has been confirmed, larger or better than such successful bid, and made for the purpose of upsetting the sale and securing to the "upset bidder" the privilege of taking the property at his bid or competing at a new sale.

Bid and asked. Price quotation for securities that are not frequently traded or are traded on the over-the-counter market. The bid quotation is the highest price a prospective buyer is willing to pay at a particular time; the asked quotation is the lowest price the seller is willing to sell for. Together, the two prices constitute a quotation; the difference between the two prices is the "spread."

Bid bond. Type of bond required in public construction projects which must be filed at the time of the bid and which protects the public agency in the event that the bidder refuses to enter into a contract after the award to him or withdraws his bid before the award. A type of indemnity bond.

Bidder. See Bid.

Bid price. In market exchanges, the price a buyer is willing to pay, as contrasted with the price at which a seller is willing to sell; called the "ask price". Also, the amount specified in a bid as the amount for which the bidder will perform the work or buy the property.

Bid quote. Price at which one (usually a broker or dealer) is willing to purchase a security (or commodity).

Bid shopping. The use of the low bid already received by general contractor to pressure other subcontractors into submitting even lower bids. Southern California Acoustics Co. v. C.V. Holder, Inc., 71 C.2d 719, 79 Cal. Rptr. 319, 325, 456 P.2d 975.

Bienes /biyénes/. In Spanish law, goods; property of every description, including real as well as personal property; all things (not being persons) which may serve for the uses of man.

Bienes comunes. Common property; those things which, not being the private property of any person, are open to the use of all, such as the air, rain, water, the sea and its beaches.

Bienes gananciales. A species of community in property enjoyed by husband and wife, the property being divisible equally between them on the dissolution of the marriage; does not include what they held as their separate property at the time of contracting the marriage.

Bienes publicos. Those things which, as to property, pertain to the people or nation, and, as to their use, to the individuals of the territory or district, such as rivers, shores, ports, and public roads.

Biennial /bàyé(n)iyəl/. Occurring every two years.

Biennial session. The regular session of most State legislatures, usually held in odd-numbered years; gradually being supplanted by annual sessions.

Biennium /bàyéniyəm/. A two-year period; the period for which appropriations are made in many State legislatures.

Biens /bíynz/byén(z)/. In old English law, property of every description, except estates of freehold and inheritance.

In French law, this term includes all kinds of property, real and personal. Biens are divided into biens meubles, movable property; and biens immeubles, immovable property. The distinction between movable and immovable property is recognized by the continental jurists, and gives rise, in the civil as well as in the common law, to many important distinctions as to rights and remedies.

Bifurcated trial /báyfòrkèytəd tráy(ə)l/. Trial of issues separately, e.g. guilt and punishment, or guilt and sanity, in criminal trial.

The trial of the liability issue in a personal injury or wrongful death case separate from and prior to trial of the damages question. The advantage of so doing is that if the liability issue is determined in defendant's favor there is no need to try the damages question, which can be an involved one entailing expensive expert witnesses and other proof.

Compare Severance of actions.

Bigamus /bigəməs/. In the civil law, a man who was twice married; one who at different times and successively has married two wives. One who has two wives living. One who marries a widow.

Used in ecclesiastical matters as a reason for denying benefit of the clergy.

Bigamus seu trigamus, etc., est qui diversis temporibus et successivè duas seu tres uxores habuit /bigəməs syùw trígəməs èst kwày dāvərsəs tèmپórábəs èt sàksesáyviy d(y)úwəs syùw tréz àksóriyz háb(y)uwət/. A bigamus or trigamus, etc., is one who at different times and successively has married two or three wives.

Bigamy /bigəmiy/. The criminal offense of willfully and knowingly contracting a second marriage (or going through the form of a second marriage) while the first marriage, to the knowledge of the offender, is still subsisting and undissolved. The state of a man who has two wives, or of a woman who has two husbands, living at the same time.

A married person is guilty of bigamy, a misdemeanor, if he contracts or purports to contract another marriage, unless at the time of the subsequent marriage: (a) the actor believes that the prior spouse is dead; or (b) the actor and the prior spouse have been living apart for five consecutive years throughout which the prior spouse was not known by the actor to be alive; or (c) a Court has entered a judgment purporting to terminate or annul any prior disqualifying marriage, and the actor does not know that judgment to be invalid; or (d) the actor reasonably believes that he is legally eligible to remarry. Model Penal Code, § 230.1.

In the canon law, the term denoted the offense committed by an ecclesiastic who married two wives successively. It might be committed either by marrying a second wife after the death of a first or by marrying a widow.

See also Polygamy.

Big board. A popular term referring to the board showing the current prices of securities listed on the New York Stock Exchange.

Big eight. A term which refers to the eight largest certified public accounting (CPA) firms in the United States. The ranking of the firms consider such factors as gross receipts, number of staff, etc.

Bigot. A prejudiced person; or one that is wedded to an opinion in matters of religion, race, etc.

Bilagines /bàyléjəniyz/. By-laws of towns; municipal laws.

Bilan. A term used in Louisiana, derived from the French. A book in which bankers, merchants, and traders write a statement of all they owe and all that is due them; a balance-sheet.

Bilanciis deferendis /bələnshiyəs defərəndəs/. In English law, an obsolete writ addressed to a corporation for the carrying of weights to such a haven, there to weigh the wool anciently licensed for transportation.

Bilateral contract /bàylətərəl kóntrækt/. A term, used originally in the civil law, but now generally adopted, denoting a contract in which both the contracting parties are bound to fulfill obligations reciprocally towards each other; as a contract of sale, where one becomes bound to deliver the thing sold, and the other to pay the price of it. A contract executory on both sides, and one which includes both rights and duties on each side. Contract formed by the exchange of promises in which the promise of one party is consideration supporting the promise of the other as contrasted with a unilateral contract which is formed by the exchange of a promise for an act. Antonucci v. Stevens Dodge, Inc., 73 Misc.2d

Bilboes. A device used for punishment at sea, similar to the stocks (q.v.) on land.

Biline. A word used by Briton in the sense of "collateral." En line biline, in the collateral line.

Bilinguis /baylingwəs/. Of a double language or tongue; that can speak two languages. A term formerly applied to a jury composed partly of Englishmen and partly of foreigners, which, by the English law, an alien party to a suit was, in certain cases, entitled to; more commonly called a "jury de medietate linguæ." 3 Bl.Comm. 360.

Bill. As a legal term, this word has many meanings and applications, the most important of which are set forth below:

Bill of rights. A formal and emphatic legislative assertion and declaration of popular rights and liberties usually promulgated upon a change of government; e.g. the famous Bill of Rights of 1688 in English history. Also the summary of the rights and liberties of the people, or of the principles of constitutional law deemed essential and fundamental, contained in many of the American state constitutions. Hamill v. Hawks, C.C.A. Okl., 58 F.2d 41, 47. That portion of Constitution guaranteeing rights and privileges to the individual; i.e. first ten Amendments of U.S. Constitution.

Commercial law. A written statement of the terms of a contract, or specification of the items of a transaction or of a demand. Also, a general name for any item of indebtedness, whether receivable or payable; an account for goods sold, services rendered, or work done. As a verb, as generally and customarily used in commercial transactions, "bill" is synonymous with "charge" or "invoice." George M. Jones Co. v. Canadian Nat. R. Co., D.C.Mich., 14 F.2d 852, 855. See also Commercial paper; Maritime law, below.

Bill-book. A book in which an account of bills of exchange and promissory notes, whether payable or receivable, is stated.

Bill-head. A printed form on which merchants and traders make out their bills and render accounts to their customers.

Bill of lading. See Bill of lading, infra.

Bill of parcels. A statement sent to the buyer of goods, along with the goods, exhibiting in detail the items composing the parcel and their several prices, to enable him to detect any mistake or omission; an invoice (q.v.).

Bill of sale. In contracts, a written agreement, formerly limited to one under seal, by which one person assigns or transfers his right to or interest in goods and personal chattels to another. Legal document which conveys title from seller to buyer.

Bill payable. In a merchant's accounts, all bills which he has accepted, and promissory notes which he has made, are called "bills payable," and are entered in a ledger account under that name, and recorded in a book bearing the same title. See Account (Account payable).

Bill receivable. In a merchant's accounts, all notes, drafts, checks, etc., payable to him, or of which he is to receive the proceeds at a future date, are called "bills receivable," and are entered in a ledger-account under that name, and also noted in a book bearing the same title. See Account (Account receivable).

Bill rendered. A bill of items rendered by a creditor to his debtor; an "account rendered," as distinguished from "an account stated."

Grand bill of sale. In old English law, the name of an instrument used for the transfer of a ship while she is at sea. An expression which is understood to refer to the instrument whereby a ship was originally transferred from the builder to the owner, or first purchaser.

Commercial paper. A promissory obligation for the payment of money.

Bill broker. Middleman who negotiates purchase or sale of commercial paper.

Bill of credit. A bill or promissory note issued by the government, upon its faith and credit, designed to circulate in the community as money. See Federal reserve notes; Treasury bill.

In mercantile law, a license or authority given in writing from one person to another, very common among merchants, bankers, and those who travel, empowering a person to receive or take up money of their correspondents abroad. See also Letter of credit.

Bill of exchange. An unconditional order in writing addressed by one person to another, signed by the person giving it, requiring the person to whom it is addressed to pay on demand or at a fixed or determinable future time a sum certain in money. A three party instrument in which first party draws an order for the payment of a sum certain on a second party for payment to a third party at a definite future time. Same as "draft" under U.C.C. A check is a demand bill of exchange. See also Advance bill; Banker's acceptance; Blank bill; Clean bill; Draft; Time (Time bill).

Foreign bill of exchange. A bill of exchange drawn in one country upon another country not governed by the same homogeneous laws, or not governed throughout by the same municipal laws. A bill of exchange drawn in one of the United States upon a person residing in another state is a foreign bill.

Common law pleading and practice.

Bill in equity. The first written pleading in a proceeding in equity. The complaint in a suit in equity.

Bill of costs. A certified, itemized statement of the amount of costs in an action or suit.

Bill of evidence. Stenographer's transcript of testimony heard at trial which may be considered on appeal as bill of exceptions. Spencer v. Commonwealth, 250 Ky. 370, 63 S.W.2d 288.

Bill of exceptions. A formal statement in writing of the objections or exceptions taken by a party during the trial of a cause to the decisions, rulings, or instructions of the trial judge, stating the objection, with the facts and circumstances on which it is founded, and, in order to attest its accuracy, signed by the judge; the object being to put the controverted rulings or decisions upon the record for the information of the appellate court. Bills of exceptions have been eliminated in civil appeals in jurisdictions which have adopted Rules of Civil Procedure tracking Fed.Rules of Civil Proc. in favor of a straight appeal with no need to claim exception after making objection at trial; e.g. Mass.R.Civ. Proc. 46.

Bill of particulars. A written statement or specification of the particulars of the demand for which an action at law is brought, or of a defendant's set-off against such demand (including dates, sums, and items in detail), furnished by one of the parties to the other, either voluntarily or in compliance with a judge's order for that purpose. It is designed to aid the defendant in interposing the proper answer and in preparing for trial, by giving him detailed information regarding the cause of action stated in the complaint. See e.g. New York CPLR § 3041 et seq. In jurisdictions which have adopted Rules of Civil Procedure, the bill of particulars has been replaced by various discovery devices (Fed.R. Civil P. 26 et seq.) and by motion for more definite statement (Fed.R. Civil P. 12(e)). See however Criminal law, below, with respect to bill of particulars in criminal cases.

Contracts. An obligation; a deed, whereby the obligor acknowledges himself to owe to the obligee a certain sum of money or some other thing.

Bill obligatory. A bond absolute for the payment of money. It is called also a "single bill," and differs from a promissory note only in having a seal. See Bill penal, below.

Bill of debt. An ancient term including promissory notes and bonds for the payment of money.

Bill penal. A written obligation by which a debtor acknowledges himself indebted in a certain sum, and binds himself for the payment thereof, in a larger sum, called a "penalty." Bonds with conditions have superseded such bills in modern practice. They are sometimes called bills obligatory, and are properly so called; but every bill obligatory is not a bill penal.

Bill single. A written promise to pay to a person or persons named a stated sum at a stated time, without any condition. When under seal, it is sometimes called a "bill obligatory" (q.v.). It differs from a "bill penal" (q.v.) in that it expresses no penalty.

Criminal law.

Bill of attainder. Legislative acts, no matter what their form, that apply either to named individuals or to easily ascertainable members of a group in such a way as to inflict punishment on them without a judicial trial. United States v. Brown, 381 U.S. 437, 448-49, 85 S.Ct. 1707, 1715, 14 L.Ed. 484, 492; United States v. Lovett, 328 U.S. 303, 315, 66 S.Ct. 1073, 1079, 90 L.Ed. 1252. An act is a "bill of attainder" when the punishment is death and a "bill of pains and penalties" when the punishment is less severe; both kinds of punishment fall within the scope of the constitutional prohibition. U.S.Const. Art. I, Sec. 9, Cl. 3 (as to Congress); Art. I, Sec. 10 (as to state legislatures).

Bill of indemnity. See Bill of indemnity, infra.

Bill of indictment. A formal written document accusing a person or persons named of having committed a felony or misdemeanor, lawfully laid before a grand jury (usually by prosecutor) for their action upon it. See Indictment; Presentment.

Bill of pains and penalties. See Bill of attainder, above.

Bill of particulars. Form or means of discovery in which the prosecution sets forth the time, place, manner and means of the commission of the crime as alleged in complaint or indictment. It is one method available to defendant to secure default of charge against him. Fed.R.Crim.P. 7. The purpose of a "bill of particulars" is to give notice to the accused of the offenses charged in the bill of indictment so that he may prepare a defense, avoid surprise, or intelligently raise pleas of double jeopardy and the bar of the statute of limitations. Com. v. Mervin, 230 Pa.Super. 552, 326 A.2d 602, 605.

Equity pleading and practice. The initial pleading of plaintiff or petitioner in equity action in contrast to declaration (complaint) in law actions. Under Rules of Civil Procedure, however, bill has been replaced by complaint for both equitable and legal actions because of merger of law and equity. Fed.R. Civil P. 2.

In England, in the ancient practice of the court of king's bench, the usual and orderly method of beginning an action was by a bill, or original bill, or plaint. This was a written statement of the plaintiff's cause of action, like a declaration or complaint, and always alleged a trespass as the ground of it, in order to give the court jurisdiction. 3 Bl.Comm. 43.

Bill for a new trial. A bill in equity in which the specific relief asked is an injunction against the execution of a judgment rendered at law, and a new trial in the action on account of some fact which would render it inequitable to enforce the judgment, but which was not available to the party on the trial at law, or which he was prevented from presenting by fraud or accident, without concurrent fraud or negligence on his own part. Superseded by motion for new trial in jurisdictions with Rules of Civil Procedure (Rule 59).

Bill for foreclosure. One which is filed by a mortgagee against the mortgagor, for the purpose of having the estate sold, thereby to obtain the sum mortgaged on the premises, with interest and costs.

Bill in aid of execution. A bill to set aside encumbrances or conveyances therein specified as fraudulent. Pape v. Pareti, 315 Ill.App. 1, 42 N.E.2d 361, 364.

Bill in nature of a bill of review. A bill in equity, to obtain a re-examination and reversal of a decree, filed by one who was not a party to the original suit, nor bound by the decree.

Bill in nature of a bill of revivor. Where, on the abatement of a suit, there is such a transmission of the interest of the incapacitated party that the title to it, as well as the person entitled, may be the subject of litigation in a court of chancery, the suit cannot be continued by a mere bill of revivor, but an original bill upon which the title may be litigated must be filed. This is called a "bill in the nature of a bill of revivor." It is founded on privity of estate or title by the act of the party. And the nature and operation of the whole act by which the privity is created is open to controversy.

Bill in nature of a supplemental bill. A bill filed when new parties, with new interests, arising from events happening since the suit was commenced, are brought before the court; such differs from a supplemental bill, which is properly applicable to those cases only where the same parties or the same interests remain before the court.

Bill in nature of interpleader. See Bill of interpleader, below.

Bill of certiorari. A bill, the object of which is to remove a suit in equity from some inferior court to the court of chancery, or some other superior court of equity, on account of some alleged incompetency of the inferior court, or some injustice in its proceedings. As an appellate vehicle, it has been replaced by appeal in jurisdictions which have adopted Rules of Appellate Procedure in civil cases. See Certiorari.

Bill of conformity. One filed by an executor or administrator, who finds the affairs of the deceased so much involved that he cannot safely administer the estate except under the direction of a court of chancery. This bill is filed against the creditors, generally, for the purpose of having all their claims adjusted, and procuring a final decree settling the order of payment of the assets.

Bill of discovery. A proceeding by a party against an adversary for discovery of facts within adversary's knowledge, or discovery of documents, writings, or other things within his possession or power, to be used either offensively or defensively in a pending or contemplated action. In aid of action at law is equitable remedy to enable litigant to obtain, prior to trial, such information as is in exclusive possession of adverse party and is necessary to establishment of complainant's case. Superseded by discovery rules in jurisdictions that have adopted Fed.Rules of Civil Proc. (Rules 26-37).

Bill of information. In England, where a suit is instituted on behalf of the crown or government, or of those of whom it has the custody by virtue of its prerogative, or whose rights are under its particular protection, the matter of complaint is offered to the court by way of information by the attorney or solicitor general, instead of by petition. Where a suit immediately concerns the crown or government alone, the proceeding is purely by way of information, but, where it does not do so immediately, a relator is appointed, who is answerable for costs, etc., and, if he is interested in the matter in connection with the crown or government, the proceeding is by information and bill. Informations differ from bills in little more than name and form, and the same rules are substantially applicable to both. 3 Bl.Comm. 261.

Bill of interpleader. The name of a bill in equity to obtain a settlement of a question of right to money or other property adversely claimed, in which the party filing the bill has no interest, although it may be in his hands, by compelling such adverse claimants to litigate the right or title between themselves, and relieve him from liability or litigation. Superseded by Rule 22, "Interpleader," in those jurisdictions that have adopted Rules of Civil Procedure. See Interpleader.

Bill of peace. One which is filed when a person has a right which may be controverted by various persons, at different times, and by different actions.

Bill of review. Proceeding in equity brought for purpose of reversing or correcting prior judgment of trial court after such judgment has become final and is no longer appealable or subject to motion for new trial. Rogers v. Searle, Tex.Civ.App., 533 S.W.2d 433, 437. It is in the nature of a writ of error. A "bill of review," or a bill in the nature of a bill of review, are of three classes; those for error appearing on the face of the record, those for newly discovered evidence, and those for fraud impeaching the original transaction. Such bills are peculiar to courts of equity. In states where Rules of Civil Procedure are applicable, such bill is replaced by motion for relief from judgment or order (Rule 60).

Bill of revivor. One which is brought to continue a suit which has abated before its final consummation as, for example, by death, or marriage of a female plaintiff.

Bill of revivor and supplement. One which is a compound of a supplemental bill and bill of revivor, and not only continues the suit, which has abated by the death of the plaintiff, or the like, but supplies any defects in the original bill arising from subsequent events, so as to entitle the party to relief on the whole merits of his case.

Bill quia timet. A bill invoking the aid of equity "because he fears," that is, because the complainant apprehends an injury to his property rights or interests, from the fault or neglect of another. Such bills are entertained to guard against possible or prospective injuries, and to preserve the means by which existing rights may be protected from future or contingent violations; differing from injunctions, in that the latter correct past and present or imminent and certain injuries. De Carli v. O'Brien, 150 Or. 35, 41 P.2d 411, 416.

Bill to carry a decree into execution. One which is filed when, from the neglect of parties or some other cause, it may become impossible to carry a decree into execution without the further decree of the court.

Bill to perpetuate testimony. A bill in equity filed in order to procure the testimony of witnesses to be taken as to some matter not at the time before the courts, but which is likely at some future time to be in litigation. Superseded by Rule of Civil Procedure 27.

Bill to quiet possession and title. Also called a bill to remove a cloud on title (q.v.), and though sometimes classed with bills quia timet or for the cancellation of void instruments, they may be resorted to in other cases when the complainant's title is clear and there is a cloud to be removed.

Bill to suspend a decree. One brought to avoid or suspend a decree under special circumstances.

Bill to take testimony de bene esse. One which is brought to take the testimony of witnesses to a fact material to the prosecution of a suit at law which is actually commenced, where there is good cause to fear that the testimony may otherwise be lost before the time of trial. Superseded by Rule of Civil Procedure 27.

Cross-bill. One which is brought by a defendant in a suit against a plaintiff in or against other defendants in the same suit, or against both, touching the matters in question in the original bill. It is a bill brought by a defendant against a plaintiff, or other parties in a former bill depending, touching the matter in question in that bill. It is usually brought either to obtain a necessary discovery of facts in aid of the defense to the original bill, or to obtain full relief to all parties in reference to the matters of the original bill. It is to be treated as a mere auxiliary suit. A species of pleading, used for the purpose of obtaining a discovery necessary to the defense, or to obtain some relief founded on the collateral claims of the party defendant to the original suit. Such bill has been superseded by a cross-claim under Fed.R. Civil P. 13. Also, if a bill of exchange or promissory note be given in consideration of another bill or notice, it is called a "cross" or "counter" bill or note.

Supplemental bill. A bill to bring before the court matters arising after the filing of the original bill or not then known to complainant. The function of this bill has been replaced by supplemental pleadings permitted under Fed.R. Civil P. 15. See Bill in nature of a supplemental bill, above.

Legislation. The draft of a proposed law from the time of its introduction in a legislative body through all the various stages in both houses. Once introduced, a federal bill may be considered in any session of a Congress, but it dies at the end of a session, and it must be reintroduced as a new bill if a succeeding Congress is to consider it. The form of a proposed law before it is enacted into law by vote of the legislative body. An "Act" is the appropriate term for it after it has been acted on by, and passed by, the legislature. See also Marking up; Omnibus bill.

Appropriations bill. Bill covering raising and expenditure of public funds. Federal appropriations bills must originate in the House of Representatives. Art. I, Sec. 7, U.S. Const. See also Appropriation bill.

Authorization bill. Bill authorizing expenditure of public funds.

Clean bill. Bill coming out of legislative committee in amended or redrafted form, making it essentially a new bill.

Engrossed bill. Bill in final form, ready to be voted on by legislature.

Enrolled bill. Bill that has been passed and forwarded to President or Governor for signature or veto.

Private bill. One dealing only with a matter of private personal or local interest. All legislative bills which have for their object some particular or private interest are so termed, as distinguished from such as are for the benefit of the whole community, which are termed "public bills."

Maritime law.

Bill of adventure. A written certificate by a merchant or the master or owner of a ship, to the effect that the property and risk in goods shipped on the vessel in his own name belong to another person, to whom he is accountable for the proceeds alone.

Bill of entry. Detailed statement by the importer of the nature and value of goods entered at the customhouse. Form filled out by importer for use of customs officer; describes goods, their value, etc. Permits goods to be unloaded from ship.

Bill of health. An official certificate, given by the authorities of a port from which a vessel clears, to the master of the ship, showing the state of the port, as respects the public health, at the time of sailing, and exhibited to the authorities of the port which the vessel next makes, in token that she does not bring disease. If the bill alleges that no contagious or infectious disease existed, it is called a "clean" bill; if it admits that one was suspected or anticipated, or that one actually prevailed, it is called a "touched" or a "foul" bill.

Bill of sight. Customhouse document, allowing a cosignee to see the goods before paying duties.

Billa /bilə/. L. Lat. A bill; an original bill.

Billa cassetur, or quod billa cassetur /('kwòd) bilə kəsiytər/. (That the bill be quashed.) The form of the judgment rendered for a defendant on a plea in abatement, where the proceeding is by bill; that is, where the suit is commenced by capias, and not by original writ.

Bill of address. See Address.

Bill of attainder. See Attainder; Bill (Criminal law).

Bill of indemnity. A law under which a public official is protected from liability in performance of his official acts including his failure to take his official oath. An initial pleading by which the plaintiff seeks to require another (e.g., insurance company) to discharge his liability to a third person.

In English law, an act of parliament, passed every session until 1869, but discontinued in and after that year, as having been rendered unnecessary by the passing of the promissory oaths act, 1868, for the relief of those who had unwittingly or unavoidably neglected to take the necessary oaths, etc., required for the purpose of qualifying them to hold their respective offices.

Bill of lading. Document evidencing receipt of goods for shipment issued by person engaged in business of transporting or forwarding goods and it includes airbill. U.C.C. § 1-201(6). An instrument in writing, signed by a carrier or his agent, describing the freight so as to identify it, stating the name of the consignor, the terms of the contract for carriage, and agreeing or directing that the freight be delivered to the order or assigns of a specified person at a specified place. It is receipt for goods, contract for their carriage, and is documentary evidence of title to goods. Schwab v. Erie R. Co., 161 Misc. 743, 293 N.Y.S. 842, 846.

Bills in a set. A series of bills of lading each bearing a number and providing that a certain bill is valid only if goods have not been delivered against another bill. U.C.C. § 7-304.

Clean bill. One which contains nothing in the margin qualifying the words of the bill of lading itself. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Sav. Ass'n v. Liberty Nat. Bank & Trust Co. of Oklahoma City, D.C.Okla., 116 F.Supp. 233, 238, 239.

Common law. In common law, the written evidence of a contract for the carriage and delivery of goods sent by sea for a certain freight. A written memorandum, given by the person in command of a merchant vessel, acknowledging the receipt on board the ship of certain specified goods, in good order or "apparent good order," which he undertakes, in consideration of the payment of freight, to deliver in like good order (dangers of the sea excepted) at a designated place to the consignee therein named or to his assigns.

Foul bill. Bill of lading containing notation that goods received by carrier were defective.

Negotiable bill. One which by its terms calls for goods to be delivered to bearer or to order of named persons, or where recognized in overseas trade, if it runs to named persons or assigns. U.C.C. § 7-104(1)(a)(b).

Non-negotiable bill. Document of title in which goods are consigned to named persons. U.C.C. § 7-104(2).

Ocean bill. A negotiable bill of lading used in shipment by water.

On board bill. Bill of lading which shows that loading has been completed.

Order bill. One in which it is stated that goods are consigned to order of any person named therein. See Negotiable bill, above; also, Order bill of lading.

Overseas bill. Where the contract contemplates overseas shipment and contains a term C.I.F. or C. & F. or F.O.B. vessel, the seller unless otherwise agreed must obtain a negotiable bill of lading stating that the goods have been loaded on board or, in the case of a term C.I.F. or C. & F., received for shipment. U.C.C. § 2-323(1).

Straight bill. A nonnegotiable bill of lading that specifies a consignee to whom the goods are to be delivered—the carrier is contractually obligated to deliver the goods to that person only.

Through bill. One by which a railroad contracts to transport over its own line for a certain distance carloads of merchandise or stock, there to deliver the same to its connecting lines to be transported to the place of destination at a fixed rate per carload for the whole distance. Embodies undertaking to be performed in part by persons acting as agents for issuer. U.C.C. § 7-302.

Bill of lading acts. The principal acts governing bills of lading are Article 7 of the Uniform Commercial Code, the Federal Bills of Lading Act (49 U.S.C.A. §§ 81-124), and the Carmack Amendment to the Interstate Commerce Act (49 U.S.C.A. § 20(11)). See also Harter Act.

Bill of mortality. A written statement or account of the number of deaths which have occurred in a certain district within a given time.

Bill of pains and penalties. Statutory provision for punishment without judicial determination of guilt similar to bill of attainder except that punishment is less severe. Prohibited by U.S.Const., Art. I, § 9, cl. 3 (Congress), § 10 (States).

Bill of rights. First ten Amendments to U.S. Constitution providing for individual rights, freedoms, and protections (see Appendix, infra). See also Bill; Patient's Bill of Rights.

Bind. To obligate; to bring or place under definite duties or legal obligations, particularly by a bond or covenant. To affect one in a constraining or compulsory manner with a contract or a judgment. So long as a contract, an adjudication, or a legal relation remains in force and virtue, and continues to impose duties or obligations, it is said to be "binding." A man is bound by his contract or promise, by a judgment or decree against him, by his bond or covenant, by an estoppel, etc.

Binder. A written memorandum of the important terms of contract of insurance which gives temporary protection to insured pending investigation of risk by insurance company or until a formal policy is issued. Turner v. Worth Ins. Co., 106 Ariz. 132, 472 P.2d 1, 2. A receipt for earnest money or a deposit paid to secure the right to purchase real estate at terms that have been agreed upon by both buyer and seller. See also Binding receipt; Cover note.

Binding agreement. A contract which is enforceable such as an offer to buy or sell when person to whom it is made accepts it and communicates his acceptance. McAden v. Craig, 222 N.C. 497, 24 S.E.2d 1, 3. See Contract.

Binding authority. Sources of law that must be taken into account by a judge in deciding a case; for example, statutes or decisions by a higher court of the same state on point. See Precedent.

Binding jury instruction. One in which jury is told that if they find certain conditions to be true, they should find for plaintiff or defendant, as case might be. Scott-Burr Stores Corporation v. Foster, 197 Ark. 232, 122 S.W.2d 165, 169. See Jury instructions (Mandatory instruction).

Binding over. The act by which a court or magistrate requires a person to enter into a recognizance or furnish bail to appear for trial, to keep the peace, to attend as a witness, etc. Also describes act of lower court in transferring case to higher court or to grand jury after a finding of probable cause to believe that defendant committed crime.

Binding receipt or slip. Term refers to a limited acceptance of an application for insurance given by an authorized agent pending the ascertainment of the company's willingness to assume the burden of the proposed risk, the effect of which is to protect the applicant until the company acts upon the application, and, if it declines to accept the burden, the binding effect of the slip ceases eo instante. See Binder.

Bind out. To place one under a legal obligation to serve another; as to bind out an apprentice.

Bind over. See Binding over.

Bishop's court. In English law, an ecclesiastical court, held in the cathedral of each diocese, the judge whereof is the bishop's chancellor, who judges by the civil canon law; and, if the diocese be large, he has his commissaries in remote parts, who hold consistory courts, for matters limited to them by their commission.

Bis idem exigi bona fides non patitur; et in satisfactionibus non permittitur amplius fieri quam semel factum est /bis áydam égzəjay bównə fáydiz nòn páetətər; èt in sätəsfækshiyównəbəs nòn pəritətər əmpliyəs fáyrəy kwəm séməl fáktəm èst/. Good faith does not suffer the same thing to be demanded twice; and in making satisfaction [for a debt or demand] it is not allowed to be done more than once.

Bissextile /bäysékstəyl/. The day which is added every fourth year (leap-year) to the month of February, in order to make the year agree with the course of the sun.

Biting rule. When first taker of conveyed property under writing submitted for construction is initially conveyed a fee title, it is then incompetent and invalid to modify, qualify, or reduce thereafter the apparent fee title of the first taker so as to reduce it to a life estate, and any gift over after death of first taker is void.

Bivens action. Name for type of action (derived from Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Defendants, 403 U.S. 388, 91 S.Ct. 1999) for damages to vindicate constitutional right when federal government official has violated such right. Action is available if no equally effective remedy is available, no explicit congressional declaration precludes recovery, and no "special factors counsel hesitation." Rauschenberg v. Williamson, C.A.Ga., 785 F.2d 985, 987.

Black acre and white acre. Fictitious names used by the old writers to distinguish one parcel of land from another, to avoid ambiguity, as well as the inconvenience of a fuller description.

Black Act. The English statute 9 Geo. I, c. 22, so called because it was occasioned by the outrages committed by persons with their faces blacked or otherwise disguised, who appeared in Epping Forest, near Waltham, in Essex, and destroyed the deer there, and committed other offenses. Repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. IV, c. 27.

Black Book of the Admiralty. An English book of the highest authority in admiralty matters, generally supposed to have been compiled during the reign of Edward III. with additions of a later date. It contains the laws of Oleron, a view of crimes and offenses cognizable in the admiralty, and many other matters.

Black Book of the Exchequer. The name of an ancient book kept in the English exchequer, containing a collection of treaties, conventions, charters, etc.

Blacklist. A list of persons marked out for special avoidance, antagonism, or enmity on the part of those who prepare the list or those among whom it is intended to circulate; as where a trades-union "blacklists" workmen who refuse to conform to its rules, or where a list of insolvent or untrustworthy persons is published by a commercial agency or mercantile association. Such practices are prohibited by statute in most states.

Black Lung Benefits Act. Federal statute benefitting coal miners who are stricken with pneumoconiosis, a chronic dust disease of the lung. 30 U.S.C.A. § 902. Benefits under the Act are administered by the Department of Labor.

Blackmail. Unlawful demand of money or property under threat to do bodily harm, to injure property, to accuse of crime, or to expose disgraceful defects. This crime is commonly included under extortion or criminal coercion statutes. See Model Penal Code § 212.5. See also Extortion; Shakedown.

In one of its original meanings, this term denoted a tribute paid by English dwellers along the Scottish border to influential chieftains of Scotland, as a condition of securing immunity from raids of marauders and border thieves. Also, rents payable in cattle, grain, work, and the like. Such rents were called "blackmail" (reditus nigri), in distinction from white rents (blanche firmes), which were rents paid in silver. See Black rents.

Black maria. A closed vehicle or van in which prisoners are carried to and from the jail, or between the court and the jail.

Black market. Illegal trading; buying and selling goods which are subject to government rationing or control, including goods which are contraband. See also Gray market goods.

Black Muslim. An organization of American Negroes, founded in Detroit in 1930 by an American Negro calling himself Mohammad Elijah. To the traditional Koran the founders added the doctrine of Black Supremacy and proclaimed the desirability of maintaining (or regaining) the purity of the black race.

Black rents. In old English law, rents reserved in work, grain, provisions, or baser money than silver, in contradistinction to those which were reserved in white money or silver, which were termed "white rents" (reditus albi), or blanch farms. See Blackmail.

Black-Rod, Gentleman Usher of. In England, the title of a chief officer of the king, deriving his name from the Black Rod of office, on the top of which reposes a golden lion, which he carries. During the session of Parliament he attends on the peers, summons the Commons to the House of Lords; and to his custody all peers impeached for any crime or contempt are first committed.

Black ward. A subvassal, who held ward of the king's vassal.

Blada /bléydə/. In old English law, growing crops of grain of any kind; all manner of annual grain; harvested grain.

Bladarius /blədériyəs/. In old English law, a cornmonger; meal-man or corn-chandler; a bladier, or engrosser of corn or grain.

Blanche firme. White rent; a rent reserved, payable in silver.

Blanc sign. In Louisiana, a paper signed at the bottom by him who intends to bind himself, give acquittance, or compromise, at the discretion of the person whom he intrusts with such blanc sign, giving him power to fill it with what he may think proper, according to agreement.

Blank. A space left unfilled in a written document, in which one or more words or marks are to be inserted to complete the sense. Also a skeleton or printed form for any legal document, in which the necessary and invariable words are printed in their proper order, with blank spaces left for the insertion of such names, dates, figures, additional clauses, etc., as may be necessary to adapt the instrument to the particular case and to the design of the party using it.

Blank acceptance. An acceptance of a bill of exchange written on the paper before the bill is made, and delivered by the acceptor.

Blank bar. Also called the "common bar." The name of a plea in bar which in an action of trespass was put in to oblige the plaintiff to assign the certain place where the trespass was committed. It was most in practice in the common bench.

A single warrant authorizing the search of more than one area or the seizure of everything found at a given location without specific authorization in the warrant, the latter being in violation of the requirements of the Fourth Amendment to U.S. Const. Marcus v. Search Warrants etc., 367 U.S. 717, 81 S.Ct. 1708, 6 L.Ed.2d 1127.

Blank indorsement. The indorsement of a bill of exchange or promissory note, by merely writing the name of the indorser, without mentioning any person to whom the bill or note is to be paid; called "blank," because a blank or space is left over it for the insertion of the name of the indorsee, or of any subsequent holder. Otherwise called an indorsement "in blank." Such indorsement causes an instrument, otherwise payable to order, to become payable to bearer and negotiable by delivery alone. U.C.C. § 3-204(2). With respect to a document of title, the signature of a person to whom the document runs in which the signer specifies no particular person to whom the goods should be delivered. See U.C.C. § 7-501(1).

Blanks. A kind of white money (value 8d.), coined by Henry V in those parts of France which were then subject to England; forbidden to be current in that realm by 2 Hen. VI, c. 9.

Blank shares. "Series shares" which may vary in the relative rights and preferences as between different series but which may be fixed in articles of incorporation.

Blasphemy /blæsfəmi/. Any oral or written reproach maliciously cast upon God, His name, attributes, or religion. In general, blasphemy may be described as consisting in speaking evil of the Deity with an impious purpose to derogate from the divine majesty, and to alienate the minds of others from the love and reverence of God. It is purposely using words concerning God calculated and designed to impair and destroy the reverence, respect, and confidence due to Him as the intelligent creator, governor, and judge of the world. It embraces the idea of detraction, when used towards the Supreme Being, as "calumny" usually carries the same idea when applied to an individual. It is a willful and malicious attempt to lessen men's reverence of God by denying His existence, or His attributes as an intelligent creator, governor, and judge of men, and to prevent their having confidence in Him as such. While blasphemy statutes still exist in certain states, such seldom, if ever, are enforced.

In English law, blasphemy is the offense of speaking matter relating to God, Jesus Christ, the Bible, or the Book of Common Prayer, intended to wound the feelings of mankind or to excite contempt and hatred against the church by law established, or to promote immorality.

Blended fund. In England, where a testator directs his real and personal estate to be sold, and disposes of the proceeds as forming one aggregate, this is called a "blended fund."

Blended price. As applied to milk, a price paid to producers based upon a pool average weighted by the volume of milk disposed of, according to different types of utilization. Queensboro Farm Products v. State, 175 Misc. 574, 24 N.Y.S.2d 413, 417.

Blind alley. Literally, a way from which exit is possible only by retracing the path of entry; a dead end; fig., a no-win position, a dilemma.

Blind corner. Used to describe the configuration of buildings or other structures which prevent a driver approaching an intersection from being able to observe traffic coming in the direction of the intersecting way.

Blindcraft. A natural descriptive term identifying in a broad sense work of the blind, conveying the idea of the blind performing deftly at any of the various skills or trades to which their talents are applied or leaving the suggestion of dexterity and skill of the blind as well as their handiwork itself. San Francisco Ass'n for Blind v. Industrial Aid for Blind, D.C.Mo., 58 F.Supp. 995, 1001.

Blindness. Condition of one who is without sight either wholly or partially. Degrees are recognized for purpose of workers' compensation and social security benefits.

Blind selling. Selling goods without giving buyer opportunity to examine such.

Blind tiger. A place where intoxicants are sold on the sly, and contrary to the law. A "tippling-house."

Blind trust. See Trust.

Block. A square or portion of a city or town inclosed by streets, whether partially or wholly occupied by buildings or containing only vacant lots. Also used synonymously with "square." The platted portion of a city surrounded by streets. The term need not, however, be limited to blocks platted as such, but may mean an area bounded on all sides by streets or avenues. St. Louis-San Francisco R. Co. v. City of Tulsa, Okl., C.C.A.Okla., 15 F.2d 960, 963. It must be surrounded on at least three sides by streets, which must be marked on the ground, and not simply indicated as such on a plat. See also Lot.

Large amount of stock or bonds sold as a unit in a single trade.

Blockade. Action taken against enemy nation so as to isolate, obstruct and prevent communications, commerce, supplies, and persons from entering into or leaving such nation. Such blockades may be by sea, or land, or both.

Blockage. Recognition in the field of taxation of fact that in some instances a large block of stock cannot be marketed and turned into cash as readily as a few shares. Citizens Fidelity Bank & Trust Co. v. Reeves, Ky., 259 S.W.2d 432, 433. The discount at which a large block of stock sells below the price of a smaller block is blockage. It is generally a phenomenon of shares which do not represent the controlling interest in a corporation. See Blockage rule.

Blockage rule. Process of determining value of large blocks of corporate stock for gift and estate tax purposes, based on the postulate that a large block of stock cannot be marketed as readily and as advantageously in price as can a few shares. Montclair Trust Co. v. Zink, Prerog., 141 N.J.Eq. 401, 57 A.2d 372, 376, 380. Application of this rule generally justifies a discount in the fair market value since the disposition of a large amount of stock at any one time may well depress the value of such shares in the market place.

Block-booking. The practice of licensing or offering for license one motion picture feature or group of features on condition that exhibitor will also license another feature or group of features released by distributor during a given period. U. S. v. Paramount Pictures, N. Y., 334 U.S. 131, 68 S.Ct. 915, 928, 92 L.Ed. 1260.

Investment securities. A purchaser for value in good faith and without notice of any adverse claim who takes delivery of a security in bearer form or of one in registered form issued to him or indorsed to him or in blank. U.C.C. § 8-302.

Bona fide residence. Residence with domiciliary intent, i.e., a home in which the party actually lives. Alburger v. Alburger, 138 Pa.Super. 339, 10 A.2d 888, 890.

Bona fide sale. A completed transaction in which seller makes sale in good faith, for a valuable consideration without notice of any reason against the sale.

Bona fides exigit ut quod convenit fiat /bównə fáydiy əgzəjt ət kwód kəvɪnət fáyt/. Good faith demands that what is agreed upon shall be done.

Bona fides non patitur ut bis idem exigatur /bównə fáydiy nòn péytətər ət bɪs áydəm əgzəgéytær/. Good faith does not allow us to demand twice the payment of the same thing.

Bona notabilia /bównə nɔwtəbɪliyə/. Lat. Notable goods. Goods which must be accounted for in estate of decedent. Neal v. Boykin, 132 Ga. 400, 64 S.E. 480, 482. Includes almost every kind of property, tangible and intangible, if it has appreciable value. In re Rowley's Estate, 178 Wash. 460, 35 P.2d 34.

Bona vacantia /bównə vəkəns(i)yə/. Lat. Vacant goods; unclaimed property. Generally, personal property which escheats to state because no owner, heir or next of kin claims it. Now includes real as well as personal property and passes to state as an incident of sovereignty. Boswell v. Citronelle-Mobile Gathering Inc., 292 Ala. 344, 294 So.2d 428, 432.

Bond. A certificate or evidence of a debt on which the issuing company or governmental body promises to pay the bondholders a specified amount of interest for a specified length of time, and to repay the loan on the expiration date. A long-term debt instrument that promises to pay the lender a series of periodic interest payments in addition to returning the principal at maturity. In every case a bond represents debt—its holder is a creditor of the corporation and not a part owner as is the shareholder. Commonly, bonds are secured by a mortgage.

The word "bond" is sometimes used more broadly to refer also to unsecured debt instruments, i.e., debentures. Income bonds are hybrid instruments that take the form of a bond, but the interest obligation is limited or tied to the corporate earnings for the year. Participating bonds are another type of hybrid instruments that take the form of a typical debt instrument but the interest obligation is not fixed so that holders are entitled to receive additional amounts from excess earnings or from excess distributions, depending on the terms of the participating bond.

A written obligation, made by owner of real property, to repay a loan under specific terms, usually accompanied by a mortgage placed on land as security.

See also Debenture.

Specific types of bonds as relating to finance, surety, guaranty, appeals, performance, etc. are set forth below:

Adjustment bond. Bonds issued upon reorganization of corporation.

Annuity bond. See Annuity (Annuity bond).

Appeal bond. Bond required to cover costs of appeal in civil cases. See e.g. Fed.R.App.P. 7.

Appearance bond. Type of bail bond required to insure presence of defendant in criminal case. See Bail (Bail bond).

Arbitrage bond. Bond posted to secure performance of arbitrage agreement; a bond which is the subject of arbitrage. See Arbitrage.

Attachment bond. See that title.

Bail bond. See Bail (Bail bond).

Bearer bond. See that title.

Bid bond. See that title.

Blanket bond. See that title.

Bond and mortgage. A species of security, consisting of a bond conditioned for the repayment of a loan of money, and a mortgage of realty to secure the performance of the stipulations of the bond.

Bond coupon. Part of bond which is cut and surrendered for payment of one of successive payments of interest. See Coupon bond, below.

Bond creditor. A creditor whose debt is secured by a bond.

Bond discount. The difference between the face amount or obligation of the bond and the current market price of such bond, if selling price is lower than market price. Claussen's Inc. v. U. S., C.A.Ga., 469 F.2d 340, 345.

Bond dividend. See Dividend.

Bond for deed. See Bond for title, below.

Bond for title. An agreement to make title in the future on an executory or incomplete sale. Ingram v. Smith, 62 Ga.App. 335, 7 S.E.2d 922, 926. It is not a conveyance of legal title but only a contract to convey and may ripen into an equitable title upon payment of the consideration.

Bond issue. The totality of bonds issued at a given time (for sale to investors). Delivery of instruments as covered by term. Vans Agnew v. Fort Myers Drainage Dist., C.C.A.Fla., 69 F.2d 244, 245.

Bond of state or local government. See Municipal bond, below.

Bond premium. The difference between the face amount or obligation of the bond and the selling price of such bond if the selling price is greater than the face amount.

Bottomry bond. Bond secured by mortgage of ships.

Callable bond. See Callable bonds.

Chattel mortgage bond. Bonds secured by mortgage on chattels of business.

Closed-end mortgage bond. Debt security with provisions which prohibit the firm from issuing additional bonds with the priority of claim against assets.

Collateral trust bond. A bond secured by collateral deposited with a trustee. The collateral is often the stocks or bonds of companies controlled by the issuing company but may be other securities.

Type of chattel mortgages that are normally secured by common stock and/or bonds issued by subsidiaries of the issuing firm.

Common defeasance bond. One in which the obligor agrees to pay a stipulated amount called a penalty, subject to a condition of defeasance that voids the covenant to pay the specified amount if the condition occurs, and the only covenant or promise to pay by the obligor in such bond is to pay the penalty if the condition is not fulfilled; also known as penalty bond. United Mail Order, Warehouse & Retail Emp. Union, Local 20 v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 9 Ill.2d 101, 137 N.E.2d 47, 51.

Common law bond. That which provides coverage in excess of the minimum statutory requirements with respect to a public works project. Florida Keys Community College v. Insurance Co. of North America, Fla.App. 3 Dist., 456 So.2d 1250, 1251. See Performance bond, below.

Completion bond. A form of surety or guaranty agreement which contains the promise of a third party, usually a bonding company, to complete or pay for the cost of completion of a construction contract if the construction contractor defaults. Bond given to insure public authority that contract once awarded will be completed as awarded within fixed period of time. Extruded Louver Corp. v. McNulty, 34 Misc.2d 566, 226 N.Y.S.2d 220, 224. See Common law bond; Contract bond; Performance bond; also, Miller Act.

Consolidated bond. Bond which is sufficiently large in face amount to retire two or more outstanding issues of bonds or securities.

Contract bond. A guarantee of the faithful performance of a construction contract and the payment of all material and labor costs incident thereto. A contract bond covering faithful performance is known as a "performance bond," and one covering payment of labor and materials, a "payment bond." See also Completion bond above; Performance bond, below.

Convertible bond. Bond that can, at the option of the holder, be converted into (i.e. exchanged for) stock.

Corporate bonds. See that title.

Cost bond. See Appeal bond, above.

County bonds. See that title.

Coupon bond. Bond with interest coupons attached. The coupons are clipped as they come due and are presented by the holder for payment of interest.

Debenture bond. Bonds secured by general credit of government or corporation rather than by any specific property; i.e. bond which is not secured with collateral.

Deferred bonds. See that title.

Discharging bond. Same as a delivery bond except that not only does it permit defendant to regain possession of attached property, it also effects a release of the property from the lien of attachment. Another name for this bond is "dissolution bond."

Discount bond. See Bond discount.

Executor's bond. A bond that an executor of an estate must furnish in order to serve as the administrator of an estate.

Fidelity bond. Bond covering employer-business for loss due to embezzlement, larceny, or gross negligence by employees.

Fiduciary bond. See Fiduciary.

First mortgage bond. Long-term security that has first claim on specified assets.

Foreign bond. An international bond which is denominated in the currency of the country in which it is issued.

General average bond. See that title.

General mortgage bond. A bond which is secured by a blanket mortgage on the company's property, but which may be subordinate to one or more other mortgages.

General obligation bond. A bond secured by the "full faith and credit" of the issuing government and backed by revenues from its taxing power.

Gold bond. Formerly, bond containing a clause which required payment of the bonded indebtedness in gold; such clause has since been prohibited. Norman v. Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co., 294 U.S. 240, 55 S.Ct. 407, 79 L.Ed. 885. Now bonds are dischargeable by payment in legal tender or money.

Government bond. Evidence of indebtedness issued by the government to finance its operations. Such bonds are backed solely by the credit of the government.

Guaranteed bond. A bond which has interest or principal, or both, guaranteed by a company other than the issuer.

Guaranty bond. Type of bond which combines the features of both the fidelity and surety bond and which is given to secure payment and performance.

Improvement bond. Type of bonds issued by a city, town or special authority to finance improvements within the district, with payment to be made only from the improvement fund.

Income bond. Bonds on which interest is payable only when earned and after payment of interest upon prior mortgages. In some cases unpaid interest on an income bond may accumulate as a claim against the corporation when the bond becomes due. An income bond may also be issued in lieu of preferred stock.

Indemnity bond. See that title.

Indeterminate bond. Callable bond with no set maturity date.

Industrial development bonds. Such bonds are issued by a municipality as a means of attracting private businesses. The bonds are marketed by the municipality and the proceeds used to build the private business facility. Commonly, the business leases the facility from the municipality for a total rent equal to the amount necessary to pay the interest and amortize the principal on the bonds.

Industrial revenue bonds. A specific type of revenue bond whose proceeds are used to finance the purchase or construction of facilities or equipment to be leased to a private corporation. The bonds are backed by the credit of the corporation.

Interest bond. Bond paid in lieu of interest due on other bonds.

Investment grade bonds. Any bond with a rating of BBB or better by the leading bond rating services.

Joint and several bond. A bond the principal and interest of which is guaranteed by two or more persons.

Joint bond. Bond executed by two or more obligors who must be joined in any action on such, as opposed to joint and several bond, on which any or all of obligors may be sued at the option of the obligee.

Judicial bonds. See that title.

Junior bond. Bonds which are subordinate in priority, in principal or interest to another issue.

Junk bond. High yield, high risk bonds of two types: those which were investment-grade when originally issued, but which have subsequently been downgraded and those originally issued as low-grade bonds. The latter group includes bonds issued by low-rated companies to finance operations as well as those issued in connection with corporate takeovers.

Leasehold mortgage bond. A bond secured by a building constructed on leased real estate. This bond is subject to the compliance by the lessee (who issues the bond) with the terms of the lease; upon default in the terms of the lease the lessor of the leased real estate has priority over the holders of the leasehold bonds.

Liability bond. One which is intended to protect the assured from liability for damages or to protect the persons damaged by injuries occasioned by the assured as specified, when such liability should accrue, and be imposed by law, as by a court, as distinguished from an indemnity bond, whose purpose is only to indemnify the assured against actual loss by way of reimbursement for moneys paid or which must be paid.

License bond. The term "License Bond" is used interchangeably with "Permit Bond" to describe bonds required by state law, municipal ordinance, or by regulation as a condition precedent to the granting of a license to engage in a specified business or the grant of a permit to exercise a certain privilege.

Such bonds provide payment to the obligee for the loss or damage resulting from the operations permitted by law, ordinance or regulation, under which the bond is required and for violations by the licensee of the duties and obligations imposed upon him.

Maintenance bond. Bond guaranteeing against defects in workmanship or materials for period of time following completion of work contracted for.

Mortgage bond. A bond secured by a mortgage on a property. The value of the property may or may not equal the value of the so-called mortgage bonds issued against it. See also Leasehold mortgage bond, above.

Municipal bond. A bond issued by a state or a political subdivision, such as county, city, town or village. The term also designates bonds issued by state agencies and authorities. In general, interest paid on municipal bonds is exempt from federal income taxes and state and local income taxes within the state of issue. See also Industrial development bonds; Industrial revenue bonds, above.

Noncallable bond. Bonds which are neither refundable nor redeemable. Lucas v. Florida Power & Light Co., C.A.Fla., 765 F.2d 1039, 1041. Bonds that cannot be redeemed at the option of the issuer.

Obligation bond. Device used by states and municipalities to obtain funds to support projects. City of Spokane v. Taxpayers of City of Spokane et al., 111 Wash.2d 91, 758 P.2d 480, 484. The sale of general obligation bonds is the commitment of the state to a debtor relationship with those who purchase the bonds. Thomas v. Rosen, Alaska, 569 P.2d 793, 796. See General obligation bond, above.

Official bond. A bond given by a public officer, conditioned that he shall well and faithfully perform all the duties of the office. The term is sometimes made to include the bonds of executors, guardians, trustees, etc.

Passive bond. Bond which bears no interest.

Payment bond. See Miller Act.

Peace bond. See that title.

Penal bond. See that title.

Performance bond. Type of contract bond which protects against loss due to the inability or refusal of a contractor to perform his contract. Such are normally required on public construction projects. See Common law bond; Completion bond; Contract bond, above; also, Miller Act.

Perpetual bond. A bond that has no maturity date.

Personal bond. A written document in which the obligor formally recognizes an obligation to pay money or to do a specific act; e.g. surrender a lost bank book when it is found.

Premium bond. Bond with selling price above face or redemption value. See, also, Bond premium, above.

Put bond. Bond that gives holder right to redeem at specified times before maturity for full face value.

Railroad aid bonds. Bonds issued by municipal corporations to aid in the construction of railways.

Redeemable bond. See that title.

Redelivery bond. A statutory bond given by a person in whose possession attached property is found in order to regain possession of the property.

Refunding bond. See that title.

Registered bond. A bond which is registered on the books of the issuing company in the name of the owner. It can be transferred only when endorsed by the registered owner.

Removal bond. See that title.

Replevin bond. Replevin (Replevin bond).

Revenue bond. Bonds issued by a public agency, municipal corporation, or state for purpose of raising revenue. Debt securities issued by municipalities in which the payments must be generated by the project supported by the proceeds from the bonds issued. (e.g. earnings of municipal sports complex.)

School bonds. Bonds issued by a city, town or school district for purpose of school construction.

Serial bond. Bond issue consisting of a number of bonds with different maturity dates. Bonds are issued at the same time as distinguished from series bonds which are issued at different times.

Series bonds. Groups of bonds normally issued at different times but under same indenture.

Silver bond. Bonds which require payment in silver; not used in U.S. since payment may be made in legal tender.

Simple bond. At common law, a bond without penalty; a bond for the payment of a definite sum of money to a named obligee on demand or on a day certain.

Single bond. A deed whereby the obligor obliges himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, to pay a certain sum of money to the obligee at a day named, without terms of defeasance.

Special tax or assessment bonds. Bonds secured by special levies on taxpayers, usually those in the area immediately benefiting from the project or improvement.

State bond. Bond issued by state, obligating state to make payment.

Straw bond. A bond upon which is used either the names of fictitious persons or those unable to pay the sum guaranteed; generally applied to insufficient bail bonds, improperly taken.

Submission bond. See that title.

Subordinated bonds or debentures. See that title.

Supersedeas bond. See that title.

Suretyship bond. A contractual arrangement between the surety, the principal and the obligee whereby the surety agrees to protect the obligee if the principal defaults in performing the principal's contractual obligations. The bond is the instrument which binds the surety. See e.g., Bail (Bail bond).

Tax exempt bond. A bond, the receipt of income from which is not taxable, e.g. municipal bond (q.v.).

Treasury bonds. Bonds reacquired or unsold by corporation. Bonds issued by U.S. Treasury (e.g. U.S. Savings bonds). See also Treasury bond.

U.S. Savings bonds. An obligation of the United States designed to afford persons the opportunity to create savings by purchasing the bond at a reduced sum and requiring the purchaser to wait a period of time to redeem at face value.

Zero coupon bond. Treasury bond that has had the interest coupon clipped by the purchaser of the bond. This purchaser sells the remaining bond at a discount from its face value. The deep discount reflects the many years, usually fifteen to thirty, that remain until the bond may be redeemed at face value. The advantage of these long-term investments is the security afforded by United States Government backing. U.S. v. Parker, C.A.Fla., 839 F.2d 1473, 1475.

Bondage. Slavery; involuntary personal servitude; captivity. In old English law, villenage, villein tenure. Such is prohibited by 13th Amendment to U.S. Constitution.

Bond conversion. The act of exchanging convertible bonds for preferred or common stock.

Bond discount. Sale of bonds on the market at a price less than the face amount of such. Claussen's, Inc. v. U. S., C.A.Ga., 469 F.2d 340, 345.

From the standpoint of the issuer of a bond at the issue date, is the excess of the par value of a bond over its initial sales price; at later dates the excess of par over the sum of (initial) issue price plus the portion of discount already amortized. From the standpoint of a bondholder, is the difference between par value and selling price when the bond sells below par.

Bonded debt. The indebtedness of a business or government which is represented by bonds payable. Indebtedness lawfully contracted for governmental purposes, payable from taxes on all property within municipality.

Bonded warehouse. See Warehouse system.

Bondholders. Creditors of a business, whose evidence of debt is a bond issued by the business.

Bond indenture. The contract between an issuer of bonds and the bondholders. An instrument of secured indebtedness issued by a corporation. See Indenture.

Bond premium. The excess of the price of bonds over their face value, and generally reflects the difference between the nominal interest rate borne by such bonds and the actual or effective rate of return determined by the current market. Grace v. New York State Tax Commission, 37 N.Y.2d 193, 371 N.Y.S.2d 715, 332 N.E.2d 886.

Bond rating. System of evaluating, appraising and rating the investment value of individual bond issues (i.e. a bond's probability of default). Triple A (AAA) bonds have the highest rating. There are several major bond rating companies or services that make such evaluations.

Bond redemption. Retirement of bonds upon payment. See Redemption.

Bond refunding. A situation that occurs when a firm redeems a callable bond issue and sells a generally lower interest cost issue to take its place. A bond is refunded when a municipality or state calls in an existing bond, usually when interest rates have dropped, to replace it with lower-cost financing.

Bondsman. A surety; one who has entered into a bond to give surety for another; e.g., bail bondsman. See Bail (Bail bond).

Bond yield. See Yield.

Breach of the peace. A violation or disturbance of the public tranquillity and order. State v. Boles, 5 Conn. Cir. 22, 240 A.2d 920, 927. The offense of breaking or disturbing the public peace by any riotous, forcible, or unlawful proceeding. Breach of the peace is a generic term, and includes all violations of public peace or order and acts tending to a disturbance thereof. State v. Poinsett, 250 S.C. 293, 157 S.E.2d 570, 571, 572. One who commits a breach of the peace is guilty of disorderly conduct, but not all disorderly conduct is necessarily a "breach of the peace." City of Seattle v. Franklin, 191 Wash. 297, 70 P.2d 1049, 1051.

Term signifies disorderly, dangerous conduct disruptive of public peace. Great Atlantic & Pac. Tea Co. v. Paul, 256 Md. 643, 261 A.2d 731, 739.

See also Peace; Peace bond.

Breach of trust. Any act done by a trustee contrary to the terms of his trust, or in excess of his authority and to the detriment of the trust; or the wrongful omission by a trustee of any act required of him by the terms of the trust. Also the wrongful misappropriation by a trustee of any fund or property which had been lawfully committed to him in a fiduciary character. Every violation by a trustee of a duty which equity lays upon him, whether willful and fraudulent, or done through negligence, or arising through mere oversight and forgetfulness, is a "breach of trust." The term, therefore, includes every omission and commission in carrying out the trust according to its terms, of care and diligence in protecting and investing the trust property, and of using perfect good faith. A violation by the trustee of any duty which he owes to the beneficiary. Bruun v. Hanson, C.C.A.Idaho, 103 F.2d 685, 699.

Breach of trust with fraudulent intent. Larceny after trust. State v. Owings, 205 S.C. 314, 31 S.E.2d 906, 907.

Breach of warranty. In real property law and the law of insurance, the failure or falsehood of an affirmative promise or statement, or the nonperformance of an executory stipulation. As used in the law of sales, breach of warranty, unlike fraud, does not involve guilty knowledge, and rests on contract. Under Uniform Commercial Code consists of a violation of either an express or implied warranty relating to title, quality, content or condition of goods sold for which an action in contract will lie. U.C.C. § 2-312 et seq. See Warranty.

Breakage. Allowance given by manufacturer to buyer for breakage damage caused while in transit or storage. Also, fractional amounts (e.g. pennies) due either party as for example in computing interest on loan or deposits.

Breaking. Forcibly separating, parting, disintegrating, or piercing any solid substance. In the criminal law as to housebreaking and burglary, it means the tearing away or removal of any part of a house or of the locks, latches, or other fastenings intended to secure it, or otherwise exerting force to gain an entrance, with criminal intent; or violently or forcibly breaking out of a house, after having unlawfully entered it, in the attempt to escape. Actual "breaking" involves application of some force, though the slightest force is sufficient; e.g.

an actual "breaking" may be made by unloosening, removing or displacing any covering or fastening of the premises, such as lifting a latch, drawing a bolt, raising an unfastened window, or pushing open a door kept closed by its own weight. Sparkman v. State, 3 Md.App. 527, 240 A.2d 328, 331. Even the opening of a closed and unlocked door or window is sufficient to constitute a "breaking" within terms of statute, so long as it is done with a burglarious intent. State v. Sanderson, Mo.App., 528 S.W.2d 527, 531. See Burglary.

Breaking a case. The expression by the judges of a court, to one another, of their views of a case, in order to ascertain how far they are agreed, and as preliminary to the formal delivery of their opinions. Sometimes used by crime investigators to announce the solution of a crime with the apprehension of the principal suspect.

Breaking a close. Unlawful entry upon land of another (common law trespass).

Breaking and entry. Term used to describe the necessary elements of common law burglary which consisted of breaking and entering dwelling of another in nighttime with intent to commit a felony therein. Statutory forms of burglary consist in variations of the common law crime, e.g. entering without breaking with intent to commit misdemeanor. See Breaking; Burglary.

Breaking bail. Historically, crime committed by bailee who broke open a package (bale) though no crime was committed if he converted the whole package without breaking the bulk. See Breaking bulk.

Breaking bulk. The offense committed by a bailee (particularly a carrier) in opening or unpacking the chest, parcel, or case containing goods intrusted to his care, and removing the goods and converting them to his own use. See also Breaking bail.

Builder. One whose occupation is the building or erection of structures, the controlling and directing of construction, or the planning, constructing, remodeling and adapting to particular uses buildings and other structures. One who puts, or contracts to put, a structure into permanent form.

Building. Structure designed for habitation, shelter, storage, trade, manufacture, religion, business, education, and the like. A structure or edifice inclosing a space within its walls, and usually, but not necessarily, covered with a roof. Netter v. Scholtz, 282 Ky. 493, 138 S.W.2d 951, 953.

Building and loan association. An organization for the purpose of accumulating a fund by subscriptions and savings of its members to assist them in building or purchasing for themselves dwellings or real estate by the loan to them of the requisite money. Quasi public corporations chartered to encourage thrift and promote ownership of homes. Hopkins Federal Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Cleary, Wis., 296 U.S. 315, 56 S.Ct. 235, 237, 241, 80 L.Ed. 251. Such associations are not commercial banks, nor, in most states, are such classified as savings banks or savings institutions; though in many states such is a special type or variety of savings and loan association. See also Savings and loan association.

Building code. Laws, ordinances, or government regulations concerning fitness for habitation setting forth standards and requirements for the construction, maintenance, operation, occupancy, use or appearance of buildings, premises, and dwelling units. While many codes are local in nature and scope, many states have uniform codes which all local municipalities must adhere to. In addition, FHA financed real estate must meet certain building code requirements.

Building is covered. Phrase in a binder or contract of temporary insurance meaning that the property shall be insured in the standard form of insurance from that instant for a reasonable time until either the policy or policies can be written out, or their issuance approved or disapproved or some other temporary impediment to the complete formal contract of insurance can be removed. Shumway v. Home Fire & Marine Ins. Co. of California, 301 Mass. 391, 17 N.E.2d 212, 214.

Building lien. The statutory lien of a materialman or contractor for the erection of a building. See Mechanic's lien.

Building line. A line established by municipal authority, to secure uniformity of appearance in the streets of the city, drawn at a certain uniform distance from the curb or from the edge of the sidewalk, and parallel thereto, upon which the fronts of all buildings on that street must be placed, or beyond which they are not allowed to project. Often referred to as the "set-back" requirement.

Building loan agreement. An agreement by which one undertakes to advance to another money to be used primarily in erection of buildings. Such funds are normally used by the borrower to pay the contractor, subcontractors and materialmen; and such funds are commonly advanced in installments as the structure is completed. The lender's security is normally the structure being erected. Also called interim or construction financing. See Bridge loan.

Building permit. Authorization required by local governmental bodies for new building, or major alteration or expansion of existing structures. Building plans, estimated costs, etc., and a fee, are usually required before such is issued. Such permit is normally required to be displayed on the construction site.

Building restrictions. Regulations or restrictions (commonly in zoning ordinances) upon the type of structure that can be constructed on one's property. Such restrictions may also be created in the form of restrictive covenants in deeds. See Building code.

Building society. An association in which the subscriptions of the members form a capital stock or fund out of which advances may be made to members desiring them, on mortgage security. See Building and loan association.

Bul. In the ancient Hebrew chronology, the eighth month of the ecclesiastical, and the second of the civil year. It has since been called "Marshevan," and answers to our October.

Bulk. Unbroken packages. Merchandise which is neither counted, weighed, nor measured. The aggregate that forms a body or unit. When used in relation to sale of goods by sample, "bulk" means the whole quantity of goods sold, which is supposed to be fairly represented by the sample.

Bulk mortgage. A mortgage on property in bulk. May describe creation of security interest in several items as a whole or in bulk, or a mortgage of more than one parcel of real estate, though a bulk transfer is not a security interest subject to Art. 9 of U.C.C., § 9-111.

Bulk sale. Any transfer in bulk, and not in the ordinary course of the transferor's business, of a major part of the materials, supplies, merchandise or other inventory of an enterprise. U.C.C. § 6-102(1). Such transfers are regulated by U.C.C. Article 6 to protect creditors of the transferor. See Bulk Sales Acts, infra.

A sale of substantially all the inventory of a trade or business to one person in one transaction. Under certain conditions, corporations making a bulk sale pursuant to a complete liquidation will recognize neither gain nor loss on such sale. I.R.C. § 337(b)(2).

Bulk Sales Acts. A class of statutes designed to prevent the defrauding of creditors by secret sale in bulk of all or substantially all of a merchant's stock of goods. Individual state bulk sales acts have been superseded by Art. 6 of U.C.C., "Bulk Transfers".

Bulk transfers. See Bulk sale; Bulk Sales Acts, supra.

Bull. In ecclesiastical law, an instrument granted by the Pope of Rome, and sealed with a seal of lead, containing some decree, commandment, or other public act, emanating from the pontiff. Bull, in this sense, corresponds with edict or letters patent from other governments.

There are three kinds of apostolical rescripts—the brief, the signature, and the bull; which last is most commonly used in legal matters.

Also, the slang term for an investor who anticipates that the stock market will rise; as contrasted with a "bear" who believes it will fall.

Bulla /búlə/. A seal used by the Roman emperors, during the lower empire; it was of four kinds,—gold, silver, wax, and lead.

Bullet. Synonymous with "shot," meaning a projectile particularly a solid ball or bullet that is not intended to fit the bore of a piece.

Bulletin. An officially published notice or announcement concerning the progress of matters of public importance and interest. A brief news item of immediate publication. The publication (organ) of an institution or association.

Bulletin des lois /bulɛtɛn də lwá/. In France, the official sheet which publishes the laws and decrees; this publication constitutes the promulgation of the law or decree.

Bull-headed. Headstrong, obstinate, unreasonably stubborn.

Bullion. Gold and silver intended to be coined.

"Bullion" encompasses, at the very least, any solid mass of uncoined gold or silver whatever its shape so long as its shape does not enhance its value. U. S. Smelting Refining & Mining Co. v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., D.C.N.Y., 372 F.Supp. 489, 494.

Bullion fund. A fund of public money maintained in connection with the mints, for the purpose of purchasing precious metals for coinage, and also of enabling the mint to make returns of coins to private depositors of bullion without waiting until such bullion is actually coined.

Bull market. Securities term for a market in which prices are rising or are expected to rise.

Bull pen. A certain place of close confinement at a penitentiary.

Bum-bailiff. A person employed to dun one for a debt; a bailiff employed to arrest a debtor. Probably a vulgar corruption of "bound-bailiff" (q.v.).

Bumping. Displacement of a junior employee's position by a senior employee; commonly occurring during periods of layoff. The practice of failing to board ticketed passengers due to oversale of the scheduled flight. Mason v. Belieu, C.A.D.C., 543 F.2d 215, 219.

Bunco game /bɒŋkɔw ɡeɪm/. Any trick, artifice, or cunning calculated to win confidence and to deceive, whether by conversation, conduct, or suggestion. A swindling game or scheme.

Bunda /bɒndə/. In old English law, a bound, boundary, border, or limit (terminus, limes).

Bunkhouse rule. This rule means that an injury suffered while the employee is reasonably using the employer's housing is within the course of employment even if the injury occurs during off-duty hours. D.E.S. Youth Conservation Corps v. Industrial Commission of Arizona, App., 129 Ariz. 235, 630 P.2d 58, 60.

Buoy /búy/búwiy/. A floating object intended as a guide and warning to mariners, by marking a spot where the water is shallow, or where there is a reef or other danger to navigation, or to mark the course of a channel. Buoys are regulated by federal statutes.

Burden. Capacity for carrying cargo. Something that is carried. Something oppressive or worrisome. A burden, as on interstate commerce, means anything that imposes either a restrictive or onerous load upon such commerce.

Burden of going forward. The onus on a party to a case to refute or to explain as in the case of one who is charged with possession of stolen goods after the government has introduced evidence of the defendant's recent possession of such goods, the inference being that the defendant knew the goods to have been stolen. Barnes v. U. S., 412 U.S. 837, 846, n. 11, 93 S.Ct. 2357, 2363, 37 L.Ed.2d 380.

Burden of persuasion. The onus on the party with the burden of proof to convince the trier of fact of all elements of his case. In criminal case the burden of the government to produce evidence of all the necessary elements of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt. In re Winship, 397 U.S. 358, 364, 90 S.Ct. 1068, 1073, 25 L.Ed.2d 368. See also Burden of proof.

Burden of producing evidence. The obligation of a party to introduce evidence sufficient to avoid a ruling against him on the issue. Calif.Evid.Code. Such burden is met when one with the burden of proof has introduced sufficient evidence to make out a prima facie case, though the cogency of the evidence may fall short of convincing the trier of fact to find for him. The burden of introducing some evidence on all the required elements of the crime or tort or contract to avoid the direction of a verdict against the party with the burden of proof. Stuart v. D. N. Kelley & Son, 331 Mass. 76, 117 N.E.2d 160.

Burden of proof. (Lat. onus probandi) In the law of evidence, the necessity or duty of affirmatively proving a fact or facts in dispute on an issue raised between the parties in a cause. The obligation of a party to establish by evidence a requisite degree of belief concerning a fact in the mind of the trier of fact or the court.

Burden of proof is a term which describes two different concepts; first, the "burden of persuasion", which under traditional view never shifts from one party to the other at any stage of the proceeding, and second, the "burden of going forward with the evidence", which may shift back and forth between the parties as the trial progresses. Ambrose v. Wheatley, D.C.Del., 321 F.Supp. 1220, 1222.

The burden of proof may require a party to raise a reasonable doubt concerning the existence or nonexistence of a fact or that he establish the existence or nonexistence of a fact by a preponderance of the evidence, by clear and convincing proof, or by proof beyond a reasonable doubt. Except as otherwise provided by law, the burden of proof requires proof by a preponderance of the evidence. Calif.Evid.Code, § 115.

In a criminal case, all the elements of the crime must be proved by the government beyond a reasonable doubt.

In re Winship, 397 U.S. 358, 90 S.Ct. 1068, 25 L.Ed.2d 368.

Except in cases of tax fraud, the burden of proof in a tax case generally is on the taxpayer.

Term has been used to mean either the necessity of establishing a fact, that is, the burden of persuasion, or the necessity of making a prima facie showing, that is, the burden of going forward. State Farm Life Ins. Co. v. Smith, 29 Ill.App.3d 942, 331 N.E.2d 275, 278.

"Burden of establishing" a fact means the burden of persuading the triers of fact that the existence of the fact is more probable than its non-existence. U.C.C. § 1-201(8).

See also Beyond a reasonable doubt; Clear and convincing proof; Preponderance of evidence; Reasonable doubt; Shifting the burden of proof.

Bureau /byúrow/. An office for the transaction of business. A name given to the several departments of the executive or administrative branch of government, or their divisions. A specialized administrative unit. Business establishment for exchanging information, making contacts, coordinating activities, etc.

Bureaucracy /byurókrəsiy/. An organization, such as an administrative agency or the army, with the following general traits: a chain of command with fewer people at the top than at the bottom; well defined positions and responsibilities; fairly inflexible rules and procedures; "red tape"; many forms to be filled out; and delegation of authority downward from level to level.

Bureau of Customs. Federal agency charged with responsibility of collecting importing duties for the Government. It was redesignated as the United States Customs Service in 1973. See Customs Service.

Bureau of Land Management. The Bureau of Land Management was established July 16, 1946, by the consolidation of the General Land Office (created in 1812) and the Grazing Service (formed in 1934). The Bureau manages the national resource lands (some 450 million acres) and their resources. It also administers the mineral resources connected with acquired lands and the submerged lands of the Outer Continental Shelf (OCS). It is within the U.S. Dept. of Interior. See 35 U.S.C.A. § 1731 et seq.

Burford doctrine. Under "Burford Doctrine" of abstention, federal courts have refrained from interfering with complex state regulatory schemes. Clutchette v. Procunier, D.C.Cal., 328 F.Supp. 767, 772.

Burgage /bórgəj/. A name anciently given to a dwelling-house in a borough town.

Burgage-tenure. In English law, one of the three species of free socage holdings; a tenure whereby houses and lands which were formerly the site of houses, in an ancient borough, are held of some lord by a certain rent. There are a great many customs affecting these tenures, the most remarkable of which is the custom of Borough English. Such tenures have been abolished.

Burgator /bərgéytər/. One who breaks into houses or inclosed places, as distinguished from one who committed robbery in the open country.

Burbote /bərbòwt/. In old English law, a term applied to a contribution towards the repair of castles or walls of defense, or of a borough.

Burgenses /bərbənsiəz/. In old English law, inhabitants of a burgus or borough; burgesses.

Burgeristh /bərgərisθ/. A word used in Domesday, signifying a breach of the peace in a town.

Burgess /bərbəs/. In English law, an inhabitant or free-man of a borough or town; a person duly and legally admitted a member of a municipal corporation. A magistrate of a borough. An elector or voter; a person legally qualified to vote at elections. The word in this sense is particularly defined by the statute 5 & 6 Wm. IV, c. 76, §§ 9, 13. A representative of a borough or town, in parliament. The term now has no local government significance.

Burgess roll. A roll, required by the St. 5 & 6 Wm. IV, c. 76, to be kept in corporate towns or boroughs, of the names of burgesses entitled to certain new rights conferred by that act.

Burgh-breche /bərg-briəç/. A fine imposed on the community of a town, for a breach of the peace, etc.

Burgh English /bərg ɪŋgləʃ/. See Borough English.

Burgh Engloys /bərg ɪŋglɔɪz/. Borough English (q.v.).

Burghmote /bərgmòwt/. In Saxon law, a court of justice held semi-annually by the bishop or lord in a burg, which the thanes were bound to attend without summons.

Burglar. One who commits burglary.

Burglarious. Of, involving, or related to burglary. The adverb "burglariously" was formerly a pleading requirement in common law burglary indictments. Candler v. State, 266 Ind. 440, 363 N.E.2d 1233, 1237.

Burglariously /bərgləriəsli/. See Burglarious; Burglariter.

Burglariter /bərglérədər/. L. Lat. (Burglariously). In old criminal pleading, a necessary word in indictments for burglary.

Burglary. At common law, the crime of burglary consisted of a breaking and entering of a dwelling house of another in the nighttime with the intent to commit a felony therein. The modern statutory definitions of the crime are much less restrictive. For example, they commonly require no breaking and encompass entry at all times of all kinds of structures. In addition, certain state statutes classify the crime into first, second, and even third, degree burglary.

A person is guilty of burglary if he enters a building or occupied structure, or separately secured or occupied portion thereof, with purpose to commit a crime therein, unless the premises are at the time, open to the public or the actor is licensed or privileged to enter. It is an affirmative defense to prosecution for burglary that the building or structure was abandoned. Model Penal Code, § 221.1.

See also Breaking.

Burglary tools. Any implement which may be used to commit burglary though, of itself, it is designed for legitimate use, and possession of which is a crime if accompanied by the intent to use for such illegal purpose and the knowledge of its illegal use.

Burgomaster /bɜrgəmæstər/. The title given in Germany to the chief executive officer of a borough, town, or city; corresponding to our "mayor."

Burgundian law /bɜrgəndiən lɔ/. See Lex Burgundionum.

Burgwhar. A burgess (q.v.)

Burial. Act or process of burying a deceased person; sepulture, interment, act of depositing a dead body in the earth, in a tomb or vault, or in the water. The act of interring the human dead.

Burial insurance. A contract based on legal consideration whereby obligor undertakes to furnish obligee or one of latter's relatives at death burial reasonably worth fixed sum.

Burial place. A portion of ground set apart for or occupied by grave, or as a grave or graveyard.

Burial purposes. Continuing care, preservation, and ornamentation of the place of interment as included in term. People v. Rosehill Cemetery Co., 371 Ill. 510, 21 N.E.2d 766, 770.

Buried facts doctrine. Under this doctrine, disclosure in proxy statement is inadequate only if there is some conceivable danger that reasonable shareholder would fail to realize correlation and overall import of various facts interspersed throughout proxy. Kas v. Financial General Bankshares, Inc., C.A., 796 F.2d 508, 516, 254 U.S.App.D.C. 217.

Burking, burkism. Murder committed with the object of selling the cadaver for purposes of dissection, particularly and originally, by suffocating or strangling the victim.

Burning in the hand. In old English criminal law, laymen, upon being accorded the benefit of clergy, were burned with a hot iron in the brawn of the left thumb, in order that, being thus marked, they could not again claim their clergy. 4 Bl.Comm. 367. This practice was finally abolished by Stat. 19 Geo. III, c. 74; though before that time the burning was often done with a cold iron.

Bursar. A treasurer of a college.

Bursaria /bɜrsəriyə/ or bursary /bɜrsəriy/. The treasurer of collegiate or conventual bodies; or the place of receiving, paying, and accounting by the bursars. Also, monetary grant to a needy student.

Burying-ground. A place set apart for the interment of the dead; a cemetery.

Buscarl /bɜskɑrl/. In Saxon and old English law, seamen or marines.

Bushel. A dry measure, containing four pecks, eight gallons, or thirty-two quarts. But the dimensions of a bushel, and the weight of a bushel of grain, etc., vary in the different states in consequence of statutory enactments.

Bushido /bu(w)ʃiɪdow/. Jap. The unwritten code of conduct of the Samurai demanding loyalty to superiors only, simplicity of living and military valor. Treachery and brutality against one's enemies, and self-sacrifice, blind loyalty and unquestioning obedience to one's superiors are cardinal characteristics of the code.

Business. Employment, occupation, profession, or commercial activity engaged in for gain or livelihood. Activity or enterprise for gain, benefit, advantage or livelihood. Union League Club v. Johnson, 18 Cal.2d 275, 108 P.2d 487, 490. Enterprise in which person engaged shows willingness to invest time and capital on future outcome. Doggett v. Burnet, 62 App.D.C. 103, 65 F.2d 191, 194. That which habitually busies or occupies or engages the time, attention, labor, and effort of persons as a principal serious concern or interest or for livelihood or profit.

Business of public character. Business wherein person engaged expressly or impliedly holds himself out as engaged in business of supplying his product or service to public as a class or to limited portion of public.

Business purpose. Term used on occasion to describe the use to which property may be put or not, as in a deed's restrictive covenant. A justifiable business reason for carrying out a transaction. It has long been established that mere tax avoidance is not a business purpose. The presence of a business purpose is of crucial importance in the area of corporate readjustments and certain liquidations.

Business records. Journals, books of account and other records which may be ordered produced as part of discovery in trial or preparation of case and generally given broad interpretation for such purposes; see e.g. Fed.R.Civ.Proc. Rules 26(b)(1), 45(b). See also Business entry rule; Business records exception.

Business risk. In finance, the risk of default or variability of return arising from the type of business conducted.

Business situs. A situs acquired for tax purposes by one who has carried on a business in the state more or less permanent in its nature. A situs arising when notes, mortgages, tax sale certificates and the like are brought into the state for something more than a temporary purpose, and are devoted to some business use there and thus become incorporated with the property of the state for revenue purposes. A situs arising where possession and control of property right has been localized in some independent business or investment away from owner's domicile so that its substantial use and value primarily attach to and become an asset of the outside business. State v. Atlantic Oil Producing Co., 174 Okl. 61, 49 P.2d 534, 538.

Business trust. As distinguished from a joint-stock company, a pure "business trust" is one in which the managers are principals, and the shareholders are cestuis que trust. The essential attribute is that property is placed in the hands of trustees who manage and deal with it for use and benefit of beneficiaries. Morriss v. Finkelstein, Mo.App., 127 S.W.2d 46, 49. A "Massachusetts trust" or "common law trust." See Massachusetts trust; Real estate investment trust (REIT).

Business usage. See Business purpose, above.

Business entry rule. Exception to hearsay rule which allows introduction of entries made in usual course of business into evidence though person who made such entry is not in court. Fed.Rules Evid., Rule 803(6); 28 U.S.C.A. § 1732. See also Business records exception.

Business judgment rule. This rule immunizes management from liability in corporate transaction undertaken within both power of corporation and authority of management where there is reasonable basis to indicate that transaction was made with due care and in good faith. Nursing Home Bldg. Corp. v. DeHart, 13 Wash. App. 489, 535 P.2d 137, 144.

Business pursuit. Within the meaning of homeowners insurance policy exclusion, term denotes continued or regular activity for purpose of earning a livelihood such as a trade, profession, or occupation, or a commercial activity. Industrial Indem. Co. v. Goettl, App., 138 Ariz. 315, 674 P.2d 869, 872.

Business records exception. An exception to the hearsay exclusion rule that allows original, routine records (whether or not part of a "business") to be used as evidence in a trial even though they are hearsay. Under this exception to hearsay rule, documentary evidence is admissible if identified by its entrant, or one under whose supervision it is kept and shown to be original or first permanent entry, made in routine course of business, at or near time of recorded transaction, by one having both duty to so record and personal knowledge of transaction represented by entry. Simmons v. State, 175 Ind.App. 333, 371 N.E.2d 1316, 1320. See also Business entry rule.

Business tort. A noncontractual breach of a legal duty by a business directly resulting in damages or injury to another.

Busones comitatus /byuwsówniyz kò(w)mtéyts/. In old English law, the barons of a county.

But. Except, except that, on the contrary, or, and also, yet, still.

"But for" test. Test used in determining tort liability by applying the causative criterion as to whether the plaintiff would not have suffered the wrong "but for" the action of the defendant. Today, largely discredited as a test because of the many modifications necessary in applying it.

Butler's ordinance. In old English law, a law for the heir to punish waste in the life of the ancestor.

Butt. A measure of liquid capacity, equal to one hundred and eight gallons; also a measure of land.

Buttals /bétalz/. The bounding lines of land at the end; abuttals, which see.

Butted and bounded. A phrase sometimes used in conveyancing, to introduce the boundaries of lands. See Butts and bounds.

Butts. In old English law, short pieces of land left unplowed at the ends of fields, where the plow was turned about (otherwise called "headlands") as sidelines were similarly unplowed pieces on the sides. Also a place where bowmen meet to shoot at a mark.

Butts and bounds. A phrase used in conveyancing, to describe the end lines or circumscribing lines of a certain piece of land. The phrase "metes and bounds" has the same meaning.

The angles or points where these lines change their direction. See Abuttals; Metes and bounds.

Buy. To acquire the ownership of property by giving an accepted price or consideration therefor; or by agreeing to do so; to acquire by the payment of a price or value; to purchase. To obtain something for a price, usually money. See also Purchase.

Buy American acts. Federal and state statutes which require a preference for American made goods over foreign made goods in government contracts. The purpose of such acts is to protect domestic industry, goods and labor. See 41 U.S.C.A. § 10.

Buy and sell agreement. An arrangement, particularly appropriate in the case of a closely-held corporation or a partnership, whereby the surviving owners (i.e. shareholders or partners) or the entity (i.e., corporation or partnership) agree to purchase the interest of a withdrawing or deceased owner (i.e., shareholder or partner). The buy and sell agreement provides for an orderly disposition of an interest in a business and is beneficial in setting the value of such interest for death tax purposes.

An agreement between or among part-owners of a business that under stated conditions (usually severance of employment, disability, or death), the person withdrawing or his heirs are legally obligated to sell their interest to the remaining part-owners, and the remaining part-owners are legally obligated to sell at a price fixed in the agreement either on a dollar basis or on a formula for computing the dollar value to be paid.

Entity buy and sell agreement. A buy and sell agreement whereby the entity is to purchase the withdrawing or deceased owner's interest. When the entity is a corporation, the agreement generally involves a stock redemption on the part of the withdrawing shareholder.

Buy-down. Money that is paid by or on behalf of a homeowner at the time of purchase to reduce the mortgage interest rate and thereby lower monthly payments. Home builders frequently offer buy-downs.

Buyer. One who buys; a purchaser, particularly of chattels. A person who buys or contracts to buy goods. U.C.C. § 2-103(1)(a). See also Purchaser.

Buyer in ordinary course of business. A person who in good faith and without knowledge that the sale to him is in violation of the ownership rights or security interest of a third party in the goods buys in ordinary course from a person in the business of selling goods of that kind but does not include a pawnbroker. "Buying" may be for cash or by exchange of other property or on secured or unsecured credit and includes receiving goods or documents of title under a pre-existing contract for sale but does not include a transfer in bulk or as security for or in total or partial satisfaction of a money debt. U.C.C. § 1-201(9).

Buyer's market. Situation where supply is greater than demand.

Buy in. See Buying in.

Buying dormant titles. The purchase of the rights or claims to real estate of a person who is not in possession of the land or is deceased. Such purchases were declared void by English statute (1541); and are similarly void in most states. See also Bracery.

By-bidder. One employed by the seller or his agent to bid on property with no purpose to become a purchaser, so that bidding thereon may be stimulated in others who are bidding in good faith.

By-bidding. See Bid.

By bill, by bill without writ. In old English law, terms anciently used to designate actions commenced by original bill, as distinguished from those commenced by original writ, and applied in modern practice to suits commenced by capias ad respondendum. 3 Bl.Comm. 285, 286. The usual course of commencing an action in the King's Bench was by a bill of Middlesex. In an action commenced by bill it is not necessary to notice the form or nature of the action.

By color of office. Acts done "by color of office" are where they are of such a nature that office gives no authority to do them. State v. National Surety Co., 162 Tenn. 547, 39 S.W.2d 581, 583. See Color of law; Color of office.

Bye-bil-wuffa. In Hindu law, a deed of mortgage or conditional sale.

By estimation. In conveyancing, a term used to indicate that the quantity of land as stated is estimated only, not exactly measured; it has the same meaning and effect as the phrase "more or less."

By God and my country. In old English criminal practice, the established formula of reply by a prisoner, when arraigned at the bar, to the question, "Culprit, how wilt thou be tried?"

By-law men. In old English law, the chief men of a town, representing the inhabitants. In an ancient deed, certain parties were described as "yeomen and by-law men." They appear to have been men appointed for some purpose of limited authority by the other inhabitants, under by-laws of the corporation appointing.

Bylaws. Regulations, ordinances, rules or laws adopted by an association or corporation or the like for its internal governance. Bylaws define the rights and obligations of various officers, persons or groups within the corporate structure and provide rules for routine matters such as calling meetings and the like. Most state corporation statutes contemplate that every corporation will adopt bylaws.

The word is also sometimes used to designate the local laws or municipal statutes of a city or town, though, more commonly the tendency is to employ the word "ordinance" exclusively for this class of enactments, reserving "by-law" for the rules adopted by corporations.

By operation of law. Effected by some positive legal rule or amendment. Terminals & Transportation Corporation v. State, 169 Misc. 703, 8 N.Y.S.2d 282, 284.

By reason of. Because of. By means, acts, or instrumentality of.

Byrnes Act. Federal law prohibiting interstate transportation of strike breakers. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1231.

Byroad. An obscure or neighborhood road, not used to any great extent by the public, yet so far a public road that the public have of right free access to it at all times. A byway.

Bystander. One who stands near; a chance looker-on; hence one who has no concern with the business being transacted. One present but not taking part, looker-on, spectator, beholder, observer.

By the by (also Bye). Incidentally; without new process. A term used in former English practice to denote the method of filing a declaration against a defendant who was already in the custody of the court at the suit of a different plaintiff or of the same plaintiff in another cause. It is no longer allowed.

By virtue of. By force of, by authority of, by reason of. Phillips v. Houston Nat. Bank, Houston, Tex., C.C.A. Tex., 108 F.2d 934, 936. Because of, through, or in pursuance of. For example, money received by an officer by virtue of his office is money which that officer received under the law of his office, and not in violation thereof.

C.—ct.—cts. These abbreviations stand for “cent” or “cents,” and any one of them, placed at the top or head of a column of figures, sufficiently indicates the denomination of the figures below.

CAA. See Clean Air Acts.

C.A.B. Civil Aeronautics Board.

Cabal /kəbəl/. A small association for the purpose of intrigue; an intrigue. This name was given to that ministry in the reign of Charles II, formed by Clifford, Ashley, Buckingham, Arlington, and Lauderdale, who concerted a scheme for the restoration of the Pope. The initials of these five names form the word “cabal;” hence the appellation.

Cabalist /kəbəlɪst/. In French commercial law, a factor or broker.

Caballaria /kəbəlér(i)yə/. Pertaining to a horse. It was a feudal tenure of lands, the tenant furnishing a horseman suitably equipped in time of war, or when the lord had occasion for his service.

Caballeria /kəbayeriyə/. In Spanish law, an allotment of land acquired by conquest, to a horse soldier. A quantity of land, varying in extent in different provinces. In those parts of the United States which formerly belonged to Spain, it is a lot of one hundred feet front, two hundred feet depth, and equivalent to five peonias.

Caballero /kəbayérow/kəvolyérow/. In Spanish law, a knight. So called on account of its being more honorable to go on horseback (a caballo) than on any other beast.

Cabana. Cabin or small house.

Cabaret /kəbərəy/. A room where musical entertainment is permitted in connection with restaurant business.

Cabaret tax. Tax imposed on operation of cabaret by government authorities.

Cabinet. The advisory board or counsel of a king or other chief executive; e.g. President’s Cabinet. The select or secret council of a prince or executive government; so called from the apartment in which it was originally held.

The President’s Cabinet is a creation of custom and tradition, going back to the First President, and functions at the pleasure of the President. Its purpose is to advise the President on any matter concerning which he wishes such advice (pursuant to Article II, section 2, of the Constitution). The Cabinet is composed of the heads of the thirteen executive departments—the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Defense, the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, the Secretary of Education, the Secretary of Energy, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, and the Secretary of Transportation. Certain other officials of the executive branch have been accorded Cabinet rank. The Vice President participates in all Cabinet meetings. Others are invited from time to time for discussion of particular subjects. The Secretary to the Cabinet is designated to provide for orderly handling and followup of matters brought before the Cabinet.

Kitchen cabinet. Informal body of non-cabinet advisors which President turns to for advice.

Cabinet council. In English politics, a private and confidential assembly of the most considerable ministers of state, with the function of deciding, in association with the Prime Minister, government policy and the activities of all government departments; first established by Charles I.

Cachet, lettres de /létrə də kəshéy/. Letters issued and signed by the kings of France, and countersigned by a secretary of state, authorizing the imprisonment of a person. Abolished during the revolution of 1789. See Lettres de cachet.

Caciczgos /kəsiykáskows/. In Spanish-American law, property entailed on the caciques, or heads of Indian villages, and their descendants.

Cadastre /kədəstər/kədəstrey/. Tax inventory and assessment of real property. List of appraised property values in a locality used to determine tax assessments.

Cadastu. In French law, an official statement of the quantity and value of realty made for purposes of taxation; same as cadastre (q.v.).

Cadaver /kədəvər/. A dead human body; a corpse. Cadaver nullius in bonis, no one can have a right of property in a corpse.

Cadena /kədəynə/. In Spanish, literally, "a chain." In Spanish law, an afflictive penalty consisting of imprisonment at "hard and laborious work," originally with a chain hanging from the waist to the ankle and carrying with it the accessory penalties of civil interdiction, perpetual, absolute disqualification from office, and, in the case of "cadena temporal," surveillance by the authorities during life; sometimes described as "imprisonment in chains." The carrying of chains, however, by convicts sentenced to "cadena" has long fallen into disuse, in the Philippines, and in fact no such punishment has been inflicted since the earliest days of the military occupation of the Philippines by American troops; and so, commonly, the term has come to mean imprisonment, although it has also been contrasted with, or distinguished from, "prisión," the Spanish technical name for simple imprisonment.

Cadena perpetua. Life imprisonment.

Cadena temporal. Imprisonment for a term less than life.

Cadere /kədəriy/. Lat. To end; cease; fail; as in phrases such as cadit actio (or breve), the action (or writ) fails; cadit assisa, the assise abates; cadit quaestio, the discussion ends, there is no room for further argument; cadere ab actione (literally, to fall from an action), to fail in an action; cadere in partem, to become subject to a division.

To be changed; to become; to be turned into. Cadit assisa in juratum, the assise is changed into a jury.

Cadet /kədət/. Students in the military academy at West Point are styled "cadets;" students in the naval academy at Annapolis, "cadet midshipmen."

Younger brother or son.

In England, a younger brother; the younger son of a gentleman; particularly applied to a volunteer in the army, waiting for some post.

Cadit /kədət/kədət/. Lat. It falls, abates, fails, ends, ceases. See Cadere.

Caduca /kədə(y)úwka/. In the civil law, property of an inheritable quality; property such as descends to an heir. Also the lapse of a testamentary disposition or legacy. Also an escheat; escheated property.

Caducary /kədə(y)úwkaríy/. Relating to or of the nature of escheat, forfeiture, or confiscation. 2 Bl.Comm. 245.

Cæteris tacentibus /sètəras táséntəbəs/. The others being silent; the other judges expressing no opinion.

Cæterorum /sètəróram/. When a limited administration has been granted, and all the property cannot be administered under it, administration cæterorum (as to the residue) may be granted.

C.A.F. Cost and Freight.

Cafeteria plan. Type of fringe benefit plan whereby employee, in addition to receiving certain basic fringe benefits, is permitted to also select and structure certain other types of benefits up to a specified dollar amount.

Cahier /kə(hi)yéy/. In old French law, a list of grievances prepared for deputies in the states-general. A petition for the redress of grievances enumerated.

Cahoots /kəhúwts/. Partnership, teaming up, or combining efforts. City of Abilene v. Luhn, Tex.Civ.App., 65 S.W.2d 370, 371. See Conspiracy.

Cairns' Act. An English statute for enabling the court of chancery to award damages. Repealed as having been superseded by the Judicature Act of 1873.

Cajolery. A deliberate attempt at persuading or deceiving an accused with false promises, inducements or information, into relinquishing his rights and responding to questions posed by law enforcement officers. State v. Davis, 73 Wash.2d 271, 438 P.2d 185, 191.

Calaboose /kələbuws/. A term used to designate a jail or prison, particularly a town or city jail or lock-up. Supposed to be a corruption of the Spanish calabozo, a dungeon.

Calamity. A state of extreme distress or misfortune, produced by some adverse circumstance or event. Any great misfortune or cause of loss or misery, often caused by natural forces (e.g. hurricane, flood, or the like). See Act of God; Disaster.

Calcutum, calcea /kəlsiyət/kəlsiyə/. A causeway.

Calculated. Adapted by calculation, forethought or contrivance to accomplish a purpose; likely to produce a certain effect. Kansas City v. Graham, Mo.App., 502 S.W.2d 411, 415. Thought-out, premeditated. See Premeditation.

Cale. In old French law, a punishment of sailors, resembling "keelhauling."

Calefagium /kələféyiyəm/. In old law, a right to take fuel yearly.

Calendar. The established order of the division of time into years, months, weeks, and days; or a systematized enumeration of such arrangement; an almanac.

Calendar call. A court session given to calling the cases awaiting trial to determine the present status of each case and commonly to assign a date for trial. See also Trial calendar.

Calendar days. A calendar day contains 24 hours; but "calendar days" may be synonymous with "working days." Sherwood v. American Sugar Refining Co., C.C. A.N.Y., 8 F.2d 586, 588. The time from midnight to midnight. Lanni v. Grimes, 173 Misc. 614, 18 N.Y.S.2d 322, 327. So many days reckoned according to the course of the calendar.

Calendar month. Period terminating with day succeeding month, numerically corresponding to day of its beginning, less one. State v. Jones, 208 Neb. 641, 305 N.W.2d 355, 358.

Calendar week. A block of seven days registered on calendar beginning with Sunday and ending with Saturday. Term may consist of any seven days of given month. Gapeau v. Stillman, 18 Ohio St.2d 63, 247 N.E.2d 461, 462.

Calendar year. The period from January 1 to December 31 inclusive. Ordinarily calendar year means 365 days except leap year, and is composed of 12 months varying in length. See also Accounting period.

Court calendar. A list of cases awaiting trial or other disposition; sometimes called "trial list" or "docket."

Special calendar. A calendar or list of causes, containing those set down specially for hearing, trial, or argument.

Calends /kæləndz/. Among the Romans the first day of every month, being spoken of by itself, or the very day of the new moon, which usually happen together. And if pridie, the day before, be added to it, then it is the last day of the foregoing month, as pridie calend. Septemb. is the last day of August. If any number be placed with it, it signifies that day in the former month which comes so much before the month named, as the tenth calends of October is the 20th day of September; for if one reckons backwards, beginning at October, that 20th day of September makes the 10th day before October. In March, May, July, and October, the calends begin at the sixteenth day, but in other months at the fourteenth; which calends must ever bear the name of the month following, and be numbered backwards from the first day of the said following months.

Calends, Greek. A metaphorical expression for a time never likely to arrive, inasmuch as the Greeks had no calends.

Call, n. A request or command to come or assemble; a demand for payment of money.

Banking. Demand for repayment of loan.

Contract. As used in contract, means demand for payment of, especially by formal notice.

Call option. A negotiable instrument whereby writer of option, for a certain sum of money (the "premium"), grants to the buyer of option the irrevocable right to demand, within a specified time, the delivery by the writer of a specified number of shares of a stock at a fixed price (the "exercise" or "striking" price). Gordon & Co. v. Board of Governors of Federal Reserve System, D.C.Mass., 317 F.Supp. 1045, 1046. An option permitting its holder (who has paid a fee for the option) to call for a certain commodity or security at a fixed price in a stated quantity within a stated period. See Option.

Call patent. One whose corners are all stakes, or all but one, or whose lines were not run out and marked at time. Combs v. Combs, 238 Ky. 362, 38 S.W.2d 243, 244.

Call premium. The difference between a bond's call price and its par value. Amount paid by issuer over par or face value upon calling a security in for payment or redemption.

Call price. The price at which a bond may be retired, or called, prior to its maturity. See also Redemption.

Calumnia /kəlámniyə/. In the civil law, calumny, malice, or ill design; a false accusation; a malicious prosecution.

In the old common law, a claim, demand, challenge to jurors.

Calumniæ jusjurandum /kəlámniyiy jəsʒərændəm/. The oath of (against) calumny. An oath imposed upon the parties to a suit that they did not sue or defend with the intention of calumniating (calumniandi animo), i.e., with a malicious design, but from a firm belief that they had a good cause. The object was to prevent vexatious and unnecessary suits. It was especially used in divorce cases, though of little practical utility. A somewhat similar provision is to be bound in the requirement made in some states that the defendant shall file an affidavit of merits.

Calumniator /kəlámniyeytər/. In the civil law, one who accused another of a crime without cause; one who brought a false accusation.

Calumny /kəlámniy/. Defamation; slander; false accusation of a crime or offense. See Calumnia.

Calvin's case. Calvin v. Smith, 7 Rep. 1; 2 S.T. 559, decided in 1608, in which it was held that persons born in Scotland after the accession of James I to the crown of England in 1603 were not aliens but were capable of inheriting land in England.

Calvo doctrine. The doctrine stated by the Argentine jurist, Carlos Calvo, that a government is not bound to indemnify aliens for losses or injuries sustained by them in consequence of domestic disturbances or civil war, where the state is not at fault, and that therefore foreign states are not justified in intervening, by force or otherwise, to secure the settlement of claims of their citizens on account of such losses or injuries. Such intervention, Calvo says, is not in accordance with the practice of European States towards one another, and is contrary to the principle of state sovereignty. The Calvo Doctrine is to be distinguished from the Drago Doctrine (q.v.).

Cambiale jus /kəmbiyéyliy jəs/. The law of exchange.

Cambiator /kəmbiyéytər/. In old English law, an exchanger. Cambiatores monetæ, exchangers of money; money-changers.

Cancel /kænsəl/. To obliterate; to strike or cross out. To destroy the effect of an instrument by defacing, obliterating, expunging, or erasing it. To revoke or recall; to annul or destroy, make void or invalid, or set aside. To rescind; abandon; repeal; surrender; waive; terminate. The term is sometimes equivalent to "discharge" or "pay." Debes v. Texas Nat. Bank of Beaumont, Tex.Civ.App., 92 S.W.2d 476, 479. See also Abrogation; Cancellation; Redemption; Rescind; Rescission of contract; Revocation; Termination.

Cancellaria /kænsələriyəs/. Chancery; the court of chancery. Curia cancellaria is also used in the same sense. 4 Bl.Comm. 46.

Cancellarii anglia dignitas est, ut secundus a rege in regno habetur /kænsələriyay ængliiy dignətəs est, ət səkəndəs èy ri:jy in régnow həbiytər/. The dignity of the chancellor of England is that he is deemed the second from the sovereign in the kingdom.

Cancellarius /kænsələriyəs/. A chancellor; a scrivener, or notary. A janitor, or one who stood at the door of the court and was accustomed to carry out the commands of the judges.

In early English law, the keeper of the king's seal. In this sense only, the word chancellor seems to have been used in the English law. 3 Bl.Comm. 46.

Cancellation. To destroy the force, effectiveness, or validity of. To annul, abrogate, or terminate. Defacement or mutilation of instrument. Words of revocation written across instrument.

A means whereby a holder discharges a party's liability on an instrument by physically demonstrating on the face of the instrument the intention to discharge, as by writing "CANCELLED" across the instrument's face, striking out the party's signature, or destroying or mutilating the signature or the instrument. As applied to documents of title, the term refers to the act of the bailee voiding a negotiable document upon its surrender by the holder in taking possession of the goods.

Occurs when either party puts an end to the contract for breach by the other and its effect is the same as that of "termination" except that the cancelling party also retains any remedy for breach of the whole contract or any unperformed balance. U.C.C. § 2-106(4).

As used in insurance law, term refers to the termination of an insurance policy by an act of either or both of the parties to it, prior to the ending of the policy period. Morey v. Educator & Executive Insurers, Inc., 45 Ohio St.2d 196, 342 N.E.2d 691.

Canon /kænən/. A law, rule, or ordinance in general, and of the church in particular. An ecclesiastical law or statute. A rule of doctrine or discipline. A criterion or standard of judgment. A body of principles, standards, rules, or norms.

In England, a cathedral dignitary, appointed sometimes by the Crown and sometimes by the bishop.

Canon law. A body of Roman ecclesiastical jurisprudence compiled in the twelfth, thirteenth and fourteenth centuries from the opinions of the ancient Latin fathers, the decrees of General Councils, and the decretal epistles and bulls of the Holy See. The canon law is contained in two principal parts,—the decrees or ecclesiastical constitutions made by the popes and cardinals; and the decretals or canonical epistles written by the pope, or by the pope and cardinals, at the suit of one or more persons. As the decrees set out the origin of the canon law, and the rights, dignities, and decrees of ecclesiastical persons, with their manner of election, ordination, etc., so the decretals contain the law to be used in the ecclesiastical courts. The canon law forms no part of the law of England, unless it has been brought into use and acted on there.

Canons of construction. The system of fundamental rules and maxims which are recognized as governing the construction or interpretation of written instruments.

Canons of descent. The legal rules by which inheritances are regulated, and according to which estates are transmitted by descent from the ancestor to the heir.

Canons of ethics. See Code of Professional Responsibility, below.

Canons of inheritance. The legal rules by which inheritances are regulated, and according to which estates are transmitted by descent from the ancestor to the heir. 2 Bl.Comm. 208.

Canons of judicial ethics. Standards of ethical conduct for members of the judiciary. Such were initially adopted by the American Bar Association and later by most states.

Canons of taxation. Tax criteria used in the selection of a tax base originally discussed by Adam Smith in his "Wealth of Nations." Canons of taxation include the following: equality; convenience; certainty; and economy.

Code of professional responsibility. "Canons" of the Code of Professional Responsibility are statements of axiomatic norms expressing in general terms the standards of professional conduct expected of lawyers in their relationship with the public, the legal system and with the legal profession. Such were initially adopted by the American Bar Association and later by most states. See now Model Rules of Professional Conduct, infra.

Canonical /kə'nɒnəkəl/. Pertaining to, or in conformity to, the canons of the church.

Canonical disability. Incurable physical impotency or incapacity for copulation.

Canonical obedience. That duty which a clergyman owes to the bishop who ordained him, to the bishop in whose diocese he is beneficed, and also to the metropolitan of such bishop.

Canonicus /kə'nɒnəkəs/. In old English law, a canon.

Canonist. One versed and skilled in the canon law; a professor of ecclesiastical law.

Canonry. In English ecclesiastical law, an ecclesiastical benefice, attaching to the office of canon.

Cant. In the civil law, a method of dividing property held in common by two or more joint owners. It may be avoided by the consent of all of those who are interested, in the same manner that any other contract or agreement may be avoided.

Canterbury, Archbishop of. In English ecclesiastical law, the primate of all England; the chief ecclesiastical dignitary in the church. Also known as the Spiritual Lord of Parliament. His customary privilege is to crown the kings and queens of England. Has also, by 25 Hen. VIII, c. 21, the power to grant dispensations.

Cantred /kæntred/. In old English law, a district comprising a hundred villages; a hundred. A term used in Wales in the same sense as "hundred" is in England.

Canum /kéynəm/. In feudal law, a species of duty or tribute payable from tenant to lord, usually consisting of produce of the land.

Canvass. The act of examining and counting the returns of votes cast at a public election to determine authenticity. Personal solicitation of votes or survey to determine probable vote outcome.

Canvasser. Any of certain persons, as officers of a state, county, or district, intrusted with the duty of examining the returns of votes cast at an election. See Canvass.

One who, in a given town, city, or county, goes from house to house in an effort to take orders for goods; in this sense, to be distinguished from traveling salesmen.

Cap. Term variously applied to statutorily imposed limits on recovery of noneconomic damages in tort actions; to limits on amount interest rates can increase annually on adjustable rate mortgages. See also Rate (Rate cap).

Capable. Susceptible; competent; qualified; fitting; possessing legal power or capacity. Able, fit or adapted for. See Capacity.

Capacity. Legal qualification (i.e. legal age), competency, power or fitness. Mental ability to understand the nature and effects of one's acts.

Capacity to sue. The legal ability of a particular individual or entity to sue in, or to be brought into, the courts of a forum. Johnson v. Helicopter & Airplane Services Corp., D.C.Md., 404 F.Supp. 726, 729.

Criminal capacity. Accountability for committing crime; e.g., child under 7 years of age lacks criminal capacity. Application of Gault, 387 U.S. 1, 87 S.Ct. 1428, 1438, 18 L.Ed.2d 527.

See also Competency; Disability; Earning capacity; Fiduciary capacity; Incapacity; Legal age; Legal capacity to sue; Mental capacity or competence; Standing to sue doctrine; Substantial capacity test; Testamentary (Testamentary capacity).

Capacity defense. Generic term to describe lack of fundamental ability to be accountable for actions, as one under duress lacks the capacity to contract and hence when sued on such contract he interposes defense of lack of capacity. Similarly, a child accused of crime committed when he was under age of 7, his defense being lack of criminal capacity. As a defense, it tends to negate some essential element of the action required for responsibility. See also Competency proceedings; Competency to stand trial; Defense; Insanity; Intoxication.

Capax doli /kéypæks dówlay/. Lat. Capable of committing crime, or capable of criminal intent. The phrase describes the condition of one who has sufficient intelligence and comprehension to be held criminally responsible for his deeds.

Capax negotii /kéypæks nəgówshiyay/. Competent to transact affairs; having business capacity.

Cape /kéyp(iy)/. In English practice, a judicial writ, now abolished, touching a plea of lands or tenements. It was divided into cape magnum, or the grand cape, which lay before appearance to summon the tenant to answer the default, and also over to the demandant and cape parvum, or petit cape, after appearance or view granted, summoning the tenant to answer the default only. It was called a "cape," from the word with which it commenced, and a "grand cape" (or cape magnum) to distinguish it from the petit cape, which lay after appearance.

Extension of land jutting out into water as a peninsula.

Cape ad valentiam /kéypiy æd vələnsh(iy)əm/. A species of cape magnum.

Capella /kəpələ/. A box, cabinet, or repository in which were preserved the relics of martyrs. A small building in which relics were preserved; an oratory or chapel.

Capers /kéypərz/. Vessels of war owned by private persons, and different from ordinary privateers only in size, being smaller.

Capias /kéypiyəs/kəpiyəs/. Lat. "That you take." The general name for several species of writs, the common characteristic of which is that they require the officer to take a named defendant into custody.

In English practice, the process on an indictment when the person charged is not in custody, and in cases not otherwise provided for by statute.

See also Cepi.

Capias ad audiendum iudicium /kéypiyəs æd odiyéndəm juwdish(iy)əm/. A writ issued, in a case of misdemeanor, after the defendant has appeared and is found guilty, to bring him to hear judgment if he is not present when called.

Capias ad computandum /kéypiyəs æd kòm-pyutəndəm/. In the action of account render, after judgment of quod computet, if the defendant refuses to appear personally before the auditors and make his account, a writ by this name may issue to compel him. The writ is now disused.

Capias ad respondendum /kéypiyəs æd rə-spondəndəm/. A judicial writ (usually simply termed a "capias," and commonly abbreviated to ca. resp.) by which actions at law were frequently commenced; and which commands the sheriff to take the defendant, and him safely keep, so that he may have his body before the court on a certain day, to answer the plaintiff in the action. It notifies defendant to defend suit and procures his arrest until security for plaintiff's claim is furnished.

Capias ad satisfaciendum /kéypiyəs æd sədəsfəy-shiyéndəm/. A writ of execution (usually termed, for brevis, a "ca. sa."), which commands the sheriff to take the party named, and keep him safely, so that he may have his body before the court on a certain day, to satisfy the damages or debt and damages in certain actions. It deprives the party taken of his liberty until he makes the satisfaction awarded. A body execution enabling judgment creditor in specified types of actions to cause arrest of judgment debtor and his retention in custody until he either pays judgment or secures his discharge as insolvent debtor. Perlmutter v. DeRowe, 58 N.J. 5, 274 A.2d 283, 286.

Capias extendi facias /kéypiyəs əksténday féyshiyəs/. A writ of execution issuable in England against a debtor to the crown, which commands the sheriff to "take" or arrest the body, and "cause to be extended" the lands and goods of the debtor.

Capias in withernam /kéypiyəs in wíðərnəm/. A writ, in the nature of a reprisal, which lies for one whose goods or cattle, taken under a distress, are removed from the county, so that they cannot be replevied, commanding the sheriff to seize other goods or cattle of the distrainer of equal value.

Capias pro fine /kéypiyəs pròw fáyniy/. (That you take for the fine or in mercy.) Formerly, if the verdict was for the defendant, the plaintiff was adjudged to be amerced for his false claim; but, if the verdict was for the plaintiff, then in all actions vi et armis, or where the defendant, in his pleading, had falsely denied his own deed, the judgment contained an award of a capiatur pro fine; and in all other cases the defendant was adjudged to be amerced. The insertion of the misericordia or of the capiatur in the judgment is now unnecessary. A writ in all respects an execution for collection of fine. Board of Councilmen of City of Frankfort v. Rice, 249 Ky. 771, 61 S.W.2d 614, 615.

Capias ullagatum /kéypiyəs ə(t)ləgəytəm/. (You take the outlaw.) In English practice, a writ which lies against a person who has been outlawed in an action, by which the sheriff is commanded to take him, and keep him in custody until the day of the return, and then present him to the court, there to be dealt with for his contempt. 3 Bl.Comm. 284.

Capiatur pro fine /kəypiyéytər pròw fáyniy/. (Let him be taken for the fine.) In English practice, a clause inserted at the end of old judgment records in actions of debt, where the defendant denied his deed, and it was found against him upon his false plea, and the jury were troubled with the trial of it.

Capita /kəpətə/. Heads, and, figuratively, entire bodies, whether of persons or animals.

Persons individually considered, without relation to others (polls); as distinguished from stirpes or stocks of descent. The term in this sense, making part of the common phrases, in capita, per capita, is derived from the civil law.

Capital. Accumulated goods, possessions, and assets, used for the production of profits and wealth. Owners' equity in a business. Often used equally correctly to mean the total assets of a business. Sometimes used to mean capital assets.

In accounting, the amount invested in a business. In economic theory there are several meanings. "Capital" may be used to mean: capital goods, that is, the tools of production; the money available for investment, or invested; the discounted value of the future income to be received from an investment; the real or money value of total assets; money or property used for the production of wealth; sum total of corporate stock.

See also Fixed capital; Floating or circulating capital; Impaired capital; Legal capital; Stated capital.

Authorized capital. See Stock (Authorized stock).

Capital account. A term used in accounting to describe the equity of a business. In a partnership, each partner has a capital account which represents his contribution or investment in the partnership. In a corporation, the capital account represents the amount invested by shareholders, both as stock and as additional paid-in capital. In a sole proprietorship, the amount contributed by the owner to start the business represents the owner's capital account.

Capital assets. See Assets.

Capital budget. A plan for the acquisition of long-term assets (such as plant and equipment), showing planned expenditures by object and date.

Capital case or crime. One in or for which death penalty may, but need not necessarily, be imposed.

Capital contribution. Cash, property, or services contributed by partners to partnership.

Various means by which a shareholder makes additional funds available to the corporation (i.e., placed at the risk of the business) without the receipt of additional stock. Such contributions are added to the basis of the shareholder's existing stock investment and do not generate income to the corporation. I.R.C. § 118.

Capital costs. Costs for improvements to property; such are depreciable over the useful life of the improvements.

Capital expenditure. An outlay of funds for the acquisition or improvement of a fixed asset which extends the life or increases the productivity of the asset. The expenditure for the acquisition of an asset should be capitalized and depreciated over the estimated useful life of the asset. I.R.C. § 263.

Capital gain. The profit realized on the sale or exchange of a capital asset. I.R.C. § 1201. The gain is the difference between the cost or the adjusted basis of an asset and the net proceeds from the sale or exchange of such asset.

Capital gains tax. A provision formerly in the income tax laws that profits from the sale of capital assets are taxed at separate (lower) rates than the rate applicable to ordinary income. The Tax Reform Act of 1986 changed the tax treatment of long term capital gains, and effective in 1987, long term capital gains are taxed to individuals as ordinary income.

Capital goods. Durable goods used by business to produce other goods and services; examples of capital goods are machines and equipment.

Capital impairment. Reduction of assets of corporation below aggregate of outstanding shares of capital stock.

Capital improvement. See Capital expenditure, above.

Capital increase. An increase not attributable to earnings.

Capital investment. Acquisition price of a "capital asset", Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Rowan Drilling Co., C.C.A.Tex., 130 F.2d 62, 64, 65; capital stock, surplus and undivided profits, O'Connor v. Bankers Trust Co., 159 Misc. 920, 289 N.Y.S. 252, 276; money spent to increase an asset, Peerless Stages v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 125 F.2d 869, 871. See also Capital expenditure, above.

Capital lease. A contract that transfers ownership of property to the lessee at the end of the lease term. A contract for the lease of property which possesses the characteristics of a purchase.

Capital leverage. A company's ability to generate an additional return for stockholders by borrowing, then using the borrowed funds to obtain a return greater than the interest rate.

Capital loss. A tax term used in reference to a loss incurred in the sale or exchange of a capital asset. Beginning in 1988, the classification as to short or long term capital losses is no longer relevant.

Capital markets. Financial markets in which long term securities are bought and sold.

Capital offense. See Capital case or crime, above.

Capital outlay. Money expended in acquiring, equipping, and promoting an enterprise.

Capital punishment. Punishment by death for capital crimes.

Capital ratio. Ratio of capital to assets.

Capital recovery. Collection of charged-off bad debt previously written off against the allowance for doubtful accounts.

Capital return. In tax accounting, payments received by taxpayer which represent the individual's cost or capital and hence not taxable as income. Commissioner v. Liftin, C.A.4th, 317 F.2d 234.

Capital stock. The shares of stock representing ownership of a business. The types of stock include preferred stock and common stock. Amount of stock that a corporation may issue; amount subscribed, contributed or secured to be paid in. Haggard v. Lexington Utilities Co., 260 Ky. 261, 84 S.W.2d 84, 87. Corporate assets or property contributed by shareholders. Bates v. Daley's Inc., 5 Cal.App.2d 95, 42 P.2d 706, 709. Liability of the corporation to its shareholders, after creditors' claims have been liquidated. Valuation of the corporation as a business enterprise.

Capital stock tax. A state-level tax, usually imposed on out-of-state corporations for the privilege of doing business in the state. The tax may be based on the entity's apportionable income or payroll, or on its apportioned net worth as of a specified date. Such tax was repealed at the federal level by the Revenue Act of 1945, §§ 201, 202.

Capital structure. The composition of a corporation's equities; the relative proportions of short-term debt, long-term debt, and owners' equity. In finance the total of bonds (or long-term money) and ownership interests in a corporation; that is, the stock accounts and surplus. See also Capitalization.

Capital surplus. Amounts paid to a corporation in excess of the par value of stock, generally referred to as additional paid-in capital.

An equity or capital account which reflects the capital contributed for shares not allocated to stated capital. The excess of issuance price over the par value of issued shares or the consideration paid for no par shares allocated specifically to capital surplus.

Capital transactions. Purchases, sales and exchanges of capital assets.

Paid-in-capital. Amount paid for stock of corporation that has been sold.

Stated capital. The sum of (a) the par value of all shares with par value that have been issued, (b) the amount of the consideration received for all shares without par value that have been issued, except such part of the consideration therefor as may have been allocated to surplus in a manner permitted by law, and (c) such other amounts as have been transferred to stated capital, whether upon the distribution of shares or otherwise, minus all reductions from such sums as have been effected in a manner permitted by law and surplus.

Capitale /kæpətɛyli/. A thing which is stolen, or the value of it.

Capitalis /kæpətɛyləs/. In old English law, chief; principal; at the head. A term applied to persons, places, judicial proceedings, and some kinds of property.

Capitalis baro /kæpətɛyləs bərow/. In old English law, chief baron. Capitalis baro scaccarii domini regis, chief baron of the exchequer.

Capitalis custos /kæpətɛyləs kóstows/. Chief warden or magistrate; mayor.

Capitalis debitor /kæpətɛyləs débətər/. The chief or principal debtor, as distinguished from a surety (plegius).

Capitalis dominus /kæpətɛyləs dómənəs/. Chief lord.

Capitalis justiciarius /kæpətɛyləs jəstishiyériyəs/. The chief justiciary; the principal minister of state, and guardian of the realm in the king's absence. This office originated under William the Conqueror; but its power was greatly diminished by Magna Charta, and finally distributed among several courts by Edward I. 3 Bl. Comm. 38.

Capitalis justiciarius ad placita coram rege tenenda /kæpətɛyləs jəstishiyériyəs æd plásətə kórəm ríyjy tənéndə/. Chief justice for holding pleas before the king. The title of the chief justice of the king's bench, first assumed in the latter part of the reign of Henry III.

Capitalis justiciarius banci /kæpətɛyləs jəstishiyériyəs bənsay/. Chief justice of the bench. The title of the chief justice of the (now) court of common pleas, first mentioned in the first year of Edward I.

Capitalis justiciarius totius Angliæ /kæpətɛyləs jəstishiyériyəs toʊshiyəs ængliiy/. Chief justice of all England. The title of the presiding justice in the court of aula regis. 3 Bl. Comm. 38.

Capitalis plegius /kæpətɛyləs pléjyəs/. A chief pledge; a head borough.

Capitalis reditus /kæpətɛyləs rédətəs/. A chief rent.

Capitalist. One exclusively dependent on accumulated property, whether denoting a person of large wealth or one having an income from investments. An individual who owns all or part of an income-producing asset.

Capitalis terra /kæpətɛyləs téhrə/. A head-land. A piece of land lying at the head of other land.

Capitalization /kæpətələzéyshən/. Capitalization represents the total amount of the various securities issued by a corporation. Capitalization may include bonds, debentures, preferred and common stock and surplus. Bonds and debentures are usually carried on the books of the issuing company in terms of their par or face value. Preferred and common shares may be carried in terms of par or stated value. Stated value may be an arbitrary figure decided upon by the directors or it may represent the amount received by the company from the sale of the securities at the time of issuance.

To record an expenditure that may benefit a future period as an asset rather than to treat the expenditure as an expense of the period of its occurrence.

See Capitalize; Thin capitalization.

Capitalization accounting method. A method of determining the present value of an asset that is expected to produce a stream of future benefits. This involves discounting the stream of expected future benefits at an appropriate rate.

A method of measuring values of realty for purpose of determining values of mortgages by expertly estimating the gross income which property should realize, and separately the expenses reasonably required to carry it, and thus arriving at a fair estimate of net income and using a capitalization figure or factor, expertly chosen. Depreciation must be taken into consideration in use of such method. In re New York Title & Mortgage Co. (Series B-K), 21 N.Y.S.2d 575, 594, 595.

Capitalization rate. The rate of interest used in calculating the present value of future periodic payments.

Capitalize. To convert periodic payments into an equivalent sum or sum in hand. To compute the present value of income extended over a period of time. To record an expenditure as an asset when the expenditure benefits a period in excess of one year. An example includes improvements to a commercial building. The cost of the improvements is recorded as an asset on the balance sheet and written off over the estimated useful life of the improvement.

Capitaneus /kæpətēyniəs/. A tenant in capite. He who held his land or title directly from the king himself. A captain; a naval commander. This latter use began A.D. 1264. Capitaneus, Admiralius. A commander or ruler over others, either in civil, military, or ecclesiastical matters.

Capita, per /pər kəpətə/. By heads; by the poll; as individuals. In the distribution of an intestate's personality, the persons legally entitled to take are said to take per capita, that is, equal shares, when they claim, each in his own right, as in equal degree of kindred; in contradistinction to claiming by right of representation, or per stirpes. See Per capita.

Capitare /kæpətəri/. In old law and surveys. To head, front, or abut; to touch at the head, or end.

Capitatum /kæpətétəm/. Lat. By the head; by the poll; severally to each individual.

Capitation tax. A poll tax (q.v.). A tax or imposition upon the person. It is a very ancient kind of tribute, and answers to what the Latins called "tributum," by which taxes on persons are distinguished from taxes on merchandise, called "vectigalia."

Capite /kæpəti/. Lat. By the head. Tenure in capite was an ancient feudal tenure, whereby a man held lands of the king immediately. It was of two sorts,—the one, principal and general, or of the king as the source of all tenure; the other, special and subaltern, or of a particular subject. It is now abolished. As to distribution per capita, see Capita, per.

Capite minutus /kæpəti mənɪwtəs/. In the civil law, one who had suffered capitis diminutio, one who lost status or legal attributes.

Capitis diminutio /kæpətəs dīmən(y)úwsh(iy)ow/. In Roman law, a diminishing or abridgment of personality; a loss or curtailment of a man's status or aggregate of legal attributes and qualifications.

Capitis diminutio maxima /kæpətəs dīmən(y)úwsh(iy)ow mæksəmə/. The highest or most comprehensive loss of status. This occurred when a man's condition was changed from one of freedom to one of bondage, when he became a slave. It swept away with it all rights of citizenship and all family rights.

Capitis diminutio media /kæpətəs dīmən(y)úwsh(iy)ow mɪdiyəs/. A lesser or medium loss of status. This occurred where a man lost his rights of citizenship, but without losing his liberty. It carried away also the family rights.

Capitis diminutio minima /kæpətəs dīmən(y)úwsh(iy)ow mínəmə/. The lowest or least comprehensive degree of loss of status. This occurred where a man's family relations alone were changed. It happened upon the arrogation of a person who had been his own master (sui juris), or upon the emancipation of one who had been under the patria potestas. It left the rights of liberty and citizenship unaltered.

Capitium /kæpətish(iy)əm/. A covering for the head, mentioned in St. 1 Hen. IV, and other old statutes, which prescribe what dresses shall be worn by all degrees of persons.

Capitula /kæpityələ/. Collections of laws and ordinances drawn up under heads of divisions. The term is used in the civil and old English law, and applies to the ecclesiastical law also, meaning chapters or assemblies of ecclesiastical persons. The Royal and Imperial Capitula were the edicts of the Frankish Kings and Emperors.

Capitula coronæ /kæpityələ kərówniy/. Chapters of the crown. Chapters or heads of inquiry, resembling the capitula itineris (infra) but of a more minute character.

Capitula de judæis /kæpityələ diy juwdiəs/. A register of mortgages made to the Jews. 2 Bl.Comm. 343.

Capitula itineris /kæpityələ aytinərəs/. Articles of inquiry which were anciently delivered to the justices in eyre when they set out on their circuits. These schedules were designed to include all possible varieties of crime.

Capitula ruralia /kæpityələ ruréliyəs/. Assemblies or chapters, held by rural deans and parochial clergy, within the precinct of every deanery; which at first were every three weeks, afterwards once a month, and subsequently once a quarter.

Capitulary /kæpityələriy/. In French law, a collection and code of the laws and ordinances promulgated by the kings of the Merovingian and Carolingian dynasties.

Any orderly and systematic collection or code of laws. See Code.

In ecclesiastical law, a collection of laws and ordinances orderly arranged by divisions. A book containing the beginning and end of each Gospel which is to be read every day in the ceremony of saying mass.

Capitulation /kæpityələyshən/. The act or agreement of surrendering upon negotiated or stipulated terms.

Capituli agri /kæpityələy ægray/. Head-fields; lands lying at the head or upper end of furrows, etc.

Capitulum /kæpityələm/. Lat. A leading division of a book or writing; a chapter; a section.

Capper /kæpər/. A decoy or lure for purpose of swindling. Barron v. Board of Dental Examiners of California, 109 Cal.App. 382, 293 P. 144, 145.

Caprice /kæpriys/. Whim, arbitrary, seemingly unfounded motivation. Disposition to change one's mind impulsively.

Capricious disregard. A wilful and deliberate disregard of competent testimony and relevant evidence which one of ordinary intelligence could not possibly have avoided in reaching the result. Unemployment Compensation Bd. of Review v. Kessler, 27 Pa.Cmwltth. 1, 365 A.2d 459, 462.

Captain. A head-man; commander; commanding officer of troops, ship, etc.

Captain of the ship doctrine. This doctrine imposes liability on surgeon in charge of operation for negligence of his assistants during period when those assistants are under surgeon's control, even though assistants are also employees of hospital. This concept is an adaptation of the "borrowed servant" principle in law of agency to operating room of hospital. Thomas v. Hutchinson, 442 Pa. 118, 275 A.2d 23, 27.

Captation. In French law, the act of one who succeeds in controlling the will of another, so as to become master of it; used in an invidious sense. It was formerly applied to the first stage of the hypnotic or mesmeric trance.

Captator /kæptéytər/. A person who obtains a gift or legacy through artifice. See Captation.

Captio /kæpshiyow/. In old English law and practice, a taking or seizure; arrest; receiving; holding of court.

Caption /kæpshən/. The heading or introductory part of a pleading, motion, deposition, or other legal instrument which indicates the names of the parties, name of the court, docket or file number, title of the action, etc. Fed.R. Civil P. 10(a).

Captive. Prisoner of war.

Captive audience. Any group subject to a speaker or to a performance and which is not free to depart without adverse consequences.

Captor. In international law, one who takes or seizes property in time of war; one who takes the property of an enemy. In a stricter sense, one who takes a prize at sea. Oakes v. U. S., 174 U.S. 778, 19 S.Ct. 864, 43 L.Ed. 1169. The term also designates a belligerent who has captured the person of an enemy.

Capture. Act of catching or controlling by force, threats or strategy. In international law, the taking or wresting of property from one of two belligerents by the other. Also a taking of property by a belligerent from an offending neutral. Capture, in technical language, is a taking by military power; a seizure is a taking by civil authority.

Caput /kæpət/. A head; the head of a person; the whole person; the life of a person; one's personality; status; civil condition.

At common law, a head. Caput comitatis, the head of the county; the sheriff; the king. A person; a life. The upper part of a town. A castle.

Capitis æstimatio /kæpətəs ɛstəméysh(iy)ow/. In Saxon law, the estimation or value of the head, that is, the price or value of a man's life.

Caput anni /kæpət énay/. The first day (or beginning) of the year.

Caput baroniæ /kæpət bərówniyiy/. The castle or chief seat of a baron.

Caput jejunii /kæpət jəjúwniyay/. The beginning of the Lent fast, i.e., Ash Wednesday.

Caput loci /kæpət lówsay/. The head or upper part of a place.

Caput lupinum /kæpət lúwpənam/. In old English law, a wolf's head. An outlawed felon was said to be caput lupinum, and might be knocked on the head like a wolf. 4 Bl.Comm. 284, 320.

Caput mortuum /kæpət mórtuywəm/. A dead head; dead; obsolete.

Caput portus /kæpət pórtəs/. In old English law, the head of a port. The town to which a port belongs, and which gives the denomination to the port, and is the head of it.

Caput, principium, et finis /kæpət, prinsípiyəm, ɛt fáynəs/. The head, beginning, and end. A term applied in English law to the king, as head of parliament. 1 Bl.Comm. 188.

In civil law, it signified a person's civil condition or status, and among the Romans, consisted of three component parts or elements,—libertas, liberty; civitas, citizenship; and familia, family.

Caputagium /kæpətéj(iy)əm/. In old English law, head or poll money, or the payment of it.

Caputium /kæpyúwsh(iy)əm/. In old English law, a head of land; a headland.

Carat /kærət/. A measure of weight for diamonds and other precious stones, equivalent to three and one-sixth grains Troy, though divided by jewelers into four parts called "diamond grains." Also a standard of fineness of gold, twenty-four carats being conventionally taken as expressing absolute purity, and the proportion of gold to alloy in a mixture being represented as so many carats.

Carcan /kárkən/. In French law, an instrument of punishment, somewhat resembling a pillory. It sometimes signifies the punishment itself.

Carcanum /karkéynəm/. A gaol; a prison.

Carcare /karkériy/. In old English law, to load; to load a vessel; to freight.

Carcatus /karkéytəs/. Loaded; freighted, as a ship.

Carcelage /kársəlj/. Gaol-dues; prison-fees.

Carcer /kársər/. A prison or gaol. Strictly, a place of detention and safe-keeping, and not of punishment.

Carcer ad homines custodiendos, non ad puniendos, dari debet /kársər æd hóməniyz kəstówdiyéndows, nòn æd pyúwniyéndows, déray débət/. A prison should be used for keeping persons, not for punishing them.

Carcer non supplicii causa sed custodiae constitutus /kársər nòn səplisiyay kóza sèd kəstówdiyiy konstatyúwtəs/. A prison is ordained not for the sake of punishment, but of detention and guarding.

Cardholder. A member of a group such as a union wherein the card is the symbol and identification of membership.

Care. Watchful attention; concern; custody; diligence; discretion; caution; opposite of negligence or carelessness; prudence; regard; preservation; security; support; vigilance. To be concerned with, and to attend to, the needs of oneself or another.

In the law of negligence, the amount of care demanded by the standard of reasonable conduct must be in proportion to the apparent risk. As the danger becomes greater, the actor is required to exercise caution commensurate with it. Foy v. Friedman, 280 F.2d 724.

There are three degrees of care which are frequently recognized, corresponding (inversely) to the three degrees of negligence, viz.: slight care, ordinary care, and great care. This division into three degrees of care, however, does not command universal assent.

Slight care is such as persons of ordinary prudence usually exercise about their own affairs of slight importance. Or it is that degree of care which a person exercises about his own concerns, though he may be a person of less than common prudence or of careless and inattentive disposition.

Ordinary care is that degree of care which persons of ordinary care and prudence are accustomed to use and employ, under the same or similar circumstances. Or it is that degree of care which may reasonably be expected from a person in the party's situation, that is, reasonable care. See also Ordinary.

Reasonable care is such a degree of care, precaution, or diligence as may fairly and properly be expected or required, having regard to the nature of the action, or of the subject-matter, and the circumstances surrounding the transaction. It is such care as an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under the conditions existing at the time he is called upon to act. Substantially synonymous with ordinary or due care.

Great care is such as persons of ordinary prudence usually exercise about affairs of their own which are of great importance; or it is that degree of care usually bestowed upon the matter in hand by the most competent, prudent, and careful persons having to do with the particular subject.

A high degree of care is not the legal equivalent of reasonable care. It is that degree of care which a very cautious, careful, and prudent person would exercise under the same or similar circumstances; a degree of care commensurate with the risk of danger.

Highest degree of care and utmost degree of care have substantially the same meaning. "Highest degree of care" only requires the care and skill exacted of persons engaged in the same or similar business. It means the highest degree required by law where human safety is at stake, and the highest degree known to the usage and practice of very careful, skillful, and diligent persons engaged in the same business by similar means or agencies.

See also Diligence; Due care; Reasonable care; Support.

Careless. Absence of care; negligent; reckless.

Carena /kəriynə/. A term used in the old ecclesiastical law to denote a period of forty days.

Carence /kàróns/. In French law, lack of assets; insolvency.

Careta (spelled, also, Carreta and Carecta) /kəriytə/. A cart; a cart-load.

Caretorius /kàrətóriyəs/ or carectarius /kàrəktériyəs/. A carter.

Carga /kárgə/. In Spanish law, an incumbrance; a charge.

Cargaison /kàrgeyzó(w)n/. In French commercial law, cargo; lading.

Cargare /kàrgériy/. In old English law, to charge.

Cargo. The load (i.e. freight) of a vessel, train, truck, airplane or other carrier. See Freight.

Carload. The quantity usually contained in an ordinary freight car used for transporting the particular commodity involved. A commercial unit which by commercial usage is a single whole for purposes of sale and division. U.C.C. § 2-105(6).

Carmack Act. Amendment to Interstate Commerce Act prescribing liability of carrier for loss, damage, or injury to property carried in interstate commerce.

Carmen /kàrmən/. In the Roman law, literally, a verse or song. A formula or form of words used on various occasions, as of divorce.

Car mile. Movement of loaded freight car one mile.

Carnal /kàrnəl/. Pertaining to the body, its passions and its appetites; animal; fleshly; sensual; impure; sexual. People v. Battilana, 52 Cal.App.2d 685, 126 P.2d 923, 928.

Carnal abuse. An act of debauchery of the female sexual organs by those of the male which does not amount to penetration; the offense commonly called statutory rape consists of carnal abuse. An injury to the genital organs in an attempt at carnal knowledge, falling short of actual penetration. Carnal knowledge of a female child of tender age includes abuse. Carnal abuse and "carnal knowledge" are synonymous in many statutes. See also Carnal knowledge.

Carnaliter /kàrnéyltər/. In old criminal law, carnally. Carnaliter cognovit, carnally knew. Technical words in indictments for rape; formerly held to be essential.

Carnal knowledge. Coitus; copulation; the act of a man having sexual bodily connections with a woman; sexual intercourse. Carnal knowledge of a child is unlawful sexual intercourse with a female child under the age of consent. It is a statutory crime, usually a felony. Such offense is popularly known as "statutory rape". See Rape.

While penetration is an essential element, there is "carnal knowledge" if there is the slightest penetration of the sexual organ of the female by the sexual organ of the male. State v. Cross, 200 S.E.2d 27, 29. It is not necessary that the vagina be entered or that the hymen be ruptured; the entering of the vulva or labia is sufficient. De Armond v. State, Okl.Cr., 285 P.2d 236.

Carnet. An international customs document allowing duty-free temporary exportation of merchandise from one participating country into another participating country, return to the country of origin being contemplated. U.S. v. Dunn, C.A.Cal., 564 F.2d 348.

Carriage. Transportation of goods, freight or passengers.

Carriage of Goods by Sea Act. Federal act governing the most important of the rights, responsibilities, liabilities and immunities arising out of the relation of issuer to holder of the ocean bill of lading, with respect to loss or damage of goods. 46 U.S.C.A. § 1300 et seq.

Carrier. Individual or organization engaged in transporting passengers or goods for hire.

"Carrier" means any person engaged in the transportation of passengers or property by land, as a common, contract, or private carrier, or freight forwarder as those terms are used in the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, and officers, agents and employees of such carriers. 18 U.S.C.A. § 831.

See also Certified carriers; Connecting carrier; Contract carrier.

Common carrier. Common carriers are those that hold themselves out or undertake to carry persons or goods of all persons indifferently, or of all who choose to employ it. Merchants Parcel Delivery v. Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission, 150 Pa.Super. 120, 28 A.2d 340, 344. Those whose occupation or business is transportation of persons or things for hire or reward. Common carriers of passengers are those that undertake to carry all persons indifferently who may apply for passage, so long as there is room, and there is no legal excuse for refusal.

Private carrier. Private carriers are those who transport only in particular instances and only for those they choose to contract with.

Carrier's lien. The right to hold the consignee's cargo until payment is made for the work of transporting it.

Carroll doctrine. Rule of law to effect that existing licensee has standing to contest the grant of a competitive license because economic injury to an existing station becomes important when on the facts it spells diminution or destruction of service. Carroll Broadcasting Co. v. F. C. C., 103 U.S.App.D.C. 346, 258 F.2d 440.

Carry. To bear, bear about, sustain, transport, remove, or convey. To have or bear upon or about one's person, as a watch or weapon; locomotion not being essential. As applied to insurance, means "possess" or "hold."

Carry an election. For a candidate to be elected, or a measure carried, at an election, he or it must receive a majority or a plurality of the legal votes cast.

Carry arms or weapons. To wear, bear, or carry them upon the person or in the clothing or in a pocket, for the purpose of use, or for the purpose of being armed and ready for offensive or defensive action in case of a conflict with another person.

Carry-back. A provision in the tax law which allows a taxpayer to apply a net operating loss in one year to the three immediately preceding tax years, beginning with the earliest year. A net operating loss must be carried back unless the taxpayer elects to forego the carry-back and carry the loss forward. I.R.C. § 172(b). Compare to Carry-over.

Carry costs. A verdict is said to carry costs when the party for whom the verdict is given becomes entitled to the payment of his costs as incident to such verdict.

Carrying away. The act of removal or asportation, by which the crime of larceny is completed, and which is essential to constitute it. See also Larceny.

Carrying charge. Charge made by creditor, in addition to interest, for carrying installment credit. Under consumer credit protection statutes, full disclosure of all such service charges is required. See Truth-in-Lending Act. See also Carrying costs.

Carrying concealed weapon. Such act is a criminal offense in most all jurisdictions; though concealment is not universally an element of the crime. See e.g. Model Penal Code § 5.06.

Carrying costs. All costs associated with holding items in inventory for a period of time. See also Carrying charge.

Carry on trade or business. To conduct, prosecute or continue a particular avocation or business as a continuous operation or permanent occupation. The repetition of acts may be sufficient. To hold one's self out to others as engaged in the selling of goods or services. Helvering v. Highland, C.C.A.4, 124 F.2d 556, 561.

Term which has multiple meanings depending on the context, but it is commonly used in connection with the degree of activity of a foreign corporation in a given state and the consequent right of that state to regulate such enterprise and the exposure of such foreign corporation to suit within that state. In this connection, so called "long arm" statutes define what constitutes carrying on business.

Carry-over. A provision in the tax law which allows a taxpayer to apply a net operating loss in one year to the years following the loss. Net operating losses incurred after 1975 are carried forward 15 years; and losses incurred prior to 1976 are carried forward five years. I.R.C. § 172(b). Compare to Carry-back.

Carry passengers for a consideration. Transportation of persons under such conditions that operator owes them duty of carrier for hire.

Carry stock. To provide funds or credit for its payment for the period agreed upon from the date of purchase.

Case. A general term for an action, cause, suit, or controversy, at law or in equity; a question contested before a court of justice; an aggregate of facts which furnishes occasion for the exercise of the jurisdiction of a court of justice. A judicial proceeding for the determination of a controversy between parties wherein rights are enforced or protected, or wrongs are prevented or redressed; any proceeding judicial in its nature.

Criminal act requiring investigation by police. Dis-ease or injury requiring treatment by physician.

Surveillance or inspection of residence, business, etc. by potential burglar or robber.

The word "case" may include applications for divorce, applications for the establishment of highways, applications for orders of support of relatives, and other special proceedings unknown to the common law. S. D. Warren Co. v. Fritz, 138 Me. 279, 25 A.2d 645, 648.

In ordinary usage, the word "case" means "event", "happening", "situation", "circumstances".

A statement of facts involved in a transaction or series of transactions, or occurrence, or other matter in dispute, drawn up in writing in a technical form, for submission to a court or judge for decision or opinion. See below Case agreed on; Case on appeal; Case reserved; Case stated.

See also Cause of action.

Case agreed on. A formal written enumeration of the facts in a case, assented to by both parties as correct and complete, and submitted to the court by their agreement, in order that decision may be rendered without a trial, upon the court's conclusions of law upon the facts as stated. For agreed case, or case stated, parties must agree on all material ultimate facts on which their rights are to be determined by law. See also Stipulation.

Case made. See Case reserved, below.

Case of actual controversy. The phrase in Federal Declaratory Judgment Act connotes controversy of justiciable nature, excluding advisory decree on hypothetical facts. John P. Agnew & Co., Inc. v. Hoage, 69 App.D.C. 116, 99 F.2d 349, 351. See Cases and controversies, below.

Case of first impression. See First impression case.

Case on appeal. Status of case after it leaves trial court for appellate review and is on appellate docket.

Case reserved. A statement in writing of the facts proved on the trial of a cause, drawn up and settled by the attorneys and counsel for the respective parties under the supervision of the judge, for the purpose of having certain points of law, which arose at the trial and could not then be satisfactorily decided, determined upon full argument before the court in banc. This is otherwise called a "special case"; and it is usual for the parties, where the law of the case is doubtful, to agree that the jury shall find a general verdict for the plaintiff, subject to the opinion of the court upon such a case to be made, instead of obtaining from the jury a special verdict.

Cases and controversies. This term, as used in the Constitution of the United States, embraces claims or contentions of litigants brought before the court for adjudication by regular proceedings established for the protection or enforcement of rights, or the prevention, redress, or punishment of wrongs; and whenever the claim or contention of a party takes such a form that the judicial power is capable of acting upon it, it has become a case or controversy. Interstate Commerce Com'n v. Brimson, 154 U.S. 447, 14 S.Ct. 1125, 38 L.Ed. 1047. The federal courts will only consider questions which arise in a "case or controversy"; i.e., only justiciable cases. Art. III, Sec. 2, U.S.Const. The case or controversy must be definite and concrete, touching the legal relations of parties having adverse interests. The questions involved must not be moot or academic, nor will the courts consider collusive actions. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Haworth, 300 U.S. 229, 240, 241, 57 S.Ct. 461, 464, 81 L.Ed. 617. The facts in controversy, under all the circumstances, must show a substantial issue between the parties having adverse legal interests of sufficient immediacy and reality to warrant issuance of a judgment. Adams v. Morton, C.A.Mont., 581 F.2d 1314, 1319. See also Controversy; Justiciable controversy; Ripeness doctrine; Standing to sue doctrine.

Case stated. See Case agreed on, above.

Case sufficient to go to a jury. A case that has proceeded upon sufficient proof to that stage where it must be submitted to jury and not decided against the state as a matter of law. State v. McDonough, 129 Conn. 483, 29 A.2d 582, 584.

Form of action. That category into which a case falls such as contract or tort, though under Rules of Civil Procedure, all actions are "civil" actions. Fed.R. Civil P. 2.

Cas fortuit /ká fortwiy/. Fr. In the law of insurance, a fortuitous event; an inevitable accident.

Cash. Money or the equivalent; usually ready money. Currency and coins, negotiable checks, and balances in bank accounts. That which circulates as money. See Legal tender; Petty cash.

Cash account. A record, in bookkeeping, of all cash transactions; a summary of moneys received and expended.

Cash bail. Sum of money posted by a criminal defendant to insure his presence in court; used in place of surety bond and real estate. See Bail.

Cash basis accounting. A method of accounting that reflects deductions as paid and income as received in any one tax year. That system of accounting which treats as income only cash which is actually received and as expense only cash which is actually paid out, in contrast to accrual basis which records income when due though not received and expense when incurred though not yet paid.

Cash book. In bookkeeping, an account book in which is kept a record of all cash transactions, or all cash received and expended.

Cash budget. A period-by-period statement of opening cash on hand, estimated cash receipts, estimated cash disbursements, and estimated cash balance at the end of each period. A projection of the company's cash receipts and disbursements over some future period of time.

Cash cycle. The time lapse between purchase of materials and collection of accounts receivable for finished product sold.

Cash discount. A deduction from billed price which seller allows for payment within a certain time; e.g. 10% discount for payment within 10 days. A discount offered for early payment of an invoice.

Cash dividend. That portion of profits and surplus paid to stockholders by a corporation in form of cash. To be contrasted with "stock" dividend.

Cash equivalent doctrine. Generally, a cash basis taxpayer does not report income until cash is constructively or actually received. Under the cash equivalent doctrine, cash basis taxpayers are required to report income even though no cash is actually received in a transaction if the equivalent of cash is received e.g., property is received instead of cash in a taxable transaction.

Cash flow. The cash generated from property, business, etc. It is different from net income; cash flow looks to the amount of cash left after all payments are made, whether they are tax deductible or not. Cash receipts minus disbursements from a given asset, or group of assets, for a given period. An analysis of the movement of cash through a venture as contrasted with the earnings of the venture.

Negative cash flow. Refers to a situation where the cash needs of a business exceed its cash intake.

Cashier, v. To dismiss dishonorably from service.

Cashier, n. Executive officer of bank or trust company responsible for banking transactions. One who collects and records payments at store, restaurant, business, or the like.

Cashiered. Dismissal with ignominy or dishonor, or in disgrace.

Cashier's check. A check drawn by the bank upon itself and issued by an authorized officer of a bank, directed to another person evidencing fact that payee is authorized to demand and receive from the bank, upon presentation, the amount of money represented by the check. National Newark and Essex Bank v. Giordano, 111 N.J.Super. 347, 268 A.2d 327, 328. See also Check.

Cashlite. An amercement or fine; a mulct.

Cash market value. Price which property would bring if offered for sale by one who desired to sell but was under no obligation to sell, and was bought by one who desired to buy but was under no necessity to buy. Urban Renewal Agency of City of Lubbock v. Trammel, Tex., 407 S.W.2d 773, 777. "Fair market value," "reasonable market value" or "fair cash market value" are synonymous. Housing Authority of Birmingham Dist. v. Title Guarantee Loan & Trust Co., 243 Ala. 157, 8 So.2d 835, 837. For Fair market value, and Fair cash market value, see those titles.

Cash note. In England, a bank-note of a provincial bank or of the Bank of England.

Cash out. Exists when seller of property takes the entire amount of equity in cash rather than retaining some interest in property.

Cash position. Degree of liquidity; amount of quick or liquid assets.

Cash price. A price payable in cash at the time of sale of property, in opposition to a barter or a sale on credit.

Cash sale. A sale for money in hand. A sale conditioned on payment concurrent with delivery. Weyerhaeuser Timber Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 150 Or. 172, 43 P.2d 1078, 1081. See Sale; Time-price differential.

Cash surrender value. The amount of money that an insurance policy would yield if cashed in with the insurance company that issued the policy. The cash surrender value of a life insurance policy is the reserve less a surrender charge. Amount which the insurer will pay upon cancellation of the policy before death. See Cash value option.

Cash value. The cash value of an article or piece of property is the price which it would bring at private sale (as distinguished from a forced or auction sale); the terms of sale requiring the payment of the whole price in ready money, with no deferred payments.

Actual value or market value. Fort Worth & D. N. Ry. Co. v. Sugg, Tex.Civ.App., 68 S.W.2d 570, 572. Clear market value or fair market value. Casual ejector. The nominal defendant in an action of ejectment.

Casual employment. Employment at uncertain or irregular times. Employment for short time and limited and temporary purpose. Occasional, irregular or incidental employment. Such employee does not normally receive seniority rights nor, if hours worked are below a certain number each week, fringe benefits. By statute in many states, such employment may or may not be subject to workers' compensation at the election of the employer. The test is the nature of the work or the scope of the contract of employment or the continuity of employment.

Casual sale. A sale which is not made customarily or in the regular course of business; an occasional sale.

Casualty /káz(h)yuwəlti/. A serious or fatal accident. A person or thing injured, lost or destroyed. A disastrous occurrence due to sudden, unexpected or unusual cause. Accident; misfortune or mishap; that which comes by chance or without design. A loss from such an event or cause; as by fire, shipwreck, lightning, etc. See also Accident; Loss; Unavoidable casualty.

Casualty insurance. See Insurance.

Casualty loss. A casualty loss is defined for tax purposes as "the complete or partial destruction of property resulting from an identifiable event of a sudden, unexpected or unusual nature"; e.g., floods, storms, fires, auto accidents. Individuals may deduct business casualty losses in full. Losses include those in a trade or business or incurred in a transaction entered into for a profit. Personal or nonbusiness casualty losses are deductible by individuals as itemized deductions. Such loss deductions are reduced by $100 and 10% of the taxpayer's adjusted gross income.

Casu consimili /kéys(y)uw kənsiməlay/. In old English law, a writ of entry, granted where tenant by the curtesy, or tenant for life, alienated in fee, or in tail, or for another's life, which was brought by him in reversion against the party to whom such tenant so alienated to his prejudice, and in the tenant's lifetime. See Consimili casu.

Casu proviso /kéys(y)uw prəváyzoʷ/. Lat. In the case provided for. A writ of entry framed under the provisions of the statute of Gloucester (6 Edw. I) c. 7, which lay for the benefit of the reversioner when a tenant in dower aliened in fee or for life.

Intervening cause. That occurrence which comes between the initial force or occurrence and the ultimate effect. See also Intervening act.

Superseding cause. That occurrence or force which not only intervenes, but which also breaks the chain of causation between the initial occurrence and the ultimate effect so as to render the initial force or occurrence causatively harmless.

Cause in fact. That particular cause which produces an event and without which the event would not have occurred. Medallion Stores, Inc. v. Eidt, Tex.Civ.App., 405 S.W.2d 417, 422. Courts express this in the form of a rule commonly referred to as the "but for" rule: the injury to an individual would not have happened but for the conduct of the wrongdoer. See Proximate cause; Res (Res ipsa loquitur).

Cause list. In English practice, a printed roll of actions, to be tried in the order of their entry, with the names of the solicitors for each litigant, made out for each day during the sittings of the courts. Similar to the calendar of cases, or docket, used in American courts.

Cause of action. The fact or facts which give a person a right to judicial redress or relief against another. The legal effect of an occurrence in terms of redress to a party to the occurrence. A situation or state of facts which would entitle party to sustain action and give him right to seek a judicial remedy in his behalf. Thompson v. Zurich Ins. Co., D.C.Minn., 309 F.Supp. 1178, 1181. Fact, or a state of facts, to which law sought to be enforced against a person or thing applies. Facts which give rise to one or more relations of right-duty between two or more persons. Failure to perform legal obligation to do, or refrain from performance of, some act. Matter for which action may be maintained. Unlawful violation or invasion of right. The right which a party has to institute a judicial proceeding. See also Case; Claim; Failure to state cause of action; Justiciable controversy; Right of action; Severance of actions; Splitting cause of action; Suit.

Cause of injury. That which actually produces it.

Causes célèbres /kówz séléb(rə)/. Celebrated cases. A work containing reports of the decisions of interest and importance in French courts in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Secondly, a single trial or decision is sometimes called a "cause célèbre," when it is remarkable on account of the parties involved or the unusual, interesting, or sensational character of the facts.

Censure /sénsər/. The formal resolution of a legislative, administrative, or other body reprimanding a person, normally one of its own members, for specified conduct. An official reprimand or condemnation. See also Censor; Reprimand.

Census /sénsəs/. The official counting or enumeration of people of a state, nation, district, or other political subdivision. Such contains classified information relating to sex, age, family, social and economic conditions, and public record thereof. City of Compton v. Adams, 33 Cal.2d 596, 203 P.2d 745, 746. The national census has been compiled decennially since 1790, and has increasingly listed a great variety of social and economic data. A primary use of such data is to apportion or reapportion legislative districts. See also Census bureau; Federal census.

In Roman law, a numbering or enrollment of the people, with a valuation of their fortunes.

In old European law, a tax, or tribute; a toll.

Census bureau. The Bureau of the Census was established as a permanent office by act of Congress on March 6, 1902 (32 Stat. 51). The major functions of the Bureau are authorized by the Constitution (Art. I, Sec. 2, Cl. 3), which provides that a census of population shall be taken every 10 years, and by laws codified as title 13, U.S. Code. The law also provides that the information collected by the Bureau from individual persons, households, or establishments be kept strictly confidential and be used only for statistical purposes.

Census regalis /sénsəs rægéyləs/. In English law, the annual revenue or income of the crown.

Cent. A coin of the United States, the least in value of those now minted. It is the hundredth part of a dollar.

Cental. A weight of 100 pounds avoirdupois, used at Liverpool for corn. Usually called hundredweight in the United States.

Centena /səntíynə/. A hundred. A district or division containing originally a hundred freemen, established among the Goths, Germans, Franks, and Lombards, for military and civil purposes, and answering to the Saxon "hundred." Also, in old records and pleadings, a hundred weight.

Centenarii /səntənériyay/. Petty judges, under-sheriffs of counties, that had rule of a hundred (centena), and judged smaller matters among them.

Centeni /səntíynay/. The principal inhabitants of a centena, or district composed of different villages, originally in number a hundred, but afterwards only called by that name.

Center. This term is often used, not in its strict sense of a geographical or mathematical center, but as meaning the middle or central point or portion of anything. The center of a section of land is the intersection of a straight line from the north quarter corner to the south quarter corner with a straight line from the east quarter corner to the west quarter corner. Similarly, the center of a street intersection refers to the point where the center lines of the two streets cross. The center of the main channel of a river, is the middle of broad and distinctly defined bed of main river.

Center of gravity doctrine. Choice of law questions in conflicts of law are resolved by application of the law of the jurisdiction which has the most significant relationship to or contact with event and parties to the litigation and the issues therein. Term is used synonymously with most significant relationship or grouping of contacts theory. Mitchell v. Craft, Miss., 211 So.2d 509; Baffin Land Corp. v. Monticello Motor Inn, 70 Wash.2d 893, 425 P.2d 623, 625.

Centesima /səntézəmə/. In Roman law, the hundredth part.

Usurix centesimæ. Twelve per cent. per annum; that is, a hundredth part of the principal was due each month, —the month being the unit of time from which the Romans reckoned interest. 2 Bl.Comm. 462.

Century. One hundred. A body of one hundred men. The Romans were divided into centuries as the English were divided into hundreds. Also a cycle of one hundred years.

CEO. Abbreviation for “chief executive officer” of a corporation.

Ceorl /chéyarl/. In Anglo Saxon law, a class of freemen personally free, but possessing no landed property. A tenant at will of free condition, who held land of the thane on condition of paying rent or services. A freeman of inferior rank occupied in husbandry. Under the Norman rule, this term, as did others which denoted workmen, especially those which applied to the conquered race, became a term of reproach, as is indicated by the popular signification of churl.

Cepi /síypay/. Lat. I have taken. This word was of frequent use in the returns of sheriffs when they were made in Latin, and particularly in the return to a writ of capias.

The full return (in Latin) to a writ of capias was commonly made in one of the following forms: Cepi corpus, I have taken the body, i.e., arrested the body of the defendant; Cepi corpus et bail, I have taken the body and released the defendant on a bail-bond; Cepi corpus et committitur, I have taken the body and he has been committed (to prison); Cepi corpus et est in custodia, I have taken the defendant and he is in custody; Cepi corpus et est languidus, I have taken the defendant and he is sick, i.e., so sick that he cannot safely be removed from the place where the arrest was made; Cepi corpus et paratum habeo, I have taken the body and have it (him) ready, i.e., in custody and ready to be produced when ordered.

Cepit /síypət/. He took. This was the characteristic word employed in (Latin) writs of trespass for goods taken, and in declarations in trespass and replevin. In criminal practice, formerly a technical word necessary in an indictment for larceny.

Cepit et abduxit /síypət ət əbdáksət/. He took and led away. The emphatic words in writs in trespass or indictments for larceny, where the thing taken was a living chattel, i.e., an animal.

Cepit et asportavit /síypət ət əspərtéyvet/. He took and carried away. Applicable in a declaration in trespass or an indictment for larceny where the defendant has carried away goods without right. 4 Bl.Comm. 231.

Cepit in alio loco /síypət ən élyiow lówkow/. In old pleading, a plea in replevin, by which the defendant alleges that he took the thing replevied in another place than that mentioned in the declaration.

Cera impressa /síərə əmprésə/. Lat. An impressed seal. It may include an impression made on wafers or other adhesive substances capable of receiving an impression, or even paper.

The design and narration ought to be certain, and the foundation certain, and the matter certain, which is brought into court to be tried.

Certain. Ascertained; precise; identified; settled; exact; definitive; clearly known; unambiguous; or, in law, capable of being identified or made known, without liability to mistake or ambiguity, from data already given. Free from doubt.

Certain services. In feudal and old English law, such services as were stinted (limited or defined) in quantity, and could not be exceeded on any pretense; as to pay a stated annual rent, or to plow such a field for three days. 2 Bl.Comm. 61.

Certainty. Absence of doubt; accuracy; precision; definite. The quality of being specific, accurate, and distinct. See Certain.

Cert. den. Certiorari denied. See Certiorari.

Certificando de recognitione stapulæ /sərtəfəkəndow díy rəkəgníshiyówníy stéyppəliy/. In English law, a writ commanding the mayor of the staple to certify to the lord chancellor a statute-staple taken before him where the party himself detains it, and refuses to bring in the same. There is a like writ to certify a statute-merchant, and in diverse other cases.

Certificate /sərtífəkət/. A written assurance, or official representation, that some act has or has not been done, or some event occurred, or some legal formality has been complied with. A written assurance made or issuing from some court, and designed as a notice of things done therein, or as a warrant or authority, to some other court, judge, or officer. A statement of some fact in a writing signed by the party certifying. A declaration in writing. A "certificate" by a public officer is a statement written and signed, but not necessarily sworn to, which is by law made evidence of the truth of the facts stated for all or for certain purposes. A document certifying that one has fulfilled the requirements of and may practice in a field. See also Affidavit; Birth certificate; License; Permit.

Certificate for costs. In English practice, a certificate or memorandum drawn up and signed by the judge before whom a case was tried, setting out certain facts the existence of which must be thus proved before the party is entitled, under the statutes, to recover costs.

Certificate into chancery. In English practice, a document containing the opinion of the common-law judges on a question of law submitted to them for their decision by the chancery court.

Certificate lands. In Pennsylvania, in the period succeeding the revolution, lands set apart in the western portion of the state, which might be bought with the certificates which the soldiers of that state in the revolutionary army had received in lieu of pay.

Certificate of acknowledgment. The certificate of a notary public, justice of the peace, or other authorized officer, attached to a deed, mortgage, or other instrument, setting forth that the parties thereto personally appeared before him on such a date and acknowledged the instrument to be their free and voluntary act and deed. A verification of the act of the maker of an instrument. Thane v. Dallas Joint Stock Land Bank of Dallas, Tex.Civ.App., 129 S.W.2d 795, 799.

Certificate of amendment. Document filed with state corporation authority (e.g. Secretary of State) disclosing amendment to articles of corporate organization or charter or agreement of association.

Certificate of assize. A writ granted for the re-examination or retrial of a matter passed by assize before justices. It is now entirely obsolete. 3 Bl.Comm. 389.

Certificate of discharge. See Satisfaction piece.

Certificate of election. Issued by governor, board of elections, or other competent authority that the person or persons named have been duly elected.

Certificate of good conduct. An official written document which determines that a person is a law-abiding citizen of good repute and character to operate licensed premises, e.g. retail liquor store. City of Chattanooga v. Tenn. Alcoholic Bev. Comm., Tenn., 525 S.W.2d 470, 480.

Certificate of holder of attached property. A certificate required by statute, in some states, to be given by a third person who is found in possession of property subject to an attachment in the sheriff's hands, setting forth the amount and character of such property and the nature of the defendant's interest in it.

Certificate of incorporation. In most states is the document prepared by the Secretary of State that evidences the acceptance of articles of incorporation and the commencement of the corporate existence. In some states the certificate of incorporation is the name given to the document filed with the Secretary of State, i.e., the articles of incorporation. The Revised Model Business Corporation Act has eliminated certificates of incorporation, requiring only a fee receipt. See also Articles of incorporation.

Certificate of indebtedness. An obligation sometimes issued by corporations having practically the same force and effect as a bond, though not usually secured on any specific property. It may, however, create a lien on all the property of the corporation issuing it, superior to the rights of general creditors. Compare Debenture. In banking, same as a certificate of deposit; as a government security, same as a treasury certificate.

Certificate of insurance. Document evidencing fact that an insurance policy has been written and includes a statement of the coverage of the policy in general terms.

Certificate of interest. An instrument evidencing a fractional or percentage interest in oil and gas production. People v. Sidwell, 27 Cal.2d 121, 162 P.2d 913, 915.

Certificate of need. Many states have enacted certificate-of-need laws designed to combat spiraling health care costs and the unnecessary duplication and maldistribution of health care facilities and services. Under these laws, a health care provider seeking to establish or modify a health care facility or to provide new or different institutional health care services must normally apply to the appropriate state agency for a certificate of need.

Certificate of occupancy. Document certifying that premises comply with provisions of zoning and/or building ordinances. Such document, as issued by local government agency, is commonly required before premises can be occupied and title transferred. Document that certifies that what has been done actually conforms substantially to approved plans and specifications.

A number of cities require a "certificate of occupancy" for apartments, which aims at preventing their deterioration in the first place. After each vacancy, the apartment must be newly inspected to make sure it's up to standard.

Certificate of participation. A certificate issued instead of shares of stock to show a proportionate interest in an unincorporated business or in the ownership of debt of a corporation.

Certificate of public convenience and necessity. See Certificate of convenience and necessity, supra.

Certificate of purchase. A certificate issued by public officer to successful bidder at a judicial sale (such as a tax sale), which will entitle him to a deed upon confirmation of sale by the court, or (as the case may be) if the land is not redeemed within the time limited.

Certificate of redemption. Evidence of redeeming a property by the owner after losing it through a judicial sale.

Certificate of registry. In maritime law, a certificate of the registration of a vessel according to the registry acts, for the purpose of giving her a national character.

Certificate of sale. The same as Certificate of purchase, supra.

Certificate of stock. A certificate of a corporation or joint-stock company that named person is owner of designated number of shares of stock. It is merely written evidence of ownership of stock, and of the rights and liabilities resulting from such ownership. It is a document representation of an incorporeal right, and stands on the footing similar to that of other muniments of title.

Certificate of title. Document evidencing ownership; commonly associated with sale of motor vehicles. See also Insurance (Title insurance).

Certificate, trial by. A mode of trial now little in use; it is resorted to in cases where the fact in issue lies out of the cognizance of the court, and the judges, in order to determine the question, are obliged to rely upon the solemn averment or information of persons in such a station as affords them the clearest and most competent knowledge of the truth.

Certification /sɜrtəfəkəyʃən/. The formal assertion in writing of some fact. The act of certifying or state of being certified. Formal designation by NLRB that a labor organization represents a majority of employees in a particular bargaining unit. See Attestation; Certificate.

Certification mark. The term "certification mark" means any word, name, symbol, or device, or any combination thereof—(1) used by a person other than its owner, or (2) which its owner has a bona fide intention to permit a person other than the owner to use in commerce and files an application to register on the principal register established by the Trademark Act, to certify regional or other origin, material, mode of manufacture, quality, accuracy, or other characteristics of such person's goods or services was performed by members of a union or other organization. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1127.

Certification of assize. In English practice, a writ anciently granted for the re-examining or retrial of a matter passed by assize before justices, now entirely superseded by the remedy afforded by means of a new trial. See Certificate of assize.

Certification of check. See Certified check.

Certification of questions of law. See Certification to federal court; Certification to state court.

Certification of record on appeal. Formal acknowledgment of questions for appellate review commonly signed by trial justice.

Certification to federal court. Method of taking case from U.S. Court of Appeals to Supreme Court in which former court may certify any question of law in any civil or criminal case as to which instructions are requested. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1254(2).

Certification to state court. Procedure by which a Federal Court abstains from deciding a state law question until the highest court of the state has had an opportunity to rule on the question so certified by the Federal Court. Clay v. Sun Insurance Office Ltd., 363 U.S. 207, 80 S.Ct. 1222, 4 L.Ed.2d 1170. State statutes and court rules providing for such certification are generally patterned on the "Uniform Certification of Questions of Law Act."

Certificats de coutume /sɜrtifiká də kuwtyúwm/. In French law, certificates given by a foreign lawyer, establishing the law of the country to which he belongs upon one or more fixed points. These certificates can be produced before the French courts, and are received as evidence in suits upon questions of foreign law.

Certified carriers. Carriers using highways of state to whom certificates of public convenience and necessity have been issued. People v. Henry, 131 Cal.App. 82, 21 P.2d 672.

Certified check. The check of a depositor drawn on a bank on the face of which the bank has written or stamped the words "accepted" or "certified" with the date and signature of a bank official. The check then becomes an obligation of the bank. The certification of a check is a statement of fact, amounting to an estoppel of the bank to deny liability; a warranty that sufficient funds are on deposit and have been set aside. It means that bank holds money to pay check and is liable to pay it to proper party.

Certification of a check is acceptance of check by drawee-bank. Where a holder procures certification the drawer and all prior indorsers are discharged. Unless otherwise agreed a bank has no obligation to certify a check. A bank may certify a check before returning it for lack of proper indorsement. If it does so the drawer is discharged. U.C.C. § 3-411. Compare Cashier's check.

Certified copy. A copy of a document or record, signed and certified as a true copy by the officer to whose custody the original is intrusted.

Certified mail. Form of mail similar to registered mail by which sender may require return receipt from addressee.

Certified public accountant (CPA). See Accountant.

Certified question. See Certification to federal court; Certification to state court.

Certify. To authenticate or vouch for a thing in writing. To attest as being true or as represented. See Certificate; Certification.

Certiorari /səʁsh(i)yərəray/səʁshərəriy/. Lat. To be informed of. A writ of common law origin issued by a superior to an inferior court requiring the latter to produce a certified record of a particular case tried therein. The writ is issued in order that the court issuing the writ may inspect the proceedings and determine whether there have been any irregularities. It is most commonly used to refer to the Supreme Court of the United States, which uses the writ of certiorari as a discretionary device to choose the cases it wishes to hear. See 28 U.S.C.A. § 1254. The Supreme Court denies most writs of certiorari (i.e. "cert. den."). The trend in state practice has been to abolish such writ. See also Writ of certiorari.

Certiorari, bill of. In English chancery practice, an original bill praying relief. It was filed for the purpose of removing a suit pending in some inferior court of equity into the court of chancery, on account of some alleged incompetency or inconvenience.

Cessavit per biennium /səséyvat pəʁ bayéniyəm/. An obsolete writ, which could formerly have been sued out when the defendant had for two years ceased or neglected to perform such service or to pay such rent as he was bound to do by his tenure, and had not upon his lands sufficient goods or chattels to be distrained. It also lay where a religious house held lands on condition of performing certain spiritual services which it failed to do. 3 Bl.Comm. 232.

Cesse /sés/. An assessment or tax. A tenant of land was said to cesse when he neglected or ceased to perform the services due to the lord.

Cesser /sésər/. Neglect; a ceasing from, or omission to do, a thing. 3 Bl.Comm. 232. The determination of an estate. The determination or ending of a term, annuity, etc.

Cesser, proviso for. A provision in a settlement creating long terms that when the trusts are satisfied, the term should cease and determine. This proviso generally expresses three events: (1) The trusts never arising; (2) their becoming unnecessary or incapable of taking effect; (3) the performance of them.

Cesset executio /sésət èksəkyúwsh(i)yow/. (Let execution stay.) A stay of execution; or an order for such stay; the entry of such stay on record.

Cesset processus /sésət prəsésəs/. (Let process stay.) A stay of proceedings entered on the record. Formal order for stay of process or proceedings.

Cessio /sés(h)(i)yow/. Lat. A cession; a giving up, or relinquishment; a surrender; an assignment.

Cessio bonorum /sés(h)(i)yow bənórəm/. In Roman law, cession of goods. A surrender, relinquishment, or assignment of all his property and effects made by an insolvent debtor for the benefit of his creditors. The term is commonly employed in continental jurisprudence to designate a bankrupt's assignment of property to be distributed among his creditors.

Cessio in jure /séshiyow ín júriy/. In Roman law, a fictitious suit, in which the person who was to acquire the thing claimed (vindicabat) the thing as his own, the person who was to transfer it acknowledged the justice of the claim, and the magistrate pronounced it to be the property (addicebat) of the claimant.

Cession /sésən/. The act of ceding; a yielding or giving up; surrender; relinquishment of property or rights. The assignment, transfer, or yielding up of territory by one state or government to another. Municipality of Ponce v. Church, 210 U.S. 296, 28 S.Ct. 737, 52 L.Ed. 1068.

- Chain of custody. In evidence, the one who offers real evidence, such as the narcotics in a trial of drug case, must account for the custody of the evidence from the moment in which it reaches his custody until the moment in which it is offered in evidence, and such evidence goes to weight not to admissibility of evidence. Com. v. White, 353 Mass. 409, 232 N.E.2d 335. For example, "chain of custody" is proven if an officer is able to testify that he or she took control of the item of physical evidence, identified it, placed it in a locked or protected area, and retrieved the item being offered on the day of trial. McEntyre v. State, Tex.App.—Hous. (14 Dist.), 717 S.W.2d 140, 147.
- Chain of possession. See Chain of custody.
- Chain of title. Record of successive conveyances, or other forms of alienation, affecting a particular parcel of land, arranged consecutively, from the government or original source of title down to the present holder. See Abstract of title.

Chains and links. Used in real estate measurement; chain is 66' long or 100 links. See also Chain; Land measure.

Chain stores. Number of stores under common name, ownership and management; normally selling same general line of merchandise or products.

Chairman. A name given to the presiding officer of an assembly, public meeting, convention, deliberative or legislative body, board of directors, committee, etc.

Chairman of committees of the whole house. In English parliamentary practice, in the commons, this officer, always a member, is elected by the house on the assembling of every new parliament. When the house is in committee on bills introduced by the government, or in committee of ways and means, or supply, or in committee to consider preliminary resolutions, it is his duty to preside.

Challenge. To object or except to; to prefer objections to a person, right, or instrument; to question formerly the legality or legal qualifications of; to invite into competition; to formally call into question the capability of a person for a particular function, or the existence of a right claimed, or the sufficiency or validity of an instrument; to call or put in question; to put into dispute; to render doubtful. For example, to challenge the personal qualification of a judge or magistrate about to preside at the trial of a cause, as on account of personal interest, his having been of counsel, bias, etc.; or to challenge a juror for cause. See Jury challenge; Objection.

Challenge for cause. A request from a party to a judge that a certain prospective juror not be allowed to be a member of the jury because of specified causes or reasons. See e.g. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1870.

Challenge to jury array. An exception to the whole panel in which the jury are arrayed, upon account of partiality, or some default in the sheriff or other officer who arrayed the panel or made the return. A challenge to the form and manner of making up the panel. A challenge that goes to illegality of drawing, selecting, or impaneling array. See e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 6(b) (grand jury).

General challenge. A species of challenge for cause, being an objection to a particular juror, to the effect that the juror is disqualified from serving in any case.

Peremptory challenge. A request from a party that a judge not allow a certain prospective juror to be a member of the jury. No reason or "cause" need be stated for this type of challenge. The number of peremptory challenges afforded each party is normally set by statute or court rule; e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 24; Fed.R. Civ.P. 47; 28 U.S.C.A. § 1870.

Challenge to fight. A summons or invitation, given by one person to another, to engage in a personal combat; a request to fight.

Chamber. A room or apartment in a house. A private repository of money; a treasury. A compartment; a hollow or cavity.

Judges chambers. The private room or office of a judge; any place in which a judge hears motions, signs papers, or does other business pertaining to his office, when he is not holding a session of court. Business so transacted is said to be done "in chambers."

Legislative body. The lower chamber of a bicameral legislature is normally the larger of the two (e.g. House of Representatives). The upper chamber is generally the smaller (e.g. Senate).

Chamber business. A term applied to all such judicial business as may properly be transacted by a judge at his chambers or elsewhere, as distinguished from such as must be done by the court in session.

Chamberlain. In old English law, keeper of the chamber. Originally the chamberlain was the keeper of the treasure chamber (camera) of the prince or state; otherwise called "treasurer."

The name of several high officers of state in England, as the lord great chamberlain of England, lord chamberlain of the household, chamberlain of the exchequer.

The word was formerly used in some American cities as the title of an officer corresponding to "treasurer."

Chamberlaria /chëymbərlériyə/. Chamberlainship; the office of a chamberlain.

Chamber of accounts. A sovereign court, of great antiquity, in France, which took cognizance of and registered the accounts of the king's revenue; nearly the same as the English court of exchequer.

Chamber of commerce. A board or association of businessmen and merchants organized to promote the commercial interests of a locality, county, or the like, or a society of a city who meet to promote the general trade and commerce of the locality. Chambers of commerce exist in most cities, and are loosely affiliated with the national organization of the same name. Particular trades may also have their own organizations or boards to promote the interests of their own trade. Organizations with functions similar to that of chambers of commerce may be known under various other names; e.g. Board of Trade.

Chamber, widow's. In old English law, a portion of the effects of a deceased person, reserved for the use of his widow, and consisting of her apparel, and the furniture of her bed-chamber. This custom in London of reserving her apparel and furniture for the widow of a freeman was abolished by 19 & 20 Vict., c. 94.

Champart /shòmpár/. In French law, the grant of a piece of land by the owner to another, on condition that the latter would deliver to him a portion of the crops.

Champert /chämpərt/. In old English law, a share or division of land; champerty.

Champertor /chämpərtər/. In criminal law, one who makes or brings suits, or causes them to be moved or brought, either directly or indirectly, and maintains them at his own cost, upon condition of having a part of the gains or of the land in dispute. One guilty of champerty (q.v.).

Champertous /chämpərtəs/. Of the nature of champerty; affected with champerty.

Champerty /chämpərti:/ . A bargain between a stranger and a party to a lawsuit by which the stranger pursues the party's claim in consideration of receiving part of any judgment proceeds; it is one type of "maintenance," the more general term which refers to maintaining, supporting, or promoting another person's litigation. Alexander v. Unification Church of America, C.A. N.Y., 634 F.2d 673, 677. "Maintenance" consists of maintaining, supporting, or promoting the litigation of another. See also Maintenance.

Champion. A person who fights a combat in his own cause, or in place of another. At common law, the person who, in the trial by battle, fought either for the tenant or demandant. One who acts or speaks in behalf of a person, or a cause; defender; an advocate.

Champion of the king or queen. In English law, an ancient officer, whose duty it was at the coronation to challenge "that if any man shall deny the king's title to the crown, he is there ready to defend it in single combat".

Chance. Absence of explainable or controllable causation; accident; fortuity; hazard; result or issue of uncertain and unknown conditions or forces; risk; unexpected, unforeseen, or unintended consequence of an act. The opposite of intention, design, or contrivance. See Act of God.

Chance bargain. The entering into a contract for better or worse, accompanied by the taking of chances as to the true facts and situation of the thing or article bargained about. Marr v. Lawson, 290 Ky. 342, 161 S.W.2d 42, 44.

Chancellor. The name given in some states to the judge (or the presiding judge) of a court of chancery. A university president, or chief executive officer of higher education system in certain states.

Chancellor of the Exchequer. In England, an officer who formerly sat in the Court of Exchequer, but now is minister who has control over national revenues and expenditures.

Lord High Chancellor. The highest judicial functionary in England. Also known as Lord Chancellor. Appointed by the Crown upon the advice of the Prime Minister, sits as Speaker of the House of Lords, a member of the Cabinet, and presides at appellate judicial proceedings.

Chance-medley. In criminal law, a sudden affray. This word is sometimes applied to any kind of homicide by misadventure, but in strictness it is applicable to such killing only as happens in defending one's self. 4 Bl. Comm. 184.

Chancer. To adjust according to principles of equity, as would be done by a court of chancery. The practice arose in parts of New England when the courts, without equity jurisdiction, were compelled to act upon equitable principles.

Chancery. Equity; equitable jurisdiction; a court of equity; the system of jurisprudence administered in courts of equity. See Court of Chancery; Equity.

Chance verdict. See Verdict.

Chandler Act. Federal act of 1938 making major amendments to Bankruptcy Act (11 U.S.C.A.). Included in amendments was provision for a debtor to arrange payments with creditors without total liquidation of debtor's assets. See Bankruptcy Code.

Change, n. An alteration; a modification or addition; substitution of one thing for another. Exchange of money against money of a different denomination.

Change, v. Alter; cause to pass from one place to another; exchange; make different in some particular; put one thing in place of another; vacate.

Change in accounting method. A change in the taxpayers method of accounting is an overall change in the plan of accounting, e.g. a change from the cash to the accrual method, or a change in the method of valuing inventories. Such change normally requires prior approval from the Internal Revenue Service. Generally, a request to the Internal Revenue Service must be filed within 180 days after the beginning of the taxable year of the desired change. In some instances, the permission for change will not be granted unless the taxpayer agrees to certain terms or adjustments which are prescribed by the Internal Revenue Service.

Change of beneficiary. A divesting of beneficial interest held by one person and a vesting of that interest in another.

Change of circumstances. In domestic relations law, condition used to show need for modification of custody or support orders. Betts v. Betts, 18 Or.App. 35, 523 P.2d 1055. With reference to custody issues, this term refers to a change relevant to the capacity of the moving party or custodial parent to properly take care of the child. It must be a change which was not contemplated at the time of the original decree and which has occurred since the last custody order and would enhance or have an adverse impact on the welfare of the child. Matter of Marriage of Padbury, 46 Or.App. 533, 612 P.2d 321, 322. This term is also used interchangeable with "changed circumstances."

Change of domicile. Change of abode or residence and intention to remain.

Change of grade. Usually understood as an elevation or depression of the surface of a street, or a change of the natural contour of its face so as to facilitate travel over it. It is essential that there shall have been a previously established grade and that a new grade be physically made.

Change of location. Removal or transfer from old to new location. Weber County v. Ritchie, 98 Utah 272, 96 P.2d 744. See Change of domicile; Change of venue.

Change of venue. The removal of a suit begun in one county or district to another county or district for trial, though the term is also sometimes applied to the removal of a suit from one court to another court of the same county or district. In criminal cases a change of venue will be permitted if for example the court feels that the defendant cannot receive a fair trial in a given venue because of prejudice. Fed.R.Crim.P. 21. In civil cases a change may be permitted in the interests of justice or for the convenience of the parties. 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 1404(a), 1406(a), 1631. See also Forum non conveniens; Plea of privilege; Venue.

Changer. In England, an officer formerly belonging to the king's mint whose business was chiefly to exchange coin for bullion brought in by merchants and others.

Channel. The bed in which the main stream of a river flows, rather than the deep water of the stream as followed in navigation. The deeper part of a river, harbor or strait. It may also be used as a generic term applicable to any water course, whether a river, creek, slough, or canal. The "channel" of a river is to be distinguished from a "branch".

A means of expression or communication.

Main channel. That bed of the river over which the principal volume of water flows. The main channel of a navigable stream, called for as a boundary between states, means the "thalweg", or deepest and most navigable channel as it then existed.

Natural channel. The channel of a stream as determined by the natural conformation of the country through which it flows. The floor or bed on which the water flows, and the banks on each side thereof as carved out by natural causes.

Chantry /chántri/. A church or chapel endowed with lands for the maintenance of priests to say Mass daily for the souls of the donors.

Chapel. A place of worship; a lesser or inferior church, sometimes a part of or subordinate to another church.

Chapel of ease. In English ecclesiastical law, a chapel built in aid of original church for parishioners who had fixed their residence at some distance.

Private chapels. Chapels owned by private persons, and used by themselves and their families.

Proprietary chapels. In English law, those belonging to private persons who have purchased or erected them with a view to profit or otherwise.

Public chapels. In English law, chapels founded later than the church for parishioners who fixed their residence at a distance; and chapels so circumstanced were described as "chapels of ease."

Chapelry /chápəlri/. The precinct and limits of a chapel. The same thing to a chapel as a parish is to a church.

Chapitre /cháp(ə)tər/. In English law, a summary of matters to be inquired of or presented before justices in eyre, justices of assise, or of the peace, in their sessions. Also articles delivered by the justice in his charge to the inquest.

Chaplain. A clergyman officially attached to a unit of the armed services, or to some public institution, for the purpose of performing religious services.

Chapman. An itinerant vendor of small wares. A trader who trades from place to place.

Chapter. In England, a body of dignitaries called canons attached to a cathedral church and presided over by a dean. This body constitutes the council of the bishop in both spiritual and temporal affairs. Also, a local branch of a society or fraternity.

Chapter 7 (liquidation) bankruptcy. See Bankruptcy proceedings (Straight bankruptcy).

Chapter 11 (reorganization) bankruptcy. See Bankruptcy proceedings (Business reorganizations).

Chapter 12 (farmer) bankruptcy. See Bankruptcy proceedings (Family farmer bankruptcy).

Chapter 13 (wage earner's) bankruptcy. See Bankruptcy proceedings (Wage earner's plan).

Character. The aggregate of the moral qualities which belong to and distinguish an individual person; the general result of the one's distinguishing attributes. That moral predisposition or habit, or aggregate of ethical qualities, which is believed to attach to a person, on the strength of the common opinion and report concerning him. A person's fixed disposition or tendency, as evidenced to others by his habits of life, through the manifestation of which his general reputation for the possession of a character, good or otherwise, is obtained. The estimate attached to an individual or thing in the community. The opinion generally entertained of a person derived from the common report of the people who are acquainted with him. Although "character" and "reputation" are often used synonymously, the terms are distinguishable. "Character" is what a man is, and "reputation" is what he is supposed to be in what people say he is. "Character" depends on attributes possessed, and "reputation" on attributes which others believe one to possess. The former signifies reality and the latter merely what is accepted to be reality at present. See Bad character; Good character; Reputation.

Class or division to which claim belongs.

Character and habit. The moral traits of a person gleaned from his habitual conduct. People v. Coleman, 19 Mich.App. 250, 172 N.W.2d 512. See Character.

Character evidence. Evidence of person's moral standing in community based on reputation.

Admissibility of character evidence in federal trials is governed by Fed.Evid. Rules 404 and 405, and with respect to witnesses by Rules 607-609.

Characterization. In conflicts, the classification, qualification, and interpretation of laws applicable to a case. Restatement, Second, Conflicts, § 7.

Character witness. See Witness.

Charge, v. To impose a burden, duty, obligation, or lien; to create a claim against property; to assess; to demand; to accuse; to instruct a jury on matters of law.

To impose a tax, duty, or trust. To entrust with responsibilities and duties (e.g. care of another). In commercial transactions, to bill or invoice; to purchase on credit. In criminal law, to indict or formally accuse.

Charge, n. An incumbrance, lien, or claim; a burden or load; an obligation or duty; a liability; an accusation. A person or thing committed to the care of another. The price of, or rate for, something. See also Charged; Charges; Floating charge; Rate; Surcharge.

Charge to jury. The final address by judge to jury before verdict, in which he sums up the case, and instructs jury as to the rules of law which apply to its various issues, and which they must observe. The term also applies to the address of court to grand jury, in which the latter are instructed as to their duties. See also Jury instructions.

General charge. The charge or instruction of the court to the jury upon the case, as a whole, or upon its general features and characteristics.

Special charge. A charge or instruction given by the court to the jury, upon some particular point or question involved in the case, and usually in response to counsel's request for such instruction.

Criminal law. In a criminal case, the specific crime the defendant is accused of committing. Accusation of a crime by a formal complaint, information or indictment.

Public charge. An indigent. A person whom it is necessary to support at public expense by reason of poverty alone or illness and poverty.

Chargeable. This word, in its ordinary acceptance, as applicable to the imposition of a duty or burden, signifies capable of being charged, subject to be charged, liable to be charged, or proper to be charged.

Charge account. System of purchasing goods and services on credit, under which customer agrees to settle or make payments on his balance within a specified time or periodically. See Consumer Credit Protection Act.

Revolving charge account. An arrangement between a seller and a buyer pursuant to which: (1) the seller may permit the buyer to purchase goods or services on credit either from the seller or pursuant to a seller credit card, (2) the unpaid balances of amounts financed arising from purchases and the credit service and other appropriate charges are debited to an account, (3) a credit service charge if made is not precomputed but is computed on the outstanding unpaid balances of the buyer's account from time to time, and (4) the buyer has the privilege of paying the balances in installments. Uniform Consumer Credit Code, § 2.108.

Charge and discharge. Under former equity practice, in taking an account before a master, a written statement of items for which plaintiff asked credit and a counterstatement, exhibiting claims or demands defendant held against plaintiff.

Charge back. The action of a bank in deducting or otherwise revoking a credit given to a customer's account, which credit usually has been given for a check deposited in the account. See U.C.C. §§ 4-212(1) (collecting bank's right of charge back) & 4-212(3) (payor bank's right of charge back).

Charged. Accusation of crime by complaint, indictment, or information. With respect to "notice", a person is charged with such if he has information sufficient to apprise him of the subject, e.g. under land recording acts, a person is charged with notice of a lien or attachment if it is on record.

Charge des affaires, or charge d'affaires /shàrzhéy deyz afér(z)/'dàfèr(z)/. The title of a diplomatic representative of inferior rank. In re Baiz, 135 U.S. 403, 10 S.Ct. 854, 34 L.Ed. 222.

Charge-off. Anything manifesting intent to eliminate an item from assets. Write-off of asset or other item, e.g. uncollectible account receivable or debt. To treat as a loss or expense an amount originally recorded as an asset; usually the term is used when the charge is not in accord with original expectations. See Bad debt.

Charges. The expenses which have been incurred, or disbursements made, in connection with a contract, suit, or business transaction. See also Charge; Costs; Fee; Fixed charges.

Charge-sheet. A record kept at a police station to receive the names of the persons brought and given custody, the nature of the accusation, and the name of the accuser in each case.

Charging lien. A lien is a charging lien where the debt is a charge upon the specific property although it remains in the debtor's possession. See Floor plan financing.

The right of an attorney to have expenses and compensation due for services in a suit secured to the attorney in a judgment, decree or award for a client. The lien attaches to judgment but relates back and takes effect from the time of the commencement of services rendered in the action. Miles v. Katz, Fla.App., 405 So.2d 750, 752.

Charging order. A statutorily created means for a creditor of a judgment debtor who is a partner of others to reach the debtor's beneficial interest in the partnership, without risking dissolution of the partnership. Uniform Partnership Act, § 28.

Charitable. Having the character or purpose of a charity. The word "charitable", in a legal sense includes every gift for a general public use, to be applied consistent with existing laws, for benefit of an indefinite number of persons, and designed to benefit them from an educational, religious, moral, physical or social standpoint. American Soc. for Testing and Materials v. Board of Revision of Taxes, Philadelphia County, 423 Pa. 530, 225 A.2d 557. This term is synonymous with "beneficent", "benevolent", and "eleemosynary". See also Charity; Eleemosynary.

Charitable bequest. A bequest is charitable if its aims and accomplishments are of religious, educational, political, or general social interest to mankind and if the ultimate recipients constitute either the community as a whole or an unascertainable and indefinite portion thereof.

Charitable contributions. Contributions of money, securities, etc. to organizations engaged in charitable purposes. Such contributions are deductible for tax purposes (subject to various restrictions and ceiling limitations) if made to qualified nonprofit charitable organizations. A cash basis taxpayer is entitled to a deduction solely in the year of payment. Accrual basis corporations may accrue contributions at year-end if payment is authorized by the Board of Directors prior to the end of the year and payment is made within time specified by I.R.C. before the end of the year. See also Charitable deduction; Charitable organizations.

Charitable corporation. Non-profit corporation organized for charitable purposes; i.e. for purpose, among other things, of promoting welfare of mankind at large, or of a community, or of some class forming part of it indefinite as to numbers and individuals and is one created for or devoted to charitable purposes. Lynch v. Spilman, 67 Cal.2d 251, 62 Cal.Rptr. 12, 18, 431 P.2d 636. Such corporations must meet certain criteria to receive tax "exempt" status. I.R.C. § 501(c)(3). See Charitable organizations, infra.

Charitable deduction. In taxes, a contribution to a qualified charity or other tax exempt institution for which taxpayer may claim a deduction on his tax return. I.R.C. § 170(c). Also applicable to trusts. I.R.C. § 512(b)(11). As regards tax exempt status of recipient organization, see Charitable organizations. See also Charitable contributions.

Charitable foundation. An organization dedicated to education, health, relief of the poor, etc.; organized for such purposes and not for profit and recognized as such for tax purposes under I.R.C. § 509(a). See also Charitable organizations, infra.

Charitable gift. See Charitable deduction, supra.

Charitable immunity. A doctrine which relieves a charity of liability in tort; long recognized, but currently most states have abrogated or restricted such immunity.

Charitable institution. One which dispenses charity to all who need and apply for it, does not provide gain or profit in private sense to any person connected with it, and does not appear to place obstacles of any character in way of those who need and would avail themselves of charitable benefits it dispenses. Distinctive features are that it has no capital stock or shareholders and earns no profits or dividends; but rather derives its funds mainly from public and private charity and holds them in trust for objects and purposes expressed in its charter. Methodist Old Peoples Home v. Korzen, 39 Ill.2d 149, 233 N.E.2d 537, 541, 542; People ex rel. Nordlund v. Association of Winnebago Home for Aged, 40 Ill.2d 91, 237 N.E.2d 533, 539.

Charitable organizations. As regards "exempt" tax status, such includes: "Corporations, and any community chest, fund, or foundation, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, testing for public safety, literary, or educational purposes, or to foster national or international amateur sports competition (but only if no part of its activities involve the provision of athletic facilities or equipment), or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual, no substantial part of the activities of which is carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting, to influence legislation (except as otherwise provided in subsection (h), and which does not participate in, or intervene in (including the publishing or distributing of statements), any political campaign on behalf of (or in opposition to) any candidate for public office." I.R.C. § 501(c)(3). See also Benevolent associations; Benevolent corporation; Charitable corporation; Charitable foundation; Charitable institution.

Charitable purpose. Term as used for purpose of tax exemption has as its common element the accomplishment of objectives which are beneficial to community or area, and usually recognized charitable purposes, not otherwise limited by statute, are generally classified as: relief of poverty; advancement of education; advancement of religion; protection of health; governmental or municipal purposes; and other varied purposes the accomplishment of which is beneficial to community. Bank of Carthage v. U. S., D.C.Mo., 304 F.Supp. 77, 80.

A gift is for charitable purposes if it is for religious, scientific, charitable, literary, or educational purposes under tax law. I.R.C. § 170(c)(4). These purposes are also required for a trust to qualify as a charitable trust.

See also Charitable deduction; Charitable use.

Charitable remainder. A gift over after an intervening estate to a qualified charity; qualifies as a tax deduction under certain conditions.

Charitable remainder annuity trust. A trust which must pay the noncharitable income beneficiary or beneficiaries a sum certain annually, or more frequently, if desired, which is not less than 5% of the initial net fair market value of all property placed in the trust as finally determined for federal tax purposes. I.R.C. § 664(d)(1). In re Danforth's Will, 81 Misc.2d 452, 366 N.Y.S.2d 329, 330.

Charitable trust. One in which property held by a trustee must be used for charitable purposes (advancement of health, religion, etc.). Fiduciary relationship with respect to property arising as a result of a manifestation of an intention to create it, and subjecting the person by whom the property is held to equitable duties to deal with the property for a charitable purpose. Restatement, Second, Trusts, § 348. See Charitable purpose.

Charitable use. Charitable uses are defined as those of religious, educational, political or general social interest to mankind, or as those for the relief of poverty, advancement of education or religion, or beneficial to the community generally. Thomason v. State, 245 C.A.2d 793, 54 Cal.Rptr. 229, 232. See also Charitable purpose.

Charity. A gift for, or institution engaged in, public benevolent purposes. A gift for benefit of indefinite number of persons under influence of religion or education, relief from disease, assisting people to establish themselves in life, or erecting or maintaining public works. Johnson v. South Blue Hill Cemetery Ass'n, Me., 221 A.2d 280, 287. A "charity", in absence of legislative definition, is attempt in good faith, spiritually, physically, intellectually, socially and economically to advance and benefit mankind in general, or those in need of advancement and benefit in particular, without regard to their ability to supply that need from other sources and without hope or expectation, if not with positive abnegation, of gain or profit by donor or by instrumentality of charity. Planned Parenthood Ass'n v. Tax Commissioner, 5 Ohio St.2d 117, 214 N.E.2d 222, 225. See also Benevolence; Benevolent; Charitable; Charitable organizations.

Public charity. A charity wherein the benefit is conferred on indefinite persons composing the public or some part of the public.

Charlatan /shárlætən/. One who pretends to more knowledge or skill than he possesses; a quack; a faker.

Charre of lead. A quantity consisting of 36 pigs of lead, each pig weighing about 70 pounds.

Chart. A map used by navigators.

Charta /kártə/. In old English law, a charter or deed; an instrument written and sealed; the formal evidence of conveyances and contracts. Also any signal or token by which an estate was held.

The term came to be applied, by way of eminence, to such documents as proceeded from the sovereign, granting liberties or privileges, and either where the recipient of the grant was the whole nation, as in the case of Magna Charta, or a public body, or private individual, in which case it corresponded to the modern word "charter."

In the civil law, a paper suitable for inscription of documents or books; hence, any instrument or writing.

See also Charter.

Charta communis /kártə kəmyúwnəs/. In old English law, an indenture; a common or mutual charter or deed; one containing mutual covenants, or involving mutuality of obligation; one to which both parties might have occasion to refer, to establish their respective rights.

Charta cyrographata /kártə kəyrowgráféytə/. In old English law, a chirographed charter; a charter executed in two parts, and cut through the middle (scinditur per medium), where the word "cyrographum," or "chirographum," was written in large letters. See Chirograph.

Charta de foresta /kártə diy foréstə/. A collection of the laws of the forest, made in the 9th Hen. III, and said to have been originally a part of Magna Charta.

The charta de foresta was called the Great Charter of the woodland population, nobles, barons, freemen, and slaves, loyally granted by Henry III, early in his reign (A.D. 1217). There is a difference of opinion as to the original charter of the forest similar to that which exists respecting the true and original Magna Carta (q.v.), and for the same reason, viz., that both required repeated confirmation by the kings, despite their supposed inviolability. This justifies the remark of recent historians as to the great charter that "this theoretical sanctity and this practical insecurity are shared with 'the Great Charter of Liberties' by the Charter of the Forest which was issued in 1217." It is asserted with great positiveness by Inderwick that no forest charter was ever granted by King John, but that Henry III issued the charter of 1217 (which he puts in the third year of the reign, which, however, only commenced Oct. 28, 1216), in pursuance of the promises of his father; and Lord Coke, referring to it as a charter on which the lives and liberties of the woodland population depended, says that it was confirmed at least thirty times between the death of John and that of Henry V.

Charta de una parte /kártə diy yúwnə pártiy/. A deed-poll; a deed of one part. Formerly used to distinguish a deed poll—that is, an agreement made by one party only—from a deed inter partes.

Charta partita /kártə partáytə/. A charter-party.

Charta de non ente non valet /kártə diy non éntiy non vələt/. A deed of a thing not in being is not valid.

Chartæ libertatum /kártiy libértéytəm/chártiy/. The charters (grants) of liberties. These are Magna Charta and Charta de Foresta.

Charta non est nisi vestimentum donationis /kártə non ést náysiy véstéméntəm dənəyshiyównəs/. A deed is nothing else than the vestment of a gift.

Chartarum super fidem, mortuis testibus, ad patriam de necessitudine recurrendum est /kartérəm s(y)úwpər fáydəm, mórtiyuwəs téstəbəs, əd pátriyəm diy nəsésətyúwdəniy rəkúréndəm ést/. The witnesses being dead, the truth of charters must of necessity be referred to the country, i.e., a jury.

Charte /shárt/. Fr. A chart, or plan, which mariners use at sea.

Chartel /kartél/. A variant of "cartel" (q.v.).

Charte-partie /shárt-partiy/. Fr. In French marine law. A charter-party.

Charter, v. To hire, rent or lease for a temporary use; e.g. to hire or lease a vessel for a voyage.

Charter, n. An instrument emanating from the sovereign power, in the nature of a grant, either to the whole nation, or to a class or portion of the people, to a corporation, or to a colony or dependency, assuring to them certain rights, liberties, or powers. Such was the "Great Charter" or "Magna Charta," and such also were the charters granted to certain of the English colonies in America.

A charter differs from a constitution, in that the former is granted by the sovereign, while the latter is established by the people themselves.

A city's organic law. Charter of municipal corporation consists of the creative act of incorporation, together with all those laws in force which relate to the incorporation, whether defining the powers of the corporation or regulating the mode of exercise thereof, and statute does not fail to become part of charter simply because it is not labeled as such. Opinion of the Justices, Del., 276 A.2d 736, 739.

An act of a legislature creating a business corporation, or creating and defining the franchise of a corporation. Under modern statutes, a charter is usually granted by the state secretary of state, who acts under general statutory authority conferred by the state legislature. Also a corporation's constitution or organic law; that is to say, the articles of incorporation taken in connection with the law under which the corporation was organized. The authority by virtue of which an organized body acts. A contract between the state and the corporation, between the corporation and the stockholders, and between the stockholders and the state. See Corporate charter.

Gross charter. Charter where ship owner provides all personnel and equipment and incurs other expenses such as port costs.

Time charter. Charter wherein vessel is leased for specified time rather than for specified trip or voyage. See also Time charter).

Chartered Life Underwriter (C.L.U.). A designation conferred by the American College of Life Underwriters in recognition of the attainment of certain standards of education and proficiency in the art and science of life underwriting.

Chartered ship. A ship hired or freighted; a ship which is the subject-matter of a charter-party.

Charterer. One who charters (i.e., hires, leases or engages) a vessel, airplane, etc. for transportation or voyage.

Charter-land. In English law, otherwise called "book-land." Property held by deed under certain rents and free services. It, in effect, differs nothing from the free socage lands, and hence have arisen most of the freehold tenants, who hold of particular manors, and owe suit and service to the same. 2 Bl.Comm. 90.

Charter-party. A contract by which a ship, or some principal part thereof, is let to a merchant for the conveyance of goods on a determined voyage to one or more places.

The term "charter party" or "charter agreement", often shortened to "charter," designates the document in which are set forth the arrangements and contractual engagements entered into when one person (the "charterer") takes over the use of the whole, or a substantial portion, of a ship belonging to another (the "owner").

Chartis reddendis /kártəs rədéndəs/. (For returning the charters.) An ancient writ which lay against one who had charters of feoffment intrusted to his keeping and refused to deliver them.

Chartophylax /kartófəlæks/. In old European law, a keeper of records or public instruments; a chartulary; a registrar.

Chase. To pursue or follow rapidly with the intention of catching or driving away. See Fresh pursuit.

In English law, the liberty or franchise of hunting, one's self, and keeping protected against all other persons, beasts of the chase within a specified district, without regard to the ownership of the land. The act of acquiring possession of animals feræ naturæ by force, cunning, or address. A privileged place for preservation of deer and beasts of the forest. It is commonly less than a forest and of larger compass than a park. Every forest is a chase, but every chase is not a forest. It differs from a park in that it is not inclosed, yet it must have certain metes and bounds. In old English law, a "common" chase was a place where all alike were entitled to hunt wild animals.

Chaste. Never voluntarily having had unlawful sexual intercourse.

Chaste character. Denoting purity of mind and innocence of heart; not limited merely to unlawful sexual intercourse.

Chastity. Purity; continence. Quality or state of being chaste. It means that virtue which prevents the unlawful intercourse of the sexes; the state of purity or abstinence from unlawful sexual connection.

Real chattels. Such as concern real property, such as leasehold estates; interests issuing out of, or annexed to, real estate; such chattel interests as devolve after the manner of realty. An interest in real estate less than freehold or fee. See also Fixture.

Chattel lien. Chattel liens exist in favor of persons expending labor, skill or materials on any chattel or furnishing storage thereof at request of owner, his agent, reputed owner, or lawful possessor. See e.g. Artisan's lien.

Chattel mortgage. A pre-Uniform Commercial Code security device whereby a security interest was taken by the mortgagee in personal property of the mortgagor. A transfer of some legal or equitable right in personal property or creation of a lien thereon as security for payment of money or performance of some other act, subject to defeasance on performance of the conditions. Such security device has generally been superseded by other types of security agreements under U.C.C. Article 9 (Secured Transactions). See Secured transaction; Security agreement.

Chattel paper. A writing or writings which evidence both a monetary obligation and a security interest in or a lease of specific goods. In many instances chattel paper will consist of a negotiable instrument coupled with a security agreement. When a transaction is evidenced both by such a security agreement or a lease and by an instrument or a series of instruments, the group of writings taken together constitutes chattel paper. U.C.C. § 9-105(1)(b). See Secured transaction; Security agreement.

Chaud-medley /shòwdmédli/. A homicide committed in the heat of an affray and while under the influence of passion; it is thus distinguished from chance-medley, which is the killing of a man in a casual affray in self-defense. It has been said, however, that the distinction is of no great importance. See Homicide.

Chauffeur. A person employed to operate and attend motor vehicle for another.

Chantry rents /chóntriy rénts/. In old English law, money paid to the Crown by the servants or purchasers of chantry-lands. See Chantry.

Chaussée /shòwséy/. Fr. A levee of earth, made to retain the water of a river or pond; a levee made in low, wet, and swampy places to serve as a road.

Cheat, v. To deceive and defraud. It necessarily implies a fraudulent intent. The words "cheat and defraud" usually mean to induce a person to part with the possession of property by reason of intentionally false representations relied and acted upon by such person to his harm. They include not only the crime of false pretenses, but also all civil frauds, and include all tricks, devices, artifices, or deceptions used to deprive another of property or other right. See Fraud.

Cheat, n. Swindling; defrauding. The act of fraudulently deceiving. See Fraud.

Cheats, punishable at common law, were such cheats (not amounting to felony) as were effected by deceitful or illegal symbols or tokens which may affect the public at large, and against such common prudence could not have guarded.

Cheaters, or escheators. In old English law, officers appointed to look after the king's escheats (q.v.), a duty which gave them great opportunities of fraud and oppression, and in consequence many complaints were made of their misconduct. Hence it seems that a cheater came to signify a fraudulent person, and thence the verb to cheat was derived.

Check, v. To control or restrain; to hold within bounds. To verify or audit, as to examine the books and records of another or a business for accuracy and proper accounting practices. Particularly used with reference to the control or supervision of one department, bureau, office, or person over another.

Check, n. A draft drawn upon a bank and payable on demand, signed by the maker or drawer, containing an unconditional promise to pay a sum certain in money to the order of the payee. State v. Perrigou, 81 Wash.2d 640, 503 P.2d 1063, 1066. U.C.C. § 3-104(2)(b).

The Federal Reserve Board defines a check as "a draft or order upon a bank or banking house purporting to be drawn upon a deposit of funds for the payment at all events of a certain sum of money to a certain person therein named or to him or his order or to bearer and payable instantly on demand." It must contain the phrase "pay to the order of."

Cashier's check. A bank's own check drawn on itself and signed by the cashier or other authorized official. It is a direct obligation of the bank. One issued by an authorized officer of a bank directed to another person, evidencing that the payee is authorized to demand and receive upon presentation from the bank the amount of money represented by the check. A form of a check by which the bank lends its credit to the purchaser of the check, the purpose being to make it available for immediate use in banking circles. A bill of exchange drawn by a bank upon itself, and accepted by the act of issuance. In its legal effect, it is the same as a certificate of deposit, certified check or draft. An acknowledgment of a debt drawn by bank upon itself. See also Certified check.

Memorandum check. A check given by a borrower to a lender, for the amount of a short loan, with the understanding that it is not to be presented at the bank, but will be redeemed by the maker himself when the loan falls due. This understanding is evidenced by writing the word "Mem." on the check.

Personal check. An individual's own check drawn on his own account.

Post-dated check. A check which bears a date after the date of its issue. Its negotiability is not affected by being postdated and it is payable on its stated date. U.C.C. § 3-114.

Traveler's check. See Traveler's check.

Checkerboard system. This term, with reference to entries on lands, means one entry built on another, and a third on the second.

Check kiting. Practice of writing a check against a bank account where funds are insufficient to cover it and hoping that before it is deposited the necessary funds will have been deposited. First State Bank & Trust Co. of Edinburg v. George, Tex.Civ.App., 519 S.W.2d 198, 204. Transfer of funds between two or more banks to obtain unauthorized credit from a bank during the time it takes the checks to clear. State v. Woodington, 31 Wis.2d 151, 142 N.W.2d 810, 820. In effect, a kite is a bad check used temporarily to obtain credit. See Bad check.

Chief Justice. The presiding, most senior, or principal judge of a court. Compare Associate justices.

Chief Justice of England. The title formerly given to the presiding judge in the Queen's Bench Division of the high court of justice, and, in the absence of the Lord Chancellor, president of the high court, and also an ex officio judge of the court of appeals. Now superseded by the "Lord Chief Justice of England" who is President of the Queen's Bench Division.

Chief Justice of the Common Pleas. In England, the presiding judge in the court of common pleas, and afterwards in the common pleas division of the high court of justice, and one of the ex officio judges of the high court of appeal. Office disappeared in 1881.

Chief justiciar /chíyf jəstishiyər/. In old English law, a high judicial officer and special magistrate, who presided over the aula regis of the Norman kings, and who was also the principal minister of state, the second man in the kingdom, and, by virtue of his office, guardian of the realm in the king's absence. 3 Bl.Comm. 38.

Chief lord. The immediate lord of the fee, to whom the tenants were directly and personally responsible.

Chief magistrate. The head of the executive department of government of a nation, state, or municipal corporation. The President is the chief executive of the United States.

Chief office. Office of paramount importance or the leading office.

Chief pledge. In old English law, the borsholder, or chief of the borough.

Chief rents. In old English law, the annual payments of freeholders of manors; also called "quit-rents," because by paying them the tenant was freed from all other rents or services. Abolished by Law of Property Act of 1922.

Chief use. In customs law, for purposes of determining the proper tariff classification, this refers to the use by users, as a whole, of the type of commodity involved, and not merely individual use. Gleeson v. U.S., 432 F.2d 1403, 1407, 58 C.C.P.A. 17.

Chiefrie. In feudal law, a small rent paid to the lord paramount.

Chief, tenant in. In English feudal law, all the land in the kingdom was supposed to be holden mediately or immediately of the king, who was styled the "Lord Paramount," or "Lord Above All," and those that held immediately under him, in right of his crown and dignity, were called his tenants "in capite" or "in chief," which was the most honorable species of tenure, but at the same time subjected the tenant to greater and more burdensome services than inferior tenures did. One who held directly of the king.

Child; Children. Progeny; offspring of parentage. Unborn or recently born human being. Wilson v. Weaver, 358 F.Supp. 1147, 1154. At common law one who had not attained the age of fourteen years, though the meaning now varies in different statutes; e.g. child labor, support, criminal, etc. statutes. The term "child" or "children" may include or apply to: adopted, after-born, or illegitimate child; step-child; child by second or former marriage; issue.

See also Delinquent child; Disobedient child; Foster child; Illegitimate child; Infancy; Juvenile; Minor; Neglected child; Person; Posthumous child; Pretermitted heir; Viable child. For negligence of child, see Parental liability.

Childs part. A "child's part," which a widow, by statute in some states, is entitled to take in lieu of dower or the provision made for her by will, is a full share to which a child of the decedent would be entitled, subject to the debts of the estate and the cost of administration up to and including distribution.

Illegitimate child. Child born out of lawful wedlock.

Legitimate child. Child born in lawful wedlock.

Natural child. Child by natural relation or procreation. Child by birth, as distinguished from a child by adoption. Illegitimate children who have been acknowledged by the father.

Posthumous child. One born after the father's death.

Quasi-posthumous child. In the civil law, one who, born during the life of his grandfather, or other male ascendant, was not his heir at the time he made his testament, but who by the death of his father became his heir in his life-time.

Rights of unborn child. The rights of an unborn child are recognized in various different legal contexts; e.g. in criminal law, murder includes the unlawful killing of a fetus (Cal.Penal Code § 187), and the law of property considers the unborn child in being for all purposes which are to its benefit, such as taking by will or descent. After its birth, it has been held that it may maintain a statutory action for the wrongful death of the parent. In addition, the child, if born alive, is permitted to maintain an action for the consequences of prenatal injuries, and if he dies of such injuries after birth an action will lie for his wrongful death. While certain states have allowed recovery even though the injury occurred during the early weeks of pregnancy, when the child was neither viable nor quick, Sinkler v. Kneale, 401 Pa. 267, 164 A.2d 93; Smith v. Brennan, 31 N.J. 353, 157 A.2d 497, other states require that the fetus be viable before a civil damage action can be brought on behalf of the unborn child. See, Viable child; Wrongful birth; Wrongful conception; Wrongful life.

Child abuse. Any form of cruelty to a child's physical, moral or mental well-being. Also used to describe form of sexual attack which may or may not amount to rape. Such acts are criminal offenses in most states. See also Abuse (Female child); Abused and neglected children; Battered child syndrome; Protective order.

for the purpose of acquiring the property at less than its fair value.

Chilling effect doctrine. In constitutional law, any law or practice which has the effect of seriously discouraging the exercise of a constitutional right, e.g. the right of appeal. North Carolina v. Pearce, 395 U.S. 711, 89 S.Ct. 2072, 23 L.Ed.2d 656. The deterrent effect of governmental action that falls short of a direct prohibition against the exercise of First Amendment rights. To constitute an impermissible chilling effect the constrictive impact must arise from the present or future exercise or threatened exercise of coercive power. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co. et al., C.A.D.C., 593 F.2d 1030, 1052; Sec. of State of Md. v. Joseph H. Munson Co., 467 U.S. 947, 104 S.Ct. 2389, 2847, 81 L.Ed.2d 786.

Chiltern hundreds /chiltərn hʌndrədz/. In English law, the offices of steward or bailiff of His Majesty's three Chiltern Hundreds of Stoke, Desborough, and Bonenham; or the steward of the Manor of Northsted. Chiltern Hundreds is an appointment under the hand and seal of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds is a nominal office in the gift of the crown, usually accepted by members of the house of commons desirous of vacating their seats. By law a member once duly elected to parliament is compelled to discharge the duties of the trust conferred upon him, and is not enabled at will to resign it. But by statute, if any member accepts any office of profit from the crown (except officers in the army or navy accepting a new commission), his seat is vacated. If, therefore, any member wishes to retire from the representation of the county or borough by which he was sent to parliament, he applies to the lords of the treasury for the stewardship of one of the Chiltern Hundreds, which having received, and thereby accomplished his purpose, he again resigns the office.

Chimin /chimən/. In old English law, a road, way, highway. It is either the king's highway (chiminus regis) or a private way. The first is that over which the subjects of the realm, and all others under the protection of the crown, have free liberty to pass, though the property in the soil itself belong to some private individual; the last is that in which one person or more have liberty to pass over the land of another, by prescription or charter. See Chemin.

See also Courts of Appeals, U.S.

Circuit paper. In English practice, a paper containing a statement of the time and place at which the several assises will be held, and other statistical information connected with the assises.

Circuitus est evitandus; et boni iudicis est lites dirimere, ne lis ex lite oriatur /sərkýwətəs èst èvətəndəs, et bównay júwdəsəs èst láytiyz dəríməriy, nìy láys èks láytiy òriyéytər/. Circuity is to be avoided; and it is the duty of a good judge to determine litigations, lest one lawsuit arise out of another.

Circuity of action. A complex, indirect, or roundabout course of legal proceeding, making two or more actions necessary in order to effect that adjustment of rights between all the parties concerned in the transaction which, by a more direct course, might have been accomplished in a single suit. Former problems of circuitry of action have been remedied by Rules of Civil Procedure.

Circular letter of credit. A letter authorizing one person to pay money or extend credit to another on the credit of the writer. Pines v. United States, C.C.A.Iowa, 123 F.2d 825, 828. See also Letter of credit.

Circular notes. Instruments, similar to "letters of credit," drawn by resident bankers upon their foreign correspondents, in favor of persons traveling abroad.

Circulated. A thing is "circulated" when it passes, as from one person or place to another, or spreads, as a report or tale. Willard v. State, 129 Tex.Cr.R. 384, 87 S.W.2d 269, 270.

Circulation. Transmission from person to person or place to place; e.g. interchange of money. Extent or degree of dissemination; e.g. total readers or issues sold of given publication.

Circumspecte agatis /sɜrkəmspɛktɪj əgɛjtəs/. The title of an English statute passed 13 Edw. I (1285) and so called from the initial words of it, the object of which was to ascertain the boundaries of ecclesiastical jurisdiction in some particulars, or, in other words, to regulate the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical and temporal courts. See Articles of the clergy.

Circumstances. Attendant or accompanying facts, events or conditions. Subordinate or accessory facts; e.g. evidence that indicates the probability or improbability of an event.

As used in a statute for an allowance for the wife in a divorce action, having regard to the "circumstances" of the parties, it includes practically everything which has a legitimate bearing on present and prospective matters relating to the lives of both parties. See also Change of circumstances.

See also Extenuating circumstances; Extraordinary circumstances.

Circumstantial evidence. Testimony not based on actual personal knowledge or observation of the facts in controversy, but of other facts from which deductions are drawn, showing indirectly the facts sought to be proved. People v. Yokum, 145 C.A.2d 245, 302 P.2d 406, 410. The proof of certain facts and circumstances in a given case, from which jury may infer other connected facts which usually and reasonably follow according to the common experience of mankind. Foster v. Union Starch & Refining Co., 11 Ill.App.2d 346, 137 N.E.2d 499, 502. Evidence of facts or circumstances from which the existence or nonexistence of fact in issue may be inferred. Inferences drawn from facts proved. Process of decision by which court or jury may reason from circumstances known or proved, to establish by inference the principal fact. It means that existence of principal facts is only inferred from circumstances. Twin City Fire Ins. Co. v. Lonas, 255 Ky. 717, 75 S.W.2d 348, 350.

The proof of various facts or circumstances which usually attend the main fact in dispute, and therefore tend to prove its existence, or to sustain, by their consistency, the hypothesis claimed. Or as otherwise defined, it consists in reasoning from facts which are known or proved to establish such as are conjectured to exist.

Circumstantibus, tales de. See Tales.

Ciric /kɪrək/. In Anglo-Saxon and old English law, a church.

Ciric-bryce /kɪrək-briyɔʃ/. Any violation of the privileges of a church.

Citaci6n /sɪtɔsi6n/. In Spanish law, citation; summons; an order of a court requiring a person against whom a suit has been brought to appear and defend within a given time. It is synonymous with the term emplazamiento in the old Spanish law, and the in jus vocatio of the Roman law.

Citatio /sɪtɔsi6n/. Lat. A citation or summons to court. See Citation.

Citatio ad reassumendam causam /sɪtɔsi6n əd ri:æsyuwmɛndəm kɔzəm/. A summons to take up the cause. A process, in the civil law, which issued when one of the parties to a suit died before its determination for the plaintiff against the defendant's heir, or for the plaintiff's heir against the defendant, as the case might be; analogous to a bill of revivor, which is probably borrowed from this proceeding.

Citatio est de juri naturali /sɪtɔsi6n ɛst di: juri nɔ:ti:re:ɪlaj/. A summons is by natural right.

Citation /sɪtɔsi6n/. A writ issued out of a court of competent jurisdiction, commanding a person therein named to appear on a day named and do something therein mentioned, or show cause why he should not. An order, issued by the police, to appear before a magistrate or judge at a later date. A citation is commonly used for minor violations (e.g. traffic violations); thus avoiding having to take the suspect into immediate physical custody. See also Citation of authorities; Cite.

Citationes non concedantur priusquam exprimat super qua re fieri debet citatio /sɪtɔsi6ni:z nɔn kɔnsɛdɛntər pri:æskwəm ɛksprɛmɛjtər sɔwpər kwɛy ri: fɔ:ri: dɛbɛt sɪtɔsi6n/. Citations should not be granted before it is stated about what matter the citation is to be made. (A maxim of ecclesiastical law.)

Citation of authorities. The reading, or production of, or reference to, legal authorities and precedents (such as constitutions, statutes, reported cases, and treatises), in arguments to courts, in legal textbooks, law review articles, briefs, motions, and the like to substantiate or fortify the propositions advanced. See also Cite.

Citations, law of. In Roman law, an act of Valentinian, passed A.D. 426, providing that the writings of only five jurists, viz., Papinian, Paul, Gaius, Ulpian, and Modestinus, should be quoted as authorities. The majority was binding on the judge. If they were equally divided the opinion of Papinian was to prevail; and in such a case, if Papinian was silent upon the matter, then the judge was free to follow his own view of the matter.

Citators. A set of books which provide, through letter-form abbreviations or words, the subsequent judicial history and interpretation of reported decisions. The citators also denote the legislative and amendment history, and cases that have cited or construed, constitutions, statutes, rules, regulations, etc. The most widely used set of citators is Shepard's Citations.

Cite. L. Fr. City; a city. Cite de Loundr', city of London.

Cite. To summon; to command the presence of a person; to notify a person of legal proceedings against him and require his appearance thereto. To read or refer to legal authorities, in an argument to a court or elsewhere, in support of propositions of law sought to be established. To name in citation. To mention in support, illustration, or proof of. See Citation; Citation of authorities.

Citizen. One who, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, or of a particular state, is a member of the political community, owing allegiance and being entitled to the enjoyment of full civil rights. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside. U.S.Const., 14th Amend. See Citizenship.

"Citizens" are members of a political community who, in their associated capacity, have established or submitted themselves to the dominion of a government for the promotion of their general welfare and the protection of their individual as well as collective rights. Herriott v. City of Seattle, 81 Wash.2d 48, 500 P.2d 101, 109.

The term may include or apply to children of alien parents born in United States, Von Schwerdtner v. Piper, D.C.Md., 23 F.2d 862, 863; U. S. v. Minoru Yasui, D.C.Or., 48 F.Supp. 40, 54; children of American citizens born outside United States, Haaland v. Attorney General of United States, D.C.Md., 42 F.Supp. 13, 22; Indians, United States v. Hester, C.C.A.Okl., 137 F.2d 145, 147; National Banks, American Surety Co. v. Bank of California, C.C.A.Or., 133 F.2d 160, 162; nonresident who has qualified as administratrix of estate of deceased resident, Hunt v. Noll, C.C.A.Tenn., 112 F.2d 288, 289. However, neither the United States nor a state is a citizen for purposes of diversity jurisdiction. Jizemerjian v. Dept. of Air Force, 457 F.Supp. 820. On the other hand, municipalities and other local governments are deemed to be citizens. Rieser v. District of Columbia, 563 F.2d 462. A corporation is not a citizen for purposes of privileges and immunities clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. D. D. B. Realty Corp. v. Merrill, 232 F.Supp. 629, 637.

Under the diversity statute, which mirrors U.S. Const. Article III's diversity clause, a person is a "citizen of a state" if he or she is a citizen of the United States and a domiciliary of a state of the United States. Gibbons v. Udaras na Gaeltachta, D.C.N.Y., 549 F.Supp. 1094, 1116.

Citizen-informant. An eye witness who, with no motive but public service, and without expectation of payment, identifies himself or herself and volunteers information to the police. People v. Press, Colo.App., 633 P.2d 489, 492.

Citizen's arrest. A private citizen as contrasted with a police officer may, under certain circumstances, make an arrest, generally for a felony or misdemeanor amounting to a breach of the peace. A private person may arrest another: 1. For a public offense committed or attempted in his presence. 2. When the person arrested has committed a felony, although not in his presence. 3. When a felony has been in fact committed, and he has reasonable cause for believing the person arrested to have committed it. Calif.Penal Code, § 837.

Citizenship. The status of being a citizen. There are four ways to acquire citizenship: by birth in the United States, by birth in U.S. territories, by birth outside the U.S. to U.S. parents, and by naturalization. See Corporate citizenship; Diversity of citizenship; Dual citizenship; Federal citizenship; Naturalization; Jus sanguinis; Jus soli.

City. A municipal corporation; in most states, of the largest and highest class. Also, the territory within the corporate limits. A political entity or subdivision for local governmental purposes; commonly headed by a mayor, and governed by a city council.

City council. The principal governmental body of a municipal corporation with power to pass ordinances, levy taxes, appropriate funds, and generally administer city government. The name of a group of municipal officers constituting primarily a legislative and administrative body, but which is often charged with judicial or quasi judicial functions, as when sitting on charges involving the removal of an officer for cause.

City courts. Court which tries persons accused of violating municipal ordinances and has jurisdiction over minor civil or criminal cases, or both.

City real estate. Property owned and used for municipal purposes. McSweeney v. Bazinet, 269 A.D. 213, 55 N.Y.S.2d 558, 561.

Civic. Pertaining to a city or citizen, or to citizenship.

Civic enterprise. A project or undertaking in which citizens of a city co-operate to promote the common good and general welfare of the people of the city.

Civil. Of or relating to the state or its citizenry. Relating to private rights and remedies sought by civil actions as contrasted with criminal proceedings.

The word is derived from the Latin civilis, a citizen. Originally, pertaining or appropriate to a member of a civitas or free political community; natural or proper to a citizen. Also, relating to the community, or to the policy and government of the citizens and subjects of a state.

As to civil Bail; Commitment; Commotion; Conspiracy; Contempt; Corporation; Death; Injury; Liberty; Obligation; Officer; Possession; Remedy; Right; and War, see those titles. See, also, the titles which follow.

Civil action. Action brought to enforce, redress, or protect private rights. In general, all types of actions other than criminal proceedings. Gilliken v. Gilliken, 248 N.C. 710, 104 S.E.2d 861, 863.

The term includes all actions, both those formerly known as equitable actions and those known as legal actions, or, in other phraseology, both suits in equity and actions at law. Thomason v. Thomason, 107 U.S. App.D.C. 27, 274 F.2d 89, 90.

In the great majority of states which have adopted rules or codes of civil procedure as patterned on the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, there is only one form of action known as a "civil action." The former distinctions between actions at law and suits in equity, and the separate forms of those actions and suits, have been abolished. Rule of Civil Proc. 2; New York CPLR § 103(a).

Compare Penal action.

Civil Aeronautics Board. The Civil Aeronautics Board, an independent regulatory commission, was originally established under the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938. Its functions were terminated or transferred to other agencies beginning in 1966, with remaining functions transferred to Transportation Secretary in 1985. See Federal Aviation Administration.

Civil authority clause. Provision in fire insurance policy protecting insured from damages caused by firemen, police, and other civil authorities.

Civil bail. A bond, deposit of money or of property, to secure the release of a person who is under civil arrest for failing to pay a debt which has been reduced to court order and its effect is to insure payment of such order. See also Bail.

Civil Code. See Code Civil.

Civil commitment. A form of confinement order used in the civil context for those who are mentally ill, incompetent, alcoholic, drug addicted, etc. as contrasted with the criminal commitment of a sentence. Also applicable to confinement for failing to pay a debt which has been converted to a court order for payment; the failure to pay being contempt of court. See also Commitment.

Civil conspiracy. A combination of two or more persons who, by concerted action, seek to accomplish an unlawful purpose or to accomplish some purpose, not in itself unlawful, by unlawful means. Lake Mortgage Co., Inc. v. Federal Nat. Mortgage Ass'n, 159 Ind.App. 605, 308 N.E.2d 739, 744. See Conspiracy.

Civil contempt. A species of contempt of court which generally arises from a wilful failure to comply with an order of court such as an injunction as contrasted with criminal contempt which consists generally of contumacious conduct in the presence of the court. Punishment for civil contempt may be a fine or imprisonment, the object of such punishment being compliance with the order of the court. Such contempt is committed when a person violates an order of court which requires that person in specific and definite language to do or refrain from doing an act or series of acts. Lichtenstein v. Lichtenstein, C.A.Pa., 425 F.2d 1111, 1113. It commonly consists of failing to do something ordered by the court in a civil action for the benefit of the opposing litigant, and the proceedings are instituted to compel or coerce obedience to the order or decree. Hoga v. Clark, 5 Dist., 113 Ill.App.3d 1050, 69 Ill.Dec. 736, 448 N.E.2d 196, 201. See also Contempt.

Civil Damage Acts. See Dram Shop Acts.

Civil death. The state of a person who, though possessing natural life, has lost all civil rights and as to them is considered civilly dead. Hiroko Kawakita Hayashi v. Lorenz, Cal.App., 258 P.2d 1039, 1042. In some states, persons convicted of serious crimes are declared to be civilly dead which means that certain civil rights and privileges of the convicted offender including the right to vote and contract and to sue and be sued are forfeited. See also Civil disabilities, infra.

A corporation which has formally dissolved or become bankrupt leaving an estate to be administered for the benefit of its shareholders and creditors becomes civilly "dead." In re Great Plains Royalty Corp., C.A.N.D., 471 F.2d 1261, 1265.

Civil disabilities. Apart from the sentence which is imposed upon a convicted offender, numerous civil disabilities are also often imposed. These disabilities, which adversely affect an offender both during his incarceration and after his release, include denial of such privileges as voting, holding public office, obtaining many jobs and occupational licenses, entering judicially-enforceable agreements, maintaining family relationships, and obtaining insurance and pension benefits. A form of civil disability resulting from a DWI conviction is the revocation or suspension of driver's license. See also Civil death.

Civil disobedience. A form of lawbreaking employed to demonstrate the injustice or unfairness of a particular law and indulged in deliberately to focus attention on the allegedly undesirable law. See Civil disorder.

Civil disorder. Any public disturbance involving acts of violence by assemblages of three or more persons, which causes an immediate danger of or results in damage or injury to the property or person of any other individual. 18 U.S.C.A. § 232. See also Riot.

Civil fraud. In taxation, the specific intent to evade a tax which taxpayer believes to be owing is an essential element of civil fraud. May also be applied to the tort of deceit or fraud in contrast to criminal fraud. See also Fraud.

Civilian. Private citizen, as distinguished from such as belong to the armed services, or (in England) the church. One who is skilled or versed in the civil law.

Civilis /sivələs/. Lat. Civil, as distinguished from criminal. Civilis actio, a civil action.

Civilista /sivəlistə/. In old English law, a civil lawyer, or civilian.

Civiliter /səvilətər/. Civilly. In a person's civil character or position, or by civil (not criminal) process or procedure. This term is used in distinction or opposition to the word "criminaliter,"—criminally,—to distinguish civil actions from criminal prosecutions.

Civiliter mortuus /səvilətər mórtyuwəs/. Civilly dead; dead in the view of the law. The condition of one who has lost his civil rights and capacities, and is considered civilly dead in law. See Civil death.

Civilization. A law, an act of justice, or judgment which renders a criminal process civil.

A term which covers several states of society; it is relative, and has no fixed sense, but implies an improved and progressive condition of the people, living under an organized government. It consists not merely in material achievements, in accomplishment and accumulation of wealth, or in advancement in culture, science, and knowledge, but also in doing of equal and exact justice.

Civil jury trial. Trial of civil action before a jury rather than before a judge. In suits at common law in Federal court where value in controversy exceeds $20.00, there is constitutional right to jury trial. U.S.Const., 7th Amend.; Fed.R.Civil P. 38. See also Jury trial.

Civil law. That body of law which every particular nation, commonwealth, or city has established peculiarly for itself; more properly called "municipal" law, to distinguish it from the "law of nature," and from international law. Laws concerned with civil or private rights and remedies, as contrasted with criminal laws.

The system of jurisprudence held and administered in the Roman empire, particularly as set forth in the compilation of Justinian and his successors,—comprising the Institutes, Code, Digest, and Novels, and collectively denominated the "Corpus Juris Civilis,"—as distinguished from the common law of England and the canon law. The civil law (Civil Code) is followed in Louisiana. See Code Civil.

Civil liability. The amenability to civil action as distinguished from amenability to criminal prosecution. A sum of money assessed either as general, special or liquidated damages; may be either single, double or treble for violations such as overcharges.

Civil liability acts. See Dram Shop Acts.

Civil liberties. Personal, natural rights guaranteed and protected by Constitution; e.g. freedom of speech, press, freedom from discrimination, etc. Body of law dealing with natural liberties, shorn of excesses which invade equal rights of others. Constitutionally, they are restraints on government. Sowers v. Ohio Civil Rights Commission, 20 Ohio Misc. 115, 252 N.E.2d 463, 476.

State law may recognize liberty interests more extensive than those independently protected by the Federal Constitution. Mills v. Rogers, 457 U.S. 291, 300, 102 S.Ct. 2442, 2449, 73 L.Ed.2d 16 (1982). See also Bill of Rights; Civil Rights Acts; Fundamental rights.

Civil nuisance. At common law, anything done to hurt or annoyance of lands, tenements, or hereditaments of another. See Nuisance.

Civil obligation. One which binds in law, and may be enforced in a court of justice.

Civil offense. Term used to describe violations of statutes making the act a public nuisance. Also describes an offense which is malum prohibitum and not considered reprehensible.

Civil office. A non-military public office; one which pertains to the exercise of the powers or authority of government.

Civil officer. See Officer.

Civil process. See Process.

Civil responsibility. The liability to be called upon to respond to an action at law for an injury caused by a delict or crime, as opposed to criminal responsibility, or liability to be proceeded against in a criminal tribunal.

Civil rights. See Civil liberties.

Civil Rights Acts. Federal statutes enacted after Civil War, and more recently in 1957 and 1964, intended to implement and give further force to basic personal rights guaranteed by Constitution. Such Acts prohibit discrimination based on race, color, age, or religion.

Civil rules. See Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

Civil servant. See Civil service.

Civil service. Term generally means employment in federal, state, city and town government with such positions filled on merit as a result of competitive examinations. Such employment carries with it certain statutory rights to job security, advancement, benefits, etc. See Civil Service Commission; Competitive civil service examination; Merit Systems Protection Board; Office of Personnel Management.

Civil Service Commission. The United States Civil Service Commission (CSC) was created by act of Congress on January 16, 1883. Authority is codified under 5 U.S.C.A. § 1101.

The Civil Service Act was designed to establish a merit system under which appointments to Federal jobs are made on the basis of fitness—as determined by open and competitive examination—rather than personal preference or political considerations. Over the years, additional legislation and Executive orders have broadened the Commission's role to include such Federal personnel management activities as job classification, status and tenure, pay comparability, awards, training, labor-management relations, equal employment opportunity, health and life insurance programs, and retirement. The Commission was reorganized and restructured under the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978. Among the features of the Reform Act were the establishment of an independent and equitable appeals process, protections against abuses of the merit system, and incentives for good work and skilled management. Additionally, the functions of the former Commission were divided between two new agencies—Office of Personnel Management and an independent Merit Systems Protection Board (q.v.).

Similar commissions exist in most states covering state and local public employment.

Civil side. When the same court has jurisdiction of both civil and criminal matters, proceedings of the first class are often said to be on the civil side; those of the second, on the criminal side.

Civil suits. See Civil action.

Civil trials. Trials of civil as distinguished from criminal cases.

Civil war. In general, any internal armed conflict between persons of same country. War Between the States in which Federal government contended against seceding Confederate states from 1861 to 1865. Also, in England, war between Parliamentarians and Royalists from 1642 to 1652.

Civil year. See Year.

Civis /sivəs/. Lat. In the Roman law, a citizen; as distinguished from incola (an inhabitant); origin or birth constituting the former, domicile the latter.

Civitas /sivətəs/. Lat. In the Roman law, any body of people living under the same laws; a state. Jus civitatis, the law of a state; civil law. Civitates foederatae, towns in alliance with Rome, and considered to be free. Citizenship; one of the three status, conditions, or qualifications of persons.

C.L. An abbreviation for civil law.

Clafin trust. A type of trust in which donor or settlor makes specific provisions for termination and the courts respect such provisions by denying the beneficiary the right to terminate. Called an indestructible trust, deriving its name from the case. Clafin v. Clafin, 149 Mass. 19, 20 N.E. 454.

Claim. To demand as one's own or as one's right; to assert; to urge; to insist. A cause of action. Means by or through which claimant obtains possession or enjoyment of privilege or thing. Demand for money or property as of right, e.g. insurance claim. U.S. v. Tieger, D.C.N.J., 138 F.Supp. 709, 710.

With respect to claims to a negotiable instrument of which a holder in due course takes free, the term "claim" means any interest or remedy recognized in law or equity that creates in the claimant a right to the interest or its proceeds.

Right to payment, whether or not such right is reduced to judgment, liquidated, unliquidated, fixed, contingent, matured, unmatured, disputed, undisputed, legal, equitable, secured, or unsecured; or right to an equitable remedy for breach of performance if such breach gives rise to a right to payment, whether or not such right to an equitable remedy is reduced to judgment, fixed, contingent, matured, unmatured, disputed, undisputed, secured, or unsecured. Bankruptcy Code, § 101.

In conflicts of law, a receiver may be appointed in any state which has jurisdiction over the defendant who owes a claim. Restatement, Second, Conflicts, § 369.

In patent law, a claim is an assertion of what the invention purports to accomplish, and claims of a patent define the invention and the extent of the grant; any feature of an invention not stated in the claim is beyond the scope of patent protection. Smith v. ACME General Corp., C.A.Ohio, 614 F.2d 1086, 1088.

See also Antecedent claim; Cause of action; Community debt; Complaint; Counterclaim; Cross-claim; False claim; Joinder; Liability; Liquidated claim; Third party complaint. For proof of claim, see Proof; for joinder of claims, see Joinder.

Claim adjuster. Independent agent or employee of insurance company who negotiates and settles claims against the insurer. See Adjuster; Claimant adjuster.

Claim and delivery. Action at law for recovery of specific personal property wrongfully taken and detained, with damages which the taking or detention has caused. A modification of common-law action of replevin. See also Replevin.

Claimant. One who claims or asserts a right, demand or claim. See Claim; Plaintiff.

Claimant adjuster. One who will obtain, secure, enforce, or establish a right, claim, or demand for an individual against an insurance company.

Claim check. Form of receipt for bailed or checked property, which normally must be surrendered when such property is recovered.

Claim in equity. In English practice, in simple cases, the summary proceeding by claim was sometimes adopted. This summary practice was created by orders 22d April, 1850. By Consolid.Ord.1860, viii, r. 4, such claims were abolished. See Equity jurisdiction.

Claim jumping. The location on ground, knowing it to be excess ground, within the staked boundaries of another mining claim initiated prior thereto, because law governing manner of making location had not been complied with, so that location covers the workings of the prior locators. Filing of duplicate mining claims hoping that prior claim will be invalid.

Claim of cognizance or of consuance. An intervention by a third person, claiming jurisdiction or demanding judicature in cause, which plaintiff has commenced out of the claimant's court. Now obsolete. 2 Bl.Comm. 350, note; 3 Bl.Comm. 298.

Claim of liberty. In English practice, a suit or petition to the queen, in the former court of exchequer, to have liberties and franchises confirmed there by the attorney general.

Claim of ownership, right and title. As regards adverse possession, claim of land as one's own to hold it for oneself. Claim of right, claim of title and claim of ownership are synonymous. Claimant's intention to claim in hostility to real owner. Color of title and claim of title are synonymous. Intention of disseisor to appropriate and use land as his own, irrespective of any semblance of color, or right, or title. See Adverse possession.

Claim of right doctrine. As contemplated under doctrine of adverse possession is simply that claimant is in possession as owner, with intent to claim the land as his or her own, and not in recognition of or subordination to record title owner. Sisson v. Koelle, 10 Wash.App. 746, 520 P.2d 1380, 1384. In taxation, a judicially imposed doctrine applicable to both cash and accrual basis taxpayers which holds that an amount is includible in income upon actual or constructive receipt if the taxpayer has an unrestricted claim to such amounts. A payment received under a claim of right is includible in income even though there is a possibility that all or part of it may have to be returned. North American Oil Consolidated v. Burnet, 286 U.S. 417, 52 S.Ct. 613, 76 L.Ed. 1197.

Claim preclusion. See Res (Res judicata).

Claim property bond. A bond filed by a defendant in cases of replevin and of execution to procure return of goods.

Claims Collection Act. Federal Act which requires that each agency of the federal government attempt to collect claims of the government (e.g. overpayments) arising out of the activities of the agency.

Claims court. See Claims Court, U.S.; Court of Claims; Small Claims Court.

Claims Court, U.S. This federal court was established in 1982 and succeeds to all the original jurisdiction formerly exercised by the Court of Claims, as now provided for in 28 U.S.C.A. 1491 et seq. The court has jurisdiction to render money judgments upon any claim against the United States founded either upon the Constitution, or any act of Congress or any regulation of an executive department, or upon any express or implied in fact contract with the United States or for liquidated or unliquidated damages in cases not sounding in tort. Judgments of the Court are final and conclusive on both the claimant and the United States subject to an appeal as of right to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit. Authority also rests with the court to furnish reports on any bill that may be referred by either House of Congress. Jurisdiction of the Court is nationwide, and jurisdiction over the parties is obtained when suit is filed and process is served on the United States through the Attorney General. See also Court of Claims; Tucker Act.

Clam /klám/. Lat. In the civil law, covertly; secretly.

Clam delinquentes magis puniuntur quam palam /klám dəlɪŋkwéntiəz méyʒəs pyüwniyántər kwəm pələm/. Those sinning secretly are punished more severely than those sinning openly.

Clamea admittenda in itinere per attornatum /kléymiyə ædməténdə in aytínəriy pər atörnétəm/. An ancient writ by which the king commanded the justices in eyre to admit the claim by attorney of a person who was in the royal service, and could not appear in person.

Clam factum id videtur esse, quod quisque, quum controversiam haberet, habiturumve se putaret, fecit /klám fæktəm id vədýtər ésiy kwöd kwiskwiy, kəm kòntrovérsh(iy)əm hóbíret, hãbət(y)ərémviy siy py-étérət, fíysət/. That appears to be covertly (secretly) done, which anyone did, when he had a legal dispute, or thought he would have one.

Clamor. In old English law, a claim or complaint; an outcry; clamor.

In the civil law, a claimant; a debt; anything claimed from another; a proclamation; an accusation.

Clam, vi, aut precario /klám, váy, òt prækériyow/. A technical phrase of the Roman law, meaning by force, stealth, or importunity.

Clandestine. Secret, hidden, concealed; usually for some illegal or illicit purpose. For example, a clandestine marriage is one contracted without observing the conditions precedent prescribed by law, such as publication of banns, procuring a license, or the like.

Clarendon, assize of /əsáyz əv klárəndən/. English statute (1166) the principal feature of which was an improvement of judicial procedure in the case of criminals. It was a part of the same scheme of reform as the Constitution of Clarendon.

Clarendon, constitutions of /kònstətyúwshənz əv klárəndən/. Certain statutes made in the reign of Henry II of England, at a parliament held at Clarendon (A.D. 1164), by which the king checked the power of the pope and his clergy, and greatly narrowed the exemption they claimed from secular jurisdiction. 4 Bl.Comm. 422.

Class. A group of persons, things, qualities, or activities, having common characteristics or attributes. In re Kanawha Val. Bank, 144 W.Va. 346, 109 S.E.2d 649, 670. The order or rank according to which persons or things are arranged or assorted. Securities having similar features. Also, a body of persons uncertain in number.

A "class" within rule relating to class action must be taken in broad colloquial sense of group of people ranked together as having common characteristics, and the function of the enumerated requirements of rule is to assure that from those characteristics there arises a common legal position vis-à-vis the opposing party, the legal right or obligations of which the court can efficiently and fairly adjudicate in a single proceeding. Ridgeway v. International Broth. of Elec. Workers, Local No. 134, D.C.Ill., 74 F.R.D. 597, 601.

Class action. See Class or representative action.

Class directors. System whereby terms of corporate board of directors are staggered, thus making takeover attempt difficult.

Classes of stock. Issuance of common stock in two or more general classes; e.g., Class A and Class B. Normally, only one class has voting rights. See Stock.

Class gift. A gift of an aggregate sum to a body of persons uncertain in number at time of gift, to be ascertained at a future time, who are all to take in equal, or other definite proportions, the share of each being dependent for its amount upon the ultimate number. In re Clarke's Estate, 460 Pa. 41, 331 A.2d 408, 410.

Classiarius /klāsīyēriyəs/. A seaman or soldier serving at sea.

Classici /klāsēsay/. In the Roman law, persons employed in servile duties on board of vessels.

Classification. Arrangement into groups or categories on the basis of established criteria. The word may have two meanings, one primarily signifying a division required by statutes, fundamental and substantial, and the other secondary, signifying an arrangement or enumeration adopted for convenience only.

Classification of crimes. A grouping of crimes. Taxonomy which may be based on the seriousness of the crime, e.g. felony or misdemeanor, or on the nature of the crime, e.g. malum prohibitum or malum in se, or on the objects of the crime, e.g. crimes against property or crimes against the person. Felonies and misdemeanors are also classified under federal statutes and sometimes in state statutes as Class A, B, etc., with punishments set for each class. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3559. Crimes are also commonly classified into degrees; e.g., first and second degree murder; and also as voluntary or involuntary (e.g. manslaughter). See also Degrees of crime; Offenses.

Classification of risks. Term used in fire insurance to designate the nature and situation of the articles insured, and in accident insurance to the occupation of the applicant.

Classified. Grouped into classes. See Classification.

Classified tax. Tax system where different rates are assessed to each group of property.

Class legislation. Legislation limited in operation to certain persons or classes of persons, natural or artificial, or to certain districts of territory or state. Legislation operating upon portion of particular class of persons or things.

The term is applied to enactments which divide the people or subjects of legislation into classes, with reference either to the grant of privileges or the imposition of burdens, upon an arbitrary, unjust, or invidious principle, or which make arbitrary discriminations between those persons or things coming within the same class. Such laws commonly violate equal protection guarantees of Fourteenth Amendment.

Class or representative action. A class action provides a means by which, where a large group of persons are interested in a matter, one or more may sue or be sued as representatives of the class without needing to join every member of the class. This procedure is available in federal court and in most state courts under Rule of Civil Procedure 23. See also New York C.P.L.R. § 901.

There are general requirements for the maintenance of any class suit. These are that the persons constituting the class must be so numerous that it is impracticable to bring them all before the court, and the named representatives must be such as will fairly insure the adequate representation of them all. In addition, there must be an ascertainable class and there must be a well defined common interest in the questions of law and fact involved affecting the parties to be represented. The trial court must also certify the lawsuit as a class action. Daar v. Yellow Cab Co., 67 Cal.2d 695, 63 Cal.Rptr. 724, 731, 433 P.2d 732.

Prior to the revision of Federal Civil Procedure Rule 23 in 1966, there were three categories of class actions, popularly known as "true", "hybrid", and "spurious." These categories no longer exist under present Rule 23.

Class voting. See Voting group.

Clause /klóz/. A single paragraph or subdivision of a pleading or legal document, such as a contract, deed, will, constitution, or statute. Sometimes a sentence or part of a sentence. See Paragraph.

Clause potestative. In French law, the name given to the clause whereby one party to a contract reserves to himself the right to annul it.

Clause rolls. In old English law, rolls which contain all such matters of record as were committed to close writs; these rolls are preserved in the Tower.

Clausula /klóz(h)yələ/. A clause; a sentence or part of a sentence in a written instrument or law.

Clausula derogativa /klózhələ dərōgətáyvə/. A clause in a will which provides that no will subsequently made is to be valid. The latter would still be valid, but there would be ground for suspecting undue influence.

Clausula inconsuetæ semper inducunt suspicionem /klózhəliy iŋkənswiytiy sémpər ənd(y)úwkənt səspishiyównəm/. Unusual clauses [in an instrument] always induce suspicion.

Clausula generalis de residuo non ea complectitur quæ non ejusdem sint generis cum iis quæ speciatim dicta fuerant /klózhələ jénaréyləs diy rəzidyuwow nòn iyə kəmpléktətər kwiy nòn əjəsdəm sint jénarəs kəm áyəs kwiy spəshiyéytəm dikta f(y)úwərənt/. A general clause of remainder does not embrace those things which are not of the same kind with those which had been specially mentioned.

Clausula generalis non refertur ad expressa /klózhələ jénaréyləs nòn rəfártər əd əksprəsə/. A general clause does not refer to things expressed.

Clausula quæ abrogationem excludit ab initio non valet /klózhələ kwiy əbrəgəyshiyównəm əkskl(y)úwdət əb ənish(iy)ow nòn vələt/. A clause [in a law] which precludes its abrogation is void from the beginning.

Clausula rebus sic stantibus /klózhələ ríybəs sik stántəbəs/. A tacit condition said to attach to all contracts meaning that they cease to be obligatory as soon as the state of facts out of which they arose has changed. This principle was used to demand payment on a contract value for value when the currency in which payment had been specified had become worthless through inflation/depreciation.

Clausula vel dispositio inutilis per præsumptionem remotam, vel causam ex post facto non fulcitur /klózhələ vəl dispəzish(iy)ow inyúwtələs pər prəzəm(p)shiyównəm rəmówtəm, vəl kózəm éks pówst fáktow nòn fəlsətər/. A useless clause or disposition [one which expresses no more than the law by intentment would have supplied] is not supported by a remote presumption [or foreign intentment of some purpose, in regard whereof it might be material], or by a cause arising afterwards [which may induce an operation of those idle words].

Clausum /klózəm/. Lat. Close, closed up, sealed. Inclosed, as a parcel of land. A writ was either clausum (close) or apertum (open). Grants were said to be by literæ patentæ (open grant) or literæ clausæ (close grant); 2 Bl.Comm. 346. Occurring in the phrase quare clausum fregit it denotes in this sense only realty in which the plaintiff has some exclusive interest, whether for a limited or unlimited time or for special or for general purposes.

Clausum fregit /klózəm frijət/. L. Lat. (He broke the close.) In pleading and practice, technical words formerly used in certain actions of trespass, and still retained in the phrase quare clausum fregit (q.v.).

Clausum paschiæ /klózəm pəskiyy/. In English law, the morrow of the utas, or eight days of Easter; the end of Easter; the Sunday after Easter-day.

Clausura /kləzhúra/. In old English law, an inclosure. Clausura heyce, the inclosure of a hedge.

Clavia /klévyiyə/. In old English law, a club or mace; tenure per serjeantiam claviæ, by the serjeanty of the club or mace.

Clawa. A close, or small inclosure.

Clayton Act. A Federal law enacted in 1914 as amendment to the Sherman Antitrust Act dealing with anti-trust regulations and unfair trade practices. 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 12-27. The Act prohibits price discrimination, tying and exclusive dealing contracts, mergers, and interlocking directorates, where the effect may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

Clean. Irreproachable; innocent of fraud or wrongdoing; free from defect in form or substance; free from exceptions or reservations. It is a very elastic adjective, however, and is particularly dependent upon context.

Clean Air Acts. Federal and state environmental statutes enacted to regulate and control air pollution. See e.g. 42 U.S.C.A. § 7401 et seq.

Clean bill. Bill of exchange without documents attached.

Clean bill of health. One certifying that no contagious or infectious disease exists, or certifying as to healthy conditions generally without exception or reservation. See Bill (Maritime law).

Clean bill of lading. One without exception or reservation as to the place or manner of stowage of the goods, and importing that the goods are to be (or have been) safely and properly stowed under deck. One which contains nothing in the margin qualifying the words in the bill of lading itself.

Clean hands doctrine. Under this doctrine, equity will not grant relief to a party, who, as actor, seeks to set judicial machinery in motion and obtain some remedy, if such party in prior conduct has violated conscience or good faith or other equitable principle. Franklin v. Franklin, 365 Mo. 442, 283 S.W.2d 483, 486. One seeking equitable relief cannot take advantage of one's own wrong. Fair Automotive Repair, Inc. v. Car-X Service Systems, Inc., 2 Dist., 128 Ill.App.3d 763, 84 Ill.Dec. 25, 471 N.E.2d 554, 558.

Clean Water Acts. Federal and state environmental statutes enacted to regulate and control water pollution. See e.g. 33 U.S.C.A. § 1251 et seq.

Clear. Obvious; beyond reasonable doubt; perspicuous; plain. Free from all limitation, qualification, question or shortcoming. Free from incumbrance, obstruction, burden, limitation, etc. Plain, evident, free from doubt or conjecture, unequivocal, also unincumbered. Free from deductions or drawbacks.

In banking, collection of funds on which check is drawn and payment of such funds to holder of check.

Clearance. In maritime law, the right of a ship to leave port. The act of clearing or leaving port. The certificate issued by the collector of a port evidencing the power of the ship to leave port. In contract for exhibition of motion pictures, the interval of time between conclusion of exhibition in one theater and commencement of exhibition at another theater. Waxmann v. Columbia Pictures Corporation, D.C.Pa., 40 F.Supp. 108, 111.

Clearance card. A letter given to an employee by his employer, at the time of his discharge or end of service, showing the cause of such discharge or voluntary quit-tance, the length of time of service, his capacity, and such other facts as would give to those concerned information of his former employment.

Clearance certificate. Issued to ship's captain showing that customs requirements have been made.

Clear and convincing proof. That proof which results in reasonable certainty of the truth of the ultimate fact in controversy. Lepre v. Caputo, 131 N.J.Super. 118, 328 A.2d 650, 652. Proof which requires more than a preponderance of the evidence but less than proof beyond a reasonable doubt. Clear and convincing proof will be shown where the truth of the facts asserted is highly probable. In re Estate of Lobe, Minn.App., 348 N.W.2d 413, 414. See also Beyond a reasonable doubt; Burden of proof; Clear evidence or proof.

Clear and present danger doctrine. Doctrine in constitutional law, first formulated in Schenck v. U. S., 249 U.S. 47, 39 S.Ct. 247, 63 L.Ed. 470, providing that governmental restrictions on First Amendment freedoms of speech and press will be upheld if necessary to prevent grave and immediate danger to interests which government may lawfully protect.

Speech which incites to unlawful action falls outside the protection of the First Amendment where there is a direct connection between the speech and violation of the law; this is the "clear and present danger test". People v. Winston, 64 Misc.2d 150, 314 N.Y.S.2d 489, 495.

Clear annual value. The net yearly value to the possessor of the property, over and above taxes, interest on mortgages, and other charges and deductions.

Clear annuity. The devise of an annuity "clear" means an annuity free from taxes or free or clear of legacy or inheritance taxes.

Clear chance. A "clear chance" to avoid accident with-in meaning of last clear chance doctrine involves the element of sufficient time to appreciate peril of the party unable to extricate himself therefrom, and to take necessary steps to avoid injuring him. Klouse v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 50 Wash.2d 432, 312 P.2d 647, 650. See also Last clear chance doctrine.

Clear days. If a certain number of clear days be given for the doing of any act, the time is to be reckoned exclusively, as well of the first day as the last.

Clear evidence or proof. Evidence which is positive, precise and explicit, which tends directly to establish the point to which it is adduced and is sufficient to make out a prima facie case. It necessarily means a clear preponderance. It may mean no more than a fair preponderance of proof but may also be construed as requiring a higher degree of proof. It may convey the idea, under emphasis, of certainty, or understood as meaning beyond doubt. See also Beyond a reasonable doubt; Clear and convincing proof.

Clearing. The departure of a vessel from port, after complying with the customs and health laws and like local regulations. See also Clearance; Clearance certificate.

In banking, a method of making exchanges and settling balances, adopted among banks and bankers. See Clearinghouse.

Clearing account. An account containing amounts to be transferred to another account(s) before the end of the accounting period.

Clearing corporation. A corporation, all of the capital stock of which is held by or for a national securities exchange or association registered under a statute of the U.S., such as the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. U.C.C. § 8-102(3).

Clearinghouse. An association or place where banks exchange checks and drafts drawn on each other, and settle their daily balances. See U.C.C. § 4-104(d).

With respect to a stock or commodities exchange, a facility which provides for the daily clearance of all transactions. With regard to futures transactions, a clearinghouse performs the following functions: confirms that trades made each day are acknowledged by both parties; settles amounts owed daily on futures contracts due to changes in contract prices during the trading session; insures the financial worth of all futures contracts that it has accepted.

Clearing loan. One made to a bond dealer while an issue of bonds is being sold.

Clearings. Method of making exchanges and settling balances among banks and bankers.

Clearing title. Acts or proceedings necessary to render title marketable.

Clear legal right. A right inferable as a matter of law from uncontroverted facts.

Clearly. Visible, unmistakable, in words of no uncertain meaning. Beyond a question or beyond a reasonable doubt; honestly, straightforwardly, and frankly; plainly. Without obscurity, obstruction, entanglement, confusion, or uncertainty. Unequivocal.

Clearly erroneous. For purposes of rule providing that findings of trial court shall not be set aside unless "clearly erroneous," refers to findings when based upon substantial error in proceedings or misapplication of law, Kauk v. Anderson, C.C.A.N.D., 137 F.2d 331, 333; or when unsupported by substantial evidence, or contrary to clear weight of evidence or induced by erroneous view of the law. Smith v. Porter, C.C.A.Ark., 143 F.2d 292, 294. As a basis for appellate review, a finding is "clearly erroneous" when, although there is evidence to support it, the reviewing court on entire evidence is left with definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed. United States v. United States Gypsum, 333 U.S. 364, 395, 68 S.Ct. 525, 542. See also Error.

Clearly proved. Proof by preponderance of the evidence. Olson v. Union Oil Co. of California, 25 Cal. App.2d 627, 78 P.2d 446, 447. Proof sufficient to satisfy mind of finder of facts that its weight is such as to cause a reasonable person to accept the fact as established. In re Frihauf, 58 Wyo. 479, 135 P.2d 427, 433. See Beyond a reasonable doubt; Clear and convincing proof.

Clear market price. Fair market price. See Fair market value.

Clear market value. Sum which property would bring on a fair sale by a willing seller not obliged to sell to a willing buyer not obliged to buy, or fair market value, or cash value. With regard to inheritance tax, highest price obtainable. See Fair market value.

Clear reflection of income. The Internal Revenue Service has the authority to redetermine a taxpayer's income using a method which clearly reflects income if the taxpayer's method does not do so. I.R.C. § 446(b). In addition, the I.R.S. may apportion or allocate income among various related business if income is not "clearly reflected". I.R.C. § 482.

Clear residue. Addition of income from funds, used to pay decedent's debts, administration expenses, and general legacies, to residue of estate.

Clear title. Good title; marketable title; one free from incumbrance, obstruction, burden, or limitation. Frank v. Murphy, 64 Ohio App. 501, 29 N.E.2d 41, 43. See Marketable title.

Clear title of record. Freedom from apparent defects, grave doubts, and litigious uncertainties. Such title as a reasonably prudent person, with full knowledge, would accept. Tull v. Milligan, 173 Okl. 131, 48 P.2d 835, 842. See Marketable title; Quiet title action.

Clear view doctrine. See Plain view doctrine.

Clemency /klémənsiy/. Kindness, mercy, forgiveness, leniency; usually relating to criminal acts. Used e.g. to describe act of governor of state when he commutes death sentence to life imprisonment, or grants pardon. See also Amnesty; Pardon; Reprimand.

Clementines /kléməntiynz/. In canon law, the collection of decretals or constitutions of Pope Clement V, made by order of John XXII, his successor, who published it in 1317.

Clement's inn. In English law, an inn of chancery. See Inns of chancery.

Clergy. The whole of clergymen or ministers of religion. Also an abbreviation for "benefit of clergy". See Benefit of clergy.

Clergyable. In old English law, allowing of, or entitled to, the benefit of clergy (privilegium clericale). Used of persons or crimes. 4 Bl.Comm. 371. See Benefit of clergy.

Clergyman. Member of the clergy. Spiritual representative of church.

Clergy privilege. Formerly, exemption given to clergy from being tried in civil courts because of availability of trial in canonical court. See Benefit of clergy.

Clerical. Pertaining to clergymen; or pertaining to the office or labor of a clerk. See also Clerk; Ministerial act.

Clericale privilegium /klèhrəkéyliy prīvəlyjijəm/. In old English law, the clerical privilege; the privilege or benefit of clergy.

Clerical error. Generally, a mistake in writing or copying. Los Angeles Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Corporation v. Los Angeles County, 22 Cal.App.2d 418, 71 P.2d 282.

It may include error apparent on face of instrument, record, indictment or information. In re Goldberg's Estate, 10 Cal.2d 709, 76 P.2d 508, 512; error in respect of matters of record, Shotwell v. State, 135 Tex.Cr.R. 366, 120 S.W.2d 97; errors, mistakes, or omissions by clerk, writer, counsel, or judge which are not the result of exercise of judicial function, Pacific Finance Corporation of California v. La Monte, 64 Idaho 438, 133 P.2d 921, 922; Wilson v. City of Fergus Falls, 181 Minn. 329, 232 N.W. 322, 323; failure of clerk to enter order, Keller v. Cleaver, 20 Cal.App.2d 364, 67 P.2d 131, 133; omission in statutory provision, Craig v. State, 204 Ark. 798, 164 S.W.2d 1007, 1008; order fixing tax rate below statutory rate, In re Jagnow's Estate, 148 Misc. 657, 266 N.Y.S. 785, 788; placing of case on calendar without notice, New England Furniture & Carpet Co. v. Willcuts, D.C. Minn., 55 F.2d 983, 987; purported order incongruous and irrelevant to surrounding recitals, Carpenter v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. of California, 14 Cal.2d 704, 96 P.2d 796, 799; signature by judge to judgment which does not express judicial desire or intention, Bastajian v. Brown, 19 Cal.2d 209, 120 P.2d 9, 12.

As applied to judgments and decrees is a mistake or omission by a clerk, counsel, judge or printer which is not the result of exercise of judicial function. In re Humboldt River System, 77 Nev. 244, 362 P.2d 265, 267.

Clerical errors may be corrected by the court at any time of its own initiative or on the motion of any party and after such notice, if any, as the court orders. Fed.R. Civil P. 60(a).

Clerical misprision. Mistake or fraud perpetrated by clerk of court which is susceptible of demonstration by face of record, or a clerical error, which is an error by clerk in transcribing or otherwise apparent on the face of the record. Ballew v. Fowler, 285 Ky. 149, 147 S.W.2d 65, 66.

Clerical tonsure. In old English law, the practice of having the head shaven, which was formerly peculiar to clerks, or persons in orders, and which the coifs worn by serjeants at law are supposed to have been introduced to conceal. 1 Bl.Comm. 24, note t; 4 Bl.Comm. 367.

Clerici de cancellaria; clerici de cursu /klèhrəsəy diy kənsəlériyə, 'kərs(y)uw/. Clerks of the chancery. See Cursitors.

Closing. As regards sale of real estate, refers to the final steps of the transaction whereat the consideration is paid, mortgage is secured, deed is delivered or placed in escrow, etc. Such closings, which normally take place at a bank or savings and loan institution, are regulated by the federal Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA). See Closing costs; Closing statement.

Closing argument. The final statements by the attorneys to jury or court summarizing the evidence that they think they have established and the evidence that they think the other side has failed to establish. Such is made before judge's charge to jury. Such does not constitute evidence and may be limited in time by rule of court.

In federal criminal cases, after the closing of evidence the prosecution opens the closing argument; the defense then replies. The prosecution is then permitted to reply in rebuttal. Fed.R.Crim.P. 29.1.

Closing costs. Expenses which must be paid in addition to the purchase price on the sale of real estate. Closing costs with respect to a debt secured by an interest in land include: (a) fees or premiums for title examination, title insurance, or similar purposes including surveys, (b) fees for preparation of a deed, settlement statement, or other documents, (c) escrows for future payments of taxes and insurance, (d) fees for notarizing deeds and other documents, (e) appraisal fees, and (f) credit reports. Uniform Consumer Credit Code, Section 1.301(5). The full disclosure of such costs is regulated by the federal Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA). See also Closing statement.

Closing entries. In accounting, the entries that accomplish the transfer of balances in temporary accounts to the related balance sheet accounts.

Closing estates. Winding up of estates by paying legacies and inheritances, taxes, and filing necessary probate accounts.

Closing statement. Written analysis of closing (i.e. final steps) of real estate transaction setting forth purchase price less deductions for such items as mortgage payoff, tax adjustments, etc. and adding credits to arrive at net amount due seller. Detailed statement is required under federal Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA). See also Closing; Closing costs; Settlement statement.

See Closing argument, supra, regarding closing statement at trial.

Cloture. Legislative rule or procedure whereby unreasonable debate (i.e. filibuster) is ended to permit vote to be taken.

Cloud on title. An outstanding claim or encumbrance which, if valid, would affect or impair the title of the owner of a particular estate, and on its face has that effect, but can be shown by extrinsic proof to be invalid or inapplicable to the estate in question. Best Inv. Co. v. Parkhill, Tex.Civ.App., 429 S.W.2d 531, 534. A conveyance, mortgage, judgment, tax-levy, etc., may all, in proper cases, constitute a cloud on title. Newpar Estates, Inc. v. Barilla, 161 N.Y.S.2d 950, 952. The remedy for removing a cloud on title is usually the means of an action to quiet title. See Quiet title action.

Coal note. A species of promissory note, formerly in use in the port of London, containing the phrase "value received in coals." By the statute 3 Geo. II, c. 26, §§ 7, 8, these were to be protected and noted as inland bills of exchange. But this was repealed by the statute 47 Geo. III, sess. 2, c. 68, § 28.

Coal notice. In Pennsylvania, every deed, agreement of sale, title insurance policy and other instrument with respect to sale or conveyance of surface land, excepting mortgages or quitclaim conveyances, must include a statutory coal notice in each case involving a prior or contemporaneous severance of title to coal or right of surface support under any part of such surface land.

Co-assignee. One of two or more assignees of the same subject-matter.

Coast. The edge or margin of a country bounding on the sea. The term includes small islands and reefs naturally connected with the adjacent land, and rising above the surface of the water, but not shoals perpetually covered by water. This word is particularly appropriate to the edge of the sea, while "shore" may be used of the margins of inland waters. In precise modern usage, the term "shore" denotes line of low-water mark along mainland, while term "coast" denotes line of shore plus line where inland waters meet open sea. U. S. v. State of La., La., 363 U.S. 1, 121, 80 S.Ct. 961, 997, 4 L.Ed.2d 1025, 1096.

Coast Guard. The Coast Guard is responsible for enforcing Federal laws on the high seas and navigable waters of the United States and its possessions. Navigation and vessel inspection laws are specific responsibilities. Under provisions of the Federal Boating Act of 1958, Coast Guard boarding teams inspect small boats to insure compliance with required safety measures. The Coast Guard cooperates with other agencies in their law enforcement responsibilities, including enforcement of drug, conservation and marine environmental laws.

Coasting trade. In maritime law, commerce and navigation between different places along the coast of the United States. Commercial intercourse between different districts in different states, different districts in same state, or different places in same district, on sea-coast or on navigable river. Shannon v. Streckfus Steamers, 279 Ky. 649, 131 S.W.2d 833, 836.

Coast waters. Tide waters navigable from the ocean by sea-going craft, the term embracing all waters opening directly or indirectly into the ocean and navigable by ships coming in from the ocean of draft as great as that of the larger ships which traverse the open seas. The Britannia, 153 U.S. 130, 14 S.Ct. 795, 38 L.Ed. 660.

Coastwise. Vessels "plying coastwise" are those engaged in domestic trade, or plying between port and port in the United States.

Coat of arms. Heraldic ensigns, introduced by Richard I from the Holy Land, where they were first invented. Originally painted on shields of the Christian knights who went to the Holy Land during the crusades, to identify them. See Insignia.

Cocaine. A white crystalline narcotic alkaloid extracted from coca leaves. Used as a local anesthetic. A "controlled substance" as included in narcotic laws.

Cocket. In English law, a seal belonging to the customhouse, or rather a scroll of parchment, sealed and delivered by the officers of the customhouse to merchants, as a warrant that their merchandises are entered; likewise a sort of measure.

Under the "co-conspirator exception" to the hearsay rule, acts and declarations of a co-conspirator made in furtherance of the conspiracy are admissible against a defendant even when they are made out of the defendant's presence. People v. Columbo, 118 Ill.App.3d 882, 74 Ill.Dec. 304, 455 N.E.2d 733, 779. See also Wharton Rule.

Cocotte /kəkòt/. A prostitute.

C. O. D. "Collect on delivery." These letters import the carrier's liability to the consignor to collect the cost of the goods from the consignee, and, if not collected, to return the goods to the consignor.

Code. A systematic collection, compendium or revision of laws, rules, or regulations (e.g., Uniform Commercial Code). A private or official compilation of all permanent laws in force consolidated and classified according to subject matter (e.g. United States Code). Many states have published official codes of all laws in force, including the common law and statutes as judicially interpreted, which have been compiled by code commissions and enacted by the legislatures (e.g. California Codes). See also Codification.

Code Civil. The code which embodies the civil law of France. It was promulgated in 1804. When Napoleon became emperor, the name was changed to "Code Napoleon," by which it is still often designated though it is now officially styled by its original name of "Code Civil." A great part of the Louisiana Civil Code is derived from the Code Napoleon.

Code de commerce. A French code, enacted in 1807, as a supplement to the Code Napoleon, regulating commercial transactions, the laws of business, bankruptcies, and the jurisdiction and procedure of the courts dealing with these subjects.

Code de procedure civil. That part of the Code Napoleon which regulates the system of courts, their organization, civil procedure, special and extraordinary remedies, and the execution of judgments.

Code d'instruction criminelle. A French code, enacted in 1808, regulating criminal procedure.

Code noir. The black code. A body of laws which formerly regulated the institution of slavery in the French colonies.

Code of Justinian. The Code of Justinian (Codex Justinianus) was a collection of imperial constitutions, compiled, by order of that emperor, by a commission, and promulgated A.D. 529. It comprised twelve books, and was the first of the four compilations of law which make up the Corpus Juris Civilis. This name is often met in a connection indicating that the entire Corpus Juris Civilis is intended, or, sometimes, the Digest; but its use should be confined to the Codex.

Code penal. The penal or criminal code of France, enacted in 1810. See also Criminal law; Penal code.

Co-defendant. More than one defendant being sued in the same litigation; or, more than one person charged in same complaint or indictment with same crime.

Code Napoleon. See Code Civil.

Code of criminal procedure. Body of federal or state law dealing with procedural aspects of trial of criminal cases; e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3001 et seq. Such procedural laws are supplemented by Rules of Criminal Procedure and Rules of Evidence.

Code of ethics. See Code of Professional Responsibility.

Code of Federal Regulations. The Code of Federal Regulations (CFR) is the annual cumulation of executive agency regulations published in the daily Federal Register, combined with regulations issued previously that are still in effect. Divided into 50 titles, each representing a broad subject area, individual volumes of the Code of Federal Regulations are revised at least once each calendar year and issued on a staggered quarterly basis. The CFR contains the general body of regulatory laws governing practice and procedure before federal administrative agencies.

Code of Military Justice. This Code, which is uniformly applicable in all its parts to the Army, the Navy, the Air Force, and the Coast Guard, covers both the substantive and the procedural law governing military justice and its administration in all of the armed forces of the United States. The Code established a system of military courts, defines offenses, authorizes punishment, provides broad procedural guidance, and statutory safeguards which conform to the due process safeguards preserved and established by the constitution. As an additional safeguard for an accused person, the Code also provides for a system of automatic appellate review. A Court of Military Review is established within each service to review all court-martial cases where the sentence includes death, a punitive discharge, or confinement for one year or more. Appellate review in this court is automatic. No approved sentence of a court-martial may be executed unless such findings and sentence are affirmed by a Court of Military Review. In addition, the Court of Military Appeals was established to review certain cases from all the Armed Forces. The latter Court consists of three civilian judges. Automatic review before the Court is provided for all cases in which the sentence, as affirmed by a Court of Military Review, affects a general or flag officer or extends to death. In addition, the Judge Advocate General of each service may direct that a case be reviewed by the Court. An accused may petition the Court for review. 10 U.S.C.A. § 801 et seq.

Uniform Code. Many states have adopted the Uniform Code of Military Justice, and others have adopted acts substantially following the Uniform Code.

Code of Professional Responsibility. The Model Code of Professional Responsibility of the American Bar Association consisted of basic Canons of professional conduct for attorneys together with Ethical Considerations and Disciplinary Rules for each Canon covering specific attorney conduct. Most states adopted similar professional responsibility codes as based on the ABA model. In 1983 the ABA replaced the Code of Professional Responsibility with the Model Rules of Professional Conduct. See also Canon; Disciplinary rules; Model Rules of Professional Conduct.

Code pleading. See Pleadings.

Codex. Lat. A code or collection of laws; particularly the Code of Justinian. Also a roll of volume, and a book written on paper or parchment.

Codex Gregorianus /kówdèks grəgòriyéynəs/. A collection of imperial constitutions made by Gregorius, a Roman jurist of the fifth century, about the middle of the century. It contained the constitutions from Hadrian down to Constantine.

Codex Hermogenianus /kówdèks hərmajiniyéynəs/. A collection of imperial constitutions made by Hermogenes, a jurist of the fifth century. It was nothing more than a supplement to the Codex Gregorianus (supra), containing the constitutions of Diocletian and Maximilian.

Codex Justinianus /kówdèks jəstiniyéyn(iy)əs/. A collection of imperial constitutions, made by a commission of ten persons appointed by Justinian, A.D. 528.

Codex Repetitæ Prælectionis /kówdèks rəpətishiyi prələkshiyównəs/. The new code of Justinian; or the new edition of the first or old code, promulgated A.D. 534, being the one now extant.

Codex Theodosianus /kówdèks θiyədóws(h)iyéynəs/. A code compiled by the emperor Theodosius the younger, A.D. 438. 1 Bl.Comm. 81. It was a collection of all the imperial constitutions then in force. It was the only body of civil law publicly received as authentic in the western part of Europe till the twelfth century, the use and authority of the Code of Justinian being during that interval confined to the East. 1 Bl.Comm. 81.

Codex Vetus /kówdèks viytəs/. The old code. The first edition of the Code of Justinian; now lost.

Codicil. A supplement or an addition to a will; it may explain, modify, add to, subtract from, qualify, alter, restrain or revoke provisions in existing will. Such does not purport to dispose of entire estate or to contain the entire will of testator, nor does it ordinarily expressly or by necessary implication revoke in toto a prior will. In re Crooke Estate, 388 Pa. 125, 130 A.2d 185, 187.

Codicillus /kòdəsíləs/. In the Roman law, a codicil; an informal and inferior kind of will, in use among the Romans.

Codification /kòdəfəkéyshən/. The process of collecting and arranging systematically, usually by subject, the laws of a state or country, or the rules and regulations covering a particular area or subject of law or practice; e.g. United States Code; Code of Military Justice; Code of Federal Regulations; California Evidence Code. The end product may be called a code, revised code or revised statutes. See also Code; Compilation; Compiled statutes.

Coemptio /kowém(p)shiyow/. One of the modes in which marriage was contracted among the Romans.

Co-emption. The act of purchasing the whole quantity of any commodity.

Co-equal. To be or become equal to. To have the same quantity, the same value, the same degree or rank, or the like, with. To be commensurate with. State ex rel. Com'rs of Land Office v. Board of Com'rs of Nowata County, 166 Okl. 78, 25 P.2d 1074, 1077.

Coerce /kowárs/. Compelled to compliance; constrained to obedience, or submission in a vigorous or forcible manner. See Coercion.

Coercion /kowárshən/. Compulsion; constraint; compelling by force or arms or threat. General Motors v. Blevins, D.C. Colo., 144 F.Supp. 381, 384. It may be actual, direct, or positive, as where physical force is used to compel act against one's will, or implied, legal or constructive, as where one party is constrained by subjugation to other to do what his free will would refuse. As used in testamentary law, any pressure by which testator's action is restrained against his free will in the execution of his testament. "Coercion" that vitiates confession can be mental as well as physical, and question is whether accused was deprived of his free choice to admit, deny, or refuse to answer. Garrity v. State of N. J., U.S.N.J., 385 U.S. 493, 87 S.Ct. 616, 618, 17 L.Ed.2d 562.

A person is guilty of criminal coercion if, with purpose to unlawfully restrict another's freedom of action to his detriment, he threatens to: (a) commit any criminal offense; or (b) accuse anyone of a criminal offense; or (c) expose any secret tending to subject any person to hatred, contempt or ridicule, or to impair his credit or business repute; or (d) take or withhold action as an official, or cause an official to take or withhold action. Model Penal Code, § 212.5.

See also Duress; Extortion; Threat; Undue influence.

Co-executor. One who is a joint executor of an estate with one or more others. See also Joint executors.

Cofferer of the queen's household /kófərər əv ðə kwíynz háws-howld/. In English law, a principal officer of the royal establishment, next under the controller, who, in the countinghouse and elsewhere, had a special charge and oversight of the other officers, whose wages he paid.

Cogitationis pœnam nemo patitur /kòjtèyshiyówns piynəm niymow pædtər/. No one is punished for his thoughts.

Cognate offense. An offense which contains some elements not contained in the greater offense but which is related to the greater offense by fact that it shares several of the elements of the greater offense and is of the same class or category. People v. Ross, 73 Mich. App. 588, 252 N.W.2d 526, 528.

Cognati /kògnéytay/. Lat. In the civil law, cognates; relations by the mother's side. 2 Bl.Comm. 235. Relations in the line of the mother. Relations by or through females.

Cognatio /kògnéysh(iy)ow/. Lat. In the civil law, cognation; relationship, or kindred generally. Relationship through females, as distinguished from agnatio, or relationship through males. Agnatio a patre sit, cognatio a matre. See Agnatio.

In canon law, consanguinity, as distinguished from affinity. Consanguinity, as including affinity.

Cognation /kògnéyshən/. In the civil law, signifies generally the kindred which exists between two persons who are united by ties of blood or family, or both.

Civil cognation is that which proceeds alone from the ties of families, as the kindred between the adopted father and the adopted child.

Mixed cognation is that which unites at the same time the ties of blood and family, as that which exists between brothers the issue of the same lawful marriage.

Natural cognation is that which is alone formed by ties of blood; such is the kindred of those who owe their origin to an illicit connection, either in relation to their ascendants or collaterals.

Cognatus /kògnéytəs/. Lat. In the civil law, a relation by the mother's side; a cognate. A relation, or kinsman, generally.

Cognitio /kògnísh(iy)ow/. In old English law, the acknowledgment of a fine; the certificate of such acknowledgment. In the Roman law, the judicial examination or hearing of a cause.

Cognitiones /kognishiyówniyz/. Ensigns and arms, or a military coat painted with arms.

Cognitionibus mittendis /kognishiyównəbəs məténdəs/. In English law, a writ to a justice of the common pleas, or other, who has power to take a fine, who, having taken the fine, defers to certify it, commanding him to certify it. Now abolished.

Cognitive. The mental process of comprehension, judgment, memory and reasoning, as opposed to emotional and volitional processes.

Cognitor /kògnətər/. In the Roman law, an advocate or defender in a private cause; one who defended the cause of a person who was present.

Cognizable /kò(g)nəzəbəl/. Capable of being tried or examined before a designated tribunal; within jurisdiction of court or power given to court to adjudicate controversy. Samuel Goldwyn, Inc. v. United Artists Corporation, C.C.A.Del., 113 F.2d 703, 707.

In criminal law, for a group to be "cognizable" so as to render jury selection process which excludes such group unconstitutional, the group must have a definite composition. Wilkins v. State, 16 Md.App. 587, 300 A.2d 411, 415. The defendant must show that the group is defined and limited by some factor, that a common thread or basic similarity in attitude or ideas or experience runs through the group, and that there is a community of interest among members of the group such that the group's interests cannot be adequately represented if the group is excluded from the jury selection process. U.S. v. Gruberg, D.C.N.Y., 493 F.Supp. 234, 245.

Cognizance /kò(g)nəzən(t)s/. Jurisdiction, or the exercise of jurisdiction, or power to try and determine causes; judicial examination of a matter, or power and authority to make it. Judicial notice or knowledge; the judicial hearing of a cause; acknowledgment; confession; recognition.

Claim of cognizance or of consuance. See Claim of cognizance or of consuance.

Judicial cognizance. See Judicial.

Cognizee /kògnəziy/. The party to whom a fine was levied. 2 Bl.Comm. 351.

Cognizor /kògnəzər/. In old conveyancing, the party levying a fine. 2 Bl.Comm. 350, 351.

Cognomen /kògnówmən/. In English law, a surname. A name added to the nomen proper, or name of the individual; a name descriptive of the family.

In Roman law, a man's family name.

The first name (prænomen) was the proper name of the individual; the second (nomen) indicated the gens or tribe to which he belonged; while the third (cognomen) denoted his family or house. The agnomen was added on account of some particular event, as a further distinction.

Cognomen majorum est ex sanguine tractum, hoc intrinsecum est; agnomen extrinsecum ab eventu /kògnówmən məjórəm èst èks sǎngwǎniy trǎktəm, hók intrinzəkəm èst; əgnówmən ekstrinzəkəm, èks əvént(y)uw/. The cognomen is derived from the blood of ancestors, and is intrinsic; an agnomen arises from an event, and is extrinsic.

Cognovit actionem /kògnóvvət əkshiyównəm/. (He has confessed the action). A defendant's written confession of action against him. It is usually upon condition; is supposed to be given in court; and impliedly authorizes plaintiff's attorney to sign judgment and issue execution.

Cognovit judgment /kògnóvvət/. Confession of judgment by debtor. Written authority of debtor and his direction for entry of judgment against him in the event he shall default in payment. Such provision in a debt instrument or agreement permits the creditor or his attorney on default to appear in court and confers judgment against the debtor. Such agreements are prohibited, or greatly restricted, in many states; though, where permitted, the constitutionality of such has been upheld. D. H. Overmyer Co., Inc. v. Frick Co., 405 U.S. 174, 92 S.Ct. 775, 31 L.Ed.2d 124. See Cognovit note; Judgment (Confession of judgment).

Cognovit note. An extraordinary note which authorizes an attorney to confess judgment against person or persons signing it. It is written authority of a debtor and a direction by him for entry of a judgment against him if obligation set forth in note is not paid when due. Such judgment may be taken by any person holding the note, which cuts off every defense which maker of note may otherwise have and it likewise cuts off all rights of appeal from any judgment taken on it. Jones v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., D.C.Mich., 289 F.Supp. 930, 935. See Cognovit judgment; Judgment (Confession of judgment).

C.O.G.S.A. See Carriage of Goods by Sea Act.

Cohabitation. To live together as husband and wife. The mutual assumption of those marital rights, duties and obligations which are usually manifested by married people, including but not necessarily dependent on sexual relations. Boyd v. Boyd, 228 Cal.App. 374, 39 Cal.Rptr. 400, 404. See also Notorious cohabitation; Palimony.

Cohabitation agreement. Contract between a man and a woman who are living together in contemplation of sexual relations and out of wedlock, relating to the property and financial relations of the parties. MN.ST. §§ 513.075, 513.076.

Cohæredes una persona censentur, propter unitatem juris quod habent /kôwhîrædiy zúwnə pərsównə sənsəntər, prôptər yúwnətétəm júrs kwòd héybənt/. Co-heirs are deemed as one person, on account of the unity of right which they possess.

Cohan Rule. Taxpayer is required to substantiate by accurate records or by sufficient evidence his claim for deduction for travel, entertainment and business gifts. I.R.C. § 274(d) (1962 Act); Cohan v. Commissioner, C.C. A.N.Y., 39 F.2d 540. Where part of expenditures by taxpayers that are of deductible nature as ordinary and necessary business expense are unidentifiable, 50% of expenditures are allowed as deduction. Poletti v. C. I. R., C.A.Mo., 351 F.2d 345, 349.

Co-heir. One of several to whom an inheritance descends.

Co-heiress. A joint heiress. A woman who has an equal share of an inheritance with another woman.

Cohort analysis. A method used in employment discrimination suits to test for race discrimination whereby all employees who start together at the same level are surveyed over the course of an observation period and their comparative progress in salary and promotion is evaluated. Segar v. Smith, C.A., 738 F.2d 1249, 1285, 238 U.S.App.D.C. 103.

Coif /kóyf/. A title given to serjeants at law, who are called "serjeants of the coif," from the coif they wear on their heads. The use of this coif at first was to cover the clerical tonsure, many of the practicing serjeants being clergymen who had abandoned their profession. It was a thin linen cover, gathered together in the form of a skull or helmet; the material being afterwards changed into white silk, and the form eventually into the black patch at the top of the forensic wig, which is now the distinguishing mark of the degree of serjeant at law.

Order of the coif. Honorary legal fraternity made up of law students with high standing in law school class.

Coin, v. To fashion pieces of metal into a prescribed shape, weight, and degree of fineness, and stamp them with prescribed devices, by authority of government, in order that they may circulate as money. Legal Tender Cases, 79 U.S. 457, 12 Wall. 457, 20 L.Ed. 287; Thayer v. Hedges, 22 Ind. 282. To invent words or phrases.

Coin, n. Pieces of gold, silver, or other metal, fashioned into a prescribed shape, weight, and degree of fineness, and stamped, by authority of government, with certain marks and devices, and put into circulation as money at a fixed value. Metal money.

Coinage. The process or the function of coining metallic money; also the great mass of metallic money in circulation.

Coinage clause. Provision in U.S. Constitution granting to Congress the power to coin money, Art. I, § 8, par. 5.

Coinsurance. A relative division of risk between the insurer and the insured, dependent upon the relative amount of the policy and the actual value of the property insured, and taking effect only when the actual loss is partial and less than the amount of the policy; the insurer being liable to the extent of the policy for a loss equal to or in excess of that amount. Insurance policies that protect against hazards such as fire or water damage often specify that the owner of the property may not collect the full amount of insurance for a loss unless the insurance policy covers at least some specified percentage, usually about 80 percent, of the replacement cost of the property.

Coinsurance clause. Provision in insurance policy requiring property owner to carry insurance up to an amount determined in accordance with the provisions of the policy.

Coinsurer. Insurer who shares losses sustained under policy.

Coitus. Sexual intercourse; carnal copulation; coition.

Cojudices /kôwjúwdəsiyz/. Lat. In old English law, associate judges having equality of power with others.

Coke's institutes. See Institutes.

COLA. Cost of Living Adjustment. See Cost of living clause.

Cold blood. Used in common parlance to designate a willful, deliberate, and premeditated homicide. See also Cool state of blood.

Cold water ordeal. The trial which was anciently used for the common sort of people, who, having a cord tied about them under their arms, were cast into a river; if they sank to the bottom until they were drawn up, which was in a very short time, then were they held guiltless; but such as did remain upon the water were held culpable, being, as they said, of the water rejected and kept up.

Colibertus /kòwlabértəs/. In feudal law, one who, holding in free socage, was obliged to do certain services for the lord. A middle class of tenants between servile and free, who held their freedom of tenure on condition of performing certain services. Said to be the same as the conditionales.

Collaboration. The act of working together in a joint project; commonly used in connection with treasonably cooperative efforts with the enemy. See also Conspiracy.

Collapsible corporation. A corporation formed or availed of principally for the manufacture, construction, or production of property, for the purchase of property, or for the holding of stock in a corporation so formed or availed of, with a view to the sale or exchange of stock by its shareholders (whether in liquidation or otherwise), or a distribution to its shareholders, before the realization by the corporation of a substantial part of the taxable income to be derived from such property, and the realization by such shareholders of gain attributable to such property. I.R.C. §§ 337(c), 341(b)(1). These I.R.C. provisions prevent the prearranged use of a corporation to convert ordinary income into capital gain.

Collapsible partnership. A partnership formed with the intention to dissolve before any income is realized; however, the amount of money or the fair market value of any property received by a transferee partner in exchange for all or a part of his interest in the partnership attributable to unrealized receivables of the partnership, or inventory items of the partnership which have appreciated substantially in value shall be considered as an amount realized from the sale or exchange of property other than a capital asset. I.R.C. § 751(a).

Collateral, n. /kələtərəl/. Property which is pledged as security for the satisfaction of a debt. Collateral is additional security for performance of principal obligation, or that which is by the side, and not in direct line. Shaffer v. Davidson, Wyo., 445 P.2d 13, 16. Property subject to a security interest; includes accounts, contract rights, and chattel paper which have been sold. U.C.C. § 9-105(c). See also Collateral security.

Collateral, adj. By the side; at the side; attached upon the side. Not lineal, but upon a parallel or diverging line. Additional or auxiliary; supplementary; co-operating; accompanying as a secondary fact, or acting as a secondary agent. Related to, complementary; accompanying as a co-ordinate. As to collateral Consanguinity; Descent; Estoppel; Guaranty; Issue; Limitation; Negligence; Power; Proceeding; and Warranty, see those titles. See also Pledge; Security.

Collateral act. Formerly, name given to any act (except the payment of money) for the performance of which a bond, recognizance, etc., was given as security.

Collateral actions. Any action which is subsidiary to another action. See Collateral attack.

Collateral ancestors. A phrase sometimes used to designate uncles and aunts, and other collateral ancestors, who are not strictly ancestors.

Collateral assignment. Assignment of property as collateral security for loans.

Collateral assurance. That which is made over and above the principal assurance or deed itself.

Collateral attack. With respect to a judicial proceeding, an attempt to avoid, defeat, or evade it, or deny its force and effect, in some incidental proceeding not provided by law for the express purpose of attacking it. May v. Casker, 188 Okl. 448, 110 P.2d 287, 289. An attack on a judgment in any manner other than by action or proceeding, whose very purpose is to impeach or overturn the judgment; or, stated affirmatively, a collateral attack on a judgment is an attack made by or in an action or proceeding that has an independent purpose other than impeaching or overturning the judgment. Travis v. Travis' Estate, 79 Wyo. 329, 334 P.2d 508, 510. Compare Direct attack.

Collateral consanguinity. Persons are related collaterally when they have a common ancestor. See also Collateral heir.

Collateral contract. A contract made prior to or contemporaneous with another contract and if oral and not inconsistent with written contract is admissible within exception to parol evidence rule. High Knobb Inc. v. Allen, 205 Va. 503, 138 S.E.2d 49.

Collateral covenant. A covenant in a deed or other sealed instrument which does not pertain to the granted premises.

Collateral estoppel doctrine. Prior judgment between same parties on different cause of action is an estoppel as to those matters in issue or points controverted, on determination of which finding or verdict was rendered. E. I. duPont de Nemours & Co. v. Union Carbide Corp., D.C.Ill., 250 F.Supp. 816, 819. When an issue of ultimate fact has been determined by a valid judgment, that issue cannot be again litigated between the same parties in future litigation. City of St. Joseph v. Johnson, Mo.App., 539 S.W.2d 784, 785.

As a bar to relitigating an issue which has already been tried between the same parties or their privies, it must be pleaded affirmatively. Fed.R. Civil P. 8(c). It is applicable to criminal cases. Ashe v. Swenson, 397 U.S. 436, 443-444, 90 S.Ct. 1189, 1194, 25 L.Ed.2d 469.

Offensive and defensive collateral estoppel. "Offensive collateral estoppel" is used by plaintiff to prevent relitigation of issues previously lost against another plaintiff by a defendant, in contrast to "defensive collateral estoppel" which prevents relitigation by plaintiff of issues previously lost against another defendant. Collins v. Seaboard Coastline R. Co., C.A.Ga., 681 F.2d 1333, 1334.

See also Administrative estoppel; Defensive collateral estoppel; Direct estoppel; Issue preclusion; Judicial estoppel; Res (Res judicata); Verdict, estoppel by.

Collateral facts. Such as are outside the controversy, or are not directly connected with the principal matter or issue in dispute.

Collateral fraud. See Fraud.

Collateral heir. One who is not of the direct line of deceased, but comes from a collateral line, as a brother, sister, an uncle, an aunt, a nephew, a niece, or a cousin of deceased. Ferraro v. Augustine, 45 Ill.App.2d 295, 196 N.E.2d 16, 19.

Collateral impeachment. See Collateral attack.

Collateral inheritance tax. A tax levied upon the collateral devolution of property by will or under the intestate law.

Collateralis et socii /kələtərəyləs èt sóws(h)iyay/. The ancient title of masters in chancery.

Collateral issues. Question or issues which are not directly involved in the matter.

Collateral kinsmen. Those who descend from one and the same common ancestor, but not from one another.

Collateral line. See Descent.

Collateral loan. Loan secured by pledge of specific property.

Collateral matter. A "matter" is "collateral" to the principal issues being tried and therefore unavailable to purposes of impeachment if the matter, as to which error is predicated, could not have been shown in evidence for any purpose independently of the contradiction. State v. Oswalt, 62 Wash.2d 118, 381 P.2d 617, 618.

Collateral mortgage. A mortgage designed, not directly to secure an existing debt, but to secure a mortgage note pledged as collateral security for debt or succession of debts. McLendon v. Brewster, La.App., 286 So.2d 513, 516.

Collateral negligence. See Negligence.

Collateral note. Loan secured by pledge of specific property.

Collateral order doctrine. Doctrine which allows appeal from an interlocutory order which conclusively determines issue completely separate from merits of action, and which cannot be given effective review on appeal from subsequent final judgment; such order is, for purposes of appellate jurisdiction, a "final order." Clemence v. Clemence, 8 Kan.App.2d 377, 658 P.2d 368.

Collateral promise. A promise ancillary or superadded to the primary (principal) promise of another; the other remaining primarily liable. One in which the promisor is merely acting as surety; the promisor receives no benefit by way of promise and the original debtor remains liable on the debt. A collateral promise is within the statute of frauds and must be in writing. Dolin v. Colonial Meadows, Ltd., D.C.W.V., 635 F.Supp. 786, 788.

Collateral relatives. Next of kin who are not in the direct line of inheritance, such as a cousin. See also Collateral heir.

Collateral security. A security given in addition to the direct security, and subordinate to it, intended to guaranty its validity or convertibility or insure its performance; so that, if the direct security fails, the creditor may fall back upon the collateral security. Concurrent security for another debt, whether antecedent or newly created and is subsidiary to the principal debt running parallel with and collateral to the debt. Shaffer v. Davidson, Wyo., 445 P.2d 13, 16.

Collateral source rule. Under this rule, if an injured person receives compensation for his injuries from a source wholly independent of the tort-feasor, the payment should not be deducted from the damages which he would otherwise collect from the tort-feasor. Kirtland & Packard v. Superior Court for County of Los Angeles, 59 Cal.App.3d 140, 131 Cal.Rptr. 418, 421. In other words, a defendant tortfeasor may not benefit from the fact that the plaintiff has received money from other sources as a result of the defendant's tort, e.g. sickness and health insurance.

Collateral trust bonds. Bonds of one corporation secured by its holdings of stocks, bonds, and/or notes of another corporation.

Collateral warranty. Generally applicable to real estate transactions in which a stranger warrants title and hence his warranty runs only to the covenantee, and not with the land.

Collatio bonorum /kələysh(iy)ow bənórəm/. Lat. In the civil law, the obligation on successors to an inheritance to return to the common inheritance gifts received from the ancestor during his lifetime. A joining together or contribution of goods into a common fund. This occurs where a portion of money, advanced by the father to a son or daughter, is brought into hotchpot, in order to have an equal distributory share of his personal estate at his death. See Collation.

Collation /kələyshən/. The comparison of a copy with its original to ascertain its correctness; or the report of the officer who made the comparison. The bringing into the estate of an intestate an estimate of the value of advancements made by the intestate to his or her children in order that the whole may be divided in accordance with the statute of descents. It is synonymous with "hotchpot."

In the civil law, the collation of goods is the supposed or real return to the mass of the succession which an heir makes of property which he received in advance of his share or otherwise, in order that such property may be divided together with the other effects of the succession. The fundamental basis of doctrine is legal presumption that ancestor intended absolute equality among his descendants in final distribution of his property, that donation by him during his lifetime to any one of them was merely advancement d'hoirie or advance on donee's hereditary share to establish him in life or for some other useful purpose, and that ancestor intended to reestablish equality among his descendants in final partition of his estate.

Collatione factâ uni post mortem alterius /kələyshiýówniy fáktə yúwnay pówst mórtəm oltaráyəs/. A writ directed to justices of the common pleas, commanding them to issue their writ to the bishop, for the admission of a clerk in the place of another presented by the crown, where there had been a demise of the crown during a suit; for judgment once passed for the king's clerk, and he dying before admittance, the king may bestow his presentation on another.

Collatione heremitagii /kələyshiýówniy hərə(ə)mətéyjiyay/. In old English law, a writ whereby the king conferred the keeping of an hermitage upon a clerk.

Collation of seals. When upon the same label one seal was set on the back or reverse of the other. Comparison of seals.

Collation to a benefice /kələyshən tùw ə bənáfəs/. In ecclesiastical law, this occurs where the bishop and patron are one and the same person, in which case the bishop cannot present the clergyman to himself, but does, by the one act of collation or conferring the benefice, the whole that is done in common cases both by presentation and institution. 2 Bl.Comm. 22.

Collatio signorum /kələysh(iy)ow signórəm/. In old English law, a comparison of marks or seals. A mode of testing the genuineness of a seal, by comparing it with another known to be genuine.

Collect. To gather together; to bring scattered things (assets, accounts, articles of property) into one mass or fund; to assemble. To receive payment.

To collect a debt or claim is to obtain payment or liquidation of it, either by personal solicitation or legal proceedings.

Collectible. Debts, obligations, demands, liabilities that one may be made to pay by means of legal process.

Rare or antique objects, commonly collected for investment.

Collecting bank. In the check collection process, any bank handling the item for collection except the payor bank. U.C.C. § 4-105(d).

Collection. Process through which an item passes in a payor bank. Uniform Commercial Code, Article 4. See also Collection indorsement.

Collection indorsement. An indorsement on an item that is restrictive because it signifies a purpose of deposit or collection by including words such as "for collection", "for deposit", "pay any bank", or like terms. U.C.C. § 3-205(c). See also For collection.

Collection item. An item that a bank takes for its customer's account for which credit is not given until payment for the item is actually received. A documentary draft is ordinarily treated as a collection item.

Collection of illegal fees. Collection by public official of fees in excess of those fixed by law for certain services. See Extortion.

Collective bargaining. As contemplated by National Labor Relations Act, is a procedure looking toward making of collective agreements between employer and accredited representative of union employees concerning wages, hours, and other conditions of employment, and requires that parties deal with each other with open and fair minds and sincerely endeavor to overcome obstacles existing between them to the end that employment relations may be stabilized and obstruction to free flow of commerce prevented. National Labor Relations Act § 8(5), 29 U.S.C.A. § 158(5). Rapid Roller Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, C.C.A.7, 126 F.2d 452, 460. Negotiation between an employer and organized employees as distinguished from individuals, for the purpose of determining by joint agreement the conditions of employment. See also Area bargaining; Labor dispute; Sixty-day notice.

Collective bargaining agreement. Agreement between an employer and a labor union which regulates terms and conditions of employment. The joint and several contract of members of union made by officers of union as their agents establishing, in a general way, the reciprocal rights and responsibilities of employer, employees collectively, and union. Such is enforceable by and against union in matters which affect all members alike or large classes of members, particularly those who are employees of other party to contract. Bogue Elec. Co. v. Board of Review of Division of Employment Sec. of Dept. of Labor and Industry, 21 N.J. 431, 122 A.2d 615, 618. See also Collective labor agreement; Trade agreement.

Collective bargaining unit. All of the employees of a single employer unless the employees of a particular department or division have voted otherwise. Re International Ass'n of Machinists, 249 Wis. 112, 23 N.W.2d 489.

Collective labor agreement. Also called "trade agreement". Bargaining agreement as to wages and conditions of work entered into by groups of employees, usually organized into a brotherhood or union on one side and groups of employers or corporations on the other side. See also Collective bargaining agreement.

Collective mark. The term "collective mark" means a trademark or service mark—(1) used by the members of a cooperative, an association, or other collective group or organization, or (2) which such cooperative, association, or other collective group or organization has a bona fide intention to use in commerce and applies to register on the principal register established by the Trademark Act, and includes marks indicating membership in a union, an association, or other organization. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1127.

Collective work. In copyright law, "collective work" is a work, such as a periodical issue, anthology, or encylopedia, in which a number of contributions, constituting separate and independent works in themselves, are assembled into a collective whole. Copyright Act, 17 U.S.C.A. § 101. See also Compilation.

Collect on delivery. See C. O. D.

Collector. One appointed or authorized to receive taxes or other impositions, as: collector of taxes, collector of customs, etc. A person appointed by a private person to collect the debts due him.

Collector of decedent's estate. A person temporarily appointed by the probate court to collect rents, assets, interest, bills receivable, etc., of a decedent's estate, and act for the estate in all financial matters requiring immediate settlement. Such collector is usually appointed when there is protracted litigation as to the probate of the will, or as to the person to take out administration, and his duties cease as soon as an executor or administrator is qualified.

Collega /kəliyə/. In the civil law, one invested with joint authority. A colleague; an associate.

Collegatarius /kələgətəriyəs/. Lat. In the civil law, a co-legatee.

Collegatary /kə(w)ləgétəriy/. A co-legatee; a person who has a legacy left to him in common with other persons.

College. An organized assembly or collection of persons, established by law, and empowered to co-operate for the performance of some special function or for the promotion of some common object, which may be educational, political, ecclesiastical, or scientific in its character.

The assemblage of the cardinals at Rome is called a "college." So, in the United States, the body of presidential electors is called the "electoral college" (q.v.).

In the most common use of the word, it designates an institution of learning (usually incorporated) which offers instruction in the liberal arts and humanities and in scientific branches, but not in the technical arts or those studies preparatory to admission to the professions. Also applied to all kinds of institutions from universities, or departments thereof, to "business colleges," "barber colleges," etc. that have degree-conferring power.

In England, it is a civil corporation, company or society of men, having certain privileges, and endowed with certain revenues, founded by royal license. An assemblage of several of these colleges is called a "university."

Collegia /kəlijiyə/. In the civil law, the guild of a trade.

Collegialiter /kəlijiyéyltər/. In a corporate capacity.

Collegiate church. In English ecclesiastical law, a church built and endowed for a society or body corporate of a dean or other president, and secular priests, as canons or prebendaries in the said church; such as the churches of Westminster, Windsor, and others, which are independent of a cathedral.

Collegium /kəliyj(iy)əm/. Lat. In the civil law, a word having various meanings; e.g., an assembly, society, or company; a body of bishops; an army; a class of men. But the principal idea of the word was that of an association of individuals of the same rank and station, or united for the pursuit of some business or enterprise. Sometimes, a corporation, as in the maxim "tres faciunt collegium" (1 Bl.Comm. 469), though the more usual and proper designation of a corporation was "universitas."

Collegium ammiralitatís /kəliyj(iy)əm əmərələtétəs/. The college or society of the admiralty.

Collegium est societas plurium corporum simul habitantium /kəliyj(iy)əm èst səsáyətəs plúriyəm kórpəram símal hăbətəns(iy)əm/. A college is a society of several persons dwelling together.

Collegium illicitum /kəliyj(iy)əm əlísətəm/. One which abused its right, or assembled for any other purpose than that expressed in its charter.

Collegium licitum /kəliyj(iy)əm lísətəm/. An assemblage or society of men united for some useful purpose or business, with power to act like a single individual.

Collide. To strike or dash against; to come into collision; to clash. Collins v. Leahy, Mo.App., 102 S.W.2d 801, 809. See Collision.

Colligendum bona defuncti /kələjéndəm bównə dəfəŋktay/. See Ad colligendum, etc.

Collision. Striking together of two objects, one of which may be stationary. Act or instance of colliding; state of having collided. The term implies an impact or sudden contact of a moving body with an obstruction in its line of motion, whether both bodies are in motion or one stationary and the other, no matter which, in motion.

Collistrigium /kələstríjiyəm/. The pillory.

Collocation /kələkékýshən/. In French law, the arrangement or marshaling of the creditors of an estate in the order in which they are to be paid according to law.

Colloquium /kələwkwiyəm/. One of the usual parts of the declaration in an action for slander. It is a general averment that the words complained of were spoken "of and concerning the plaintiff", or concerning the extrinsic matters alleged in the inducement, and its office is to connect the whole publication with the previous statement. An averment in the complaint that the words in question are spoken of or concerning some usage, report, or fact which gives to words otherwise indifferent the peculiar defamatory meaning assigned to them.

Collusion /kəl(y)úwzhən/. An agreement between two or more persons to defraud a person of his rights by the forms of law, or to obtain an object forbidden by law. It implies the existence of fraud of some kind, the employment of fraudulent means, or of lawful means for the accomplishment of an unlawful purpose. Tomiyosu v. Golden, 81 Nev. 140, 400 P.2d 415, 417. A secret combination, conspiracy, or concert of action between two or more persons for fraudulent or deceitful purpose. See Conspiracy.

In divorce proceedings, collusion is an agreement between husband and wife that one of them shall commit, or appear to have committed, or be represented in court as having committed, acts constituting a cause of divorce, for the purpose of enabling the other to obtain a divorce. But it also means connivance or conspiracy in initiating or prosecuting the suit, as where there is a compact for mutual aid in carrying it through to a decree. Bizik v. Bizik, Ind.App., 111 N.E.2d 823, 828. With the enactment of "no-fault" divorce statutes by most states, agreements or acts of collusion are no longer necessary.

Collusive action. An action not founded upon an actual controversy between the parties to it, but brought for purpose of securing a determination of a point of law for the gratification of curiosity or to settle rights of third persons not parties. Such actions will not be entertained for the courts will only decide "cases or controversies". City and County of San Francisco v. Boyd, 22 Cal.2d 685, 140 P.2d 666, 669, 670. See also Collusion.

Collusive joinder. See Joinder.

Collybista /kóləbístə/. In the civil law, a money-changer; a dealer in money.

Collybum /kóləbəm/. In the civil law, exchange.

Colne. In Saxon and old English law, an account or calculation.

Colonists. Persons who have emigrated from their mother country to settle in another place but who remain loyal to mother country.

Colonus /kəlównəs/. In old European law, a husbandman; an inferior tenant employed in cultivating the lord's land. A term of Roman origin, corresponding with the Saxon ceorl.

Colony. A dependent political community, consisting of a number of citizens of the same country who have emigrated therefrom to people another, and remain subject to the mother country. Territory attached to another nation, known as the mother country, with political and economic ties; e.g. possessions or dependencies of the British Crown (e.g. thirteen original colonies of United States).

Colonial charter. A document issued by a colonial government which permits operation of a business or school or college, e.g. charters granted by England to institutions or business in this country before War of Independence.

Colonial laws. The body of law in force in the thirteen original colonies before the Declaration of Independence.

Color. An appearance, semblance, or simulacrum, as distinguished from that which is real. A prima facie or apparent right. Hence, a deceptive appearance; a plausible, assumed exterior, concealing a lack of reality; a disguise or pretext. See also Colorable.

In pleading, ground of action admitted to subsist in the opposite party by the pleading of one of the parties to an action, which is so set out as to be apparently valid, but which is in reality legally insufficient. A term of the ancient rhetoricians, and early adopted into the language of pleading. It was an apparent or prima facie right; and the meaning of the rule that pleadings in confession and avoidance should give color was that they should confess the matter adversely alleged, to such an extent, at least, as to admit some apparent right in the opposite party, which required to the encountered and avoided by the allegation of new matter. Color was either express, i.e. inserted in the pleading, or implied, which was naturally inherent in the structure of the pleading. Wheeler v. Nickels, 168 Or. 604, 126 P.2d 32, 36.

Colorable. That which is in appearance only, and not in reality, what it purports to be, hence counterfeit, feigned, having the appearance of truth. Windle v. Flinn, 196 Or. 654, 251 P.2d 136, 146.

Colorable alteration. One which makes no real or substantial change, but is introduced only as a subterfuge or means of evading the patent or copyright law.

Colorable cause or invocation of jurisdiction. With reference to actions for malicious prosecution, a "colorable cause or invocation of jurisdiction" means that a person, apparently qualified, has appeared before a justice and made a complaint under oath and in writing, stating some facts which in connection with other facts constitute a criminal offense or bear a similitude thereto.

Colorable claim. In bankruptcy law, a claim made by one holding the property as an agent or bailee of the bankrupt; a claim in which as a matter of law, there is no adverseness. See also Color.

Colorable imitation. In the law of trademarks, this phrase denotes such a close or ingenious limitation as to be calculated to deceive ordinary persons.

Colorable transaction. One presenting an appearance which does not correspond with the reality, and, ordinarily, an appearance intended to conceal or to deceive.

Colored. By common usage in America, this term, in such phrases as "colored persons," "the colored race," "colored men," and the like, is used to designate negroes or persons of the African race, including all persons of mixed blood descended from negro ancestry.

Colore officii /kəlóríy əfíshiyay/. Lat. By color of office. Officer's acts unauthorized by officer's position, though done in form that purports that acts are done by reason of official duty and by virtue of office. See also Color of office.

Color of authority. That semblance or presumption of authority sustaining the acts of a public officer which is derived from his apparent title to the office or from a writ or other process in his hands apparently valid and regular. See Color of law; Color of office.

Color of law. The appearance or semblance, without the substance, of legal right. Misuse of power, possessed by virtue of state law and made possible only because wrongdoer is clothed with authority of state, is action taken under "color of state law." Atkins v. Lanning, D.C.Okla., 415 F.Supp. 186, 188.

When used in the context of federal civil rights statutes or criminal law, the term is synonymous with the concept of "state action" under the Fourteenth Amendment, Timson v. Weiner, D.C.Ohio, 395 F.Supp. 1344, 1347; and means pretense of law and includes actions of officers who undertake to perform their official duties, Thompson v. Baker, D.C.Ark., 133 F.Supp. 247; 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983. See Tort (Constitutional tort).

Action taken by private individuals may be "under color of state law" for purposes of 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 governing deprivation of civil rights when significant state involvement attaches to action. Wagner v. Metropolitan Nashville Airport Authority, C.A.Tenn., 772 F.2d 227, 229.

Acts "under color of any law" of a State include not only acts done by State officials within the bounds or limits of their lawful authority, but also acts done without and beyond the bounds of their lawful authority; provided that, in order for unlawful acts of an official to be done "under color of any law", the unlawful acts must be done while such official is purporting or pretending to act in the performance of his official duties; that is to say, the unlawful acts must consist in an abuse or misuse of power which is possessed by the official only because he is an official; and the unlawful acts must be of such a nature or character, and be committed under such circumstances, that they would not have occurred but for the fact that the person committing them was an official then and there exercising his official powers outside the bounds of lawful authority. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983.

Color of office. Pretense of official right to do act made by one who has no such right. Kiker v. Pinson, 120 Ga.App. 784, 172 S.E.2d 333, 334. An act under color of office is an act of an officer who claims authority to do the act by reason of his office when the office does not confer on him any such authority. Maryland Cas. Co. v. McCormack, Ky., 488 S.W.2d 347, 352. See also Color of law.

Color of state law. See Color of law.

Color of title. The appearance, semblance, or simulacrum of title. Also termed "apparent title." Any fact, extraneous to the act or mere will of the claimant, which has the appearance, on its face, of supporting his claim of a present title to land, but which, for some defect, in reality falls short of establishing it. Howth v. Farrar, C.C.A.Tex., 94 F.2d 654, 658. That which is a semblance or appearance of title, but is not title in fact or in law. McCoy v. Lowrie, 42 Wash.2d 24, 253 P.2d 415, 418. Any instrument having a grantor and grantee, and containing a description of the lands intended to be conveyed, and apt words for their conveyance, gives color of title to the lands described. Such an instrument purports to be a conveyance of the title, and because it does not, for some reason, have that effect, it passes only color or the semblance of a title.

Color of Title Act. Federal law which gives Secretary of Interior the right to issue a patent for land, exclusive of minerals, to one who has occupied it adversely and under color of right for period of time for a nominal amount of money. 43 U.S.C.A. §§ 1068-1068B.

Com. Abbreviation for "company" or "Commonwealth."

Co-maker. Surety under a loan.

Combarones /kɔ̃mbəroʊniyz/. In old English law, fellow-barons; fellow-citizens; the citizens or freemen of the Cinque Ports being anciently called "barons;" the term "combarones" is used in this sense in a grant of Henry III, to the barons of the port of Fevresham.

Combat. A forcible encounter between two or more persons; a battle; a duel. To fight with; to struggle against.

Mutual Combat. Such combat as will, upon sufficient provocation, reduce a killing committed with a deadly weapon from murder to manslaughter, is defined as one into which both parties enter willingly, or in which two persons, upon a sudden quarrel, and in hot blood, mutually fight upon equal terms. People v. Matthews, 21 Ill.App.3d 249, 314 N.E.2d 15, 18.

Combaterre /kɔ̃mbətéhriy/. A valley or piece of low ground between two hills.

Combe. A small or narrow valley.

Combination. The union or association of two or more persons for the attainment of some common end. Albrecht v. Herald Co., C.A.Mo., 367 F.2d 517, 523. See Joint venture. As used in criminal context, means a conspiracy or confederation for unlawful or violent acts. See Conspiracy.

Combination in restraint of trade. An agreement or understanding between two or more persons, in the form of a contract, trust, pool, holding company, or other form of association, for the purpose of unduly restricting competition, monopolizing trade and commerce in a certain commodity, controlling its production, distribution, and price, or otherwise interfering with freedom of trade without statutory authority. Such combinations are prohibited by the Sherman Antitrust Act. See also Clayton Act; Sherman Antitrust Act.

Combination patent. Patents in which the claimed invention resides in a specific combination or arrangement of elements, rather than in the elements themselves. Kinnear-Weed Corp. v. Humble Oil & Refining Co., D.C.Tex., 150 F.Supp. 143, 162. One in which none of parts or components are new, and none are claimed as new, nor is any portion of combination less than whole claimed as new or stated to produce any given result. Borden, Inc. v. Occidental Petroleum Corp., D.C.Tex., 381 F.Supp. 1178, 1202.

Combustio /kɔ̃mbást(i)yow/. Burning. In old English law, the punishment inflicted upon apostates.

Combustio domorum /kɔ̃mbást(i)yow dɔ̃móráɪm/. Houseburning; arson. 4 Bl.Comm. 272.

Combustio pecuniæ /kəmbóst(i)yow pəkýúwniyiy/. Burning of money; the ancient method of testing mixed and corrupt money, paid into the exchequer, by melting it down.

Come. To present oneself; to appear in court.

Comes /kómz/, v. A word used in a pleading to indicate the defendant's presence in court.

Comes /kówniyz/, n. Lat. A follower, companion, or attendant; a count or earl.

Comes and defends. This phrase, anciently used in the language of pleading, and still surviving in some jurisdictions, occurs at the commencement of a defendant's plea or demurrer; and of its two verbs the former signifies that he appears in court, the latter that he defends the action.

Comfort. Benefit, consolation, contentment, ease, enjoyment, happiness, pleasure, or satisfaction.

Comfort letter. A letter generally requested by securities underwriters to give "comfort" on the financial information included in an SEC registration statement.

Coming and going rule. See Going and coming rule.

Coming to rest doctrine. Under this doctrine with respect to loading and unloading clauses used in automobile liability policies, coverage afforded by loading-unloading clause ceases when goods have actually come to rest and every connection of motor vehicle with process of unloading has ceased. Johnson, Drake & Piper, Inc. v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., D.C.Minn., 258 F.Supp. 603, 606.

Cominus /kómənəs/. Lat. Immediately; hand-to-hand; in personal contact.

Comitas /kómətəs/. Lat. Courtesy; civility; comity. An indulgence or favor granted another nation, as a mere matter of indulgence, without any claim of right made. Comitas inter communitates; or comitas inter gentes; comity between communities or nations; comity of nations.

Comitatu commisso /kómətét(y)uw kəmish(i)yow/. In old English law, a writ or commission, whereby a sheriff was authorized to enter upon the charges of a county.

Comitatu et castro commisso /kómətét(y)uw ət kástrɔw kəmisow/. A writ by which the charge of a county, together with the keeping of a castle, was committed to the sheriff.

Comitatus /kómətétəs/. In old English law, a county or shire; the body of a county. The territorial jurisdiction of a comes, i.e., count or earl. 1 Bl.Comm. 116. An earldom. The county court, a court of great antiquity and of great dignity in early times. Also, the retinue or train of a prince or high governmental official. The retinue which accompanied a Roman proconsul to his province. The personal following of professional warriors.

Comites /kómətiyz/. Counts or earls. Attendants or followers. Persons composing the retinue of a high functionary.

Persons who are attached to the suite of a public minister.

Comites paleys /kómətiyz pələys/. Counts or earls palatine; those who had the government of a county palatine.

Comitia /kəmish(i)yə/. In Roman law, an assembly, either (1) of the Roman curiæ, in which case it was called the "comitia curiata vel calata"; or (2) of the Roman centuries, in which case it was called the "comitia centuriata" (called also comitia majora); or (3) of the Roman tribes, in which case it was called the "comitia tributa." Only patricians were members of the first comitia, and only plebians of the last; but the comitia centuriata comprised the entire populace, patricians and plebians both, and was the great legislative assembly passing the leges, properly so called, as the senate passed the senatus consulta, and the comitia tributa past the plebiscita. Under the Lex Hortensia, 287 B.C., the plebiscitum acquired the force of a lex.

Comitissa /kómətísə/. In old English law, a countess; an earl's wife.

Comitiva /kómətáyvə/. In old English law, the dignity and office of a comes (count or earl); the same with what was afterwards called "comitatus." Also a companion or fellow-traveler; a troop or company of robbers.

Comity /kómətiy/. Courtesy; complaisance; respect; a willingness to grant a privilege, not as a matter of right, but out of deference and good will. Recognition that one sovereignty allows within its territory to the legislative, executive, or judicial act of another sovereignty, having due regard to rights of its own citizens. Nowell v. Nowell, Tex.Civ.App., 408 S.W.2d 550, 553. In general, principle of "comity" is that courts of one state or jurisdiction will give effect to laws and judicial decisions of another state or jurisdiction, not as a matter of obligation but out of deference and mutual respect. Brown v. Babbitt Ford, Inc., 117 Ariz. 192, 571 P.2d 689, 695. See also Full faith and credit clause.

Comity of nations. The recognition which one nation allows within its territory to the legislative, executive, or judicial acts of another nation, having due regard both to international duty and convenience and to the rights of its own citizens or of other persons who are under the protection of its laws.

Judicial comity. The principle in accordance with which the courts of one state or jurisdiction will give effect to the laws and judicial decisions of another, not as a matter of obligation, but out of deference and respect.

Command. An order, imperative direction, or behest. To direct, with authority. Power to dominate and control.

Commandement /komənd(ə)món/. In French law, a writ served by the huissier pursuant to a judgment or to an executory notarial deed. Its object is to give notice to the debtor that if he does not pay the sum to which he has been condemned by the judgment, or which he engaged to pay by the notarial deed, his property will be seized and sold.

Commander in Chief. One who holds supreme or highest command of armed forces. By Article II, § 2, of the Constitution it is declared that the President shall be commander in chief of the army and navy of the United States. The term implies supreme control of military operations not only with respect to strategy and tactics, but also in reference to the political and international aspects of the war.

Commandery. In old English law, a manor or chief messuage with lands and tenements thereto appertaining, which belonged to the priory of St. John of Jerusalem, in England; he who had the government of such a manor or house was styled the "commander," who could not dispose of it, but to the use of the priory, only taking thence his own sustenance, according to his degree. The manors and lands belonging to the priory of St. John of Jerusalem were given to Henry the Eighth by 32 Hen. VIII, c. 20, about the time of the dissolution of abbeys and monasteries; so that the name only of commanderies remains, the power being long since extinct.

Commanditaires /kəmændətérz/. Special partners; partners en commandité. See Commandité.

Commandité /komònditéy/. In French law, a partnership in which some furnish money, and others furnish their skill and labor in place of capital.

A special or limited partnership, where the contract is between one or more persons who are general partners, and jointly and severally responsible, and one or more other persons who merely furnish a particular fund or capital stock, and thence are called "commanditaires," or "commanditaires," or "partners en commandité," the business being carried on under the social name or firm of the general partners only, composed of the names of the general or complementary partners, the partners in commandité being liable to losses only to the extent of the funds or capital furnished by them. The term includes a partnership containing dormant rather than special partners.

Commandment. In old English law, an authoritative order of a judge or magisterial officer. Also, the act or offense of one who commanded another to transgress the law, or do anything contrary to law, as theft, murder, or the like. Particularly applied to the act of an accessory before the fact in inciting, procuring, setting on, or stirring up another to do the fact or act. See also Command.

Commence. To initiate by performing the first act or step. To begin, institute or start.

Civil action in most jurisdictions is commenced by filing a complaint with the court. Fed.R. Civil P. 3.

Commencement of building or improvement, within the meaning of mechanic's lien statute, is the visible commencement of actual operations on the ground for the erection of the building, which every one can readily recognize as commencement of a building, and which is done with intention to continue the work until building is completed. Diversified Mortgage Investors v. Gepada, Inc., 401 F.Supp. 682, 685.

Criminal action is commenced within statute of limitations at time preliminary complaint or information is filed with magistrate in good faith and a warrant issued thereon. Knott v. State, Okl.Cr., 387 P.2d 142, 144. A criminal prosecution is "commenced" (1) when information is laid before magistrate charging commission of crime, and a warrant of arrest is issued, or (2) when grand jury has returned an indictment. Halberstadt v. Nelson, 34 Misc.2d 472, 226 N.Y.S.2d 100, 103.

Commencement of action. See Commence.

Commencement of prosecution. See Commence.

Commenda /kəméndə/. In French law, the delivery of a benefice to one who cannot hold the legal title, to keep and manage it for a time limited and render an account of the proceeds. In commercial law, an association in which the management of the property was intrusted to individuals.

Commenda est facultas recipiendi et retinendi beneficium contra jus positivum a suprema potestate /kəméndə ést fəkáltās rəsipiyénday èt rètənénday bènəfish(iy)əm kòntre jəs pòzətáyvəm èy s(y)əpriymə pòwtəstétyty/. A commendam is the power of receiving and retaining a benefice contrary to positive law, by supreme authority.

Commendam /kəméndəm/. In ecclesiastical law, the appointment of a suitable clerk to hold a void or vacant benefice or church living until a regular pastor be appointed.

In commercial law, a species of limited partnership. The limited partnership (or société en commandité) of the French law has been introduced into the Code of Louisiana under the title of "Partnership in Commendam." Civ.Code La. art. 2810 (Civ.Code, art. 2839).

Commendatio /kòməndéysh(iy)ow/. In the civil law, commendation, praise, or recommendation, as in the maxim "simplex commendatio non obligat," meaning that mere recommendation or praise of an article by the seller of it does not amount to a warranty of its qualities.

Commendation. In feudal law, the act by which an owner of alodial land placed himself and his land under the protection of a lord, so as to constitute himself his vassal or feudal tenant.

Commandators /kóməndèytərz/. Secular persons upon whom ecclesiastical benefices were bestowed; called so because the benefices were commended and intrusted to their supervision. They are merely trustees.

Commendatory. He who holds a church living or preferment in commendam.

Commendatory letters. In ecclesiastical law, such as are written by one bishop to another on behalf of any of the clergy, or others of his diocese traveling thither, that they may be received among the faithful, or that the clerk may be promoted, or necessities administered to others, etc.

Commendatus /kòmandéytàs/. In feudal law, one who intrusts himself to the protection of another. A person who, by voluntary homage, put himself under the protection of a superior lord.

Comment. The expression of the judgment passed upon certain alleged facts by a person who has applied his mind to them, and who while so commenting assumes that such allegations of fact are true. The assertion of a fact is not a "comment."

Comment on the evidence. An instruction by judge to jury on the probative value of the evidence. Cox v. Gustafson, 261 Or. 159, 493 P.2d 52, 53. A statement by a trial judge will constitute such a comment only if the trial court's attitude towards the merits of the cause is reasonably inferable from the nature or manner of the judge's statement. State v. Carr, 13 Wash.App. 704, 537 P.2d 844, 849, 850.

Commerce. The exchange of goods, productions, or property of any kind; the buying, selling, and exchanging of articles. Anderson v. Humble Oil and Refining Co., 226 Ga. 252, 174 S.E.2d 415, 417. The transportation of persons and property by land, water and air. Union Pacific R. Co. v. State Tax Commissioner, 19 Utah 2d 236, 429 P.2d 983, 984.

Intercourse by way of trade and traffic between different peoples or states and the citizens or inhabitants thereof, including not only the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities, but also the instrumentalities and agencies by which it is promoted and the means and appliances by which it is carried on, and transportation of persons as well as of goods, both by land and sea. Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U.S. 289, 14 S.Ct. 829, 38 L.Ed. 719; Railroad Co. v. Fuller, 84 U.S. (17 Wall.) 568, 21 L.Ed. 710; Hoke v. United States, 227 U.S. 308, 33 S.Ct. 281, 57 L.Ed. 523. Also interchange of ideas, sentiments, etc., as between man and man.

The term "commerce" means trade, traffic, commerce, transportation, or communication among the several States, or between the District of Columbia or any Territory of the United States and any State or other Territory, or between any foreign country and any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or within the District of Columbia or any Territory, or between points in the same State but through any other State or any Territory or the District of Columbia or any foreign country. National Labor Relations Act, § 2.

For purposes of Fair Labor Standards Act, "commerce" means trade, commerce, transportation, transmission, or communication among several states or between any state and any place outside thereof. Wirtz v. B. B. Saxon Co., C.A.Fla., 365 F.2d 457, 460.

See also Affecting commerce; Chamber of Commerce; Interstate and foreign commerce; Interstate commerce; Interstate Commerce Act; Interstate Commerce Commission; Intrastate commerce.

Commerce among the states. Transportation and transacting business from one state to another, and also all component parts of such intercourse. Dahnke-Walker

Milling Co. v. Bondurant, 257 U.S. 282, 42 S.Ct. 106, 108, 66 L.Ed. 239. See Interstate commerce.

Commerce with foreign nations. Commerce between citizens of the United States and citizens or subject governments; commerce which, either immediately or at some stage of its progress, is extraterritorial. U. S. v. Holliday, 70 U.S. 407, 3 Wall. 407, 18 L.Ed. 182; Veazie v. Moor, 55 U.S. 568, 14 How. 568, 14 L.Ed. 545; Lord v. Steamship Co., 102 U.S. 541, 26 L.Ed. 224. The same as foreign commerce, which see below. Power of Congress to regulate "commerce with foreign nations" comprehends every species of commercial intercourse. U.S. C.A.Const. Art. I, § 8, cl. 3. Board of Trustees of University of Illinois v. U. S., Cust. & Pat.App., 289 U.S. 48, 53 S.Ct. 509, 77 L.Ed. 1025.

Commerce with Indian tribes. Commerce with individuals belonging to such tribes, in the nature of buying, selling, and exchanging commodities, without reference to the locality where carried on, though it be within the limits of a state. U. S. v. Holliday, 3 Wall. 407, 18 L.Ed. 182.

Domestic commerce. Commerce carried on wholly within the limits of the United States, as distinguished from foreign commerce. Also, commerce carried on within the limits of a single state, as distinguished from interstate commerce.

Foreign commerce. Commerce or trade between the United States and foreign countries. The term is sometimes applied to commerce between ports of two sister states not lying on the same coast, e.g., New York and San Francisco.

Internal commerce. Such as is carried on between individuals within the same state, or between different parts of the same state. Now more commonly called "intra-state" commerce.

International commerce. Commerce between states or nations entirely foreign to each other.

Interstate commerce. Such as is carried on between different states of the Union or between points lying in different states. See Interstate commerce.

Commercial frustration. Excuse of party from performance if contract depends on existence of given person or thing and such person or thing perishes, and if contract is rendered impossible by act of God, the law, or other party. Wood v. Bartolino, 48 N.M. 175, 146 P.2d 883, 885, 890. In theory it amounts to no more than a condition or term of a contract which the law implies to take the place of a covenant that it is assumed would have been inserted by the parties had the contingency which arose occurred to them at the time they made the contract. Lloyd v. Murphy, Cal.App., 142 P.2d 939, 942, 943. And doctrine is predicated upon premise of giving relief in a situation where parties could not reasonably protect themselves by terms of a contract against happening of subsequent events. Berline v. Waldschmidt, 159 Kan. 585, 156 P.2d 865, 867. Hence doctrine has no application where events were reasonably foreseeable and controllable by the parties. U.C.C. § 2-613. See Commercial impracticability; Impossibility (Impossibility of performance of contract).

Commercial impracticability. U.C.C. § 2-615 excuses either party from performing a contract where three conditions exist: (1) a contingency must occur, (2) performance must thereby be made "impracticable," and (3) the nonoccurrence of the contingency must have been a basic assumption on which the contract was made. Neal-Cooper Grain Co. v. Texas Gulf Sulphur Co., C.A. Ill., 508 F.2d 283. See also Commercial frustration.

Commercial insolvency. Inability of a business to pay its debts as they become due in the regular and ordinary course of business. See also Bankrupt; Insolvency.

Commercial paper. Bills of exchange (i.e., drafts), promissory notes, bank-checks, and other negotiable instruments for the payment of money, which, by their form and on their face, purport to be such instruments. Short-term, unsecured promissory notes, generally issued by large, well-known corporations and finance companies. U.C.C. Article 3 is the general law governing commercial paper. See also Bearer instrument; Instrument; Negotiable instruments; Note; Trade acceptance.

Securities law. Commercial paper is a "security" under the Glass-Steagall Act and therefore is subject to its proscriptions on commercial banks marketing "stocks, bonds, debentures, notes, or other securities." Securities Industry Association v. Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System et al., 468 U.S. 137, 104 S.Ct. 2979, 92 L.Ed.2d 107.

Commercial property. Income producing property (e.g. office buildings, apartments, etc.) as opposed to residential property.

Commercial reasonableness. May refer to goods which meet the warranty of merchantability. U.C.C. § 2-314.

In the context of UCC provisions relating to disposition of collateral upon lawful repossession, means that the qualifying disposition of the chattel must be made in a good faith attempt to dispose of the collateral to the parties' mutual best advantage. Central Budget Corp. v. Garrett, 48 A.D.2d 825, 368 N.Y.S.2d 268, 270.

Commercial set. Primary documents covering shipment of goods: invoice, bill of lading, bill of exchange, certificate of insurance.

Commercial speech doctrine. Speech that was categorized as "commercial" in nature (i.e. speech that advertised a product or service for profit or for business purpose) was formerly not afforded First Amendment freedom of speech protection, and as such could be freely regulated by statutes and ordinances. Valentine v. Chrestensen, 316 U.S. 52, 62 S.Ct. 920, 86 L.Ed. 1262. This doctrine, however, has been essentially abrogated. Pittsburgh Press Co. v. Pittsburgh Comm. on Human Rights, 413 U.S. 376, 93 S.Ct. 2553, 37 L.Ed.2d 669; Bigelow v. Virginia, 421 U.S. 809, 95 S.Ct. 2222, 44 L.Ed.2d 600; Virginia State Bd. of Pharmacy v. Virginia Citizen Council, 425 U.S. 748, 96 S.Ct. 1817, 48 L.Ed.2d 346.

Commercial traveler. A drummer; a traveling salesman who simply exhibits samples of goods kept for sale by his principal, and takes orders from purchasers for such goods, which goods are afterwards to be delivered by the principal to the purchasers, and payment for the goods is to be made by the purchasers to the principal on such delivery.

Commercial unit. Means such a unit of goods as by commercial usage is a single whole for purposes of sale and division of which materially impairs its character or value on the market or in use. A commercial unit may be a single article (as a machine) or a set of articles (as a suite of furniture, or an assortment of sizes) or a quantity (as a bale, gross, or carload) or any other unit treated in use or in the relevant market as a single whole. U.C.C. § 2-105(6).

Commercial use. Term implies use in connection with or for furtherance of a profit-making enterprise. Roberts Enterprises, Inc. v. Secretary of Transp., 237 Kan. 276, 699 P.2d 479, 483.

Common appearance. The manner in which something generally appears; e.g. by common appearance blood is red.

Common area. In law of landlord-tenant, the portion of demised premises used in common by tenants over which landlord retains control (e.g. hallways, stairs) and hence for whose condition he is liable, as contrasted with areas of which tenant has exclusive possession. Term also refers to areas in common ownership and use by residents of condominium, subdivision, or planned unit development.

Common assurances. The several modes or instruments of conveyance established or authorized by the law of England. Called "common" because thereby every man's estate is assured to him.

Common carrier. Any carrier required by law to convey passengers or freight without refusal if the approved fare or charge is paid in contrast to private or contract carrier. One who holds himself out to the public as engaged in business of transportation of persons or property from place to place for compensation, and who offers services to the public generally. Tilson v. Ford Motor Co., D.C.Mich., 130 F.Supp. 676, 678. Such is to be distinguished from a contract or private carrier. See Carrier.

Common causes or suits. A term anciently used to denote civil actions, or those depending between subject and subject, as distinguished from pleas of the crown.

Common condidit. See Condit.

Common counts. Old forms of pleading by which pleader sets forth in account form the basis of his claim such as money had and received, goods sold and delivered, etc. Traditionally, the various forms of action of assumpsit.

Common defense. In joint trial of two or more defendants, a defense asserted by all defendants.

Common design. Community of intention between two or more persons to do an unlawful act. Generally used in criminal context to describe an action taken by two or more persons after joint planning. Actions and declarations of one participant during existence of common design are chargeable to all participants. Com. v. Dahlstrom, 345 Mass. 130, 185 N.E.2d 759. See Combination in restraint of trade; Conspiracy.

Common disaster. Situation in which the insured and beneficiary appear to die simultaneously with no clear indication or evidence of which died first. See Simultaneous Death Act.

Common disaster clause. In insurance or will, a clause that provides for an alternative beneficiary in event both the insured (testator) and beneficiary (legatee) die in a common disaster. See Simultaneous death clause.

Common enterprise. See Joint enterprise.

Common good. Generic term to describe the betterment of the general public.

Common knowledge. Information widely shared by substantial number of people. See Judicial notice.

Common prayer. The liturgy, or public form of prayer prescribed by the Church of England to be used in all churches and chapels, and which the clergy are enjoined to use under a certain penalty.

Common repute. The prevailing belief in a given community as to the existence of a certain fact or aggregation of facts.

Common right. A term applied to rights, privileges, and immunities appertaining to and enjoyed by all citizens equally and in common, and which have their foundation in the common law.

Common school. A public elementary school.

Common seller. A common seller of any commodity is one who sells it frequently, usually, customarily, or habitually.

Common sense. Sound practical judgment; that degree of intelligence and reason, as exercised upon the relations of persons and things and the ordinary affairs of life, which is possessed by the generality of mankind, and which would suffice to direct the conduct and actions of the individual in a manner to agree with the behavior of ordinary persons.

Common weal. The public or common good or welfare.

Commonable. Entitled to common. Commonable beasts are either beasts of the plow, as horses and oxen, or such as manure the land, as kine and sheep. Beasts not commonable are swine, goats, and the like. 2 Bl. Comm. 33.

Commonalty /kómənəltiy/. The great body of citizens; the mass of the people, excluding the nobility. The body of people composing a municipal corporation, excluding the corporate officers. The body of a society or corporation, as distinguished from the officers.

Commonance. The commoners, or tenants and inhabitants, who have the right of common or commoning in open field.

Common bar. (Otherwise called "blank bar"). A common law plea to compel the plaintiff to assign the particular place where the trespass had been committed.

Common bench. The ancient name for the English court of common pleas. Its original title appears to have been simply "The Bench", but it was designated "Common Bench" to distinguish it from the "King's Bench", and because in it were tried and determined the causes of common persons, i.e., causes between subject and subject, in which the crown had no interest.

Common descriptive name. Generic trademark; as used in the Lanham Act, this refers to a particular genus or class of which an individual article or service is but a member, and suggests the basic nature of the article or services. Soweco, Inc. v. Shell Oil Co., C.A. Tex., 617 F.2d 1178, 1182.

Common elements. In condominium law, all portions of a condominium other than the units, i.e. physical portion of the condominium designated for separate ownership or occupancy. Uniform Condominium Act, 1-103(4), (25).

Common enemy doctrine. Under "common enemy doctrine" each landowner has an unqualified right, by operations on his own land, to fend off surface waters as he sees fit without being required to take into account the consequences to other landowners who also have the duty and right to protect themselves as best they can. Reutner v. Vouga, Mo.App., 367 S.W.2d 34, 41.

Common enterprise. Under securities law, a venture in which the fortunes of an investor are interwoven with and dependent upon the efforts and success of those seeking the investment or of third parties. S.E.C. v.

Goldfield Deep Mines Co. of Nevada, C.A.Cal., 758 F.2d 459, 463.

Commoners. In old English law, persons having a right of common. So called because they have a right to pasture on the waste, in common with the lord.

Common fund doctrine. This doctrine provides that a private plaintiff, or plaintiff's attorney, whose efforts create, discover, increase, or preserve a fund to which others also have a claim is entitled to recover from the fund the costs of his litigation, including attorneys' fees. Vincent v. Hughes Air West, Inc., C.A.Cal., 557 F.2d 759, 769.

Common humanity doctrine. Where a passenger becomes sick or is injured while en route, carrier owes duty under "common humanity doctrine" to render to passenger such reasonable care and attention as common humanity would dictate.

Common knowledge. Refers to what court may declare applicable to action without necessity of proof. It is knowledge that every intelligent person has, and includes matters of learning, experience, history, and facts of which judicial notice may be taken. Shelley v. Chilton's Adm'r, 236 Ky. 221, 32 S.W.2d 974, 977. See also Judicial notice.

Common law. As distinguished from statutory law created by the enactment of legislatures, the common law comprises the body of those principles and rules of action, relating to the government and security of persons and property, which derive their authority solely from usages and customs of immemorial antiquity, or from the judgments and decrees of the courts recognizing, affirming, and enforcing such usages and customs; and, in this sense, particularly the ancient unwritten law of England. In general, it is a body of law that develops and derives through judicial decisions, as distinguished from legislative enactments. The "common law" is all the statutory and case law background of England and the American colonies before the American revolution. People v. Rehman, 253 C.A.2d 119, 61 Cal. Rptr. 65, 85. It consists of those principles, usage and rules of action applicable to government and security of persons and property which do not rest for their authority upon any express and positive declaration of the will of the legislature. Bishop v. U. S., D.C.Tex., 334 F.Supp. 415, 418.

As distinguished from ecclesiastical law, it is the system of jurisprudence administered by the purely secular tribunals.

Calif. Civil Code, Section 22.2, provides that the "common law of England, so far as it is not repugnant to or inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, or the Constitution or laws of this State, is the rule of decision in all the courts of this State."

In a broad sense, "common law" may designate all that part of the positive law, juristic theory, and ancient custom of any state or nation which is of general and universal application, thus marking off special or local rules or customs.

For Federal common law, see that title.

As a compound adjective "common-law" is understood as contrasted with or opposed to "statutory," and sometimes also to "equitable" or to "criminal." See examples below.

Common-law action. Action governed by common law, rather than statutory, equitable, or civil law.

Common-law assignments. Such forms of assignments for the benefit of creditors as were known to the common law, as distinguished from such as are of modern invention or authorized by statute.

Common-law cheat. The obtaining of money or property by means of a false token, symbol, or device; this being the definition of a cheat or "cheating" at common law.

Common-law contempt. A name sometimes applied to proceedings for contempt which are criminal in their nature, as distinguished from those which are intended as purely civil remedies ordinarily arising out of the alleged violation of some order entered in the course of a chancery proceeding.

Common-law copyright. Authors' proprietary interest in his creation before it has been published. An intangible, incorporeal right in an author of literary or artistic productions to reproduce and sell them exclusively and arises at the moment of their creation as distinguished from federal or statutory copyrights which exist for the most part only in published works. Common law copyright is perpetual while statutory copyright is for term of years. Equitable relief is available for violation of common law copyright. Edgar H. Wood Associates Inc. v. Skene, 347 Mass. 351, 197 N.E.2d 886. The distinction which formerly existed between common law copyrights and statutory copyrights was abolished by the 1976 Copyright Act revision; though § 301 of the new Act specifically preserves common law copyrights accruing prior to January 1, 1978. See also Copyright.

Common-law courts. In England, those administering the common law.

Common-law crime. One punishable by the force of the common law, as distinguished from crimes created by statute.

Common-law dedication. See Dedication.

Common-law extortion. Corrupt collection of unlawful fee by an office under color of office.

Common-law jurisdiction. Jurisdiction of a court to try and decide such cases as were cognizable by the courts of law under the English common law. The jurisdiction of those courts which exercise their judicial powers according to the course of the common law.

Common-law larceny. See Larceny.

Common-law lien. One known to or granted by the common law, as distinguished from statutory, equitable, and maritime liens; also one arising by implication of law, as distinguished from one created by the agreement of the parties. It is a right extended to a person to retain that which is in his possession belonging to another, until the demand or charge of the person in possession is paid or satisfied. Whiteside v. Rocky Mountain Fuel Co., C.C.A.Colo., 101 F.2d 765, 769.

Common-law marriage. One not solemnized in the ordinary way (i.e. non-ceremonial) but created by an agreement to marry, followed by cohabitation. A consummated agreement to marry, between persons legally capable of making marriage contract, per verba de praesenti, followed by cohabitation. Such marriage requires a positive mutual agreement, permanent and exclusive of all others, to enter into a marriage relationship, cohabitation sufficient to warrant a fulfillment of necessary relationship of man and wife, and an assumption of marital duties and obligations. Marshall v. State, Okl.Cr., 537 P.2d 423, 429. Such marriages are invalid in many states; e.g. Missouri (after 1921), Indiana (after 1958), Maryland, Massachusetts, Nebraska (after 1939), Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York (after 1933), North Dakota, Oregon, South Dakota (after 1959), Virginia, Washington, W. Virginia, Wisconsin, Wyoming.

Common-law state. See Community property.

Common-law trademark. One appropriated under common-law rules, regardless of statutes. Stratton & Terstege Co. v. Stiglitz Furnace Co., 258 Ky. 678, 81 S.W.2d 1, 3.

Common-law trust. A business trust which has certain characteristics in common with corporations and in which trustees hold the property and manage the business and the shareholders are the trust beneficiaries or cestui que trust; sometimes known as a Massachusetts trust. See Massachusetts trust.

Common-law wife. A woman who was party to a common-law marriage; or one who, having lived with a man in a relation of concubinage during his life, asserts a claim, after his death, to have been his wife according to the requirements of the common law.

Common lawyer. A lawyer learned in the common law. This term is now generally obsolete.

Common market. An economic union established by the Treaty of Rome, 1957, which originally included Belgium, France, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and West Germany. Its official title is European Economic Community.

Common nuisance. A nuisance is a "common nuisance" or a "public nuisance", the terms being synonymous, where it affects the rights enjoyed by citizens as part of the public, that is, the rights to which every citizen is entitled. Dahlstrom v. Roosevelt Mills, Inc., 27 Conn.Sup. 355, 238 A.2d 431, 432. See also Nuisance.

Common pleas court. See Court of Common Pleas.

Common property. Property held by two or more persons in common with each other; e.g. as tenants in common. Portion of rented premises over which landlord retains control but which may be used by tenants such as hallways, stairways, etc. See also Community property.

Common recovery. In conveyancing, a species of common assurance, or mode of conveying lands by matter of record, formerly in frequent use in England. It was in the nature and form of an action at law, carried regularly through, and ending in a recovery of the lands against the tenant of the freehold; which recovery, being a supposed adjudication of the right, bound all persons, and vested a free and absolute fee-simple in the recoverer. 2 Bl.Comm. 357. Common recoveries were abolished by the statutes 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 74.

Common right. Right derivative from common law. Strother v. Lucas, 37 U.S. (12 Pet.) 410, 437, 9 L.Ed. 1137. Right peculiar to certain people is not a common right. Perdue v. Zoning Bd. of Appeals of City of Norwalk, 118 Conn. 174, 171 A. 26, 28.

Commons. The class of subjects in Great Britain exclusive of the royal family and the nobility. They are represented in parliament by the house of commons.

Part of the demesne land of a manor (or land the property of which was in the lord), which, being uncultivated, was termed the "lord's waste," and served for public roads and for common of pasture to the lord and his tenants. 2 Bl.Comm. 90.

Squares; pleasure grounds and spaces or open places for public use or public recreation owned by towns or cities—in modern usage usually called "parks."

Commons, House of. See House (House of Commons).

Common stock. Class of corporate stock which represents the residual ownership of the corporation. Holders of common stock have voting powers (to, for example, select directors of corporation) and to participate in the profits of the corporation by way of dividends (but only after preferred stockholders have been paid their dividends). Such stock is last to share in property of corporation on dissolution (after demands of creditors and senior security holders are satisfied).

Common tenancy. Type of tenancy in which tenants hold property in common without right of survivorship. May be holding of unequal shares among tenants. Such tenancy is subject to partition. See also Tenancy.

Common thief. One who by practice and habit is a thief. An adjudication of a person which may be made after a person has been convicted more than once of larceny. It generally carries an additional sentence beyond that for larceny. Sometimes known as common and notorious thief.

Common trust fund. One composed of funds contributed by estates, trusts and guardianships, maintained and operated by a bank or trust company for exclusive use of its own estates, trusts and guardianships, under permission of law of state in which it is located and according to rules and regulations promulgated by Federal Reserve System. Mechanicks Nat. Bank of Concord v. D'Amours, 100 N.H. 461, 129 A.2d 859, 862. Type of trust fund in which funds of many persons are commingled for purposes of economy of administration and counselling and in which a bank or other financial institution is trustee; regulated almost entirely by statute. Several states have adopted the Uniform Common Trust Fund Act.

Common wall. See Party wall.

Commonwealth. The public or common weal or welfare. This cannot be regarded as a technical term of public law, though often used in political science. It generally designates, when so employed, a republican frame of government,—one in which the welfare and rights of the entire mass of people are the main consideration, rather than the privileges of a class or the will of a monarch; or it may designate the body of citizens living under such a government.

Sometimes it may denote the corporate entity, or the government, of a jural society (or state) possessing powers of self-government in respect of its immediate concerns, but forming an integral part of a larger government (or nation). In this latter sense, it is the official title of several of the United States (as Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Virginia, and Kentucky), and would be appropriate to them all. In the former sense, the word was used to designate the English government during the protectorate of Cromwell.

Any of the individual States of the United States and the body of people constituting a state or politically organized community, a body politic, hence, a state, especially one constituted by a number of persons united by compact or tacit agreement under one form of government and system of laws. Detres v. Lions Bldg. Corp., C.A.Ill., 234 F.2d 596, 600.

See Government; Nation; State.

Commonwealth court. In Pennsylvania, the Commonwealth Court has original jurisdiction of all civil actions or proceedings against Commonwealth or its officer (except habeas corpus or postconviction relief not ancillary to its appellate jurisdiction, and eminent domain); all civil actions or proceedings by Commonwealth or any officer, except eminent domain; and under numerous specified regulatory acts. Its original jurisdiction is exclusive, except in civil actions or proceedings brought by Commonwealth or its officers, which is concurrent with common pleas.

Commorancy /kómərənsiy/. In English law, the dwelling in any place as inhabitant; which consists in usually lying there. 4 Bl.Comm. 273. In American law, it is used to denote a mere temporary residence.

Commorant /kómərənt/. Staying or abiding; dwelling temporarily in a place. One residing in a particular town, city, or district.

Commorientes /kəmōriyéntiyz/. Several persons who perish at the same time in consequence of the same calamity. See Common (Common disaster).

Commonth, or comorth /kómərθ/. A contribution which has gathered at marriages, and when young priests said or sung the first masses. Prohibited by 26 Hen. VIII, c. 6.

Commote /kómət/. Half a cantred or hundred in Wales, containing fifty villages. Also a great seignory or lordship, and may include one or divers manors.

Commotion /kəmwʃən/. A condition of turmoil, civil unrest or insurrection. A civil commotion is an uprising among a mass of people which occasions a serious and prolonged disturbance and infraction of civil order not attaining the status of war or an armed insurrection; it is a wild and irregular action of many persons assembled together.

Commune /kəmyúwn/, v. To talk; to communicate.

Commune /kəmyúwniy/, adj. Lat. See Communis.

Commune /komyuwn/, n. A self-governing town or village. Smallest administrative district of many European countries. The name given to the committee of the people in the French revolution of 1793; and again, in the revolutionary uprising of 1871, it signified the attempt to establish absolute self-government in Paris, or the mass of those concerned in the attempt. In old French law, it signified any municipal corporation. And in old English law, the commonalty or common people.

Small community of people, usually with common interests, who own and share property in common.

Commune concilium /kəmyúwniy kənsil(i)yəm/. The King's Council. See Privy council.

Commune concilium regni /kəmyúwniy kənsil(i)yəm régnay/. The common council of the realm. One of the names of the English parliament. See Communitas regni anglia.

Commune forum /kəmyúwniy fórem/. The common place of justice. The seat of the principal courts, especially those that are fixed.

Commune placitum /kəmyúwniy plásətəm/. In old English law, a common plea or civil action, such as an action of debt.

Commune vinculum /kəmyúwniy vɪŋkyələm/. In old English law, a common or mutual bond. Applied to the common stock of consanguinity, and to the feudal bond of fealty, as the common bond of union between lord and tenant. 2 Bl.Comm. 250; 3 Bl.Comm. 230.

Communia /kəmyúwniyə/. In old English law, common things, res communes. Such as running water, the air, the sea, and sea shores.

Communiæ /kəmyúwniyiy/. In feudal law on the continent of Europe, this name was given to towns enfranchised by the crown, about the twelfth century, and formed into free corporations by grants called "charters of community".

Communia placita /kəmyúwniyə plásətə/. In old English law, common pleas or actions; those between one subject and another, as distinguished from pleas of the crown.

Communia placita non tenenda in scaccario /kəmyúwniyə plásətə nòn tənənda in skəkəriyow/. An ancient writ directed to the treasurer and barons of the exchequer, forbidding them to hold pleas between common persons (i.e., not debtors to the king, who alone originally sued and were sued there) in that court, where neither of the parties belonged to the same.

Communibus annis /kəmyúwnəbəs éns/. In ordinary years; on the annual average.

Communicate. To bestow, convey, make known, recount, impart; to give by way of information; to talk over; to transmit information. See also Utter.

Communication. Information given; the sharing of knowledge by one with another; conference; consultation or bargaining preparatory to making a contract. Intercourse; connection. Act of or system of transmitting information. A "communication" is ordinarily considered to be a deliberate interchange of thoughts or opinions between two or more persons, as distinguished from "res gestae" expressions which are spontaneously or instinctively provoked, or made while under such shock or excitement as to preclude the possibility of design. Gulf Oil Corp. v. Harris, Okl., 425 P.2d 957, 962.

Confidential communications. These are certain classes of communications, passing between persons who stand in a confidential or fiduciary relation to each other (or who, on account of their relative situation, are under a special duty of secrecy and fidelity), which the law will not permit to be divulged, or allow them to be inquired into in a court of justice, for the sake of public policy and the good order of society. Examples of such privileged relations are those of husband and wife, doctor and patient, and attorney and client. Such are privileged at the option of the spouse-witness, patient-witness, client-witness. For purpose of rule that the attorney-client privilege is limited to "communication" between the attorney and the client, "communication" is not restricted to oral or written matters but extends to information communicated by the client to the attorney by other means. State v. Hardin, Mo.App., 558 S.W.2d 804, 807. Fed.Evid.R. 501. See Privileged communications.

Libel or slander. As an essential element of tort liability for libel or slander, such communication (i.e. publication) may be either printed, written, oral, or conveyed by means of gestures, or exhibition of a picture or statue. See Libel; Publication; Slander.

Communi custodia /kəmyúwnay kəstówdiyə/. In English law, an obsolete writ which anciently lay for the lord, whose tenant, holding by knight's service, died, and left his eldest son under age, against a stranger that entered the land, and obtained the ward of the body.

Communi dividundo /kəmyúwnay divədándow/. In the civil law, an action which lies for those who have property in common, to procure a division. It lies where parties hold land in common but not in partnership.

Communio bonorum /kəmyúwn(i)yow bənorəm/. In the civil law, a community of goods.

Communis /kəmyúwnəs/, commune /kəmyúwniy/, adj. Lat. Common. See Commune.

Communis error facit jus /kəmyúwnəs éhrər féysət jəs/. Common error, repeated many times, makes law.

Communism. A system of social organization in which goods are held in common, the opposite of the system of private property; communalism, any theory or system of social organization involving common ownership of agents of production of industry, the latter of which theories is referred to in the popular use of the word "communism" while the scientific usage sometimes conforms to the first alone and sometimes alternates between the first and second; also the principles and theories of the Communist Party. A system by which the state controls the means of production and the distribution and consumption of industrial products.

Communis opinio /kəmyúwnəs əpín(i)yow/. Common opinion; general professional opinion. According to Lord Coke (who places it on the footing of observance or usage), common opinion is good authority in law.

Communis paries /kəmyúwnəs páriyiyz/. In the civil law, a common or party wall.

Communis rixatrix /kəmyúwnəs ríksətrəks/. In old English law, a common scold (q.v.). 4 Bl.Comm. 168.

Communis scriptura /kəmyúwnəs skript(y)úra/. In old English law, a common writing; a writing common to both parties; a chirograph.

Communis stipes /kəmyúwnə stáypiyz/. A common stock of descent; a common ancestor.

Communist. Member of the Communist party or movement. Adherent or advocate of Communism.

Communitas regni anglia /kəmyúwnətəs régnay éngli-yiy/. The general assembly of the kingdom of England. One of the ancient names of the English parliament. 1 Bl.Comm. 148. See also Commune concilium regni.

Community. Neighborhood; vicinity; synonymous with locality. Conley v. Valley Motor Transit Co., C.C.A. Ohio, 139 F.2d 692, 693. People who reside in a locality in more or less proximity. A society or body of people living in the same place, under the same laws and regulations, who have common rights, privileges, or interests. Sacred Heart Academy of Galveston v. Karsch, 173 Tenn. 618, 122 S.W.2d 416, 417. It connotes a congeries of common interests arising from associations—social, business, religious, governmental, scholastic, recreational. Lukens Steel Co. v. Perkins, 70 App.D.C. 354, 107 F.2d 627, 631.

Community account. A bank account consisting of separate and community funds commingled in such manner that neither can be distinguished from the other. Smith v. Buss, 135 Tex. 566, 144 S.W.2d 529, 532.

Community antenna television (CATV). System of television reception in which signals from distant stations are picked up by large antenna and transmitted by cable to individual paying customers.

Community debt. One chargeable to the community (of husband and wife) rather than to either of the parties individually.

Community house. A house occupied by two or more persons or families. A tenement.

Community lease. Exists where a number of lessors owning interests in separate tracts execute a lease in favor of a single lessee. Howell v. Union Producing Co., C.A.Tex., 392 F.2d 95.

Community of interest. Term as applied to relation of joint adventure means interest common to both or all parties, that is, mixture or identity of interest in venture wherein each and all are reciprocally concerned and from which each and all derive material benefit and sustain a mutual responsibility. Carboneau v. Peterson, 1 Wash.2d 347, 95 P.2d 1043, 1055. See Joint venture.

In class actions, this refers to whatever grievance unites members of the class against the defendant but it must predominate. Nebel v. City of Chicago, 53 Ill. App.3d 890, 11 Ill.Dec. 620, 369 N.E.2d 74, 83.

In labor law, to determine the appropriate bargaining unit, this term includes such factors as bargaining history, operational integration, geographic proximity, common supervision, similarity in job function and degree of employee interchange. N.L.R.B. v. G.H.R. Energy Corp., C.A.La., 707 F.2d 110, 114.

Community of profits. This term, as used in the definition of a partnership (to which a community of profits is essential), means a proprietorship in them as distinguished from a personal claim upon the other associate as much as in the other. Moore v. Williams, 26 Tex.Civ. App. 142, 62 S.W. 977.

Community property. Property owned in common by husband and wife each having an undivided one-half interest by reason of their marital status. The nine states with community property systems are Louisiana, Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, California, Washington, Idaho, Nevada, and Wisconsin (with adoption of Uniform Marital Property Act). The rest of the states are classified as common law jurisdictions. The difference between common law and community property systems centers around the property rights possessed by married persons. In a common law system, each spouse owns whatever he or she earns. Under a community property system, one-half of the earnings of each spouse is considered owned by the other spouse.

Community service. A criminal sentence requiring that the offender perform some specific service to the community for some specified period of time.

Commutation /kòmýətéyshən/. Alteration; change; substitution; the act of substituting one thing for another.

In criminal law, the change of a punishment to one which is less severe; as from execution to life imprisonment. The President of the United States has the power to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States, except in cases of impeachment. U.S. Constitution, Art. 2, Sec. 2, cl. 1. With respect to state offenses, the governor of a state has the power to grant commutations. Sherwood v. Murphy, 123 N.Y.S.2d 360. Compare Amnesty; Pardon.

In commercial law, substituting one form of payment for another.

In civil law, the conversion of the right to receive a variable or periodical payment into the right to receive a fixed or gross payment; a substitution of one sort of payment for another, or of money payment in lieu of a performance of a compulsory duty or labor. Commutation may be effected by private agreement, but it is usually done under a statute.

Commutation of taxes. Payment of a designated lump sum (permanent or annual) for the privilege of exemption from taxes, or the settlement in advance of a specific sum in lieu of an ad valorem tax.

Commutation of tithes. Signifies the conversion of tithes into a fixed payment in money.

Commutation ticket. A railroad ticket giving the holder the right to travel at a certain rate for a limited number of trips (or for an unlimited number within a certain period of time) for a less amount than would be paid in the aggregate for so many separate trips.

Commutative contract. In civil law, one in which each of the contracting parties gives and receives an equivalent; e.g., the contract of sale. See Contract.

Commutative justice. See Justice.

Commuted value. The present value of a future interest in property used in taxation and in evaluating damages. Present value of future payments when discounted.

Comodato /kōmōdátow/. In Spanish law, a contract by which one person lends gratuitously to another some object not consumable, to be restored to him in kind at a given period; the same contract as commodatum (q.v.).

Compact, n. An agreement or contract between persons, nations or states. Commonly applied to working agreements between and among states concerning matters of mutual concern. A contract between parties, which creates obligations and rights capable of being enforced, and contemplated as such between the parties, in their distinct and independent characters. A mutual consent of parties concerned respecting some property or right that is the object of the stipulation, or something that is to be done or forborne. See also Compact clause; Confederacy; Interstate compact; Treaty.

Compact, adj. Closely or firmly united or packed, as the particles of solid bodies; firm; solid; dense, as a compact texture in rocks; also, lying in a narrow compass or arranged so as to economize space; having a small surface or border in proportion to contents or bulk; close, as a compact estate, or a compact order or formation of troops.

Compact clause. Art. I, Section 10, Cl. 3, of U.S. Constitution provides: "No State shall, without the consent of Congress, . . . enter into any Agreement or Compact with another State . . ."

Compact school district. One so closely united and so nearly adjacent to the school building that all the students residing in the district may conveniently travel from their homes to the school building and return the same day in a reasonable length of time and with a reasonable degree of comfort. People ex rel. Frailey v. McNeely, 376 Ill. 64, 32 N.E.2d 608, 610.

Companage. All kinds of food, except bread and drink.

Companies Clauses Consolidation Act. An English statute (8 Vict. c. 16), passed in 1845, which consolidated the clauses of previous laws still remaining in force on the subject of public companies. It is considered as incorporated into all subsequent acts authorizing the execution of undertakings of a public nature by companies, unless expressly excepted by such later acts. Its purpose is declared by the preamble to be to avoid repeating provisions as to the constitution and management of the companies, and to secure greater uniformity in such provisions. In England, companies are generally governed by the Companies Act, 1985.

Companies court. Collective title of those judges of the Chancery Division of the High Court with jurisdiction over all matters pertaining to companies registered in England. Companies Act, 1985, § 501.

Company. Union or association of persons for carrying on a commercial or industrial enterprise; a partnership, corporation, association, joint stock company.

Company town. A residential and commercial community opened by a company for public use and operated under color of state law. Illinois Migrant Council v. Campbell Soup Co., C.A.Ill., 519 F.2d 391. Community exists primarily because of company; with major part of housing and stores owned by company.

Company union. Union whose membership is limited to the employees of a single company. Union under company domination.

Joint stock company. An association of individuals for purposes of profit, possessing a common capital contributed by the members composing it, such capital being commonly divided into shares which each member possesses one or more, and which are transferable by the owner. One having a joint stock or capital, which is divided into numerous transferable shares, or consists of transferable stock. A partnership whereof the capital is divided, or agreed to be divided, into shares so as to be transferable without the express consent of the co-partners.

Limited company. A company in which the liability of each shareholder is limited by the number of shares he has taken, so that he cannot be called on to contribute beyond the amount of his shares. In England, the memorandum of association of such company may provide that the liability of the directors, manager, or managing director thereof shall be unlimited.

Comparable accommodation. Within the rule that it is the rent generally prevailing on the freeze date for comparable accommodations in a defense-rental area that determines rent that may be charged, two accommodations are "comparable" if they are sufficiently similar to be regarded by an expert as of substantially equal rental value or if they are sufficiently similar so that an expert taking as a standard the rent prevailing for one and making allowances for such differences as would be reflected in rental value would be able to determine the appropriate corresponding rent for the other. Sirianni v. Bowles, Em.App., 148 F.2d 343, 344.

Comparables. Properties used as comparisons to determine value of a specific property.

Comparable sales. As evidence of market value of condemned property, sales from a willing seller to a willing buyer of similar property in the vicinity or at about the same time as the taking. U.S. v. 33.90 Acres of Land, Situated in Bexar County, C.A.Tex., 709 F.2d 1012, 1013.

Comparable worth. Term used to describe a class of wage discrimination claims based on the employer's use of different criteria in establishing the wage rates for male- and female-dominated jobs. Several states have enacted laws establishing comparable worth policies and processes for implementing pay adjustments for state employees.

Comparatio literarum /kòmperáysh(iy)ow lidərəram/. In the civil law, comparison of writings, or handwritings. A mode of proof allowed in certain cases.

Comparative. Proceeding by the method of comparison; founded on comparison; estimated by comparison.

Comparative interpretation. That method of interpretation which seeks to arrive at the meaning of a statute or other writing by comparing its several parts and also by comparing it as a whole with other like documents proceeding from the same source and referring to the same general subject.

Comparative jurisprudence. The study of the principles of legal science by the comparison of various systems of law.

Comparative negligence. Under comparative negligence statutes or doctrines, negligence is measured in terms of percentage, and any damages allowed shall be diminished in proportion to amount of negligence attributable to the person for whose injury, damage or death recovery is sought. Many states have replaced contributory negligence acts or doctrines with comparative negligence. Where negligence by both parties is concurrent and contributes to injury, recovery is not barred under such doctrine, but plaintiff's damages are diminished proportionately, provided his fault is less than defendant's, and that, by exercise of ordinary care, he could not have avoided consequences of defendant's negligence after it was or should have been apparent.

Comparative rectitude. Doctrine wherein relief by divorce is granted to the party least in fault when both have shown grounds for divorce. Weber v. Weber, 256 Ark. 549, 508 S.W.2d 725, 729.

Comparative stylistics. An evidential technique focusing on nonidentity of typist of questioned writings. Matter-of-fact solutions are premised on comparisons of the numerous stylistic alternatives in grammar and format, and the individualized habits and routine practices inherent in the repetitive reduction of like writings to paper, with emphasis on typewritings. In re Ciaffoni's Estate, 498 Pa. 267, 446 A.2d 225, cert.den. Cowden v. Ciaffoni, 103 S.Ct. 447. See Fed. and Uniform Rules of Evid. 406 and 901. See also Comparative interpretation; Comparison of handwriting; Forensic linguistics.

Comparison of handwriting. A comparison by the juxtaposition of two writings, in order, by such comparison, to ascertain whether both were written by the same person.

A method of proof resorted to where the genuineness of a written document is disputed; it consists in comparing the handwriting of the disputed paper with that of another instrument which is proved or admitted to be in the writing of the party sought to be charged, in order to infer, from their identity or similarity in this respect, that they are the work of the same hand. Expert testimony with respect to such proof is permitted by Fed.Evid. Rule 702, and non-expert testimony is governed by Rule 901.

See also Comparative stylistics.

Compascuum /kəmpəskyuwəm/. Belonging to commonage Jus compascuum, the right of common pasture.

Compaternity. Spiritual affinity, contracted by sponsorship in baptism.

Compatibility. As applied to offices, such relation and consistency between the duties of two offices that they may be held and filled by one person. Harmonious relationship as between husband and wife.

Compel. To urge forcefully; under extreme pressure. Word "compel" as used in constitutional right to be free from being compelled in a criminal case to be a witness against one's self means to be subjected to some coercion, fear, terror, inducement, trickery or threat—either physically or psychologically, blatantly or subtly; the hallmark of compulsion is the presence of some operative force producing an involuntary response. U. S. v. Escandar, C.A.Fla., 465 F.2d 438, 442.

Compellativus /kòmpèlatáyvəs/. An adversary or accuser.

Compelling state interest. One which the state is forced or obliged to protect. Coleman v. Coleman, 32 Ohio St.2d 155, 291 N.E.2d 530, 534. Term used to uphold state action in the face of attack grounded on Equal Protection or First Amendment rights because of serious need for such state action. Also employed to justify state action under police power of state. Printing Industries of Gulf Coast v. Hill, 382 F.Supp. 801 (D.C.Tex.).

Compensable. Entitled to compensation. See, e.g., Compensable injury.

Compensable death. Within worker's compensation acts is one which results to employee from injury by accident arising out of and in course of employment.

Compensable injury. Such injury within workers' compensation act is one caused by an accident arising out of and in the course of the employment and for which the injured employee is entitled to receive compensation under such law. Seymour v. Journal-Star Printing Co., 174 Neb. 150, 116 N.W.2d 297, 299. See Workers' Compensation Acts.

Compensación /kòmpensas(i)yówn/. In Spanish law, compensation; set-off. The extinction of a debt by another debt of equal dignity between persons who have mutual claims on each other.

Compensate. To make equivalent return to, to recompense, or to pay. Hunt v. Hospital Service Plan of N.J., 59 N.J.Super. 219, 157 A.2d 575, 577. See Compensation.

Compensating balance. The balance a borrower from a bank is required to keep on deposit as a condition of the loan or for continuing line of credit.

Compensating tax. See Use tax.

Compensatio /kòmpənséysh(i)yow/. Lat. In the civil law, compensation, or set-off. A proceeding resembling a set-off in the common law, being a claim on the part of the defendant to have an amount due to him from the plaintiff deducted from his demand. 3 Bl.Comm. 305.

Compensatio criminis /kòmpənséysh(i)yow krimənəs/. (Set-off of crime or guilt). The compensation or set-off of one crime against another; the plea or defense of re-primination in a suit for a divorce; that is, that the complainant is guilty of the same kind of offense with which the respondent is charged.

Compensation. Indemnification; payment of damages; making amends; making whole; giving an equivalent or substitute of equal value. That which is necessary to restore an injured party to his former position. Remuneration for services rendered, whether in salary, fees, or commissions. Consideration or price of a privilege purchased.

Equivalent in money for a loss sustained; equivalent given for property taken or for an injury done to another; giving back an equivalent in either money which is but the measure of value, or in actual value otherwise conferred; recompense in value; recompense or reward for some loss, injury, or service, especially when it is given by statute; remuneration for the injury directly and proximately caused by a breach of contract or duty; remuneration or satisfaction for injury or damage of every description (including medical expenses). An act which a court orders to be done, or money which a court or other tribunal orders to be paid, by a person whose acts or omissions have caused loss or injury to another, in order that thereby the person damaged may receive equal value for his loss, or be made whole in respect of his injury. Hughson Condensed Milk Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 23 Cal.App.2d 281, 73 P.2d 290, 292. See also Damages.

chute; Incentive pay plans; Profit-sharing plan; Salary; Unreasonable compensation; Wages.

Eminent domain. Payment to owners of lands taken or injured by the exercise of the power of eminent domain. See Just compensation.

Unemployment and workers' compensation. Payments to an unemployed or injured worker or his dependents. See Workers' Compensation Acts.

Compensation period. Period fixed by unemployment or worker's compensation statutes during which unemployed or injured worker is to receive compensation.

Compensatory damages. See Damages.

Comperendinatio /kòmpərəndənáysh(i)yow/. In the Roman law, the adjournment of a cause, in order to hear the parties or their advocates a second time; a second hearing of the parties to a cause.

Compertorium /kòmpərtóriyám/. In the civil law, a judicial inquest made by delegates or commissioners to find out and relate the truth of a cause.

Comperuit ad diem /kəmpəruwət əd dáyəm/. A plea in bar of an action of a debt on a bail bond that the defendant appeared at the day required.

Compete. To contend emulously; to strive for the position, reward, profit, goal, etc., for which another is striving. To contend in rivalry. See Competition.

Competency. In the law of evidence, the presence of those characteristics, or the absence of those disabilities, which render a witness legally fit and qualified to give testimony in a court of justice; applied, in the same sense, to documents or other written evidence. Evidence which is admissible as being able to assist the trier of fact (i.e. jury) in determining questions of fact, though it may not be believed. Competency differs from credibility. The former is a question which arises before considering the evidence given by the witness; the latter concerns the degree of credit to be given to his testimony. The former denotes the personal qualification of the witness; the latter his veracity. A witness may be competent, and yet give incredible testimony; he may be incompetent, and yet his evidence, if received, be perfectly credible. Competency is for the court; credibility for the jury. Yet in some cases the term "credible" is used as an equivalent for "competent". In law of contracts, of legal age without mental disability or incapacity. See also Ability; Authority; Capacity; Competent; Competent evidence; Competent witness; Duly qualified; Incompetency; Power; Qualified.

Competency proceedings. Hearings conducted to determine a person's mental capacity. Such may be held within criminal context to determine competency to stand trial, or to be sentenced, or to determine whether at time of offense the accused was legally sane. See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 4241 et seq. Such may also be held in civil context to determine whether person should be committed for treatment.

Competency to stand trial. A person lacks competency to stand trial if he or she lacks capacity to understand the nature and object of the proceedings, to consult with counsel, and to assist in preparing his or her defense. Drope v. Missouri, 420 U.S. 162, 95 S.Ct. 896, 43 L.Ed.2d 103. To be "competent to stand trial" a defendant must have, at time of trial, sufficient present ability to consult with his or her lawyer with a reasonable degree of understanding and a rational as well as factual understanding of the proceedings against him or her. U.S. v. Taylor, C.A.Va., 437 F.2d 371, 375. Due process prohibits the government from prosecuting a defendant who is legally incompetent to stand trial. Drope v. Missouri, 420 U.S. 162, 95 S.Ct. 896, 43 L.Ed.2d 103; Pate v. Robinson, 383 U.S. 375, 385, 86 S.Ct. 836, 15 L.Ed.2d 815. The issue of competency is collateral to the issue of guilt. Dusky v. United States, 362 U.S. 402, 80 S.Ct. 788, 4 L.Ed.2d 824. See Insanity.

Competent. Duly qualified; answering all requirements; having sufficient capacity, ability or authority; possessing the requisite physical, mental, natural or legal qualifications; able; adequate; suitable; sufficient; capable; legally fit. A testator may be said to be "competent" if he or she understands (1) the general nature and extent of his property; (2) his relationship to the people named in the will and to any people he disinherits; (3) what a will is; and (4) the transaction of simple business affairs. See also Capacity; Competency; Incompetency.

Competent authority. As applied to courts and public officers, this term imports jurisdiction and due legal authority to deal with the particular matter in question.

Competent court. A court, either civil or criminal, having lawful jurisdiction.

Competent evidence. That which the very nature of the thing to be proven requires, as, the production of a writing where its contents are the subject of inquiry. Also, generally, admissible (i.e. relevant and material) as opposed to "incompetent" or "inadmissible" evidence. Frick v. State, Okl.Cr., 509 P.2d 135, 136. See also Competency; Evidence; Relevant evidence.

Competent witness. One who is legally qualified to be heard to testify in a cause. A witness may not testify to a matter unless evidence is introduced sufficient to support a finding that the witness has personal knowledge of the matter. Fed.Evid.R. 602.

As used in statutes relating to the execution of wills, the term means a person who, at the time of making the attestation, could legally testify in court to the facts which he attests by subscribing his name to the will. See also Competency.

Competition. Contest between two rivals. The effort of two or more parties, acting independently, to secure the business of a third party by the offer of the most favorable terms; also the relations between different buyers or different sellers which result from this effort. Ingram Corp. v. Circle, Inc., La.App., 188 So.2d 96, 98. It is the struggle between rivals for the same trade at the same time; the act of seeking or endeavoring to gain what another is endeavoring to gain at the same time.

The term implies the idea of endeavoring by two or more to obtain the same object or result. See also Compete.

Unfair competition in trade. See Combination in restraint of trade; Price-fixing; Sherman Antitrust Act; Unfair competition.

Competitive bidding. Such bidding generally encompasses the submission of bids to complete a project and an award of the contract to the responsible bidder best able to complete the project in a manner which is financially most advantageous to community. Marriott Corp. v. Metropolitan Dade County, Fla.App., 383 So.2d 662, 665.

Competitive civil service examination. Examination which conforms to measures or standards which are sufficiently objective to be capable of being challenged and reviewed by other examiners of equal ability and experience. Such exam may be open in which case all may take it or may be promotional in which case only those in service may compete against others in service.

Competitive traffic. Traffic which, as to any one carrier, originates at a point served also by another carrier, which other carrier handles the traffic at equal line-haul rates from origin to destination.

Competitors. Persons endeavoring to do the same thing and each offering to perform the act, furnish the merchandise, or render the service better or cheaper than his rival.

Compilation /kòmpeleyshən/. A bringing together of preexisting statutes in the form in which they were enacted, with the removal of sections which have been repealed and the substitution of amendments in an arrangement designed to facilitate their use. A literary production composed of the works or selected extracts of others and arranged in methodical manner. Compare Code; Codification. See also Compiled statutes; Revised statutes.

In accounting, a term used in connection with the presentation of financial statements when the accountant has accumulated or compiled the financial information of an entity and does not give assurance that the financial statements are presented in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles. The accountant's responsibility in a compiled set of financial statements is limited to reviewing the statements for obvious errors.

In copyright law, a "compilation" is a work formed by the collection and assembling of preexisting materials or of data that are selected, coordinated, or arranged in such a way that the resulting work as a whole constitutes an original work of authorship. The term "compilation" includes collective works. Copyright Act, 17 U.S.C.A. § 101. See also Collective work.

Compile. See Compilation.

Compiled statutes. A collection of the statutes existing and in force in a given state, with all laws and parts of laws relating to each subject-matter being brought together under one head and the whole arranged systematically, either under an alphabetical arrangement or some other plan of classification. Compare Code; Codification. See also Compilation; Revised statutes.

Complainant. One who applies to the courts for legal redress by filing complaint (i.e. plaintiff). Also, one who instigates prosecution or who prefers accusation against suspected person.

Complaint. The original or initial pleading by which an action is commenced under codes or Rules of Civil Procedure. E.g. Fed.R. Civil P. 3. The pleading which sets forth a claim for relief. Such complaint (whether it be the original claim, counterclaim, cross-claim, or third-party claim) shall contain: (1) a short and plain statement of the grounds upon which the court's jurisdiction depends, unless the court already has jurisdiction and the claim needs no new grounds of jurisdiction to support it, (2) a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief, and (3) a demand for judgment for the relief to which he deems himself entitled. Relief in the alternative or of several different types may be demanded. Fed.R. Civil P. 8(a). The complaint, together with the summons, is required to be served on the defendant. Rule 4. See also Counterclaim; Cross-claim; Supplemental complaint; Third party complaint.

In criminal law, a charge, preferred before a magistrate having jurisdiction, that a person named (or an unknown person) has committed a specified offense, with an offer to prove the fact, to the end that a prosecution may be instituted. The complaint can be "taken out" by the victim, the police officer, the district attorney, or other interested party. Although the complaint charges an offense, an indictment or information may be the formal charging document. The complaint is a written statement of the essential facts constituting the offense charged. In the federal courts, it is to be made upon oath before a magistrate. Fed.R.Crim.P. 3. If it appears from the complaint that probable cause exists that the person named in the complaint committed the alleged crime, a warrant (q.v.) for his arrest will be issued. Fed.R.Crim.P. 4.

Complete, v. To finish; accomplish that which one starts out to do.

Complete, adj. Full; entire; including every item or element of the thing spoken of, without omissions or deficiencies; as, a "complete" copy, record, schedule, or transcript.

Perfect; consummate; not lacking in any element or particular; as in the case of a "complete legal title" to land, which includes the possession, the right of possession, and the right of property (i.e. fee simple title). Versailles Tp. v. Ulm, 152 Pa.Super. 384, 33 A.2d 265, 267.

Completed. Finished; nothing substantial remaining to be done; state of a thing that has been created, erected, constructed or done substantially according to contract.

Completed contract method. A method used in accounting to report profit or loss on long term contracts in the year the contract is complete, except that losses must be recognized in the year incurred. This method differs from the percent of completion method where revenues and expenses are recorded over the life of the contract in accordance with the level of progress. The completed contract method is not allowed for tax purposes for long term contracts entered into after February 28, 1986. The acceptable methods for contracts entered into after February 28, 1986 include; percent of completion and percent of completion—capitalized cost method which combines the elements of the completed contract and percent of completion methods. See also Percentage of completion method.

Complete determination of cause. Determination of every issue so as to render decree or judgment res judicata.

Complete in itself. In reference to a legislative act, means covering entire subject; not amendatory.

Completeness rule. Rule of evidence which permits further use of a document to explain portion of document already in evidence. Camps v. N. Y. City Transit Authority, C.A.N.Y., 261 F.2d 320. See also Open (Open the door).

Complete operation rule. This doctrine holds that an unloading clause in insurance policy covers the entire process involved in the moving of goods from the moment the goods are in the insured's possession and until they are given, at the place of destination, to the party to whom delivery is to be made. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., D.C.App., 380 A.2d 1385, 1387.

Complete payment. On a contract, the final payment.

Completion. The finishing or accomplishing in full of something theretofore begun. See also Substantial performance doctrine.

Completion bond. See Bond; Performance bond.

Complex trust. A trust with elaborate provisions as distinguished from a simple trust. May refer to trust in which trustees have complete discretion as to accumulating or distributing trust income, i.e. trustee need not distribute income annually, or make distributions other than from income. Hay v. U. S., D.C.Tex., 263 F.Supp. 813. See also Trust.

Compliance. Submission; obedience; conformance.

Complicated. Consisting of many parts or particulars not easily severable in thought; hard to understand or explain; involved, intricate, confused.

Complice. One who is united with others in an ill design; an associate, confederate, accomplice, or accessory (q.v.). See also Conspiracy.

Complicity /kəmplisətɪy/. A state of being an accomplice; participation in guilt. State v. Scheuering, 226 La. 660, 76 So.2d 921, 924. Involvement in crime as principal or as accessory before fact. May also refer to activities of conspirators. See Accomplice; Conspiracy.

Comply. To yield; to accommodate, or to adapt oneself to; to act in accordance with; to accept.

Composed of. Formed of; consisting of.

Composite work. Within Copyright Act means work to which a number of authors have contributed distinguishable parts. Works containing distinguishable parts which are separately copyrightable. Markham v. A.E. Borden Co., C.A.Mass., 206 F.2d 199, 201. See Copyright Act §§ 101, 103 (17 U.S.C.A.). See also Collective work; Compilation.

Compositio mensurarum /kòmpəzish(iy)ow men-shəréəm/. The ordinance of measures. The title of an ancient ordinance, not printed, mentioned in the statute 23 Hen. VIII, c. 4; establishing a standard of measures. 1 Bl.Comm. 275.

Composition deed. An agreement embodying the terms of a composition between a debtor and his creditors.

Composition of matter. In patent law, a substance composed of two or more different substances, without regard to form. A mixture or chemical combination of materials.

Composition of tithes, or real composition. This arises in English ecclesiastical law, when an agreement is made between the owner of lands and the incumbent of a benefice, with the consent of the ordinary and the patron, that the lands shall, for the future, be discharged from payment of tithes, by reason of some land or other real recompense given in lieu and satisfaction thereof. 2 Bl.Comm. 28.

Composition with creditors. An agreement, made upon a sufficient consideration, between an insolvent or embarrassed debtor and his creditors, whereby the latter, for the sake of immediate or sooner payment, agree to accept a payment less than the whole amount of their claims, to be distributed pro rata, in discharge and satisfaction of the whole. It constitutes an agreement not only between the debtor and his creditors but also one between the creditors themselves that each shall accept the lesser sums from the assets of the embarrassed debtor. Under the former Bankruptcy Act, if such a composition agreement expressly or secretly favored certain creditors, it was considered a preferential transfer and, as such, treated as an "act of bankruptcy." See Act of bankruptcy. Such arrangements are generally provided for under the federal Bankruptcy Code. See Bankruptcy proceedings (Business reorganizations; Wage earner's plan).

"Composition" should be distinguished from "accord." The latter properly denotes an arrangement between a debtor and a single creditor for a discharge of the obligation by a part payment or on different terms. The former designates an arrangement between a debtor and the whole body of his creditors (or at least a considerable proportion of them) for the liquidation of their claims by the dividend offered.

See also Arrangement with creditors; Assignment (Assignment for benefit of creditors).

Compositio ulnarum et perticarum /kòmpəzish(iy)ow əlnérəm ət pərtəkérəm/. The statute of ells and perch- es. The title of an English statute establishing a standard of measures. 1 Bl.Comm. 275.

Compos mentis /kòmpəs méntəs/. Sound of mind. Having use and control of one's mental faculties.

Compos sui /kòmpəs s(y)úway/. Having the use of one's limbs, or the power of bodily motion. Si fuit ita compos sui quod itinerare potuit de loco in locum, if he had so far the use of his limbs as to be able to travel from place to place.

Computarius /kòmpətériyəs/. In old English law, a party accounting.

Compound, v. To compromise; to effect a composition with a creditor; to obtain discharge from a debt by the payment of a smaller sum. To put together as elements, ingredients, or parts, to form a whole; to combine, to unite. To form or make up as a composite product by combining different elements, ingredients, or parts, as to combine a medicine. See Compounding crime.

Compound, n. A combination of two or more elements or things by means of human agency; an artificial or synthetic product.

Compounder. In Louisiana, the maker of a composition, generally called the "amicable compounder."

Compounding a felony. See Compounding crime.

Compounding crime. Compounding crime consists of the receipt of some property or other consideration in return for an agreement not to prosecute or inform on one who has committed a crime. There are three elements to this offense at common law, and under the typical compounding statute: (1) the agreement not to prosecute; (2) knowledge of the actual commission of a crime; and (3) the receipt of some consideration.

The offense committed by a person who, having been directly injured by a felony, agrees with the criminal that he will not prosecute him, on condition of the latter's making reparation, or on receipt of a reward or bribe not to prosecute.

The offense of taking a reward for forbearing to prosecute a felony; as where a party robbed takes his goods again, or other amends, upon an agreement not to prosecute.

See Conceal; Misprision of felony; Receiving stolen goods or property; Withholding of evidence.

Compound interest. Interest that is paid not only on the principal, but also on any interest earned but not withdrawn during earlier periods. Interest upon interest; i.e., when the interest of a sum of money is added to the principal, and then bears interest, which thus becomes a sort of secondary principal.

Compound larceny. See Compounding crime; Larceny.

Compra y venta /kòmprə iy véntə/. In Spanish law, purchase and sale.

Comprehensive zoning plan. A general plan to control and direct the use and development of property in a municipality or in a large part thereof by dividing it into districts according to the present and potential use of the properties. Damick v. Planning and Zoning Commission of Town of Southington, 158 Conn. 78, 256 A.2d 428. See also Planned unit development (PUD).

Compremesso /kòmpreμέςow/. In Italian law, the instrument whereby parties agree to submit to arbitration a dispute between them. The equivalent of "compromissum" under the Roman Law, the principles of which have been carried into the common law and are to be found in agreements of accord and satisfaction and compromise and settlement.

Comprint. A surreptitious printing of another book-seller's copy of a work, to make gain thereby, which was contrary to common law, and is illegal. See Infringement.

Comprise. To comprehend; include; contain; embrace; cover.

Comprivigni /kòmprəvignay/. In the civil law, children by a former marriage, (individually called "privigni," or "privignæ") considered relatively to each other. Thus, the son of a husband by a former wife, and the daughter of a wife by a former husband, are the comprivigni of each other.

Compromise and settlement. Settlement of a disputed claim by mutual concession to avoid a lawsuit. Newsom v. Miller, 42 Wash.2d 727, 258 P.2d 812, 814. An arrangement arrived at, either in court or out of court, for settling a dispute upon what appears to the parties to be equitable terms, having regard to the uncertainty they are in regarding the facts or the law and the facts together. An agreement or arrangement by which, in consideration of mutual concessions, a controversy is terminated. Putnam v. Otsego Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 41 A.D.2d 981, 343 N.Y.S.2d 736, 738. See Alternative dispute resolution; Arbitration; Mediation; Settlement.

Offer of compromise. See Offer, n.

Compromise verdict. One which is reached only by the surrender of conscientious convictions on one material issue by some jurors in return for a relinquishment of matters in their like settled opinion on another issue, and the result is one which does not hold the approval of the entire panel. See also Allen charge; Verdict.

Compromissarii sunt iudices /kòmprəməsəriyay sənt júwdəsiyz/. Arbitrators are judges.

Compromissarius /kòmprəməsəriyəs/. In the civil law, an arbitrator.

Compromissum /kòmprəmisəm/. A submission to arbitration.

Compromissum ad similitudinem iudiciorum redigitur /kòmprəmisəm əd simələtyúwdənəm jədishiýörəm rədijətər/. A compromise is brought into affinity with judgments.

Compte arrêté /kóm(p)t əreytéy/. Fr. An account stated in writing, and acknowledged to be correct on its face by the party against whom it is stated.

Comptroller /kóm(p)trowlər/kəntrówlər/kóntr°. A public officer of a state or municipal corporation, or an officer of a business, charged with certain duties in relation to the fiscal affairs of the same, principally to examine and audit the accounts, to keep records, and report the financial situation from time to time. There are also officers bearing this name in the Treasury Department of the United States.

Comptroller General. Government official (head of G. A. O.) whose main function is to audit governmental agencies.

Comptroller of Currency. The Office of the Comptroller of the Currency was created by act of Congress approved February 25, 1863 (12 Stat. 665), as an integral part of the national banking system. The Comptroller, as the administrator of national banks, is responsible for the execution of laws relating to national banks and promulgates rules and regulations governing the operations of national and District of Columbia banks. Approval of the Comptroller is required for the organization of new national banks, conversion of State-chartered banks into national banks, consolidations or mergers of banks where the surviving institution is a national bank, and the establishment of branches by national banks.

Compulsa /kəmpəlsə/. A judicially attested copy of a testimonio.

Compulsion. Constraint; objective necessity; duress. Forcible inducement to the commission of an act. The act of compelling or the state of being compelled; the act of driving or urging by force or by physical or moral constraint; subjection to force. The compulsion which will excuse a criminal act must be present, imminent and impending and of such a nature as to induce a well-grounded apprehension of death or serious bodily harm. To constitute "compulsion" or "coercion" rendering payment involuntary, there must be some actual or threatened exercise of power possessed, or supposedly possessed, by payee over payer's person or property, from which payer has no means of immediate relief except by advancing money. See Coercion; Duress.

Compulsory, n. In ecclesiastical procedure, a compulsory is a kind of writ to compel the attendance of a witness, to undergo examination.

Compulsory, adj. Involuntary; forced; coerced by legal process or by force of statute.

Compulsory arbitration. See Arbitration.

Compulsory attendance. Refers to legal obligation to attend; e.g. school attendance is compulsory up to certain age.

Compulsory counterclaim. See Counterclaim.

Compulsory disclosure. Term with variety of meanings; may refer to court order compelling disclosure of matters within scope of discovery rules (see Fed.R. Civil P. 26, 37, 45; Fed.R.Crim.P. 16, 17). May also refer to obligation of public officers or candidates for public office to reveal assets and income from private sources. See also Subpoena.

Compulsory insurance. Motor vehicle liability coverage which is required in most states as a condition to registration of such vehicle.

Compulsory license. Licenses created under the Copyright Act to allow certain parties to make certain uses of copyrighted material without the explicit permission of the copyright owner, on payment of a specified royalty. See e.g. 17 U.S.C.A. § 115.

Compulsory nonsuit. An involuntary nonsuit. See Nonsuit.

Compulsory payment. One not made voluntarily, but exacted by duress, threats, the enforcement of legal process, or unconscionably taking advantage of another. May also refer to legal obligations, such as payment of taxes or support; or to creditor remedies such as garnishment or attachment.

Compulsory process. Process to compel the attendance in court of a person wanted there as a witness or otherwise; including not only the ordinary subpoena, but also a warrant of arrest or attachment if needed. A defendant's right, guaranteed by the federal Constitution, to compel the attendance of witnesses at trial and elicit testimony on behalf of the defense. State v. Fort, 197 N.J.Super. 113, 484 A.2d 323, 324. See e.g. Fed.R. Civil P. 45.

The 6th Amend., U.S.Const., provides that the accused shall have the right to "have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor".

See Bench warrant; Subpoena.

Compulsory removal. A term of art in admiralty law referring to a situation in which a hull has been abandoned by the owner and the hull underwriter, pursuant to government order, must be removed from navigable waters; under those circumstances the protection and indemnity underwriter, absorbing costs which no one else remains liable to pay, must remove the wreck or reimburse the government for removal. Seaboard Shipping Corp. v. Jocharanne Tugboat Corp., C.A.N.Y., 461 F.2d 500, 504.

Compulsory sale or purchase. Term used to characterize the transfer of title to property under the exercise of the power of eminent domain, or by reason of judicial sale for nonpayment of taxes, or the like.

Compulsory self-incrimination. Any form of coercion, physical or psychological, which renders a confession of crime or an admission involuntary, is in violation of the 5th Amend., U.S.Const. and due process clause of 14th Amend. Such practices contravene the very basis of our criminal jurisprudence which is accusatorial not inquisitorial. Rogers v. Richmond, 365 U.S. 534, 81 S.Ct. 735, 5 L.Ed.2d 760. See Confession; Interrogation.

Compurgation. A method of trial used before the thirteenth century whereby a person charged with a crime could be absolved by swearing to innocence and producing a number of other persons willing to swear that they believed the accused's declaration of innocence.

Compurgator /kómpɜ̀rgeytər/. One of several neighbors of a person accused of a crime, or charged as a defendant in a civil action, who appeared and swore that they believed him on his oath. 3 Bl.Comm. 341. See Wager of law.

Computation. The act of computing, numbering, reckoning, or estimating. The account or estimation of time by rule of law, as distinguished from any arbitrary construction of the parties.

Computation of time. For the purpose of calculating time under the Rules of Civil Procedure, the day of the act or event from which the designated period of time begins to run shall not be included. The last day of the period so computed shall be included, unless it is a Saturday, a Sunday, or a legal holiday, or, when the act to be done is the filing of some paper in court, a day on which weather or other conditions have made the office of the clerk of the district court inaccessible, in which event the period runs until the end of the next day which is not one of the aforementioned days. Fed.R. Civ.P. 6(a); Fed.R.Crim.P. 45.

Computo /kəmpyútow/. Lat. To compute, reckon, or account. Used in the phrases insimul computassent, "they reckoned together," (see Insimul); plene computavit, "he has fully accounted," (see Plene); quod computet, "that he account," (see Quod computet).

Computus /kómpyədəs/. A writ to compel a guardian, bailiff, receiver, or accountant to yield up his accounts. It is founded on the statute Westm. 2, c. 12.

Comte /kównt/. Fr. A count or earl. In the ancient French law, the comte was an officer having jurisdiction over a particular district or territory, with functions partly military and partly judicial.

Con. Adj. A slang or cant abbreviation for confidence, as a con man or a con game.

Con. Prep. With.

Con- A prefix meaning with, together.

Conatus quid sit, non definitur in jure /kənétəs kwid sit nòn defənáytər in júriy/. What an attempt is, is not defined in law.

Con buena fe /kòn bwéynə féy/. In Spanish law, with (or in) good faith.

Conceal. To hide, secrete, or withhold from the knowledge of others. To withhold from utterance or declaration. To cover or keep from sight. To hide or withdraw from observation, or prevent discovery of. People v. Eddington, 201 Cal.App.2d 574, 20 Cal.Rptr. 122, 124. See Concealment.

See Compounding crime; Harbor; Misprision of felony; Withholding of evidence.

Accessory after the fact. A person who conceals the principal felon or the accessory before the fact is an accessory after the fact if he knows of the felony and of the identity of the felon. See 18 U.S.C.A. § 3. See also Accessory.

Concealers /kənsiylərz/. In old English law, such as find out concealed lands; that is, lands privily kept from the king by common persons having nothing to show for them. They are called "a troublesome, disturbant sort of men; turbulent persons."

Concealment. To conceal. A withholding of something which one knows and which one, in duty, is bound to reveal (e.g. assets in bankruptcy or divorce proceeding; health condition in insurance application). A "concealment" in law of insurance implies an intention to withhold or secrete information so that the one entitled to be informed will remain in ignorance. Indiana Ins. Co. v. Knoll, 142 Ind.App. 506, 236 N.E.2d 63, 70. See also Active concealment; Conceal; Fraudulent concealment.

Concealment may be basis of estoppel. Elements of such estoppel are concealment of material facts with knowledge thereof, ignorance thereof on part of person to whom representations are made, or from whom facts are concealed, intention that such person shall act thereon, and action induced thereby on his part. Rhoads v. Rhoads, 342 Mo. 934, 119 S.W.2d 247, 252; Rosser v. Texas Co., 173 Okl. 309, 48 P.2d 327, 330. The doctrine of "estoppel by concealment and suppression" applies only where there has been reduction to practice of invention. Bogoslowsky v. Huse, 31 C.C.P.A. (Patents) 1034, 142 F.2d 75, 76.

Concéder /kònsédéy/. Fr. In French law, to grant. See Concession.

Concedo /kənsiyow/. Lat. I grant. A word used in old Anglo-Saxon grants, and in statutes merchant.

Conception. The beginning of pregnancy. As to human beings, the fecundation of the female ovum by the male spermatozoon resulting in human life capable of survival and maturation under normal conditions. Also, a plan, idea, thought or design.

Conception of invention is formation in mind of inventor of definite and permanent idea of complete and operative invention as it is thereafter to be applied in practice. Radio Corp. of America v. Philco Corp., D.C. Pa., 201 F.Supp. 135, 149.

Conceptum /kənséptəm/. In the civil law, a theft (furtum) was called "conceptum," when the thing stolen was searched for, and found upon some person in the presence of witnesses.

Concern. To pertain, relate, or belong to; be of interest or importance to; have connection with; to have reference to; to involve; to affect the interest of. People v. Photocolor Corporation, 156 Misc. 47, 281 N.Y.S. 130.

Concerning, concerned. Relating to; pertaining to; affecting; involving; being substantially engaged in or taking part in.

Concert. A person is deemed to act in concert when he acts with another to bring about some preconceived result. See Accomplice; Conspiracy.

Concerted action (or plan). Action that has been planned, arranged, adjusted, agreed on and settled between parties acting together pursuant to some design or scheme. Mutually contrived or planned activity, as, for example, a joint action by employees, such as a strike or picketing, with the intended purpose of furthering their bargaining demands or other mutual interests. See Accomplice; Combination in restraint of trade; Conspiracy; Joint tort-feasors.

Concert of action rule. A rule providing that an agreement by two persons to commit a particular crime cannot be prosecuted as a conspiracy when the crime is of such a nature as to necessarily require participation of two persons for its commission. Robinson v. State, 229 Md. 503, 184 A.2d 814, 820. See Wharton Rule.

Concessi /kənsésay/. Lat. I have granted. At common law, in a feoffment or estate of inheritance, this word does not imply a warranty; it only creates a covenant in a lease for years.

Concessimus /kənsésəməs/. Lat. We have granted. A term used in conveyances, the effect of which was to create a joint covenant on the part of the grantors.

Concessio /kənsés(h)i(yow/. In old English law, a grant. One of the old common assurances, or forms of conveyance.

Concession. A grant, ordinarily applied to the grant of specific privileges by a government; e.g., French and Spanish grants in Louisiana. A voluntary grant, or a yielding to a claim or demand (e.g., when each side in a labor dispute reduces its demands to effect a settlement). A rebate or abatement (e.g., reduced rent for first year as inducement to lease property).

Concessio per regem fieri debet de certitudine /kənsés(h)i(yow pər riyjəm fáyərəy débət diy sɔrtət(y)úwdəniy/. A grant by the king ought to be made from certainty.

Concessio versus concedentem latam interpretationem habere debet /kənsés(h)i(yow vɔrsəs kònsédəntəm léytəm intəprətèyshiýównəm heybiriý débət/. A grant ought to have a broad interpretation (to be liberally interpreted) against the grantor.

Concessit solvere /kənsésət sólvəriy/. He granted and agreed to pay. In English law, an action of debt upon a simple contract.

Concessor /kənsésər/. In old English law, a grantor.

Concessum /kənsésəm/. Accorded; conceded. This term, frequently used in the old reports, signifies that the court admitted or assented to a point or proposition made on the argument.

Concessus /kənsésəs/. A grantee.

Conciergerie /kònsyerzhəriy/. The office or lodge of the concierge or janitor. A famous prison attached to the Palais de Justice in Paris.

Conciliation. The adjustment and settlement of a dispute in a friendly, unantagonistic manner. Used in courts before trial with a view towards avoiding trial and in labor disputes before arbitration. See Arbitration;

Court of Conciliation; Mediation; Pre-trial conference; Settlement.

Concilium /kənsiliyəm/. Lat. A council.

In Roman law, a meeting of a section of the people to consider and decide matters especially affecting itself. Also argument in a cause, or the sitting of the court to hear argument; a motion for a day for the argument of a cause; a day allowed to a defendant to present his argument; an imparlance.

Concilium ordinarium /kənsiliyəm ordənəriyəm/. In Anglo-Norman times, an executive and residuary judicial committee of the Aula Regis (q.v.).

Concilium regis /kənsiliyəm rijsəs/. An ancient English tribunal existing during the reigns of Edward I and Edward II, to which were referred cases of extraordinary difficulty.

Concionator /kónshəneytər/. In old records, a common council man; a freeman called to a legislative hall or assembly.

Conclude. To finish; determine; to estop; to prevent.

Concluded. Ended; determined; estopped; prevented from.

Conclusion. The end; the termination; the act of finishing or bringing to a close. The conclusion of a declaration or complaint is all that part which follows the statement of the plaintiff's cause of action. In trial practice, it signifies making the final or concluding address to the jury or the court; i.e. the summation; closing argument.

Conclusion against the form of the statute. In common law pleading, the proper form for the conclusion of an indictment for an offense created by statute was the technical phrase "against the form of the statute in such case made and provided"; or, in Latin, contra formam statuti.

Conclusion of fact. An inference drawn from the subordinate or evidentiary facts. See also Interference.

Conclusion of law. Statement of court as to law applicable on basis of facts found by jury. Finding by court as determined through application of rules of law. The final judgment or decree required on basis of facts found or verdict. Peoples v. Peoples, 10 N.C.App. 402, 179 S.E.2d 138, 141. Propositions of law which judge arrives at after, and as a result of, finding certain facts in case tried without jury or an advisory jury and as to these he must state them separately in writing. Fed.R. Civil P. 52(a). See also Judgment.

Conclusive. Shutting up a matter; shutting out all further evidence; not admitting of explanation or contradiction; putting an end to inquiry; final; irrefutable; decisive. Beyond question or beyond dispute; manifest; plain; clear; obvious; visible; apparent; indubitable; palpable.

As to conclusive proof, see Proof.

Conclusive evidence. That which is incontrovertible, either because the law does not permit it to be contradicted, or because it is so strong and convincing as to overbear all proof to the contrary and establish the proposition in question beyond any reasonable doubt. See Conclusive presumption; Judicial notice; Presumption; Proof.

Conclusive presumption. Exists when an ultimate fact is presumed to be true upon proof of another fact, and no evidence, no matter how persuasive, can rebut it; an example is the presumption that a child less than a specified age is unable to consent to sexual intercourse. McInerney v. Berman, D.C.Mass., 473 F.Supp. 187, 188. Sometimes referred to as irrebuttable presumption. See Presumption.

Concomitant actions. Civil actions which are brought together generally for some type of relief.

Concord. An agreement between two persons, one of whom has a right of action against the other, settling what amends shall be made for the breach or wrong. A compromise or an accord.

In the old process of levying a fine of lands, the concord was an agreement between the parties (real or feigned) in which the deforciant (or he who keeps the other out of possession) acknowledges that the lands in question are the right of complainant; and, from the acknowledgment or admission of right thus made, the party who levies the fine is called the "cognizor," and the person to whom it is levied the "cognizee." 2 Bl.Comm. 350. An agreement between two or more, upon a trespass committed, by way of amends or satisfaction for it.

Concordare leges legibus est optimus interpretandi modus /kəŋkərdəriy liyjiyz liyjbəs est óptəməs əntərpətəndəy mówdəs/. To make laws agree with laws is the best mode of interpreting them.

Concordat. A compact, covenant or convention between two or more independent governments.

An agreement made by a temporal sovereign with the pope, relative to ecclesiastical matters.

Concordia /kəŋkórdriyə/. Lat. In old English law, an agreement, or concord. The agreement or unanimity of a jury. Compellere ad concordiam.

Concordia discordantium canonum /kəŋkórdriy diskordəŋsh(iy)əm kənənəm/. The harmony of the discordant canons. A collection of ecclesiastical constitutions made by Gratian, an Italian monk, A.D. 1151; more commonly known by the name of "Decretum Gratiani."

Concordia parvæ res crescunt et opulentia lites /kəŋkórdriyə párvuiy riyz kréskənt èd opyləŋsh(iy)ə láytiyz/. Small means increase by concord and litigations by opulence.

Concubinage /kəŋkyúwbənej/. Living together (i.e. cohabitation) of persons not legally married.

Concubinatus /kəŋkyúwbənéytəs/. In Roman law, an informal, unsanctioned, or "natural" marriage, as contradistinguished from the justæ nuptiæ, or justum matrimonium, the civil marriage.

Concubine /kónkyábàyn/. A woman who cohabits with a man to whom she is not married. A mistress. A sort of inferior wife, among the Romans, upon whom the husband did not confer his rank or quality.

Concur. To agree; accord; act together; consent. To agree with the result reached by another, but not necessarily with the reasoning or the logic used in reaching such a result. In the practice of appellate courts, a "concurring opinion" is one filed by one of the judges or justices, in which he agrees with the conclusions or the result of another opinion filed in the case (which may be either the opinion of the court or a dissenting opinion) though he states separately his views of the case or his reasons for so concurring.

In Louisiana law, to join with other claimants in presenting a demand against an insolvent estate.

Curator /kónkyúrətər/. In the civil law, a joint or co-curator, or guardian.

Concurrence. A meeting or coming together; agreement or union in action; meeting of minds; union in design; consent. Babyak v. Alten, 106 Ohio App. 191, 154 N.E.2d 14, 18.

Concurrence déloyale. A term of the French law nearly equivalent to "unfair trade competition;" and used in relation to the infringement of rights secured by trademarks, etc. It signifies a dishonest, perfidious, or treacherous rivalry in trade, or any manœuvre calculated to prejudice the good will of a business or the value of the name of a property or its credit or renown with the public, to the injury of a business competitor.

Concurrent. Running together; having the same authority; acting in conjunction; agreeing in the same act or opinion; pursuit of same course; contributing to the same event; contemporaneous. Co-operating, accompanying, conjoined, associated, concomitant, joint and equal, existing together, and operating on the same subject. United in agreement. State ex rel. School Dist. No. 8 v. Lensman, 108 Mont. 118, 88 P.2d 63, 68.

As to concurrent Covenant; Insurance; Lease; Resolution; and Writ, see those titles.

Concurrent causes. Causes acting contemporaneously and together causing injury, which would not have resulted in absence of either. Two distinct causes operating at the same time to produce a given result, which might be produced by either, are "concurrent causes"; but two distinct causes, successive and unrelated in an operation, cannot be concurring, and one will be regarded as the proximate and efficient and responsible cause, and the other will be regarded as the remote cause. See also Cause.

Concurrent conditions. Conditions which must occur or be performed at the same time; they are mutually dependent. No obligations arise until these conditions are simultaneously performed. When each party to a transaction is subject to mutual conditions precedent, these are concurrent conditions. McFadden v. Wilder, 6 Ariz.App. 60, 429 P.2d 694. See also Conditions concurrent.

Concurrent estates. Ownership or possession of property by two or more persons at the same time; e.g. joint tenancy, tenancy in common.

Concurrent interests. See Concurrent estates.

Concurrent jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of several different tribunals, each authorized to deal with the same subject-matter at the choice of the suitor. Authority shared by two or more legislative, judicial, or administrative officers or bodies to deal with the same subject matter. Jurisdiction exercised by different courts, at same time, over same subject matter, and within same territory, and wherein litigants may, in first instance, resort to either court indifferently. State v. Stueve, 260 Iowa 1023, 150 N.W.2d 597, 602. For example, some cases can be heard in a federal or state court. When a case can only be tried in federal court, or only in state court, jurisdiction is "exclusive."

Concurrent liens. Two or more liens or possessory rights in the nature of liens on the same property and possessing the same priority.

Concurrent negligence. Consists of the negligence of two or more persons concurring, not necessarily in point of time, but in point of consequence, in producing a single indivisible injury. Travelers Indemnity Co. v. Towbridge, Com.Pl., 38 Ohio Misc. 55, 311 N.E.2d 901, 905. See also Comparative negligence; Concurrent tortfeasors; Contributory negligence.

Concurrent power. The power of either Congress or the State legislatures, each acting independently of the other, to make laws on the same subject matter.

Concurrent sentences. Two or more terms of imprisonment, all or part of each term of which is served simultaneously and the prisoner is entitled to discharge at the expiration of the longest term specified. State ex rel. Lillemo v. Tahash, 280 Minn. 176, 159 N.W.2d 99, 102. The existence of one valid conviction may make unnecessary review of other convictions when concurrent sentences have been given. U.S. v. Montemayor, C.A.Tex., 703 F.2d 109, 114.

Concurrent tortfeasors. Those whose independent, negligent acts combined or concurred at one point in time to injure a third party. Radford-Shelton & Associates Dental Laboratory, Inc. v. Saint Francis Hospital, Inc., Okl.App., 569 P.2d 506, 509. See also Comparative negligence; Concurrent negligence.

Concurring opinion. A separate opinion delivered by one or more judges which agrees with the decision of the majority of the court but offering own reasons for reaching that decision. See also Concur.

Concurso /kəŋkərsow/. In the law of Louisiana, the name of a suit or remedy to enable creditors to enforce their claims against an insolvent or failing debtor. Litigation or opportunity of litigation between various creditors, each claiming adversely to one another to share in a fund or an estate, object being to assemble in one accounting all claimants on the fund.

Concursus /kəŋkərsəs/. In the civil law, a running together; a collision, as concursus creditorum, a conflict among creditors. A concurrence, or meeting, as concursum actionum, concurrence of actions. A proceeding in Louisiana similar to interpleader.

Concussio /kəŋkəsh(iy)ow/. In the civil law, the offense of extortion by threats of violence.

Concussion. In the civil law, the unlawful forcing of another by threats of violence to give something of value. It differs from robbery, in this: That in robbery the thing is taken by force, while in concussion it is obtained by threatened violence.

Loss or alteration of consciousness from a direct, closed head injury.

Conditio /kəndiədət/. In ecclesiastical law, the name of a plea entered by a party to a libel filed in the ecclesiastical court, in which it is pleaded that the deceased made the will which is the subject of the suit, and that he was of sound mind.

Condemn. To adjudge or sentence. To find or adjudge guilty; especially with reference to pronouncement of sentence of death for capital offense. To declare a building, ship, or the like, unfit for habitation, use or occupation. To adjudge (as an admiralty court) that a vessel is a prize, or that she is unfit for service. To set apart or expropriate property for public use, in the exercise of the power of eminent domain. See also Condemnation.

Condemnation /kəndəmnéyshən/. Process of taking private property for public use through the power of eminent domain. "Just compensation" must be paid to owner for taking of such (5th Amend., U.S. Constitution). See also Constructive taking; Damages; Eminent domain; Expropriation; Just compensation; Public use; Similar sales; Taking.

Admiralty law. The judgment or sentence of a court having jurisdiction and acting in rem, by which: (1) it is declared that a vessel which has been captured at sea as a prize was lawfully so seized and is liable to be treated as prize; or (2) that property which has been seized for an alleged violation of the revenue laws, neutrality laws, navigation laws, etc., was lawfully so seized, and is, for such cause, forfeited to the government; or (3) that the vessel which is the subject of inquiry is unfit and unsafe for navigation.

Civil law. A sentence or judgment which condemns some one to do, to give, or to pay something, or which declares that his claim or pretensions are unfounded. State v. Harr, 24 Tenn.App. 298, 143 S.W.2d 893, 895.

Excess condemnation. Taking of property not strictly needed for a public use, or taking of more property than is needed for a public use.

Inverse condemnation. Condemnation of property near a parcel so as to cause the parcel to lose much of its value. In such a case the parcel is, in effect, constructively condemned, and just compensation must be paid to the owner, even though formal eminent domain proceedings were not actually taken against that particular parcel.

Quick condemnation. Under this procedure the municipality takes immediate possession of owner's property with estimated just compensation placed in escrow until actual compensation has been ascertained.

Condemnation money. Former term for damages which the party failing in an action was adjudged or condemned to pay; sometimes simply called the "condemnation."

Condemnee. Owner of property taken by condemnation.

Condemner. Party taking property by condemnation.

Condictio /kəndi(k)sh(iy)ow/. In Roman law, a general term for actions of a personal nature, founded upon an obligation to give or do a certain and defined thing or service. It is distinguished from vindicatio rei, which is an action to vindicate one's right of property in a thing by regaining (or retaining) possession of it against the adverse claim of the other party.

Condictio certi /kəndi(k)sh(iy)ow sɔrtay/. An action which lies upon a promise to do a thing, where such promise or stipulation is certain (si certa sit stipulatio).

Condictio ex lege /kəndi(k)sh(iy)ow èks liyjy/. An action arising where the law gave a remedy, but provided no appropriate form of action.

Condictio indebitati /kəndi(k)sh(iy)ow əndəbətéytay/. An action which lay to recover anything which the plaintiff had given or paid to the defendant, by mistake, and which he was not bound to give or pay, either in fact or in law.

Condictio rei furtivæ /kəndi(k)sh(iy)ow riay fərtáyvy/. An action which lay to recover a thing stolen, against the thief himself, or his heir.

Condictio sine causa /kəndi(k)sh(iy)ow sáyniy kózə/. An action which lay in favor of a person who had given or promised a thing without consideration (causa).

Conditio /kəndish(iy)ow/. Lat. A condition.

Conditio beneficiæ, quæ statum construit, benigne secundum verborum intentionem est interpretanda; odiosa autem, quæ statum destruit, stricte secundum verborum proprietatem accipienda /kəndish(iy)ow bənəfishiyéləs kwiy stéytəm kónstruwət bənigniy səkəndəm vərbórəm intənsiyównəm èst intərpətəndə; ówdiyówsə ótəm, kwiy stéytəm dèstruwət, stríktiy səkəndəm vərbórəm prəpráyétéytəm əksipiyéndə/. A beneficial condition, which creates an estate, ought to be construed favorably, according to the intention of the words; but a condition which destroys an estate is odious, and ought to be construed strictly according to the letter of the words.

Conditio dicitur, cum quid in casum incertum qui potest tendere ad esse aut non esse, confertur /kəndish(iy)ow disətər kəm kwid in kéysəm insórtəm kwày pówtəst tэндəriy əd èsiy òt nón èsiy kənfərtər/. It is called a "condition" when something is given on an uncertain event, which may or may not come into existence.

Conditio illicita habetur pro non adjecta /kændiʃ(i)lɔw əlɪsətə həbiytər prɔw non ədʒektə/. An unlawful condition is deemed as not annexed.

Condition. A future and uncertain event upon the happening of which is made to depend the existence of an obligation, or that which subordinates the existence of liability under a contract to a certain future event. Provision making effect of legal instrument contingent upon an uncertain event. See also Constructive condition; Contingency; Contingent; Proviso.

A clause in a contract or agreement which has for its object to suspend, rescind, or modify the principal obligation, or, in case of a will, to suspend, revoke, or modify the devise or bequest. A qualification, restriction, or limitation modifying or destroying the original act with which it is connected; an event, fact, or the like that is necessary to the occurrence of some other, though not its cause; a prerequisite; a stipulation.

A qualification or restriction annexed to a conveyance of lands, whereby it is provided that in case a particular event does or does not happen, or in case the grantor or grantee does or omits to do a particular act, an estate shall commence, be enlarged, or be defeated.

An "estate on condition" arises where an estate is granted, either in fee simple or otherwise, with an express qualification annexed, whereby the estate granted shall either commence, be enlarged, or be defeated, upon performance or breach of such qualification or condition.

In insurance parlance, the printed conditions on the inside of the policy which serve generally as a limitation of risk or of liability or impose various conditions requiring compliance by the insured.

Mode or state of being; state or situation; essential quality; property; attribute; status or rank.

Civil law. Conditions in the civil law are of the following types:

The casual condition is that which depends on chance, and is in no way in the power either of the creditor or of the debtor. Civ.Code La. art. 2023.

A mixed condition is one that depends at the same time on the will of one of the parties and on the will of a third person, or on the will of one of the parties and also on a casual event. Civ.Code La. art. 2025.

The potestative condition is that which makes the execution of the agreement depend on an event which it is in the power of the one or the other of the contracting parties to bring about or to hinder. Civ.Code La. art. 2024.

A resolutive or dissolving condition is that which, when accomplished, operates the revocation of the obligation, placing matters in the same state as though the obligation had not existed. It does not suspend the execution of the obligation. It only obliges the creditor to restore what he has received in case the event provided for in the condition takes place. Civ.Code La. art. 2045.

A suspensive condition is that which depends, either on a future and uncertain event, or on an event which has actually taken place, without its being yet known to the parties. In the former case, the obligation cannot be executed till after the event; in the latter, the obligation has its effect from the day on which it was contracted, but it cannot be enforced until the event be known. Civ.Code La. art. 2043; New Orleans v. Railroad Co., 171 U.S. 312, 18 S.Ct. 875, 43 L.Ed. 178. A condition which prevents a contract from going into operation until it has been fulfilled.

Classification. Conditions are either express or implied, the former when incorporated in express terms in the deed, contract, lease, or grant; the latter, when inferred or presumed by law, from the nature of the transaction or the conduct of the parties, to have been tacitly understood between them as a part of the agreement, though not expressly mentioned.

They are possible or impossible: the former when they admit of performance in the ordinary course of events; the latter when it is contrary to the course of nature or human limitations that they should ever be performed.

They are lawful or unlawful: the former when their character is not in violation of any rule, principle, or policy of law; the latter when they are such as the law will not allow to be made.

They are consistent or repugnant: the former when they are in harmony and concord with the other parts of the transaction; the latter when they contradict, annul, or neutralize the main purpose of the "contract". Repugnant conditions are also called "insensible".

They are affirmative or negative: the former being a condition which consists in doing a thing, as provided that the lessee shall pay rent, etc.; the latter being a condition that consists in not doing a thing, as provided that the lessee shall not alien, etc.

They are precedent or subsequent. A condition precedent is one which must happen or be performed before the estate to which it is annexed can vest or be enlarged; or it is one which is to be performed before some right dependent thereon accrues, or some act dependent thereon is performed. A fact other than mere lapse of time which must exist or occur before a duty of immediate performance of a promise arises. U. S. v. Schaeffer, C.A.Wash., 319 F.2d 907, 911. A "condition precedent" is one that is to be performed before the agreement becomes effective, and which calls for the happening of some event or the performance of some act after the terms of the contract have been arrested on, before the contract shall be binding on the parties; e.g. under disability insurance contract, insured is required to submit proof of disability before insurer is required to pay. Sherman v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 297 Mass. 330, 8 N.E.2d 892. A condition subsequent is one annexed to an estate already vested, by the performance of which such estate is kept and continued, and by the failure or non-performance of which it is defeated; or it is a condition referring to a future event, upon the happening of which the obligation becomes no longer binding upon the other party, if he chooses to avail himself of the condition. Co.Litt. 201; Carroll v. Carroll's Ex'r, 248 Ky. 386, 58 S.W.2d 670, 672. A condition subsequent is any condition which divests liability which has already attached on the failure to fulfill the condition as applied in contracts, a provision giving one party the right to divest himself of liability and obligation to perform further if the other party fails to meet condition, e.g., submit dispute to arbitration. In property law, a condition which causes defeasance of estate on failure to perform, e.g. fee simple on condition. In lease, a provision giving lessor right to terminate for tenant's failure to perform condition.

Conditions may also be positive (requiring that a specified event shall happen or an act be done) and restrictive or negative, the latter being such as impose an obligation not to do a particular thing, as, that a lessee shall not alien or sub-let or commit waste, or the like.

They may be single, copulative, or disjunctive. Those of the first kind require the performance of one specified thing only; those of the second kind require the performance of divers acts or things; those of the third kind require the performance of one of several things.

Conditions may also be independent, dependent, or mutual. They belong to the first class when each of the two conditions must be performed without any reference to the other; to the second class when the performance of one condition is not obligatory until the actual performance of the other; and to the third class when neither party need perform his condition unless the other is ready and willing to perform his, or, in other words, when the mutual covenants go to the whole consideration on both sides and each is precedent to the other.

The following varieties may also be noted: A condition collateral is one requiring the performance of a collateral act having no necessary relation to the main subject of the agreement. A compulsory condition is one which expressly requires a thing to be done, as, that a lessee shall pay a specified sum of money on a certain day or his lease shall be void. Concurrent conditions are those which are mutually dependent and are to be performed at the same time or simultaneously. A condition inherent is one annexed to the rent reserved out of the land whereof the estate is made, or rather, to the estate in the land, in respect of rent.

French law. Conditions in French law are of the following types:

The following peculiar distinctions are made: (1) A condition is casuelle when it depends on a chance or hazard; (2) a condition is potestative when it depends on the accomplishment of something which is in the power of the party to accomplish; (3) a condition is mixte when it depends partly on the will of the party and partly on the will of others; (4) a condition is suspensive when it is a future and uncertain event, or present but unknown event, upon which an obligation takes or fails to take effect; (5) a condition is resolutoire when it is the event which undoes an obligation which has already had effect as such.

Synonymous distinguished. A "condition" is to be distinguished from a limitation, in that the latter may be to or for the benefit of a stranger, who may then take advantage of its determination, while only the grantor, or those who stand in his place, can take advantage of a condition. Also, a limitation ends the estate without entry or claim, which is not true of a condition. It also differs from a conditional limitation. In determining whether, in the case of estates greater than estates for years, the language constitutes a "condition" or a "conditional limitation," the rule applied is that, where an estate is so expressly limited by the words of its creation that it cannot endure for any longer time than until the condition happens on which the estate is to fail, this is limitation, but when the estate is expressly granted on condition in deed, the law permits it to endure beyond the time of the contingency happening, unless the grantor takes advantage of the breach of condition, by making entry. It differs also from a covenant, which can be made by either grantor or grantee, while only the grantor can make a condition. The chief distinction between a condition subsequent in a deed and a covenant pertains to the remedy in event of breach, which, in the former case, subjects the estate to a forfeiture, and in the latter is merely a ground for recovery of damages. A charge is a devise of land with a bequest out of the subject-matter, and a charge upon the devisee personally, in respect of the estate devised, gives him an estate on condition. A condition also differs from a remainder; for, while the former may operate to defeat the estate before its natural termination, the latter cannot take effect until the completion of the preceding estate.

Conditional. That which is dependent upon or granted subject to a condition.

As to conditional Acceptance; Appearance; Bequest; Contract; Delivery; Devise; Fee; Guaranty; Judgment; Legacy; Limitation; Obligation; Pardon; Privilege; Use; and Zoning, see those titles.

Conditional assault. A threatening gesture with words accompanying it expressing a threat on condition, e.g. "your money or your life".

Conditional creditor. In the civil law, a creditor having a future right of action, or having a right of action in expectancy.

Conditional indorsement. See Indorsement.

Conditional intent. Intent to do or not to do something if some condition exists.

Conditionally privileged communication. One made in good faith on any subject matter in which the person publishing has an interest, or in reference to which he has a duty, if made to a person having a corresponding interest or duty, even though it contains matter which otherwise would be actionable. Cook v. East Shore Newspapers, 327 Ill.App. 559, 64 N.E.2d 751, 760. The essential elements of a conditionally privileged communication are good faith, an interest to be upheld, a statement limited in its scope to such purpose, a proper occasion, and publication in a proper manner to proper persons. Cook v. East Shore Newspapers, 327 Ill.App. 559, 64 N.E.2d 751.

Conditional payment. Payment of an obligation only on condition that something be done. Generally, right is reserved to demand back payment if condition fails.

Conditional promise. In law of contracts, a promise to perform based on condition; held to be valid consideration even if condition fails.

Conditional release. A discharge of obligation based on some condition, the failure of which defeats the release. Term may also be applied to a substituted form of release from custody subject to applicable statutes and rules and regulations of board of parole. Humphrey v. Wilson, D.C.Mo., 281 F.Supp. 937, 941.

Conditional right. Right to something subject to a condition, e.g. parent has right to chastise child on condition that the punishment is reasonable.

Conditional sale contract. Form of sales contract in which seller reserves title until buyer pays for goods or land, at which time, the condition having been fulfilled, title passes to buyer. Such contract under Uniform Commercial Code is a purchase money security agreement. § 9-105(h). See also Sale.

Conditional sentence. A sentence to confinement if defendant fails to fulfill conditions of probation.

Conditional will. A will so drawn that it takes effect only on happening of specified contingency which becomes a condition precedent to operation of will. Methodist Church of Sturgis Inc. v. Templeton, 254 Miss. 197, 181 So.2d 129.

Conditiones quælibet odiosæ; maxime autem contra matrimonium et commercium /kændishiyowniyz kwilylæbat ödwiýowsiy, máksmiy ódam kóntræ mætræmówniyæm èt kæmærs(hiy)æm/. Any conditions are odious, but especially those which are against [in restraint of] marriage and commerce.

Condition of employment. Qualification required for a particular job; circumstances under which employment may be secured and maintained. See also Probation.

Conditions concurrent. In contract law, conditions which must be performed by each party simultaneously; e.g. in a cash sale, payment for the goods and delivery are conditions concurrent. See also Concurrent conditions.

Conditions of sale. The terms upon which sales are made at auction; usually written or printed and exposed in the auction room at the time of sale.

Conditio præcedens adimpleri debet prius quam sequatur effectus /kændish(iy)ow præsiýdenz ædimpliray debæt præyæs kwæm sækwéytær æféktæs/. A condition precedent must be fulfilled before the effect can follow.

Condominia /kòndámíniyæ/. In the civil law, co-ownerships or limited ownerships, such as emphyteusis, superficies, pignus, hypotheca, usufructus, usus, and habita-

tio. These were more than mere jura in re aliena, being portion of the dominium itself, although they are commonly distinguished from the dominium strictly so called.

Condominium /kòndámíniyæm/. System of separate ownership of individual units in multiple-unit building. A single real property parcel with all the unit owners having a right in common to use the common elements with separate ownership confined to the individual units which are serially designated. Kaufman and Broad Homes of Long Island, Inc. v. Albertson, 73 Misc.2d 84, 341 N.Y.S.2d 321, 322. An estate in real property consisting of an undivided interest in a portion of a parcel of real property together with a separate fee simple interest in another portion of the same parcel, in essence, condominium ownership is a merger of two estates in land into one: the fee simple ownership of apartment or unit in a condominium project and tenancy in common with other co-owners in the common elements. Dutcher v. Owens, Tex., 647 S.W.2d 948, 949.

The condominium concept was not rooted in English common law and most condominiums in the United States are formed in accordance with specific state enabling statutes. As defined by Uniform Condominium Act (§ 1-103(7)), is: "Real estate, portions of which are designated for separate ownership and the remainder of which is designated for common ownership solely by the owners of those portions. Real estate is not a condominium unless the undivided interests in the common element are vested in the unit owners."

See also Common elements.

Compare Cooperative.

Condonación /kòndownas(iy)ówn/. In Spanish law, the remission of a debt, either expressly or tacitly.

Condonation /kòndənáyshən/. The conditional remission or forgiveness, by means of continuance or resumption of marital cohabitation, by one of the married parties, of a known matrimonial offense committed by the other, that would constitute a cause of divorce; the condition being that the offense shall not be repeated. Condonation to constitute valid defense in divorce action, must be free, voluntary, and not induced by duress or fraud. Condonation means pardon of offense, voluntary overlooking implied forgiveness by treating offender as if offense had not been committed. Wilson v. Wilson, 14 Ohio App.2d 148, 237 N.E.2d 421, 425. This defense has been abolished in those jurisdictions which recognize "no fault" divorce.

Condone /kændówn/. To make condonation of.

Conduce. To contribute to as a result.

Conduct, v. To manage; direct; lead; have direction; carry on; regulate; do business. Scholz v. Leuer, 7 Wash.2d 76, 109 P.2d 294, 301.

Conduct, n. Personal behavior; deportment; mode of action; any positive or negative act.

An action or omission and its accompanying state of mind, or, where relevant, a series of acts and omissions. Model Penal Code, § 1.13.

See also Disorderly conduct; Tortious.

Conduct, estoppel by. See Equitable estoppel.

Conducti actio /kəndáktay æksh(i)yow/. In the civil law, an action which the hirer (conductor) of a thing might have against the letter (locator).

Conductio /kəndáksh(i)yow/. In the civil law, a hiring. Used generally in connection with the term locatio, a letting. Locatio et conductio (sometimes united as a compound word "locatio-conductio"), a letting and hiring.

Conduct money. In English practice, money paid to a witness who has been subpoenaed on a trial, sufficient to defray the reasonable expenses of going to, staying at, and returning from the place of trial.

Conductor. In the civil law, a hirer.

Conductor operarum /kəndáktər òpərerəm/. In the civil law, a person who engages to perform a piece of work for another, at a stated price.

Conductus /kəndáktəs/. A thing hired.

Conduit concept. An approach the tax law assumes in the tax treatment of certain entities and their owners. The approach permits specified tax characteristics to pass through the entity without losing their identity. Under the conduit concept, for example, long-term capital losses realized by a partnership are passed through as such to the individual partners. The same result does not materialize if the entity is a corporation. Varying forms of the conduit concept are applicable in the case of partnerships, trusts, estates, and Subchapter S corporations.

Cone. Area built up by a stream, near the mouth of a canyon of boulders, small stones, gravel, sand and other detritus.

Cone and key. In old English law, a woman at fourteen or fifteen years of age could take charge of her house and receive cone and key; that is, keep the accounts and keys. Said by Lord Coke to be cover and keye, meaning that at that age a woman knew what in her house should be kept under lock and key.

Confarreatio /kənfəriyáysh(i)yow/. In Roman law, a sacrificial rite resorted to by marrying persons of high patrician or priestly degree, for the purpose of clothing the husband with the manus over his wife; the civil modes of effecting the same thing being coemptio (formal), and usus mulieris (informal).

Confectio /kənféksh(i)yow/. The making and completion of a written instrument.

Confederacy. The association or banding together of two or more persons for the purpose of committing an act or furthering an enterprise which is forbidden by law, or which, though lawful in itself, becomes unlawful when made the object of the confederacy. More commonly called a "conspiracy."

A league or agreement between two or more independent states whereby they unite for their mutual welfare and the furtherance of their common aims. The term may apply to a union so formed for a temporary or limited purpose, as in the case of an offensive and defensive alliance; but it is more commonly used to denote that species of political connection between two or more independent states by which a central government is created, invested with certain powers of sovereignty (mostly external), and acting upon the several component states as its units, which, however, retain their sovereign powers for domestic purposes and some others. See Compact; Confederate states; Federal government.

Confederate states. The band of eleven states formed in 1861 which waged war against the United States in the War Between the States or Civil War.

Confederation. A league or compact for mutual support, particularly of nations, or states. Such was the colonial government during the Revolution. See Confederacy.

Confederation articles. See Articles of Confederation.

Conference. A meeting of several persons for deliberation, for the interchange of opinion, or for the removal of differences or disputes.

In the practice of legislative bodies, when the two houses cannot agree upon a pending measure, each appoints a committee of "conference," and the committees meet and consult together for the purpose of removing differences, harmonizing conflicting views, and arranging a compromise which will be accepted by both houses.

Representative assembly of a denomination; association of athletic teams.

A personal meeting between the diplomatic agents of two or more nations for the purpose of making statements and explanations that will obviate the delay and difficulty attending the more formal conduct of negotiations.

Confess. To admit as true; to assent to; to concede. To admit the truth of a charge or accusation. Usually spoken of charges of tortious or criminal conduct. See Confession.

Confessing error. A plea to an assignment of error, admitting the same.

Confessio /kənfés(h)(i)yow/. Lat. A confession. Confessio in judicio, a confession made in or before a court.

Confessio facta in judicio omni probatione major est /kənfés(h)(i)yow fáktə in juwdísh(i)yow ómniy prəbèyshiyówniy méyjr èst/. A confession made in court is of greater effect than any proof.

Confession. A voluntary statement made by a person charged with the commission of a crime or misdemeanor, communicated to another person, wherein he acknowledges himself to be guilty of the offense charged, and discloses the circumstances of the act or the share and participation which he had in it. See 18 U.S.C.A. § 3501.

A statement made by a defendant disclosing his guilt of crime with which he is charged and excluding possibility of a reasonable inference to the contrary. People v. Anderson, 236 Cal.App.2d 419, 46 Cal.Rptr. 1, 7. Voluntary statement made by one who is defendant in criminal trial at time when he is not testifying in trial and by which he acknowledges certain conduct of his own constituting crime for which he is on trial; a statement which, if true, discloses his guilt of that crime. People v. Beverly, 233 Cal.App.2d 702, 43 Cal. Rptr. 743, 749.

Confessions are admissible in evidence if given voluntarily. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3501.

See also Interlocking confession; Involuntary confession; Interrogation; Oral confession.

Constitutional protections. See Escobedo Rule; Mallory Rule; Miranda Rule.

Classification of confessions. Confessions are divided into judicial and extrajudicial. The former are such as are made before a magistrate or court in the due course of legal proceedings; they include confessions made in preliminary examinations before magistrates. The latter is one made by the party out of court, or to any person, official or otherwise, when made not in the course of a judicial examination or investigation. See also Extrajudicial.

An implied confession is where the defendant does not plead guilty but indirectly admits his guilt by placing himself at the mercy of the court and asking for a light sentence. An indirect confession is one inferred from the conduct of the defendant. An involuntary confession is one induced by hope, promise, fear, violence, torture, or threat. Lyons v. State, 77 Okl.Cr. 197, 138 P.2d 142, 148; Lyons v. State, 140 P.2d 248. A naked confession is an admission of the guilt of the party, but which is not supported by any evidence of the commission of the crime. A voluntary confession is one made spontaneously by a person accused of crime, free from the influence of any extraneous disturbing cause, and in particular, not influenced, or extorted by violence, threats, or promises. It is the product of an essentially free and unconstrained choice by its maker, Interest of Ruth, 239 Pa.Super. 453, 360 A.2d 922, 923; and, is made with full knowledge of nature and consequences of the confession. Martinez v. State, Okl.Cr., 496 P.2d 416, 421. For criteria used in determining voluntariness, see 18 U.S.C.A. § 3501(b).

A judicial confession is a plea of guilty or some similar action or conduct in court or in a judicial proceeding. People v. Telio, 1 Ill.App.3d 526, 275 N.E.2d 222, 226.

Distinguished from admission. A confession is a statement admitting or acknowledging all facts necessary for conviction of the crime. An admission, on the other hand, is an acknowledgment of a fact or facts tending to prove guilt which falls short of an acknowledgment of all essential elements of the crime. Gladden v. Unsworth, 9th Cir., 396 F.2d 373, 375 n. 2; People v. Fitzgerald, 56 Cal.2d 855, 861, 17 Cal.Rptr. 129, 132, 366 P.2d 481, 484.

Confession and avoidance. A plea in confession and avoidance is one which avows and confesses the truth of the averments of fact in the complaint or declaration, either expressly or by implication, but then proceeds to allege new matter which tends to deprive the facts admitted of their ordinary legal effect, or to obviate, neutralize, or avoid them. Sievers v. Brown, 216 Miss. 801, 63 So.2d 217, 219.

Confession of defense. In English practice, where defendant alleged a ground of defense arising since the commencement of the action, the plaintiff could deliver confession of such defense and sign judgment for his costs up to the time of such pleading, unless it be otherwise ordered. Such procedure is now obsolete.

Confession of judgment. See Cognovit judgment; Judgment.

Confesso, bill taken pro. In equity practice, an order which the court of chancery makes when the defendant does not file an answer, that the plaintiff may take such a decree as the case made by his bill warrants.

Confessor. A priest who receives auricular confessions of sins from persons under his spiritual charge, and pronounces absolution upon them. The secrets of the confessional were not privileged communications at common law, but are so classified by statute, court decision or court rule in most states. See Confidential communication.

Confessoria actio /kɔ̃fəsɔ̃riyɔ̃ ɛ́ksh(iy)ow/. Lat. In the civil law, an action for enforcing a servitude.

Confessus in iudicio pro iudicato habetur, et quodammodo sua sententia damnatur /kɔ̃fəsəs in juw-dish(iy)ow prɔ̃w juw-dəkéytow hɔ̃biytɔ̃, èt kwowdɔ̃-mədw s(y)úwɔ̃ senténsh(iy)ɔ̃ dɔ̃mnéytɔ̃/. A person confessing his guilt when arraigned is deemed to have been found guilty, and is, as it were, condemned by his own sentence.

Confide. A synonym of the word "trust"; meaning to put into one's trust, keeping, or confidence.

Confidence. Trust; reliance; relation of trust. Reliance on discretion of another. In the construction of wills, this word is considered peculiarly appropriate to create a trust.

Confidence game. Obtaining of money or property by means of some trick, device, or swindling operation in which advantage is taken of the confidence which the victim reposes in the swindler. The elements of the crime of "confidence game" are: (1) an intentional false representation to the victim as to some present fact, (2) knowing it to be false, (3) with intent that the victim rely on the representation, (4) the representation being made to obtain the victim's confidence and thereafter his money and property, (5) which confidence is then abused by defendant. U. S. v. Brown, D.C.App., 309 A.2d 256, 257.

For distinction between false pretenses and confidence game, see False pretenses. See also Flim-flam.

Confidential. Intrusted with the confidence of another or with his secret affairs or purposes; intended to be held in confidence or kept secret; done in confidence.

Confidential communication. Privileged communications such as those between spouses, physician-patient, attorney-client, confessor-penitent, etc. Such are privileged at the option of the spouse-witness, client-witness and penitent-witness. Confidential communication is statement made under circumstances showing that speaker intended statement only for ears of person addressed; thus if communication is made in presence of third party whose presence is not reasonably necessary for the communication, it is not privileged. Touma v. Touma, 140 N.J.Super. 544, 357 A.2d 25, 28. State law is applied to such privileged communications in federal court proceedings. Fed.Evid.Rule 501. See also Communication; Privileged communications.

Confidentiality. State or quality of being confidential; treated as private and not for publication.

Confidential relation. A fiduciary relation. It is a peculiar relation which exists between client and attorney, principal and agent, principal and surety, landlord and tenant, parent and child, guardian and ward, ancestor and heir, husband and wife, trustee and cestui que trust, executors or administrators and creditors, legatees, or distributees, appointor and appointee under powers, and partners and part owners. In these and like cases, the law, in order to prevent undue advantage from the unlimited confidence or sense of duty which the relation naturally creates, requires the utmost degree of good faith in all transactions between the parties. It is not confined to any specific association of parties. It appears when the circumstances make it certain that the parties do not deal on equal terms, but on the one side there is an overmastering influence, or, on the other, weakness, dependence, or trust, justifiably reposed. The mere existence of kinship does not, of itself, give rise to such relation. It covers every form of relation between parties wherein confidence is reposed by one in another, and former relies and acts upon representations of the other and is guilty of no derelictions on his own part. Peckham v. Johnson, Tex.Civ. App., 98 S.W.2d 408, 416.

Confidential relations are deemed to arise whenever two persons have come into such a relation that confidence is necessarily reposed by one and the influence which naturally grows out of the confidence is possessed by the other, and this confidence is abused or the influence is exerted to obtain an advantage at expense of confiding party. Ruebsamen v. Maddocks, Me., 340 A.2d 31, 34.

See also Fiduciary or confidential relation.

Confinement. State of being confined; shut in; imprisoned; detention in penal institution. Confinement may be by either a moral or a physical restraint, by threats of violence with a present force, or by physical restraint of the person. See also Commitment; Solitary confinement.

Confirm. To complete or establish that which was imperfect or uncertain; to ratify what has been done without authority or insufficiently. To make firm or certain; to give new assurance of truth or certainty; to put aside past doubt; to give approval to. See also Confirmation.

Confirmare est id firmum facere quod prius infirmum fuit /kɔ̃nfərməriy est id fərməm féysəriy kwòd práyəs ənfirməm fyúwət/. To confirm is to make firm that which was before infirm.

Confirmare nemo potest prius quam jus ei acciderit /kɔ̃nfərməriy níymow pówtəst práyəs kwəm jəs iyay æksədérət/. No one can confirm before the right accrues to him.

Confirmatio /kɔ̃nfərmeysh(iy)ow/. The conveyance of an estate, or the communication of a right that one hath in or unto lands or tenements, to another that hath the possession thereof, or some other estate therein, whereby a voidable estate is made sure and unavoidable, or whereby a particular estate is increased or enlarged. 2 Bl.Comm. 325.

Confirmatio chartarum /kɔ̃nfərméysh(iy)ow kartáram/. Lat. Confirmation of the charters. A statute passed in the 25 Edw. I., whereby the Great Charter is declared to be allowed as the common law; all judgments contrary to it are declared void; copies of it are ordered to be sent to all cathedral churches and read twice a year to the people; and sentence of excommunication is directed to be as constantly denounced against all those that, by word or deed or counsel, act contrary thereto or in any degree infringe it. 1 Bl.Comm. 128.

Confirmatio crescens /kɔ̃nfərméysh(iy)ow krésənz/. An enlarging confirmation; one which enlarges a right-ful estate.

Confirmatio diminuens /kɔ̃nfərméysh(iy)ow dəmínyuwenz/. A diminishing confirmation. A confirmation which tends and serves to diminish and abridge the services whereby a tenant doth hold, operating as a release of part of the services.

Confirmatio est nulla ubi donum præcedens est invalidum /kɔ̃nfərméysh(iy)ow èst nələ yúwbay dównəm prásyden(d)z èst invələdəm/. Confirmation is void where the preceding gift is invalid.

Confirmation. A contract, or written memorandum thereof, by which that which was infirm, difficult of proof, void, imperfect, or subject to be avoided is ratified, rendered valid and binding, made firm and unavoidable. To give formal approval. Act or process of confirming. See also Approval; Ratification; Verification.

A conveyance of an estate or right in esse, whereby a voidable estate is made sure and unavoidable, or whereby a particular estate is increased.

The ratification or approval of executive acts by a legislature or one house. In order to be valid, Presidential appointments of important officers of the United States require approval by a majority of the Senate, and treaties must be approved by two-thirds of the Senate. Art. II, § 2, U.S.Const.

A formal memorandum delivered by the customers or suppliers of a company to its independent auditor verifying the amounts shown as receivable or payable. The confirmation document is originally sent by the auditor to the customer.

In bankruptcy, refers to a judicial approval of a Bankruptcy Code Chapter 11, 12, or 13 plan.

Confirmation of sale. The confirmation of a judicial sale by the court which ordered it is a signification in some way (usually by the entry of an order) or the court's approval of the terms, price, and conditions of the sale.

Confirmatio omnes supplet defectus, licet id quod actum est ab initio non valuit /kɔnfərméyʃh(iy)ow ómniy sɔplət dəfɛktəs, líset íd kwɔd éktəm ést əb ənɪʃh(iy)ow nɔn vɛlyuwət/. Confirmation supplies all defects, though that which had been done was not valid at the beginning.

Confirmatio perficiens /kɔnfərméyʃh(iy)ow pəfɪʃhɪyenz/. A confirmation which makes valid a wrongful and defeasible title, or makes a conditional estate absolute.

Confirmat usum qui tollit abusum /kɔnfərmət úwzəm kwàý tólət əbyúwzəm/. He confirms the use [of a thing] who removes the abuse [of it].

Confirmavi /kɔnfərméyvi/. Lat. I have confirmed. The emphatic word in the ancient deeds of confirmation.

Confirmed credit. In commercial law, means that the credit must carry the direct obligation of an agency which does business in the seller's financial market. U.C.C. § 2-325.

Confirmee /kɔnfərmíy/. The grantee in a deed of confirmation.

Confirming bank. A bank which engages either that it will itself honor a credit already issued by another bank or that such a credit will be honored by the issuer or a third bank. U.C.C. § 5-103.

Confirmor /kɔnfɪrmər/. The grantor in a deed of confirmation.

Confiscable /kɔnfɪskəbəl/kɔnfɪskəbəl/. Capable of being confiscated or suitable for confiscation; liable to forfeiture.

Confiscare /kɔnfəskéry/. In civil and old English law, to confiscate; to claim for or bring into the fisc, or treasury.

Confiscate /kɔnfəskeyt/. To appropriate property to the use of the government. To adjudge property to be forfeited to the public; to seize and condemn private forfeited property to public use. To take property from enemy in time of war. See also Confiscation; Forfeiture.

Confiscation /kɔnfəskéyʃən/. Act of confiscating. The seizure of private property by the government without compensation to the owner, often as a consequence of conviction for crime, or because possession or use of the property was contrary to law. The provisions of due process prohibit the confiscation of property without compensation except where the property is taken in the valid execution of the police power. See also Condemnation; Confiscate; Eminent domain; Expropriation; Forfeiture; Seizure.

Confiscation acts. Certain acts of congress enacted during the process of the civil war (1861 and 1862) in the exercise of the war powers of the government and meant to strengthen its hands and aid in suppressing the rebellion, which authorized the seizure, condemnation, and forfeiture of "property used for insurrectionary purposes".

Confiscation cases. The name given to a group of fifteen cases decided by the United States supreme court in 1868, on the validity and construction of the confiscation acts of congress. Reported in 7 Wall. 454, 19 L.Ed. 196.

Confiscatory rates. With respect to utilities, are rates which do not afford a reasonable return on value of property at time it is used in public service; rates which do not afford net return sufficient to preserve utility's property and to attract capital necessary to enable utility to discharge its public duties.

Confisk. An old form of confiscate.

Confitens reus /kɔnfətenz ríyəs/. An accused person who admits his guilt.

Conflicting evidence. Evidence offered by plaintiff and defendant, or prosecutor and defendant which is inconsistent and cannot be reconciled.

Conflict of authority. A division between two or more courts (generally courts of last resort) on some legal principal or application of law. May also refer to disparity between authorities on a subject. See also Choice of law; Conflict of laws.

Conflict of interest. Term used in connection with public officials and fiduciaries and their relationship to matters of private interest or gain to them. Ethical problems connected therewith are covered by statutes in most jurisdictions and by federal statutes on the federal level. The Code of Professional Responsibility and Model Rules of Professional Conduct set forth standards for actual or potential conflicts of interest between attorney and client. Generally, when used to suggest disqualification of a public official from performing his sworn duty, term "conflict of interest" refers to a clash between public interest and the private pecuniary interest of the individual concerned. Gardner v. Nashville Housing Authority of Metropolitan Government of Nashville and Davison County, Tenn., C.A.Tenn., 514 F.2d 38, 41. A situation in which regard for one duty tends to lead to disregard of another. U.S. v. Miller, C.A.Mass., 463 F.2d 600, 602.

A conflict of interest arises when a government employee's personal or financial interest conflicts or appears to conflict with his official responsibility. 18 U.S.C.A. § 203 et seq.

Conflict of laws. Inconsistency or difference between the laws of different states or countries, arising in the case of persons who have acquired rights, incurred obligations, injuries or damages, or made contracts, within the territory of two or more jurisdictions. Hence, that branch of jurisprudence, arising from the diversity of the laws of different nations, states or jurisdictions, in their application to rights and remedies, which reconciles the inconsistency, or decides which law or system is to govern in the particular case, or settles the degree of force to be accorded to the law of another jurisdiction, (the acts or rights in question having arisen under it) either where it varies from the domestic law, or where the domestic law is silent or not exclusively applicable to the case in point. Restatement, Second, Conflicts of Law, § 2. See also Center of gravity doctrine; Choice of law; Grouping of contacts; Kilberg doctrine; Lex celebrationis; Lex contractus; Lex fori; Lex loci; Lex loci celebrationis; Lex loci contractus; Lex situs; Lex solutionis; Lex validitatis; Renvoi doctrine.

Conflict of personal laws. Term used to describe conflicts within a particular state arising from application of general law to racial and religious groups which have their own laws, e.g. tribal laws of the Indians.

Conformed copy. An exact copy of a document on which has been written explanations of things that could not or were not copied; e.g. written signature might be replaced on conformed copy with notation that it was signed by the person whose signature appears on the original.

Conforming. In law of sales, goods or conduct including any part of a performance are conforming or conform to the contract when they are in accordance with the obligations under the contract. U.C.C. § 2-106(2).

Conforming use. In zoning and land use planning, a use of a structure which is in conformity with those uses permitted by the particular zoning classification of the area. Compare Nonconforming use.

Conformity. Correspondence in form, manner, or use; agreement; harmony; congruity.

Conformity Act, or statute. A term used to designate Act June 1, 1872, c. 255, § 5, 17 Stat. 197, providing that the practice, pleadings, and forms and modes of proceeding in civil causes, other than equity and admiralty causes, in the federal district courts shall conform, as near as may be, to those existing in like causes in the courts of the state within which such district courts are held. Since the adoption of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, 28 U.S.C.A., the Conformity Act is no longer effective. Hydraulic Press Mfg. Co. v. Williams, White & Co., C.C.A.Ill.1947, 165 F.2d 489.

Conformity, Bill of. See Bill (Equity pleading and practice).

Conformity hearing. Hearing ordered by court to determine whether judgment or decree directed to be prepared by the prevailing party conforms with decision of court. Commonly after court makes its findings it directs prevailing party to draw judgment or decree in conformity with such findings and decision.

Confrairie /kɔ̃frɛriy/kɔ̃frɛriy/. Fr. In old English law, a fraternity, brotherhood, or society.

Confreres /kɔ̃frɛrz/kɔ̃frɛrz/. Brethren in a religious house; fellows of one and the same society.

Confrontation. In criminal proceedings, the accused has a right to be "confronted with the witnesses against him." This Sixth Amendment right consists of the act of setting a witness face to face with the accused, in order that the latter may make any objection he has to the witness, or that the witness may identify the accused; and, does not mean merely that witnesses are to be made visible to the accused, but imports the constitutional privilege to cross-examine them. In fact, the essence of the right of confrontation is the right to cross-examination. Davis v. Alaska, 415 U.S. 308, 94 S.Ct. 1105, 39 L.Ed.2d 347. A disruptive defendant may, however, lose his right to be present in the courtroom, and, as a result, lose his right to confront witnesses. Illinois v. Allen, 397 U.S. 337, 90 S.Ct. 1057, 25 L.Ed.2d 353.

Confrontation clause. See Confrontation.

Confusio /kɔ̃fjúwz(h)(i)yow/. In the civil law, the inseparable intermixture of property belonging to different owners; it is properly confined to the pouring together of fluids, but is sometimes also used of a melting together of metals or any compound formed by the irrecoverable commixture of different substances. It is distinguished from commixtion by the fact that in the latter case a separation may be made, while in a case of confusio there cannot be. 2 Bl.Comm. 405.

Confusion. This term, as used in the civil law and in compound terms derived from that source, means a blending or intermingling, and is equivalent to the term "merger" as used at common law. To mix or blend so that things cannot be distinguished. Spangler Candy Co. v. Crystal Pure Candy Co., D.C.Ill., 235 F.Supp. 18, 27. The mixing together of goods of two or more owners so that the independent goods cannot be identified. See also Commingle.

Confusion of boundaries. The title of that branch of equity jurisdiction which relates to the discovery and settlement of conflicting, disputed, or uncertain boundaries.

Confusion of debts. An obsolete term which refers to a mode of extinguishing a debt, by the concurrence in the same person of two qualities or adverse rights to the same thing which mutually destroy each other. This may occur in several ways, as where the creditor becomes the heir of the debtor, or the debtor the heir of the creditor, or either accedes to the title of the other by any other mode of transfer.

Confusion of goods. Results when goods belonging to two or more owners become intermixed to the point where the property of any of them no longer can be identified except as part of a mass of like goods. Johnson v. Covey, 1 Utah 2d 180, 264 P.2d 283. See also Commingle.

Confusion of rights. A union of the qualities of debtor and creditor in the same person. The effect of such a union is, generally, to extinguish the debt. Baylor University v. Bradshaw, Tex.Civ.App., 52 S.W.2d 1094, 1101.

Confusion of titles. A civil-law expression, synonymous with "merger," as used in the common law, applying where two titles to the same property unite in the same person.

Confute /kɒnfjuːt/. To prove to be false, defective, or invalid.

Con game. A swindle or any arrangement in which a person is deliberately defrauded because of his trust in the one who is swindling. See also Confidence game; Flim-flam.

Congeable /kɒnjɪəbəl/. L. Fr. Lawful; permissible; allowable.

Congé d'accorder /kɒnzhé dākordé/. Leave to accord. A permission granted by the court, in the old process of levying a fine, to the defendant to agree with the plaintiff.

Congé d'emparer /kɒnzhé dɒmparlé/. Leave to imparl. The privilege of an imparlance (licentia loquendi). 3 Bl.Comm. 299.

Congé d'eslire /kɒnzhé delir/. Also spelled congé d'élire, congé délire. A permission or license from the British sovereign to a dean and chapter to elect a bishop, in time of vacation; or to an abbey or priory which is of royal foundation, to elect an abbot or prior.

Congenital. A condition present at birth.

Congildones /kɒngildɔːniyz/. In Saxon law, fellow-members of a guild.

Congius /kɒnjɪəs/. An ancient measure containing about a gallon and a pint.

Conglomerate /kɒŋglɔːməɪt/. A corporation that has diversified its operations usually by acquiring unrelated enterprises in widely varied industries. Such individual businesses are normally controlled by a single corporate entity.

Conglomerate merger. Merger among firms which operate in separate and distinct markets; e.g. merger of companies with different product lines. A merger in which there are no economic relationships between the acquiring and the acquired firm. Kennecott Copper Corp. v. F. T. C., C.A.10, 467 F.2d 67, 75. A combination of two or more companies in which neither competes directly with the other and no buyer-seller relationship exists. A merger other than a horizontal or vertical merger. U. S. v. International Tel. & Tel. Corp., D.C. Conn., 306 F.Supp. 766, 774. See also Conglomerate; Merger.

Congregate. To come together; to assemble; to meet.

Congregation. An assembly or gathering; specifically, an assembly or society of persons who together constitute the principal supporters of a particular parish, or habitually meet at the same church for religious exercises.

Congress /kɒŋgrəs/. Formal meeting of delegates or representatives. The Congress of the United States was created by Article I, Section 1, of the Constitution, adopted by the Constitutional Convention on September 17, 1787, providing that "All legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives." The first Congress under the Constitution met on March 4, 1789, in the Federal Hall in New York City. The membership then consisted of 20 Senators and 59 Representatives. See House of Representatives; Senate.

Congressional apportionment. See Apportionment (Representatives).

Congressional committee. A committee of the House of Representatives or of the Senate or a joint committee formed for some particular public purpose.

Congressional district. A geographical unit of a State from which one member of the House of Representatives is elected.

Congressional immunity. See Legislative immunity.

Congressional powers. The authority vested in the Senate and House of Representatives to enact laws, etc. as provided in U.S.Const., Art. I.

Congressional Record. Proceedings of Congress are published in the Congressional Record, which is issued daily when Congress is in session. Publication of the Record began March 4, 1873; it was the first series officially reported, printed, and published directly by the Federal Government. The Daily Digest of the Congressional Record, printed in the back of each issue of the Record, summarizes the proceedings of that day in each House, and before each of their committees and subcommittees, respectively. The Digest also presents the legislative program for each day, and at the end of the week, gives the program for the following week. Its publication was begun March 17, 1947. Members of Congress are allowed to edit their speeches before printing and may insert material never actually spoken by securing from their respective houses leave to print or to extend their remarks.

Congressman. Strictly, a member of the Congress of the United States. But the common tendency is to apply this term only to a member of the House of Representatives, as distinguished from a senator.

Congressus /kɒŋgrésəs/. The extreme practical test of the truth of a charge of impotence brought against a husband by a wife. It is now disused.

Conjectio /kɒnjéksh(i)ow/. In the civil law of evidence, a throwing together. Presumption; the putting of things together, with the inference drawn therefrom.

Conjectio causæ /kɒnjéksh(i)ow kóziy/. In the civil law, a statement of the case. A brief synopsis of the case given by the advocate to the judge in opening the trial.

Conjectural choice, rule of /rúwl əv kənjékchərəl chóys/. Where all theories of causation rest only on conjecture, no jury question is presented.

Conjecture. A slight degree of credence, arising from evidence too weak or too remote to cause belief. Supposition or surmise. The idea of a fact, suggested by another fact; as a possible cause, concomitant, or result. An idea or notion founded on a probability without any demonstration of its truth; an idea or surmise inducing a slight degree of belief founded upon some possible, or perhaps probable fact of which there is no positive evidence. Oklahoma City v. Wilcoxson, 173 Okl. 433, 48 P.2d 1039, 1043. An explanation consistent with but not deducible as a reasonable inference from known facts or conditions. In popular use, synonymous with "guess." Also, the bringing together of the circumstances, as well as the result obtained.

Conjoint robbery. Where the act is committed by two or more persons.

Conjoints. Persons married to each other.

Conjux /kənjúwdeks/. In old English law, an associate judge.

Conjugal /kənjəgəl/. Of or belonging to marriage or the married state; suitable or appropriate to the married state or to married persons; matrimonial; connubial.

Conjugal rights. Matrimonial rights; the right which husband and wife have to each other's society, comfort, and affection. See Consortium.

Conjugium /kənjúwjiəm/. One of the names of marriage, among the Romans.

Conjuncta /kənjəŋktə/. In the civil law, things joined together or united; as distinguished from disjuncta, things disjoined or separated.

Conjunctim /kənjəŋktəm/. Lat. In old English law, jointly.

Conjunctim et divisim /kənjəŋktəm et dəviziəm/. L. Lat. In old English law, jointly and severally.

Conjunctio /kənjəŋksh(iy)ow/. In the civil law, conjunction; connection of words in a sentence.

Conjunctio mariti et feminae est de jure natura /kənjəŋksh(iy)ow məráty ət féməniy èst diy júriy nətyúriy/. The union of husband and wife is of the law of nature.

Conjunctive. Connecting in a manner denoting union.

A grammatical term for particles which serve for joining or connecting together. Thus, the word "and" is called a "conjunctive," and "or" a "disjunctive," conjunction.

Conjunctive denial. Where several material facts are stated conjunctively in the complaint, an answer which undertakes to deny their averments as a whole, conjunctively stated, is called a "conjunctive denial."

Conjunctive obligation /kənjəŋktəv òbləgèyshən/. See Obligation.

Conjuratio /kənjərəysh(iy)ow/. In old English law, a swearing together; an oath administered to several together; a combination or confederacy under oath.

In old European law, a compact of the inhabitants of a commune, or municipality, confirmed by their oaths to each other and which was the basis of the commune.

Conjuration /kənjərəyshən/. In old English law, a plot or compact made by persons combining by oath to do any public harm.

The offense at common law of having conference or commerce with evil spirits, in order to discover some secret, or effect some purpose. The English Witchcraft Act of 1735, which made conjuration an offense, was repealed by the Fraudulent Mediums Act of 1951.

Conjurator /kənjərəytər/. In old English law, one who swears or is sworn with others; one bound by oath with others; a compurgator; a conspirator.

Connect. To join or fasten together as by something intervening; to associate as in occurrence or in idea; to combine; to unite or link together, as in an electrical circuit; to establish a bond or relation between; to meet or make connections for transference of passengers or change of means of communication.

Connected. Joined; united by junction, by an intervening substance or medium, by dependence or relation, or by order in a series.

Connecting carrier. One of several common carriers whose united lines or parts constitute the route over which shipment is to pass, and which participates in transportation of such shipment as a common carrier furnishing a necessary link in transportation. Herman v. Railway Exp. Agency, 17 N.J.Super. 10, 85 A.2d 284.

Connecting factors. In conflict of laws, legal categories such as the place of making a contract which serve to determine the choice of law in a particular case.

Connecting up doctrine. A thing may be put into evidence (including testimony) subject to its being connected up with later evidence that will show its relevance.

Connection. The state of being connected or joined; union by junction, by an intervening substance or medium, by dependence or relation, or by order in a series.

Connections. Relations by blood or marriage, but more commonly the relations of a person with whom one is connected by marriage. In this sense, the relations of a wife are "connections" of her husband. The term is vague and indefinite.

Connexité /konèksiyéy/. In French law, this exists when two actions are pending which, although not identical as in lis pendens, are so nearly similar in object that it is expedient to have them both adjudicated upon by the same judges.

Connexity. Nexus or connection; for purposes of acquiring personal jurisdiction over a foreign corporation, this refers to the requirement that the cause of action arise out of the transaction or operation connected with or incidental to the activities of a foreign corporation in the state. Kravitz v. Gebrueder Pletscher Druck-Guswaremfabrik, Fla.App. 3 Dist., 442 So.2d 985, 987.

Connivance /kənáivən(t)s/. The secret or indirect consent or permission of one person to the commission of an unlawful or criminal act by another. A winking at; voluntary blindness; an intentional failure to discover or prevent the wrong; forbearance or passive consent. Pierce v. Crisp, 260 Ky. 519, 86 S.W.2d 293, 296.

As constituting defense in divorce action, is plaintiff's corrupt consent, express or implied, to offense charged against defendant. Muir v. Muir, Del.Super., 7 Terry 578, 86 A.2d 857, 858. This defense has been abolished by many states with the enactment of no-fault divorce laws.

Connive /kənáiv/. To co-operate secretly with, or to have a secret or clandestine understanding with. To take part or co-operate privily with another, to aid or abet. To look upon with secret favor; it implies both knowledge and assent, either active or passive. See Connivance.

Connoissement /kòneysmón/. In French law, an instrument, signed by the master of a ship or his agent, containing a description of the goods loaded on a ship, the persons who have sent them, the persons to whom they were sent, and the undertaking to transport them; similar to the English and American bill of lading.

Connubium /kən(y)úwbíyəm/. In the civil law, marriage. Among the Romans, a lawful marriage as distinguished from "concubinage" (q.v.), an inferior marriage.

Conocimiento /konòsiym(i)yéntow/. In Spanish law, a bill of lading. In the Mediterranean ports it is called "póliza de cargamiento."

In Spanish law, a recognizance.

Conpossessio /kòmpəzész(iy)ow/. In civil law, a joint possession.

Conquereur /kòŋkərer/. In Norman and old English law, the same as "conqueror" (q.v.).

Conqueror. In old English and Scotch law, the first purchaser of an estate; he who first brought an estate into his family, or into the family owning it. 2 Bl. Comm. 242, 243.

Conquest /kòŋkwəst/. In feudal law, acquisition by purchase; any method of acquiring the ownership of an estate other than by descent. Also an estate acquired otherwise than by inheritance.

In international law, the acquisition of the sovereignty of a country by force of arms, exercised by an independent power which reduces the vanquished to the submission of its empire. To conquer a territory or nation by means of force.

Conquestor /kòŋkwəstər/konkwéstər/. Conqueror. The title given to William of Normandy.

Conquêts /kəŋkwéstə/kənkéts/. In French law, the name given to every acquisition which the husband and wife, jointly or severally, make during the conjugal community. Thus, whatever is acquired by the husband and wife, either by his or her industry or good fortune, inures to the extent of one-half for the benefit of the other. In Louisiana, these gains are called acquêts.

Conquisitio /kòŋkwəzish(iy)ow/. In feudal and old English law, acquisition. 2 Bl.Comm. 242.

Conquisitor /kəŋkwəzýtər/. In feudal law, a purchaser, acquirer, or conqueror. 2 Bl.Comm. 242, 243.

Consanguineus /kònsəŋgwíniyəs/. Lat. A person related by blood; a person descended from the same common stock.

Consanguineus est quasi eodem sanguine natus /kònsəŋgwíniyəs est kwéysay iyówdəm səŋgwániy néytəs/. A person related by consanguinity is, as it were, sprung from the same blood.

Consanguineus frater /kònsəŋgwíniyəs fréytər/. In civil and feudal law, a half-brother by the father's side, as distinguished from frater uterinus, a brother by the mother's side. 2 Bl.Comm. 231.

Consanguinity /kònsəŋgwíniyətí/. Kinship; blood relationship; the connection or relation of persons descended from the same stock or common ancestor. Consanguinity is distinguished from "affinity," which is the connection existing in consequence of a marriage, between each of the married persons and the kindred of the other.

Lineal and collateral consanguinity. Lineal consanguinity is that which subsists between persons of whom one is descended in a direct line from the other, as between son, father, grandfather, great-grandfather, and so upwards in the direct ascending line; or between son, grandson, great-grandson, and so downwards in the direct descending line. Collateral consanguinity is that which subsists between persons who have the same ancestors, but who do not descend (or ascend) one from the other. Thus, father and son are related by lineal consanguinity, uncle and nephew by collateral consanguinity.

Conscience. The moral sense; the faculty of judging the moral qualities of actions, or of discriminating between right and wrong; particularly applied to one's perception and judgment of the moral qualities of his own conduct, but in a wider sense, denoting a similar application of the standards of morality to the acts of others. The sense of right and wrong inherent in every person by virtue of his existence as a social entity; good conscience being a synonym of equity. In law, especially the moral rule which requires probity, justice, and honest dealing between man and man, as when we say that a bargain is "against conscience" or "unconscionable," or that the price paid for property at a forced sale was so inadequate as to "shock the conscience." This is also the meaning of the term as applied to the jurisdiction and principles of decision of courts of chancery, as in saying that such a court is a "court of conscience," that it proceeds "according to conscience," or that it has cognizance of "matters of conscience."

Conscience, courts of. In English law, courts, not of record, constituted by act of parliament in the city of London, and other towns, for the recovery of small debts; otherwise and more commonly called "Courts of Requests." Such courts have been superseded by county courts.

Conscience of the court. When an issue is sent out of chancery to be tried at law, to "inform the conscience of the court," the meaning is that the court is to be supplied with exact and dependable information as to the unsettled or disputed questions of fact in the case, in order that it may proceed to decide it in accordance with the principles of equity and good conscience in the light of the facts thus determined. Watt v. Starke, 101 U.S. 247, 25 L.Ed. 826. This procedure is now obsolete with the merger of law and equity into a single cause of action.

Conscience, right of. As used in some constitutional provisions, this phrase is equivalent to religious liberty or freedom of conscience.

Conscientia dicitur a con et scio, quasi scire cum deo /kòns(h)iyénsh(iy)ə díətər èy kón èt sáyow, kwéysay sáyriy kəm díyow/. Conscience is called from con and scio, to know, as it were, with God.

Conscientious objector. One who, by reason of religious training and belief, is conscientiously opposed to participation in war. Such person need not be a member of a religious sect whose creed forbids participation in war to be entitled to classification as a conscientious objector. U. S. v. Bowles, C.C.A.N.J., 131 F.2d 818. It is sufficient if such person has a conscientious scruple against war in any form. U. S. ex rel. Phillips v. Downer, C.C.A.N.Y., 135 F.2d 521, 524, 525. Such objection must however be shown to be sincere. U. S. v. Miller, D.C.N.D., 337 F.Supp. 1402, 1403. In lieu of active military service, such person is subject to civilian work contributing to the national health, safety or interest. 50 U.S.C.A. App. § 456(J).

Conscientious parallelism. Refers to the situation alleged to result in markets where there are few sellers and where, although lacking in an express agreement, the sellers appear to establish their prices in a "consciously parallel" fashion; also known as the "interdependence theory" of oligopoly pricing. Shapiro v. General Motors Corp., D.C.Md., 472 F.Supp. 636, 647.

Conscientious scruple. A conscientious scruple against taking an oath, serving as a juror in a capital case, doing military duty, or the like, is an objection or repugnance growing out of the fact that the person believes the thing demanded of him to be morally wrong, his conscience being the sole guide to his decision; it is thus distinguished from an "objection on principle," which is dictated by the reason and judgment, rather than the moral sense, and may relate only to the propriety or expediency of the thing in question.

Conscription. Compulsory enrollment and induction into military service; drafted.

Consecrate. In ecclesiastical law, to dedicate to sacred purposes, as a bishop by imposition of hands, or a church or churchyard by prayers, etc. Consecration is performed by a bishop or archbishop.

Consecratio est periodus electionis; electio est præambula consecrationis /kònsəkréysh(iy)ow est pi-riyówdəs əlekshiyównəs; əléksh(iy)ow est priyámbyələ kònsəkréyshiyównəs/. Consecration is the termination of election; election is the preamble of consecration.

Consecutive. Successive; succeeding one another in regular order; to follow in uninterrupted succession.

Consecutive sentences. When one sentence of confinement is to follow another in point of time, the second sentence is deemed to be consecutive. May also be applied to suspended sentences. Also called "from and after" sentences. See also Sentence.

Concedo /kònséyðow/. Sp. A term used in conveyances under Mexican law, equivalent to the English word "grant."

Conseil de famille /kònséy də famíy/. In French law, a family council. Certain acts require the sanction of this body. For example, a guardian can neither accept nor reject an inheritance to which the minor has succeeded without its authority (Code Nap. 461); nor can he accept for the child a gift inter vivos without the like authority (Code Nap. 463).

Conseil de prudhommes /kònséy də pruwdóm/. In French law, one of a species of trade tribunals, charged with settling differences between masters and workmen. They endeavor, in the first instance, to conciliate the parties. In default, they adjudicate upon the questions in dispute. Their decisions are final up to 200*f*. Beyond that amount, appeals lie to the tribunals of commerce.

Conseil d'état /kònséy deytá/. Council of state. One of the oldest of French institutions, its origin dating back to 1302. It decides or advises upon state questions and measures proposed for legislation, submitted to it by the President of the Republic, by the members of the Cabinet, and by Parliament.

Conseil judiciaire /kònséy zhudis(i)yér/. In French law, when a person has been subjected to an interdiction on the ground of his insane extravagance, but the interdiction is not absolute, but limited only, the court of first instance, which grants the interdiction, appoints a council, called by this name, with whose assistance the party may bring or defend actions, or compromise the same, alienate his estate, make or incur loans, and the like.

Consensual contract /kònsénshuwəl kònrəkt/. A term derived from the civil law, denoting a contract founded upon and completed by the mere consent of the contracting parties, without any external formality or symbolic act to fix the obligation. See also Contract.

Consensual marriage /kònsénshuwəl mārəj/. Marriage resting simply on consent per verba de præsentí, between competent parties. See also Common-law marriage.

Consensus ad idem /kənsənsəs æd áytəm/. An agreement of parties to the same thing; a meeting of minds.

Consensus est voluntas plurium ad quos res pertinet, simul juncta /kənsənsəs ɛst vələntəs plúriyəm æd kwóws ríyz pərtənət, sáyml jəŋktə/. Consent is the conjoint will of several persons to whom the thing belongs.

Consensus facit legem /kənsənsəs féysət líjəm/. Consent makes the law. (A contract is law between the parties agreeing to be bound by it.)

Consensus, non concubitus, facit nuptias vel matrimonium, et consentire non possunt ante annos nobiles /kənsənsəs, nón kənkýwbətəs, féysət nɛpshiyəs vɛl mətrəmówn(i)yəm, ɛt kónsəntáyriy nón pósənt ɛntiy ənóws n(y)úwbəliyz/. Consent, and not cohabitation (or coition), constitutes nuptials or marriage, and persons cannot consent before marriageable years. 1 Bl.Comm. 434.

Consensus tollit errorem /kənsənsəs tóltət ɛrórəm/. Consent (acquiescence) removes mistake.

Consensus voluntas multorum ad quos res pertinet, simul juncta /kənsənsəs vələntəs məltórəm æd kwóws ríyz pərtənət sáyml jəŋktə/. Consent is the united will of several interested in one subject-matter.

Consent. A concurrence of wills. Voluntarily yielding the will to the proposition of another; acquiescence or compliance therewith. Agreement; approval; permission; the act or result of coming into harmony or accord. Consent is an act of reason, accompanied with deliberation, the mind weighing as in a balance the good or evil on each side. It means voluntary agreement by a person in the possession and exercise of sufficient mental capacity to make an intelligent choice to do something proposed by another. It supposes a physical power to act, a moral power of acting, and a serious, determined, and free use of these powers. Consent is implied in every agreement. It is an act unclouded by fraud, duress, or sometimes even mistake.

Willingness in fact that an act or an invasion of an interest shall take place. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 10A.

As used in the law of rape "consent" means consent of the will, and submission under the influence of fear or terror cannot amount to real consent. There must be an exercise of intelligence based on knowledge of its significance and moral quality and there must be a choice between resistance and assent. And if woman resists to the point where further resistance would be useless or until her resistance is overcome by force or violence, submission thereafter is not "consent".

See also Acquiescence; Age of consent; Assent; Connivance; Informed consent.

Consent decree. See Decree.

Consent dividend. See Dividend.

Consent judgment. See Judgment.

Express consent. That directly given, either viva voce or in writing. It is positive, direct, unequivocal consent, requiring no inference or implication to supply its meaning. Pacific Nat. Agricultural Credit Corporation v. Hagerman, 40 N.M. 116, 55 P.2d 667, 670.

Express or implied consent. Under motor vehicle liability insurance law providing that policy should cover any person responsible for operation of insured vehicle with insured's express or implied consent, words "express or implied consent" primarily modify not the word "operation", but the word "responsible", and imply possession of vehicle with consent of owner and responsibility to him.

Implied consent. That manifested by signs, actions, or facts, or by inaction or silence, which raise a presumption or inference that the consent has been given. An inference arising from a course of conduct or relationship between the parties, in which there is mutual acquiescence or a lack of objection under circumstances signifying assent. Allstate Ins. Co. v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co., 260 S.C. 350, 195 S.E.2d 711, 713 (use of motor vehicle). For example, when a corporation does business in a state it impliedly consents to be subject to the jurisdiction of that state's courts in the event of tortious conduct, even though it is not incorporated in that state.

Most every state has a statute implying the consent of one who drives upon its highways to submit to some type of scientific test or tests measuring the alcoholic content of the driver's blood. In addition to implying consent, these statutes usually provide that if the result of the test shows that the alcohol content exceeds a specified percentage, then a rebuttable presumption of intoxication arises.

Consentible lines /kənsəntəbəl láynz/. See Line.

Consentientes et agentes pari poena plectentur /kənsənsihyéntiyz ɛt əjéntiyz páriy píynə plɛkténtər/. They who consent to an act, and they who do it, shall be visited with equal punishment.

Consentire matrimonio non possunt infra [ante] annos nobiles /kónsəntáyriy mətrəmówniyow nón pósənt ínrə [ɛntiy] ənóws nyúwbəliyz/. Parties cannot consent to marriage within the years of marriage [before the age of consent].

Consent judgment. See Judgment.

Consent jurisdiction. Parties may agree in advance to submit their controversy to a given forum, in which case the forum is the consent jurisdiction.

Consent of victim. The submission of a victim is generally no defense to a crime unless, as in the case of rape, the victim's consent negatives an element of the crime itself.

Consent rule. An entry of record by the defendant, confessing the lease, entry, and ouster by the plaintiff in an action of ejectment. A superseded instrument, in which a defendant in an action of ejectment specified for what purpose he intended to defend, and undertook to confess not only the fictitious lease, entry, and ouster, but that he was in possession.

Consent search. A search made by police after the subject of the search has consented; such consent, if freely and intelligently given, will validate a warrantless search. Washington v. Chrisman, 455 U.S. 1, 102 S.Ct. 812. Consent is not freely and voluntarily given in the face of colorably lawful coercion, Bumper v. North Carolina, 391 U.S. 543, 88 S.Ct. 1788, 20 L.Ed.2d 797; Lo-Ji Sales, Inc. v. New York, 442 U.S. 319, 99 S.Ct. 2319, 60 L.Ed.2d 920; and questions regarding duress or coercion in a consent search are determined by the totality of the circumstances. United States v. Mendenhall, 466 U.S. 544, 100 S.Ct. 1870, 64 L.Ed.2d 497. See 18 U.S.C.A. § 2236.

Consent to be sued. Agreement in advance to be sued in a particular form. See Cognovit judgment; Judgment (Confession of judgment).

Consent to notice. In documents which treat of the requirement of notice, (e.g. lease) a party may consent to notice beforehand or agree that notice to some other person will satisfy the requirement of notice to him.

Consequence. The result following in natural sequence from an event which is adapted to produce, or to aid in producing, such result; the correlative of "cause". Board of Trustees of Firemen's Relief and Pension Fund for City of Tulsa v. Miller, 186 Okl. 586, 99 P.2d 146, 147. See also Natural and probable consequences.

Consequentia non est consequentia /kònsəkwnshiyi nòn est kònsəkwnsh(iy)ə/. The consequence of a consequence exists not.

Consequential contempt. The ancient name for what is now known as "constructive" contempt of court. See Contempt.

Consequential damages. See Damages.

Consequential loss. Losses not directly caused by damage, but rather arising from results of such damage.

Conservation. The concern which people have that nature be kept in as pristine a state as possible. Minnesota Public Research Group v. Butz, D.C.Minn. 358 F.Supp. 584, 596.

Conservator. A guardian; protector; preserver. Appointed by court to manage affairs of incompetent or to liquidate business. Person appointed by a court to manage the estate of one who is unable to manage property and business affairs effectively. Uniform Probate Code § 1-201(6), 5-401(2). See also Guardian.

Conservators of the peace. Officers authorized to preserve and maintain the public peace. In England, these officers were locally elected by the people until the reign of Edward III, when their appointment was vested in the king. Their duties were to prevent and arrest for breaches of the peace, but they had no power to arraign and try the offender until about 1360, when this authority was given to them by act of parliament, and "then they acquired the more honorable appellation of justices of the peace". 1 Bl.Comm. 351.

Conserve. To save and protect from loss or damage.

Consider. To fix the mind on, with a view to careful examination; to examine; to inspect. To deliberate about and ponder over. To entertain or give heed to. See also Considered.

Considerable. Worthy of consideration; required to be observed. A "considerable" number, as of persons, does not necessarily mean a very great or any particular number of persons; the term "considerable" being merely relative.

Consideratio curiæ /kònsidareysh(iy)ow kyúriyiy/. The judgment of the court.

Consideration. The inducement to a contract. The cause, motive, price, or impelling influence which induces a contracting party to enter into a contract. The reason or material cause of a contract. Some right, interest, profit or benefit accruing to one party, or some forbearance, detriment, loss, or responsibility, given, suffered, or undertaken by the other. Restatement, Second, Contracts, §§ 17(1), 71. Richman v. Brookhaven Servicing Corp., 80 Misc.2d 563, 363 N.Y.S.2d 731, 733. It is a basic, necessary element for the existence of a valid contract that is legally binding on the parties.

See also Adequate consideration; Failure of consideration; Fair and valuable consideration; Fair consideration; Good consideration; Inadequate consideration; Love and affection; Past consideration; Valuable consideration; Want of consideration.

Considerations are either executed or executory; express or implied; good or valuable. See definitions below.

Concurrent consideration. One which arises at the same time or where the promises are simultaneous.

Continuing consideration. One consisting in acts or performances which must necessarily extend over a considerable period of time.

Equitable or moral considerations. Considerations which are devoid of efficacy in point of strict law, but are founded upon a moral duty, and may be made the basis of an express promise.

Executed or executory considerations. The former are acts done or values given before or at the time of making the contract; the latter are promises to give or do something in future.

Express or implied considerations. The former are those which are specifically stated in a deed, contract, or other instrument; the latter are those inferred or supposed by the law from the acts or situation of the parties. Express consideration is a consideration which is distinctly and specifically named in the written contract or in the oral agreement of the parties.

Good consideration. Such as is founded on natural duty and affection, or on a strong moral obligation. A consideration for love and affection entertained by and for one within degree recognized by law. Motives of natural duty, generosity, and prudence come under this class. The term is sometimes used in the sense of a consideration valid in point of law, and it then includes a valuable or sufficient as well as a meritorious consideration. Generally, however, good is used in antithesis to valuable consideration (q.v.).

Gratuitous consideration. One which is not founded upon any such loss, injury, or inconvenience to the party to whom it moves as to make it valid in law.

Illegal consideration. An act which if done, or a promise which if enforced, would be prejudicial to the public interest or contrary to law.

Implied considerations. See Express or implied considerations, above.

Impossible consideration. One which cannot be performed.

Legal consideration. One recognized or permitted by the law as valid and lawful; as distinguished from such as are illegal or immoral. The term is also sometimes used as equivalent to "good" or "sufficient" consideration.

Meritorious consideration. See Good consideration, above.

Moral considerations. See Equitable or moral considerations, above.

Nominal consideration. One bearing no relation to the real value of the contract or article, as where a parcel of land is described in a deed as being sold for "one dollar," no actual consideration passing, or the real consideration being concealed. This term is also sometimes used as descriptive of an inflated or exaggerated value placed upon property for the purpose of an exchange.

Past consideration. An act done before the contract is made, which is ordinarily by itself no consideration for a promise. As to time, considerations may be of the past, present, or future. Those which are present or future will support a contract not void for other reasons.

Pecuniary consideration. A consideration for an act of forbearance which consists either in money presently passing or in money to be paid in the future, including a promise to pay a debt in full which otherwise would be released or diminished by bankruptcy or insolvency proceedings.

Sufficient consideration. One deemed by the law of sufficient value to support an ordinary contract between parties, or one sufficient to support the particular transaction.

Consideratum est per curiam /kənsidəréytəm ést pər kyúriyəm/. (It is considered by the court.) The formal and ordinary commencement of a judgment.

Consideratur /kənsidəréytər/. L. Lat. It is considered. Held to mean the same with consideratum est.

Considered. Deemed; determined; adjudged; reasonably regarded. For example, evidence may be said to have been "considered" when it has been reviewed by a court to determine whether any probative force should be given it.

Consign /kənsáyn/. To deliver goods to a carrier to be transmitted to a designated factor or agent. To deliver or transfer as a charge or trust. To commit, intrust, give in trust. To transfer from oneself to the care of another. To send or transmit goods to a merchant, factor, or agent for sale. To deposit with another to be sold, disposed of, or called for, whereby title does not pass until there is action of consignee indicating sale. See also Consignment.

Consignee /kənsáyníy/. One to whom a consignment is made. Person named in bill of lading to whom or to whose order the bill promises delivery. U.C.C. § 7-102(b).

In a commercial use, "consignee" means one to whom a consignment may be made, a person to whom goods are shipped for sale, or one to whom a carrier may lawfully make delivery in accordance with his contract of carriage, or one to whom goods are consigned, shipped, or otherwise transmitted. Power Transmission Equipment Corp. v. Beloit Corp., 55 Wis.2d 540, 201 N.W.2d 13, 15, 16.

Consignment. The act or process of consigning goods; the transportation of goods consigned; an article or collection of goods sent to a factor; goods or property sent, by the aid of a common carrier, from one person in one place to another person in another place; something consigned and shipped. Entrusting of goods to another to sell for the consignor. A bailment for sale.

The term "consignment", used in a commercial sense, ordinarily implies an agency and denotes that property is committed to the consignee for care or sale. Parks v. Atlanta News Agency, Inc., 115 Ga.App. 842, 156 S.E.2d 137, 140.

See also Reconsignment.

Consignment contract. Consignment of goods to another (consignee) for sale under agreement that consignee will pay consignor for any sold goods and will return any unsold goods. A bailment for sale.

Consignment sale. See Consignment.

Consignor /kənsáynər/. One who sends or makes a consignment; a shipper of goods. The person named in a bill of lading as the person from whom the goods have been received for shipment. U.C.C. § 7-102(c).

Consilia multorum quæruntur in magnis /kənsíliyə mältórəm kwírántər in mægnəs/. The counsels of many are required in great things.

Consiliarius /kənsíliyériyəs/. In the civil law, a counsellor, as distinguished from a pleader or advocate. An assistant judge. One who participates in the decisions.

Consilium /kənsíliyəm/. A day appointed to hear the counsel of both parties. A case set down for argument. It is commonly used for the day appointed for the argument of a demurrer, or errors assigned.

Consimili casu /kənsíməlay kéysyuw/. In old English law, a writ of entry, framed under the provisions of the statute Westminster 2, (13 Edw. I) c. 24, which lay for the benefit of the reverser, where a tenant by the curtesy aliened in fee or for life. Many other new writs were framed under the provisions of this statute; but this particular writ was known emphatically by the title here defined. The writ is now practically obsolete. 3 Bl.Comm. 51.

Consist. To stand together, to be composed of or made up of. See Consisting.

Consistent. Having agreement with itself or something else; accordant; harmonious; congruous; compatible; compliable; not contradictory.

Consisting. Being composed or made up of. This word is not synonymous with "including", for the latter, when used in connection with a number of specified objects, always implies that there may be others which are not mentioned.

Consistor. A magistrate.

Consistorium /kɒnsɪstɔːrɪəm/. The state council of the Roman emperors.

Consistory. An assembly of cardinals convoked by the pope.

A tribunal (prætorium).

Consistory courts. In England, the courts of diocesan bishops held in their several cathedrals (before the bishop's chancellor, or commissary, who is the judge) for the trial of all ecclesiastical causes arising within their respective dioceses, and also for granting probates and administrations. From the sentence of these courts an appeal lies to the Provincial Court of the archbishop of each province respectively.

Consobrini /kɒnsəbráynay/. In the civil law, cousins-german, in general; brothers' and sisters' children, considered in their relation to each other.

Consociatio /kənsòws(h)iyéysh(iy)ow/. Lat. An association, fellowship, or partnership. Applied by some of the older writers to a corporation, and even to a nation considered as a body politic.

Consol. A bond that never matures but is redeemable on call.

Consolation /kɒnsələyʃən/. Comfort, contentment, ease, enjoyment, happiness, pleasure, satisfaction.

Consolato del mare /kɒnsowlátow dèl márey/. The name of a code of sea-laws, said to have been compiled by order of the kings of Arragon (or, according to other authorities, at Pisa or Barcelona) in the fourteenth century, which comprised the maritime ordinances of the Roman emperors, of France and Spain, and of the Italian commercial powers. This compilation exercised a considerable influence in the formation of European maritime law.

Consolidate. In a general sense, to unite or unify into one mass or body, as to consolidate several small school districts into a large district, or to consolidate various funds. In legislative usage, to consolidate two bills is to unite them into one. The term means something more than to rearrange or redivide.

To make solid or firm; to unite, compress, or pack together and form into a more compact mass, body, or system. To cause to become united and extinguished in a superior right or estate by both becoming vested in the same person. Swaim v. Smith, 174 Tenn. 688, 130 S.W.2d 116, 120.

See also Commingle; Consolidation; Joinder; Merger.

Consolidated appeal. If two or more persons are entitled to appeal from a judgment or order of a district court and their interests are such as to make joinder practicable, they may file a joint notice of appeal, or may join in appeal after filing separate timely notices of appeal, and they may thereafter proceed on appeal as a single appellant. Appeals may be consolidated by order of the court of appeals upon its own motion or upon motion of a party, or by stipulation of the parties to the several appeals. Fed.R.App.P. 3(b).

Consolidated balance sheets. See Consolidated financial statements.

Consolidated bonds. Bonds issued to replace two or more existing issues; thus, consolidating debt into single issue.

Consolidated corporations. See Consolidation of corporations.

Consolidated financial statements. The financial report of a parent corporation and its subsidiaries or affiliates which combines the assets, liabilities, revenues, and expenses of all of the entities. In preparing consolidated financial statements, all intercompany transactions are eliminated. See also Consolidated tax return.

Consolidated laws. A compilation of all the laws of a State in force arranged according to subject matter. See Code; Codification; Compilation.

Consolidated mortgage. Unification of several outstanding mortgages.

Consolidated securities. An issue of securities sufficiently large to provide the funds to retire two or more outstanding issues of debt securities.

Consolidated tax returns. A procedure whereby certain affiliated corporations may file a single return, combine the tax transactions of each corporation, and arrive at a single income tax liability for the group. The election to file a consolidated return is usually binding on future years. I.R.C. §§ 1501-1505. See also Consolidated financial statement.

Consolidation. Act of consolidating, or the status of being consolidated. Unification of two or more actions. See Consolidation of actions.

In the civil law, the union of the usufruct with the estate out of which it issues, in the same person; which happens when the usufructuary acquires the estate, or vice versa. In either case the usufruct is extinct.

In ecclesiastical law, the union of two or more benefices in one.

In corporate law, the combination of two or more corporations into a newly created corporation. Thus, A Corporation and B Corporation combine to form C Corporation. The Revised Model Business Corporation Act eliminates the consolidation as a distinct type of corporate amalgamation. A consolidation may qualify as a nontaxable reorganization if certain conditions are satisfied. See also Consolidation of corporations; Merger.

Consolidation loan. See Loan.

Consolidation of actions. The act or process of uniting several actions into one trial and judgment, by order of a court, where all the actions are between the same parties, pending in the same court, and involving substantially the same subject-matter, issues and defenses; or the court may order that one of the actions be tried, and the others decided without trial according to the judgment in the one selected.

When actions involving a common question of law or fact are pending before the court, it may order a joint hearing or trial of any or all the matters in issue in the actions; it may order all the actions consolidated; and it may make such orders concerning proceedings therein as may tend to avoid unnecessary costs or delay. Fed.R. Civil P. 42(a); New York C.P.L.R. § 602.

See also Joinder (Joinder of claims).

Consolidation of cases. See Consolidation of actions.

Consolidation of corporations. Occurs when two or more corporations are extinguished, and by the same process a new one is created, taking over the assets and assuming the liabilities of those passing out of existence. A unifying of two or more corporations into a single new corporation having the combined capital, franchises, and powers of all its constituents. See also Consolidation.

Merger distinguished. In a "merger", one corporation absorbs the other and remains in existence while the other is dissolved, and in a "consolidation" a new corporation is created and the consolidating corporations are extinguished. See also Merger.

Consonant statement. A prior declaration of a witness whose testimony has been attacked and whose credibility stands impeached, which the court will allow to be proved by the person to whom the declaration was made in order to support the credibility of the witness and which but for the existence of such impeachment would ordinarily be excluded as hearsay.

Consortio malorum me quoque malum facit /kən-sórsh(iy)ow málórəm míy kwówkwiy mæləm féysət/. The company of wicked men makes me also wicked.

Consortium /kənsórsh(iy)əm/. Conjugal fellowship of husband and wife, and the right of each to the company, society, co-operation, affection, and aid of the other in every conjugal relation. Roseberry v. Starkovich, 73 N.M. 211, 387 P.2d 321, 322. Loss of "consortium" consists of several elements, encompassing not only material services but such intangibles as society, guidance, companionship, and sexual relations. Countryman v. Winnebago County, 2 Dist., 135 Ill.App.3d 384, 90 Ill.

Dec. 344, 347, 481 N.E.2d 1255, 1258. Damages for loss of consortium are commonly sought in wrongful death actions, or when spouse has been seriously injured through negligence of another, or by spouse against third person alleging that he or she has caused breaking-up of marriage. Cause of action for "consortium" occasioned by injury to marriage partner, is a separate cause of action belonging to the spouse of the injured married partner and though derivative in the sense of being occasioned by injury to spouse, is a direct injury to the spouse who has lost the consortium. Peeples v. Sargent, 77 Wis.2d 612, 253 N.W.2d 459, 471. See also Alienation of affections.

In the civil law, a union of fortunes; a lawful Roman marriage. The joining of several persons as parties to one action.

In old English law, the term signified company or society, and in the language of pleading, as in the phrase per quod consortium amisit, it has substantially the same meaning, viz., the companionship or society of a wife. 3 Bl.Comm. 140.

Consortship. In maritime law, an agreement or stipulation between the owners of different vessels that they shall keep in company, mutually aid, instead of interfering with each other, in wrecking and salvage, whether earned by one vessel or both.

Conspicuous place. Within the meaning of a statute relating to the posting of notices, a "conspicuous place" means one which is reasonably calculated to impart the information in question.

Conspicuous term or clause. A term or clause is conspicuous when it is so written that a reasonable person against whom it is to operate ought to have noticed it. For example, printing in italics or boldface or contrasting color, or typing in capitals or underlined, is conspicuous. Rev. Model Bus.Corp. Act, § 1.40. A printed heading in capitals (as: NON-NEGOTIABLE BILL OF LADING) is conspicuous. Language in the body of a form is "conspicuous" if it is in larger or other contrasting type or color. But in a telegram any stated term is "conspicuous."

Whether a term or clause is "conspicuous" or not is for decision by the court. Uniform Consumer Credit Code, § 1.301(6); U.C.C. § 1-201(10). Size of type face alone does not determine whether required disclosure is "conspicuous" for purpose of Truth in Lending Act; rather, location of disclosure, and manner in which it is set off from other information, are also determinative. Robinson v. Olin Federal Credit Union, D.C.Conn., 48 B.R. 732, 740.

Conspiracy /kənspirasiy/. A combination or confederacy between two or more persons formed for the purpose of committing, by their joint efforts, some unlawful or criminal act, or some act which is lawful in itself, but becomes unlawful when done by the concerted action of the conspirators, or for the purpose of using criminal or unlawful means to the commission of an act not in itself unlawful.

A person is guilty of conspiracy with another person or persons to commit a crime if with the purpose of promoting or facilitating its commission he: (a) agrees with such other person or persons that they or one or more of them will engage in conduct which constitutes such crime or an attempt or solicitation to commit such crime; or (b) agrees to aid such other person or persons in the planning or commission of such crime or of an attempt or solicitation to commit such crime. Model Penal Code, § 5.03.

Crime of conspiracy is distinct from the crime contemplated by the conspiracy (target crime), Com. v. Dyer, 243 Mass. 472, 509, 138 N.E. 296, 314, cert. denied, 262 U.S. 751, 43 S.Ct. 700, 67 L.Ed. 1214. Some jurisdictions do not require an overt act as an element of the crime, e.g. Com. v. Harris, 232 Mass. 588, 122 N.E. 749.

A conspiracy may be a continuing one; actors may drop out, and others drop in; the details of operation may change from time to time; the members need not know each other or the part played by others; a member need not know all the details of the plan or the operations; he must, however, know the purpose of the conspiracy and agree to become a party to a plan to effectuate that purpose. Craig v. U. S., C.C.A.Cal., 81 F.2d 816, 822.

There are a number of federal statutes prohibiting specific types of conspiracy. See, e.g., 18 U.S.C.A. § 371.

See also Chain conspiracy; Co-conspirator's rule; Combination in restraint of trade; Confederacy; Seditious conspiracy; Wharton Rule.

Chain conspiracy. Such conspiracy is characterized by different activities carried on with same subject of conspiracy in chain-like manner that each conspirator in chain-like manner performs a separate function which serves in the accomplishment of the overall conspiracy. Bolden v. State, 44 Md.App. 643, 410 A.2d 1085, 1091.

Civil conspiracy. The essence of a "civil conspiracy" is a concert or combination to defraud or cause other injury to person or property, which results in damage to the person or property of plaintiff. See also Civil conspiracy.

Overthrow of government. See Sedition.

Seditious conspiracy. See Sedition.

Conspiracy in restraint of trade. Term which describes all forms of illegal agreements such as boycotts, price fixing, etc., which have as their object interference with free flow of commerce and trade. See Antitrust acts; Clayton Act; Sherman Antitrust Act.

Conspirators. Persons partaking in conspiracy. See Conspiracy.

Conspire. To engage in conspiracy. Term carries with it the idea of agreement, concurrence and combination, and hence is inapplicable to a single person or thing, and one cannot agree or conspire with another who does not agree or conspire with him. See Conspiracy.

Constable. An officer of a municipal corporation (usually elected) whose duties are similar to those of the sheriff, though his powers are less and his jurisdiction smaller. He is to preserve the public peace, execute the process of magistrates' courts, and of some other tribunals, serve writs, attend the sessions of the criminal courts, have the custody of juries, and discharge other functions sometimes assigned to him by the local law or by statute. Powers and duties of constables have generally been replaced by sheriffs.

In English law, public civil officer, whose proper and general duty is to keep the peace within his district, though he is frequently charged with additional duties. 1 Bl.Comm. 356. There were formerly "high," "petty," and "special" constables. In England, the functions of these special constables have been taken over by police forces.

In Medieval law, high functionary under the French and English kings, the dignity and importance of whose office was second only to that of the monarch. He was in general the leader of the royal armies, and had cognizance of all matters pertaining to war and arms, exercising both civil and military jurisdiction. He was also charged with the conservation of the peace of the nation. Thus there was a "Constable of France" and a "Lord High Constable of England." Rich v. Industrial Commission, 80 Utah 511, 15 P.2d 641, 644.

Constablewick /kɒnstəbəl'wɪk/. In English law, the territorial jurisdiction of a constable; as bailiwick is of a bailiff or sheriff.

Constabularius /kɒnstə'bjʊələriyəs/. An officer of horse; an officer having charge of foot or horse; a naval commander; an officer having charge of military affairs generally. In England his power was early diminished and restricted to those duties which related to the preservation of the king's peace. The office is now abolished except as a matter of ceremony.

Constant. Fixed or invariable; uniform. Continually recurring, regular, steady. Pfisterer v. Key, 218 Ind. 521, 33 N.E.2d 330, 335.

Constantly. In a constant manner; uniformly; continuously.

Constat /kɒnstət/'æt/. It is clear or evident; it appears; it is certain; there is no doubt. Non constat, it does not appear.

In England, a certificate which the clerk of the pipe and auditors of the exchequer made, at the request of any person who intended to plead or move in that court, for the discharge of anything. The effect of it was the certifying what appears (constat) upon record, touching the matter in question. An exemplification under the great seal of the enrolment of letters patent.

A certificate by an officer that certain matters therein stated appear of record.

Constat d'huissier /kɒnstə d'wiysyéy/. In French law, an affidavit made by a huissier, setting forth the appearance, form, quality, color, etc., of any article upon which a suit depends.

Constate /kɒnstéyt/. To establish, constitute, or ordain.

"Constituting instruments" of a corporation are its charter, organic law, or the grant of powers to it.

Constituency. The inhabitants of an electoral district.

Constituent. He who gives authority to another to act for him. The term is used as a correlative to "attorney," to denote one who constitutes another his agent or invests the other with authority to act for him.

It is also used in the language of politics as a correlative to "representative," the constituents of a legislator being those whom he represents and whose interests he is to care for in public affairs; usually the electors of his district.

Constituent elements. The elements of a crime, tort or other type of action. Those matters which must be proved to sustain a cause of action because they constitute the action or crime.

Constituere /kɒnstətɪwəri/. Lat. To appoint, constitute, establish, ordain, or undertake. Used principally in ancient powers of attorney, and now supplanted by the English word "constitute."

Constituimus /kɒnstətɪwəməs/. A Latin term, signifying we constitute or appoint.

Constituted authorities. Officers properly appointed under a constitution for the government of the people.

Constitutio /kɒnstət(y)ʊwsh(iy)ow/. In the civil law, an imperial ordinance, decree, or constitution, distinguished from Lex, Senatus-Consultum, and other kinds of law and having its effect from the sole will of the emperor. An establishment or settlement. Used of controversies settled by the parties without a trial. A sum paid according to agreement.

In old English law, an ordinance or statute. A provision of a statute.

Constitutio dotis /kɒnstət(y)ʊwsh(iy)ow dɔwtəs/. Establishment of dower.

Constitution. The organic and fundamental law of a nation or state, which may be written or unwritten, establishing the character and conception of its government, laying the basic principles to which its internal life is to be conformed, organizing the government, and regulating, distributing, and limiting the functions of its different departments, and prescribing the extent and manner of the exercise of sovereign powers. A charter of government deriving its whole authority from the governed. The written instrument agreed upon by the people of the Union (e.g. United States Constitution) or of a particular state, as the absolute rule of action and decision for all departments (i.e. branches) and officers of the government in respect to all the points covered by it, which must control until it shall be changed by the authority which established it (i.e. by amendment), and in opposition to which any act or ordinance of any such department or officer is null and void. The full text of the U.S. Constitution appears at the end of this dictionary.

In a more general sense, any fundamental or important law or edict; as the Novel Constitutions of Justinian; the Constitutions of Clarendon.

Constitutional. Consistent with the constitution; authorized by the constitution; not conflicting with any provision of the constitution or fundamental law of the state. Dependent upon a constitution, or secured or regulated by a constitution; as "constitutional monarchy," "constitutional rights."

Constitutional alcalde. A person of official status under Mexican law corresponding in many respects in dignity and authority to a justice of the peace under the American system of government. Tietzel v. Southwestern Const. Co., 48 N.M. 567, 154 P.2d 238, 242.

Constitutional convention. A duly constituted assembly of delegates or representatives of the people of a state or nation for the purpose of framing, revising, or amending its constitution. Art. V of U.S. Const. provides that a Constitutional Convention may be called on application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the states.

Constitutional court. A court named or described and expressly protected by Constitution, or recognized by name or definite description in Constitution (e.g. Supreme Court, as provided for in Art. III, Sec. 1 of U.S. Const.) in contrast to legislatively created courts. Commonly referred to as "Article III" courts in reference to U.S. Constitution.

Constitutional freedom. Generic term to describe the basic freedoms guaranteed by the Constitution such as the First Amendment freedoms of religion, speech, press and assembly together with protection under due process clause of the 14th Amendment. See also Bill of rights; Constitutional liberty or freedom.

Constitutional homestead. A special interest in real estate which protects it from attachment, created by constitution and available to the head of the family. Ringer v. Bryne, 183 Okl. 46, 80 P.2d 212, 214.

Constitutional law. (1) That branch of the public law of a nation or state which treats of the organization, powers and frame of government, the distribution of political and governmental authorities and functions, the fundamental principles which are to regulate the relations of government and citizen, and which prescribes generally the plan and method according to which the public affairs of the nation or state are to be administered. (2) That department of the science of law which treats of constitutions, their establishment, construction, and interpretation, and of the validity of legal enactments as tested by the criterion of conformity to the fundamental law. (3) A constitutional law is one which is consonant to, and agrees with, the constitution; one which is not in violation of any provision of the constitution of the particular state.

Constitutional liberty or freedom. Such freedom as is enjoyed by the citizens of a country or state under the protection of its constitution. The aggregate of those personal, civil, and political rights of the individual which are guaranteed by the constitution and secured against invasion by the government or any of its agencies. See also Bill of rights; Constitutional freedom.

Constitutional limitations. Those provisions of a constitution which restrict the legislature in the types of laws which it may enact. See e.g. Art. I, Sec. 9, U.S. Constitution.

Constitutional office. A public position or office which is created by a constitution as distinguished from a statutory office which is created by an enactment of the legislature.

Constitutional officer. A governmental official whose office was created by a constitution; as contrasted with an officer whose position has been created by the legislature. One whose tenure and term of office are fixed and defined by the constitution, as distinguished from the incumbents of offices created by the legislature.

Constitutional powers. See Power.

Constitutional protections. Those basic protections guaranteed by the Constitution such as due process, equal protection and the fundamental protections of the First Amendment, such as those touching speech, press and religion. See Bill of rights; Constitutional freedom.

Constitutional questions. Those legal issues which require an interpretation of the Constitution for their resolution as distinguished from those of a statutory nature (e.g. Fourth Amend. search and seizure issues).

Constitutional right. A right guaranteed to the citizens by the United States Constitution and state constitutions and so guaranteed as to prevent legislative interference therewith. See also Constitutional freedom; Constitutional liberty or freedom; Constitutional protections.

Constitutional tort. See Tort.

Constitutiones /kɔ̃nstət(y)ũwshiyówniyz/. Laws promulgated, i.e., enacted, by the Roman Emperor. They were of various kinds, namely, the following: (1) Edicta; (2) decreta; (3) rescripta, called also "epistolæ." Sometimes they were general, and intended to form a precedent for other like cases; at other times they were special, particular, or individual (personales), and not intended to form a precedent. The emperor had this power of irresponsible enactment by virtue of a certain lex regia, whereby he was made the fountain of justice and of mercy.

Constitutiones tempore posteriores potiores sunt his quæ ipsas præcesserunt /kɔ̃nstət(y)ũwshiyówniyz tɛmpəriy pɔ̃stiriyóriyz sɔ̃nt háys kwiy ipsəs prɛsɛsérant/. Later laws prevail over those which preceded them.

Constitutions of Clarendon. See Clarendon, constitutions of.

Constitutions of the Forest. See Charta (Charta de foresta).

Constitutor /kɔ̃nstətyúwtər/. In the civil law, one who, by a simple agreement, becomes responsible for the payment of another's debt.

Constitutum /kɔ̃nstət(y)úwtəm/. In the civil law, an agreement to pay a subsisting debt which exists without any stipulation, whether of the promisor or another party. It differs from a stipulation in that it must be for an existing debt.

A day appointed for any purpose. A form of appeal.

Constitutum esse eam domum unicuique nostrum debere existimari, ubi quisque sedes et tabulas haberet, suarumque rerum constitutionem fecisset /kɔ̃nst(y)úwtəm ésiy iyəm dówməm yúwnək(yuw)áykwiy nóstrəm dəbíriy əgzistəméray, yúwbay kwískwiy sydiyz èt tábyələs həbíɾət, syúwerámkwiy rirəm kɔ̃nstət(y)úwshiyównəm fəsísət/. It is settled that that is to be considered the home of each one of us where he may have his habitation and account-books, and where he may have made an establishment of his business.

Constraint. Act of constraining, i.e. state of being restrained or restricted.

Construct. To build; erect; put together; make ready for use. To adjust and join materials, or parts of, so as to form a permanent whole. To put together constituent parts of something in their proper place and order. "Construct" is distinguishable from "maintain," which means to keep up, to keep from change, to preserve. See also Construction.

Constructio legis non facit injuriam /kɔ̃nstráks(h)iyow líyəs nɔ̃n féysət injúriyəm/. The construction of the law (a construction made by the law) works no injury. The law will make such a construction of an instrument as not to injure a party.

Construction. Interpretation of statute, regulation, court decision or other legal authority. The process, or the art, of determining the sense, real meaning, or proper explanation of obscure, complex or ambiguous terms or provisions in a statute, written instrument, or oral agreement, or the application of such subject to the case in question, by reasoning in the light derived from extraneous connected circumstances or laws or writings bearing upon the same or a connected matter, or by seeking and applying the probable aim and purpose of the provision. Drawing conclusions respecting subjects that lie beyond the direct expression of the term.

The process of bringing together and correlating a number of independent entities, so as to form a definite entity.

The creation of something new, as distinguished from the repair or improvement of something already existing. The act of fitting an object for use or occupation in the usual way, and for some distinct purpose. See Construct.

See also Broad interpretation; Comparative interpretation; Contemporaneous construction; Construe; Four corners rule; Interpretation; Last antecedent rule; Literal construction or interpretation; Statutory construction; Strict construction.

Equitable construction. A construction of a law, rule, or remedy which has regard more to the equities of the particular transaction or state of affairs involved than to the strict application of the rule or remedy; that is, a liberal and extensive construction, as opposed to a literal and restrictive. See also Strict and liberal construction, below.

Strict and liberal construction. Strict (or literal) construction is construction of a statute or other instrument according to its letter, which recognizes nothing that is not expressed, takes the language used in its exact and technical meaning, and admits no equitable considerations or implications.

Liberal (or equitable) construction, on the other hand, expands the meaning of the statute to meet cases which are clearly within the spirit or reason of the law, or within the evil which it was designed to remedy, provided such an interpretation is not inconsistent with the language used. It resolves all reasonable doubts in favor of the applicability of the statute to the particular case. It means, not that the words should be forced out of their natural meaning, but simply that they should receive a fair and reasonable interpretation with respect to the objects and purposes of the instrument. See also Equitable construction, above.

Construction contract. Type of contract in which plans and specifications for construction are made a part of the contract itself and commonly it is secured by performance and payment bonds to protect both subcontractors and party for whom building is being constructed.

Construction lien. A lien that arises by law and attaches to real estate to secure payment of a person who improved the property through the rendering of labor or other services or the furnishing of materials or other supplies. Another name for this lien is mechanics' lien (q.v.).

Construction loan. See Loan.

Construction of will. Interpretation which is given to provisions of will and the law to be applied therein when there is conflict as to the meaning intended by the deceased. Such function is commonly performed by Probate Court.

Constructive. That which is established by the mind of the law in its act of construing facts, conduct, circumstances, or instruments. That which has not the character assigned to it in its own essential nature, but acquires such character in consequence of the way in which it is regarded by a rule or policy of law; hence, inferred, implied, or made out by legal interpretation; the word "legal" being sometimes used here in lieu of "constructive."

As to constructive Bailment; Breaking; Contempt; Conversion; Delivery; Escape; Fraud; Larceny; Seisen; and Treason, see those titles.

Constructive adverse possession. Type of adverse possession which, under certain statutes, is characterized by payment of taxes under color of right, as distinguished from actual adverse possession in which the adverse claimant is in actual possession.

Constructive assent. An assent or consent imputed to a party from a construction or interpretation of his conduct; as distinguished from one which he actually expresses.

Constructive authority. Authority inferred or assumed to have been given because of the grant of some other antecedent authority. See also Authority.

Constructive breaking into a house. A breaking made out by construction of law. As where a burglar gains an entry into a house by threats, fraud, or conspiracy.

Constructive condition. Conditions in contracts which are neither expressed nor implied by the words of the contract but are imposed by law to meet the ends of justice. Restatement, Second, Contracts, § 226. The cooperation of the parties to a contract is a constructive condition. In negotiable instruments, a promise or order otherwise unconditional is not made conditional by the fact that the instrument is subject to a constructive condition. U.C.C. § 3-105(1).

Constructive contract. A species of contracts which arise, not from the intent of the parties, but from the operation of law to avoid an injustice. These are sometimes referred to as quasi contracts or contracts implied in law as contrasted with contracts implied in fact which are real contracts expressing the intent of the parties by conduct rather than by words. An obligation created by law for reasons of justice without regard to expressions of assent by either words or acts. Power-Matics, Inc. v. Ligotti, 79 N.J.Super. 294, 191 A.2d 483, 489. See also Contract (Quasi contract).

Constructive delivery. The recognition of the act of intending that title to property be transferred to someone, even though the actual, physical delivery of the property is not made (because of difficulty, impossibility) (e.g., the transfer of a key to a safe constructively delivers the contents of the safe). See also Delivery.

Constructive desertion. Occurs when one spouse, through misconduct, forces the other to abandon the marital abode. Grollman v. Grollman, D.C.App., 220 A.2d 330, 332. If a spouse is forced to leave the home because of the other's conduct, the former has been constructively deserted.

Constructive dividend. See Dividend.

Constructive eviction. Such arises when landlord, while not actually depriving tenant of possession, has done or suffered some act by which premises are rendered untenable. Net Realty Holding Trust v. Nelson, 33 Conn.Sup. 22, 358 A.2d 365, 367. Any disturbance of the tenant's possession by the landlord whereby the premises are rendered unfit or unsuitable for occupancy in whole or in substantial part for the purposes for which they were leased amounts to a constructive eviction, if the tenant so elects and surrenders his possession. For example, if a tenant vacates the rental property because of the absence of heat or water, he has been constructively evicted.

As the term is used with reference to breach of the covenants of warranty and of quiet enjoyment, it means the inability of the purchaser to obtain possession by reason of a paramount outstanding title.

Constructive filing. The filing of a document with a person who is the only one available to receive it, though he is not the designated person to receive it, is a constructive filing. People v. Spencer, 193 Cal.App.2d 13, 13 Cal.Rptr. 881, 883.

Constructive force. As regards robbery, a taking by force is the gist of the crime, but the force may be either actual or constructive. Constructive force is anything which produces fear sufficient to suspend the power of resistance and prevent the free exercise of the will. Actual force is applied to the body; constructive is by threatening words or gestures and operates on the mind.

Constructive fraud. Exists where conduct, though not actually fraudulent, has all actual consequences and all legal effects of actual fraud. Agair Inc. v. Shaeffer, 232 Cal.App.2d 513, 42 Cal.Rptr. 883, 886. Breach of legal or equitable duty which, irrespective of moral guilt, is declared by law to be fraudulent because of its tendency to deceive others or violate confidence. Daves v. Lawyers Sur. Corp., Tex.Civ.App., 459 S.W.2d 655, 657. See also Fraud.

Constructive/implied conditions. Conditions or qualifications to a promise which arise from the very nature of the promise and which the law recognizes as conditioning the promise even though not expressly stated.

Constructive intent. Exists where one should have reasonably expected or anticipated a particular result; e.g. when one does an act which is wilful and wanton resulting in injury to another, it can be said that he constructively intended the harm. Ballew v. Asheville & E. T. R. Co., 186 N.C. 704, 120 S.E. 334.

Constructive knowledge. If one by exercise of reasonable care would have known a fact, he is deemed to have had constructive knowledge of such fact; e.g. matters of public record. Attoe v. State Farm Mutual Auto. Ins. Co., 36 Wis.2d 539, 153 N.W.2d 575, 579. See also Constructive notice.

Constructive loss. One resulting from such injuries to the property, without its destruction, as render it valueless to the assured or prevent its restoration to the original condition except at a cost exceeding its value. See also Constructive total loss.

Constructive malice. That type of malice which the law infers from the doing of an evil act; sometimes known as implied malice.

Constructive notice. Such notice as is implied or imputed by law, usually on the basis that the information is a part of a public record or file, as in the case of notice of documents which have been recorded in the appropriate registry of deeds or probate. Notice with which a person is charged by reason of the notorious nature of the thing to be noticed, as contrasted with actual notice of such thing. That which the law regards as sufficient to give notice and is regarded as a substitute for actual notice. In re Fahle's Estate, 90 Ohio App. 195, 105 N.E.2d 429, 431.

Constructive ownership. See Attribution.

Constructive payment. If one charges himself with a payment and the payee has a right to demand it, it can be considered a constructive as contrasted with an actual payment; e.g. a check which is mailed in payment though not yet cashed is a constructive payment.

Constructive possession. A person has constructive possession of property if he has power to control and intent to control such item. Com. v. Stephens, 231 Pa.Super. 481, 331 A.2d 719, 723. Exists where one does not have physical custody or possession, but is in a position to exercise dominion or control over a thing. U. S. v. DiNovo, C.A.Ind., 523 F.2d 197, 201.

Constructive receipt of income. As applied to tax laws, is taxable income which is unqualifiedly subject to the demand of taxpayer on cash receipts and disbursements method of accounting, whether or not such income has actually been received in cash. Gounares Bros. & Co. v. U. S., D.C.Ala., 185 F.Supp. 794, 798. Under this doctrine, income which is subject to unfettered command of taxpayer and which the taxpayer is free to enjoy at his option is taxed to him, despite the fact that the taxpayer has exercised his own choice to turn his back on that income and the doctrine is one by which form of transaction is ignored in order to get to its substance. Pittsburgh-Des Moines Steel Co. v. U. S., D.C.Pa., 360 F.Supp. 597, 599. An example would be accrued interest on a savings account. Under the constructive receipt of income concept, such interest will be taxed to a depositor in the year it is available rather than the year actually withdrawn. The fact that the depositor uses the cash basis of accounting for tax purposes makes no difference.

Constructive service of process. Form of service of process other than actual service; e.g. publication in newspaper is constructive service.

Constructive taking. A phrase used in the law to characterize an act not amounting to an actual appropriation of chattels, but which shows an intention to convert them to his use; as if a person intrusted with the possession of goods deals with them contrary to the orders of the owner. With respect to constructive condemnation, see Condemnation (Inverse condemnation).

Constructive total loss. In insurance, exists whenever insured item of property has lost its total usefulness and insured is deprived of its benefit totally. See also Constructive loss.

Constructive transfer. A transfer of an item (e.g. a controlled substance), either belonging to an individual or under the individual's control, by some other person or agency at the instance or direction of the individual accused of such constructive transfer. Henderson v. State, Tex.App. 14 Dist., 681 S.W.2d 173, 174.

Constructive trust. Trust created by operation of law against one who by actual or constructive fraud, by duress or by abuse of confidence, or by commission of wrong, or by any form of unconscionable conduct, or other questionable means, has obtained or holds legal right to property which he should not, in equity and good conscience, hold and enjoy. Davis v. Howard, 19 Or.App. 310, 527 P.2d 422, 424.

A constructive trust is a relationship with respect to property subjecting the person by whom the title to the property is held to an equitable duty to convey it to another on the ground that his acquisition or retention of the property is wrongful and that he would be unjustly enriched if he were permitted to retain the property. Restatement, Second, Trusts § 1(e).

Constructive trust ex delicto. A constructive trust which is imposed on property which a fiduciary has claimed or received in violation of his duties.

Constructive willfulness. Intentional disregard of a known duty necessary to the safety of a person, and an entire absence of care for the life, the person, or the property of others, such as exhibits a conscious indifference to consequences.

Construe. To put together; to arrange or interpret the words of an instrument, statute, regulation, court decision or other legal authority. To ascertain the meaning of language by a process of arrangement, interpretation and inference. See Construction.

Constuprate /kónst(y)əpreyt/. To ravish, debauch, violate, rape.

Consuetudinarius /kónswətyúwdənəriyəs/. In ecclesiastical law, a ritual or book, containing the rites and forms of divine offices or the customs of abbeys and monasteries.

Consuetudinary law /kónswətyúwdən(ə)ry ló/. Customary law. Law derived by oral tradition from a remote antiquity.

Consuetudines /kónswətyúwdəniyz/. In old English law, customs. Thus, consuetudines et assisa forestæ, the customs and assise of the forest.

Consuetudines feudorum /kónswətyúwdəniyz fyw-dórəm/. (Lat. feudal customs.) A compilation of the law of feuds or fiefs in Lombardy, made A.D. 1170. It is of great authority.

Consuetudinibus et serviciis /kónswətyúwdínəbəs et sərvíshiyəs/. In old English law, a writ of right close, which lay against a tenant who deformed his lord of the rent or service due to him.

Consuetudo /kónswətyúwdow/. Lat. A custom; an established usage or practice; duties; taxes.

Consuetudo anglicana /kónswətyúwdow ænglækéynə/. The custom of England; the ancient common law, as distinguished from lex, the Roman or civil law.

Consuetudo contra rationem introducta potius usurpatio quam consuetudo appellari debet /kónswətyúwdow kóntrə rəshiyównəm intrədákta pówsh(iy)əs yúwsərpéysh(iy)ow kwəm kónswətyúwdow əpəléray débət/. A custom introduced against reason ought rather to be called a "usurpation" than a "custom."

Consuetudo curiæ /kónswətyúwdow kyúriiy/. The custom or practice of a court.

Consuetudo debet esse certa; nam incerta pro nulla habetur /kónswətyúwdow débət ésiy sárta, nām insértə pròw náləs heybéntər/. A custom should be certain; for an uncertain custom is considered null.

Consuetudo est altera lex /kónswətyúwdow èst áltərə léks/. Custom is another law.

Consuetudo est optimus interpres legum /kónswətyúwdow èst óptəməs intərpriyz líygəm/. Custom is the best expounder of the laws.

Consuetudo et communis assuetudo vincit legem non scriptam, si sit specialis; et interpretatur legem scriptam, si lex sit generalis /kónswətyúwdow èt kəmyúwnəs əswətyúwdow vínsət líyjəm nòn skríptəm, sáy sit spèshiyéyləs; et intərpřətéytər líyjəm skríptəm, sáy sit jènərəyləs/. Custom and common usage overcomes the unwritten law, if it be special; and interprets the written law, if the law be general.

Consuetudo ex certa causa rationabili usitata privat communem legem /kónswətyúwdow èt sárta kósa rəshənáybəlay yúwzətéytə práyvtə kəmyúwnəm líyjəm/. A custom, grounded on a certain and reasonable cause, supersedes the common law.

Consuetudo licet sit magna auctoritatis, nunquam tamen, præjudicat manifestæ veritati /kónswətyúwdow, líset sit mægnyí oktòhrətéytəs, nánkwəm təmen přájúwdəkət mənəféstiy vèhrətéytay/. A custom, though it be of great authority, should never prejudice manifest truth.

Consuetudo loci observanda est /kónswətyúwdow lów-say òbzərvəndə ést/. The custom of a place is to be observed.

Consuetudo manerii et loci observanda est /kónswətyúwdow mənəriyay èt lówsay òbzərvəndə ést/. A custom of a manor and place is to be observed.

Consuetudo mercatorum /kónswətyúwdow mər-kətorəm/. Lat. The custom of merchants, the same with lex mercatoria.

Consuetudo neque injuriâ oriri neque tolli potest /kónswətyúwdow nəkwiy ənjúriyə əráyray nəkwiy tólay pówtəst/. Custom can neither arise from nor be taken away by injury.

Consuetudo non trahitur in consequentiam /kónswətyúwdow nòn tréy(h)ətər in kónsəkwénsh(iy)əm/. Custom is not drawn into consequence.

Consuetudo præscripta et legitima vincit legem /kónswətyúwdow přəskríptə èt ləjítamə vínsət líyjəm/. A prescriptive and lawful custom overcomes the law.

Consuetudo regni anglia est lex anglia /kónswətyúwdow régnay ængliiy èst léks ængliiy/. The custom of the kingdom of England is the law of England. 2 Bl.Comm. 422.

Consuetudo semel reprobata non potest amplius induci /kónswətyúwdow séməl rəpřowbéytə nòn pówtəst əmpliys ind(y)úwsay/. A custom once disallowed cannot be again brought forward [or relied on].

Consuetudo tollit communem legem /kónswətyúwdow tólet kəmyúwnəm líyjəm/. Custom takes away the common law.

Consuetudo vincit communem legem /kɔ̃swətýúwd-ow vɪnsət kəmyúwnəm líjəm/. Custom overrules common law.

Consuetudo volentes ducit, lex nolentes trahit /kɔ̃swətýúwdow vələntiýz d(y)úwsət, léks nɔ̃lɛntiýz tréy(h)ət/. Custom leads the willing, law compels [drags] the unwilling.

Consul /kɔ̃nsəl/. An officer of a commercial character, appointed by the different nations to watch over the mercantile and tourist interests of the appointing nation and of its subjects in foreign countries. There are usually a number of consuls in every maritime country, and they are usually subject to a chief consul, who is called a "consul general." A public official residing in a foreign country responsible for developing and protecting the economic interests of his government and looking after the welfare of his government's citizens who may be traveling or residing within his jurisdiction. United States consuls form a part of the Foreign Service and are of various grades: consul general, consul, vice consul, and consular agent.

In old English law, a title of an earl.

In Roman law, during the republic, the name "consul" was given to the chief executive magistrate, two of whom were chosen annually. The office was continued under the empire, but its powers and prerogatives were greatly reduced. The name is supposed to have been derived from consulo, to consult, because these officers consulted with the senate on administrative measures.

Consular courts /kɔ̃ns(y)ələr kórts/. Courts held by the consuls of one country, within the territory of another, under authority given by treaty, for the settlement of civil cases. In some instances they had also a criminal jurisdiction, but in this respect were subject to review by the courts of the home government. The last of the United States consular courts (Morocco) was abolished in 1956.

Consular invoice. Invoice used in foreign trade signed by consul of the country for which the shipment is destined. Such facilitates entry through destination country in that quantity, value, etc. of shipment has been pre-verified.

Consular marriage. A marriage solemnized in a foreign country by a consul or diplomatic agent of the U.S. and held to be valid in some jurisdictions.

Consulate. The residence or headquarters of a foreign consul.

Consul general. Consular officer of highest grade.

Consulta ecclesia /kənsáltə əklíýziyə/. In ecclesiastical law, a church full or provided for.

Consultary response /kənsáltəriý rəspóns/kɔ̃nsáltériý'/. The opinion of a court of law on a special case.

Consultation. Act of consulting or conferring; e.g. patient with doctor; client with lawyer. Deliberation of persons on some subject. A conference between the counsel engaged in a case, to discuss its questions or arrange the method of conducting it.

An old writ whereby a cause which had been wrongfully removed by prohibition out of an ecclesiastical court to a temporal court was returned to the ecclesiastical court.

Consulto /kənsáltow/. Lat. In the civil law, designedly; intentionally.

Consumer /kəns(y)úwmər/. One who consumes. Individuals who purchase, use, maintain, and dispose of products and services. Users of the final product. A member of that broad class of people who are affected by pricing policies, financing practices, quality of goods and services, credit reporting, debt collection, and other trade practices for which state and federal consumer protection laws are enacted. Consumers are to be distinguished from manufacturers (who produce goods), and wholesalers or retailers (who sell goods). See also Purchaser.

A buyer (other than for purposes of resale) of any consumer product, any person to whom such product is transferred during the duration of an implied or written warranty (or service contract) applicable to the product, and any other person who is entitled by the terms of such warranty (or service contract) or under applicable State law to enforce against the warrantor (or service contractor) the obligations of the warranty (or service contract). 15 U.S.C.A. § 2301.

Consumer advocate. One who is given to presenting the position of the consumer or to representing him in judicial, administrative, or legislative proceedings. See also Ombudsman.

Consumer credit. Short term loans to individuals for purchase of consumer goods and services.

Consumer Credit Code. A uniform law, adopted by several states, with intent and purpose similar to that of the federal Consumer Credit Protection Act (q.v.).

Consumer Credit Protection Act. Federal and state acts (commonly referred to as Truth-in-Lending Acts) enacted to safeguard the consumer in connection with the utilization of credit by requiring full disclosure of the terms and conditions of finance charges in credit transactions or in offers to extend credit, by restricting the garnishment of wages, and by regulating the use of credit cards. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1601 et seq. In addition to federal and state Truth-in-Lending Acts, several states also require by statute that consumer-loan agreements be written in plain, simplified language. See also Annual percentage rate; Equal Credit Opportunity Act; Fair Credit Billing Act; Fair Credit Reporting Acts; Fair Debt Collection Practices Act; Truth-in-Lending Act; Uniform Consumer Credit Code.

Consumer credit sale. Any sale with respect to which consumer credit is extended or arranged by the seller. The term includes any contract in the form of a bailment or lease if the bailee or lessee contracts to pay as compensation for use a sum substantially equivalent to or in excess of the aggregate value of the property and services involved and it is agreed that the bailee or lessee will become, or for no other or for a nominal consideration has the option to become, the owner of the property upon full compliance with his obligations under the contract.

Consumer credit transaction. Credit offered or extended to a natural person, in which the money, property or service which is the subject of the transaction is primarily for personal, family, household or agricultural purposes and for which either a finance charge is or may be imposed or which, pursuant to an agreement, is or may be payable in more than four installments. "Consumer loan" is one type of "consumer credit".

Consumer debt. Debt incurred by an individual primarily for a personal, family, or household purpose. Bankruptcy Code § 101.

Consumer goods. Goods which are used or bought for use primarily for personal, family or household purposes. U.C.C. § 9-109(1). Such goods are not intended for resale or further use in the production of other products. Contrasted with capital goods. See also Consumer product.

Consumer lease. Lease of consumer goods; also may be applied to lease of dwelling as contrasted with commercial lease. Article 2A of the U.C.C. is concerned with the formation, construction, effect, and enforcement of the consumer lease contracts, as well as the rights and remedies of both lessor and lessee on default. As defined by U.C.C. § 2A-103 is "a lease that a lessor regularly engaged in the business of leasing or selling makes to a lessee, except an organization, who takes under the lease primarily for a personal, family, or household purpose."

Disclosure of terms in certain types of consumer leases is governed by Federal Consumer Leasing Act (which is fully integrated into the Federal Truth in Lending Act). 15 U.S.C.A. § 1667 et seq.

Consumer Price Index. A price index computed and issued monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the U.S. Department of Labor. The index attempts to track the price level of a group of goods and services purchased by the average consumer. Widely used to measure changes in cost of maintaining given standard of living. See Cost of living clause. Compare Producer Price Index.

Consumer product. Any tangible personal property which is distributed in commerce and which is normally used for personal, family, or household purposes (including any such property intended to be attached to or installed in any real property without regard to whether it is so attached or installed). 15 U.S.C.A. § 2301. See also Consumer goods.

Consumer Product Safety Commission. An independent federal regulatory agency established by act of October 27, 1972 (86 Stat. 1207) to administer and implement the Consumer Product Safety Act. The Commission has primary responsibility for establishing mandatory product safety standards, where appropriate, to reduce the unreasonable risk of injury to consumers from consumer products. In addition it has authority to ban hazardous consumer products. The Consumer Product Safety Act also authorizes the Commission to conduct extensive research on consumer product standards, engage in broad consumer and industry information and education programs, and establish a comprehensive Injury Information Clearinghouse.

Consumer protection laws. Federal and state statutes governing sales and credit practices involving consumer goods. Such statutes prohibit and regulate deceptive or unconscionable advertising and sales practices, product quality, credit financing and reporting, debt collection, leases, and other aspects of consumer transactions. For examples of such statutes, see Consumer Credit Protection Act; Consumer Product Safety Commission; Deceptive sales practices; Equal Credit Opportunity Act; Fair Debt Collection Practices Act; Fair Credit Billing Act; Fair Credit Reporting Acts; Magnuson-Moss Warranty Act; Truth-in-Lending Act; Uniform Commercial Code; Uniform Consumer Credit Code.

At the federal level, the major regulatory law is the Federal Trade Commission Act. More than half the states have in turn enacted "mini-FTC" laws which, like the federal, prohibit "unfair or deceptive acts or practices."

Consumer report. Document issued by private or governmental body relative to quality of certain products, their dangers and their attributes. Document issued as to certain companies and their practices. See Fair Credit Reporting Acts.

Consumer reporting agency. An agency which acts for monetary fees, dues or on a cooperative nonprofit basis, which regularly engages in whole or in part in gathering or evaluating information on consumers in order to distribute such information to third parties engaged in commerce and which uses a facility of interstate commerce to prepare or distribute the reports. Porter v. Talbot Perkins Children's Services, D.C.N.Y., 355 F.Supp. 174, 176. The activities of such agencies are regulated by federal and state laws. See Fair Credit Reporting Acts.

Consumer's cooperative. Group which purchases consumer goods for resale to its members, thus reducing costs by eliminating the middleman's profit.

Consummate /kənsəmət/, adj. Completed; as distinguished from initiate, or that which is merely begun. The husband of a woman seised of an estate of inheritance becomes, by the birth of a child, tenant by the curtesy initiate, and may do many acts to charge the lands, but his estate is not consummate till the death of the wife. 2 Bl.Comm. 126, 128.

Consummate /kənsəməyt/, v. To finish by completing what was intended; bring or carry to utmost point or degree; carry or bring to completion; finish; perfect; fulfill; achieve. See also Consummation.

Consummate lien. A term which may be used to describe the lien of a judgment when a motion for a new trial has been denied (the lien having theretofore been merely inchoate).

Consummation /kɒnsəméyʃən/. The completion of a thing; the completion of a marriage by cohabitation (i.e. sexual intercourse) between spouses.

Consumption. Act or process of consuming; waste; decay; destruction. Using up of anything, as food, natural resources, heat, or time.

Contagious disease. One capable of being transmitted by mediate or immediate contact.

Contamination. Condition of impurity resulting from mixture or contact with foreign substance. American Cas. Co. of Reading, Pa. v. Myrick, C.A.Tex., 304 F.2d 179, 183. See also Adulteration; Foreign substance.

Contango /kɒntæŋɡow/. A double bargain, consisting of a sale for cash of stock previously bought which the broker does not wish to carry, and a repurchase for the re-settlement several weeks ahead of the same stock at the same price as at the sale plus interest accrued up to the date of that settlement. The rate of interest is called a "contango" and contango days are the days during the settlement when these arrangements are in effect.

Charge by broker for carrying customer's account to next settlement day.

Contek /kɒnték/. L. Fr. A contest, dispute, disturbance, opposition. Conteckours; brawlers; disturbers of the peace.

Contemnōr /kɒntémnr/. One who has committed contempt of court.

Contemplate. To view or consider with continued attention; to regard thoughtfully; to have in view as contingent or probable as an end or intention. To ponder, to study, to plan, to meditate, to reflect. See Consider; Premeditation.

Contemplation. The act of the mind in considering with attention. Continued attention of the mind to a particular subject. Consideration of an act or series of acts with the intention of doing or adopting them. The consideration of an event or state of facts with the expectation that it will transpire. See Consideration; Premeditation.

Contemplation of bankruptcy. Contemplation of the termination of one's business because of the financial inability to continue it. Knowledge of, and action with reference to, a condition of bankruptcy or ascertained insolvency, coupled with an intention to commit what the law formerly declared to be an "act of bankruptcy," or to make provision against the consequences of insolvency, or to defeat the general distribution of assets which would take place under a proceeding in bankruptcy. See Act of bankruptcy; Bankruptcy proceedings.

Contemplation of death. The apprehension or expectation of approaching dissolution; not that general expectation which every mortal entertains, but the apprehension which arises from some presently existing sickness or physical condition or from some impending danger. As applied to transfers of property, the phrase "in contemplation of death" means that thought of death is the impelling cause of transfer and that motive which induces transfer is of sort which leads to testamentary disposition and is practically equivalent to "causa mortis." In re Cornell's Estate, 66 A.D. 162, 73 N.Y.S. 32; Nicholas v. Martin, 128 N.J.Eq. 344, 15 A.2d 235, 243; Pate v. C. I. R., C.C.A.8, 149 F.2d 669, 670. It has been further held however, that in determining whether transfer by decedent within three years prior to date of death was made in contemplation of death, phrase "contemplation of death" is not restricted in meaning to apprehension that death is imminent; inquiry is whether the "life" as opposed to "death" motives were the dominant controlling or impelling reasons for the transfer. Bel v. U. S., D.C.La., 310 F.Supp. 1189, 1194. See also In contemplation of death.

Contemplation of insolvency. Knowledge of, and action with reference to, an existing or contemplated state of insolvency, with a design to make provision against its results or to defeat the operation of the insolvency laws. See Act of bankruptcy; Contemplation of bankruptcy.

Contemporanea expositio /kɒntɛmpərəéniyə èks-pəzish(iy)ow/. Lat. Contemporaneous exposition, or construction; a construction drawn from the time when, and the circumstances under which, the subject-matter to be construed, as a statute or custom, originated.

Contemporanea expositio est optima et fortissima in lege /kɒntɛmpərəéniyə èks-pəzish(iy)ow èst óptəmə èt fortisəmə in liyjy/. Contemporaneous exposition is the best and strongest in the law. A statute is best explained by following the construction put upon it by judges who lived at the time it was made, or soon after.

Contemporaneous construction. A doctrine which holds that when an administrative body over a long period of time has placed an interpretation upon an ambiguous law, the interpretation of such body is entitled to great weight in the determination of the meaning of the law. Bunch v. Town of St. Francisville, La.App. 1 Cir., 446 So.2d 1357, 1361.

Contemporaneous objection rule. Rule which requires that a specific and timely objection be made to the admission of evidence for the question of its admissibility to be considered on appeal. Jensen v. Jensen, 205 Kan. 465, 470 P.2d 829, 831.

Contemporary community standards. In deciding whether allegedly obscene material has any literary, political or scientific value, the proper inquiry is not whether an ordinary member of any given community would find serious literary, artistic, political or scientific value in the material, but whether a reasonable person would find such value in the material taken as a whole. Pope v. Illinois, 481 U.S. 497, 107 S.Ct. 1918, 95 L.Ed.2d 439, 445.

Contempt. A willful disregard or disobedience of a public authority. See also Civil contempt; Common-law contempt; Contempt of Congress; Contempt of court; Direct contempt.

Contemptibiliter /kəntəm(p)təbɪlətər/. Lat. Contemptuously. In old English law, contempt, contempts.

Contempt of Congress. Deliberate interference with duties and powers of Congress. Both houses of Congress may cite an individual for such contempt.

Contempt of court. Any act which is calculated to embarrass, hinder, or obstruct court in administration of justice, or which is calculated to lessen its authority or its dignity. Committed by a person who does any act in willful contravention of its authority or dignity, or tending to impede or frustrate the administration of justice, or by one who, being under the court's authority as a party to a proceeding therein, willfully disobeys its lawful orders or fails to comply with an undertaking which he has given.

Classification

Contempts are, generally, of two kinds, direct and constructive.

Direct contempts are those committed in the immediate view and presence of the court (such as insulting language or acts of violence) or so near the presence of the court as to obstruct or interrupt the due and orderly course of proceedings. These are punishable summarily. People v. Edwards, 69 Ill.App.3d 626, 26 Ill.Dec. 139, 387 N.E.2d 969. They are also called "criminal" contempts, but that term is better used in contrast with "civil" contempts (see below).

Constructive (or indirect) contempts are those which arise from matters not occurring in or near the presence of the court, but which tend to obstruct or defeat the administration of justice, and the term is chiefly used with reference to the failure or refusal of a party to obey a lawful order, injunction, or decree of the court laying upon him a duty of action or forbearance. McGill v. McGill, 3 Ohio App.3d 455, 445 N.E.2d 1163. Constructive contempts were formerly called "consequential," and this term is still in occasional use.

Contempts are also classed as civil or criminal. The former are those quasi contempts which consist in the failure to do something which the party is ordered by the court to do for the benefit or advantage of another party to the proceeding before the court, while criminal contempts are acts done in disrespect of the court or its process or which obstruct the administration of justice or tend to bring the court into disrespect. A civil contempt is not an offense against the dignity of the court, but against the party in whose behalf the mandate of the court was issued, and a fine is imposed for his indemnity. But criminal contempts are offenses upon the court such as wilful disobedience of a lawful writ, process, order, rule, or command of court, and a fine or imprisonment is imposed upon the contemnor for the purpose of punishment. Fed.R.Crim.Proc. 42; 18 U.S.C.A. § 402.

A court of the United States has power to punish by fine or imprisonment, at its discretion, such contempt of its authority, and none other, as: (1) misbehavior of any person in its presence or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice; (2) misbehavior of any of its officers in their official transactions; (3) disobedience or resistance to its lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree, or command. 18 U.S.C.A. § 401.

Contempt for failure to make discovery is governed by Fed.R. Civil P. 37(b), which provides for imposition of sanctions. See also Sanction.

Contempt power. Every court has inherent power to punish one for contempt of its judgments or decrees and for conduct within or proximate to the court which is contemptuous. See also Contempt of Congress; Contempt of court; Sanction.

Contempt proceeding. The judicial hearing or trial conducted to determine whether one has been in contempt of court and to make an appropriate disposition. Such proceedings are sui generis and not necessarily connected to or identified with the proceeding out of which the contempt arose.

Contentementum /kəntənəməntəm/. See Wainagium; Contentment.

Contentious /kəntəntshəs/. Contested; adversary; litigated between adverse or contending parties. A judicial proceeding not merely ex parte in its character, but comprising attack and defense as between opposing parties, is so called. Character of being quarrelsome or belligerent.

Contentious jurisdiction. That part of jurisdiction of court that is concerned with contested matters, as opposed to voluntary, undisputed matters. In English ecclesiastical law, that branch of the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts which is exercised upon adversary or contentious (opposed, litigated) proceedings.

Contentious possession. In stating the rule that the possession of land necessary to give rise to a title by prescription must be a "contentious" one, it is meant that it must be based on opposition to the title of the rival claimant (not in recognition thereof or subordination thereto) and that the opposition must be based on good grounds, or such as might be made the subject of litigation.

Contentment, contentment. A man's countenance or credit, which he has together with, and by reason of, his freehold; or that which is necessary for the support and maintenance of men, agreeably to their several qualities or states of life.

Comfort; consolation; ease; enjoyment; happiness; pleasure; satisfaction.

Contents and not contents. In English parliamentary law, the "contents" are those who, in the house of lords, express assent to a bill; the "not" or "non-contents" dissent.

Contents unknown. Words sometimes annexed to a bill of lading of goods in cases or other packaging. Their meaning is that the carrier only means to acknowledge that the shipment, as evidenced from the external condition of such, is in good order.

Content validation. Content validation of a test requires that an analysis of a job involved be undertaken to determine what characteristics are essential for adequate performance of that job and the job analysis is then followed by formulation of a test which accurately reflects presence or absence of these necessary qualities. Com. of Pa. v. Glickman, D.C.Pa., 370 F.Supp. 724, 737.

Conterminous /kɒntɛrˈmɪnəs/. Adjacent; adjoining; having a common boundary; coterminous.

Contest, v. To assert a defense to an adverse claim in a court proceeding. To oppose, resist, or dispute the case made by a plaintiff or prosecutor. To strive to win or hold. To controvert, litigate, call in question, challenge. To defend, as a suit or other proceeding. As used in a no-contest clause in a will, means any legal proceedings designed to thwart testator's wishes. In re Holtermann's Estate, 206 C.A.2d 460, 23 Cal.Rptr. 685, 690. See Answer; Defense.

Contestable clause. Provision in an insurance policy setting forth the conditions under which, or the period of time during which, the insurer may contest or void the policy.

Contestatio litis /kɒntɛstɛjʃ(i)ɔw lɛjtəs/. In Roman law, contestation of suit; the framing an issue; joinder in issue. The formal act of both the parties with which the proceedings in jure were closed when they led to a judicial investigation, and by which the neighbors whom the parties brought with them were called to testify.

In old English law, coming to an issue; the issue so produced.

Contestatio litis eget terminos contradictorios /kɒntɛstɛjʃ(i)ɔw lɛjtəs iɟət tɛrˈmɪnɔws kɒntrɛdɪktɛrɪˈjɔws/. An issue requires terms of contradiction. To constitute an issue, there must be an affirmative on one side and a negative on the other.

Contestation of suit. In an ecclesiastical cause, that stage of the suit which is reached when the defendant has answered the libel by giving in an allegation. See also Answer; Contest; Defense.

Contested case. A court or administrative proceeding that is opposed by another party or interested person. Within the meaning of the Administrative Procedure Act this means a proceeding including but not restricted to rate making, price fixing, and licensing in which the legal rights, duties or privileges of a party are required by constitution or statute to be determined by an agency after an opportunity for an evidentiary hearing. Oliver v. Teleprompter Corp., Iowa, 299 N.W.2d 683, 686.

Contested election. An election is contested whenever an objection is formally urged against it which, if found to be true in fact, would invalidate it. This is true both as to objections founded upon some constitutional provision and to such as are based on statutes.

Contest of will. See Will contest.

Context. The context of a particular sentence or clause in a statute, contract, will, etc., comprises those parts of the text which immediately precede and follow it. The context may sometimes be scrutinized, to aid in the interpretation of an obscure passage. See Construction.

Contiguity. Exists where tracts of land touch or adjoin in a reasonably substantial physical sense, but line of demarcation between reasonableness or unreasonableness of a "contiguity" must be determined on the facts of each case. Belmont Fire Protection Dist. v. Village of Downers Grove, 92 Ill.App.3d 682, 48 Ill.Dec. 261, 264, 416 N.E.2d 292, 295.

Contiguous /kɒntɪɡjuwəs/. In close proximity; neighboring; adjoining; near in succession; in actual close contact; touching at a point or along a boundary; bounded or traversed by. The term is not synonymous with "vicinal." Ehle v. Tenney Trading Co., 56 Ariz. 241, 107 P.2d 210, 212.

Continencia /kɒntɪnɛnsɪjə/. In Spanish law, continence or unity of the proceedings in a cause.

Continens /kɒntənənz/. In the Roman law, continuing; holding together. Adjoining buildings were said to be continentia.

Continental. Pertaining or relating to a continent; characteristic of a continent; as broad in scope or purpose as a continent.

Continental Congress. The first national legislative assembly in the United States, which met in 1774, in pursuance of a recommendation made by Massachusetts and adopted by the other colonies. In this Congress all the colonies were represented except Georgia. The delegates were in some cases chosen by the legislative assemblies in the states; in others by the people directly. The powers of the Congress were undefined, but it proceeded to take measures and pass resolutions which concerned the general welfare and had regard to the inauguration and prosecution of the war for independence.

Continental currency. Paper money issued under the authority of the continental congress.

Continentia /kɒntənɛnʃ(i)ə/. In old English practice, continuance or connection. Applied to the proceedings in a cause.

Contingency /kɒntɪnjɛnsɪj/. Something that may or may not happen. Quality of being contingent or casual; the possibility of coming to pass; an event which may occur; a possibility; a casualty. A fortuitous event, which comes without design, foresight, or expectation. See also Contingent.

Contingency contract. A contract, part of performance of which at least is dependent on the happening of a contingency. Sometimes used to refer to fee arrangement with attorney who agrees to accept his fee on the contingency of a successful outcome. See Fee.

Contingency reserve (or fund). In accounting, a reserve set up to cover possible or potential losses; e.g. possible judgment against company.

A fund created in anticipation of incidental or unforeseen expenditures.

Contingency with double aspect. A remainder is said to be "in a contingency with double aspect," when there is another remainder limited on the same estate, not in derogation of the first, but as a substitute for it in case it should fail.

Contingent /kəntɪnjənt/. Possible, but not assured; doubtful or uncertain; conditioned upon the occurrence of some future event which is itself uncertain, or questionable. Synonymous with provisional. This term, when applied to a use, remainder, devise, bequest, or other legal right or interest, implies that no present interest exists, and that whether such interest or right ever will exist depends upon a future uncertain event.

As to contingent Damages; Fee; Legacy; Limitation; Remainder; Trust; Use, and Will, see those titles.

Contingent beneficiary. Person who may or will benefit if primary beneficiary dies or otherwise loses rights as beneficiary; e.g. person who will receive life insurance if primary beneficiary dies before insured.

Contingent claim. One which has not accrued and which is dependent on some future event that may never happen.

Contingent debt. One which is not presently fixed, but may become so in the future with the occurrence of some uncertain event. A debt in bankruptcy which may be proved and allowed and which arises out of contract. It does not encompass a tort claim on which no action or suit has been brought prior to adjudication. Resolute Ins. Co. v. Underwood, La.App., 230 So.2d 433, 435. Term may refer to debt incurred by state to which state pledges its credit and guarantees payment if revenues from funded project prove inadequate. Rochlin v. State, 112 Ariz. 171, 540 P.2d 643. See also Contingent claim; Contingent liability.

Contingent estate, interest or right. An estate, interest or right which depends for its effect upon an event which may or may not happen. A contingent estate is one which is conditioned upon the existence of persons who answer the description of takers but who cannot be ascertained until the termination of a precedent or particular estate because the right to take is contingent upon the fact of their being alive or having survived until that time or upon the happening of some other uncertain event. Houston v. Harberger, Tex.Civ.App., 377 S.W.2d 673, 678.

Contingent fee. See Fee.

Contingent fund. One set up by a municipality to pay expense items which will necessarily arise during the year but cannot appropriately be classified under any of the specific purposes for which other taxes are levied. First Nat. Bank of Norman v. City of Norman, 182 Okl. 7, 75 P.2d 1109, 1110. See also Contingency reserve.

Contingent interest in personal property. A future interest not transmissible to the representatives of the party entitled thereto, in case he dies before it vests in possession. Thus, if a testator leaves the income of a fund to his wife for life, and the capital of the fund to be distributed among such of his children as shall be living at her death, the interest of each child during the widow's life-time is contingent, and in case of his death is not transmissible to his representatives.

Contingent liability. One which is not now fixed and absolute, but which will become so in case of the occurrence of some future and uncertain event. Warren Co. v. C. I. R., C.C.A.Ga., 135 F.2d 679, 684, 685. A potential liability; e.g. pending lawsuit, disputed claim, judgment being appealed, possible tax deficiency. See also Contingent claim; Contingent debt.

Contingent remainder. See Remainder.

Continual claim. In old English law, a formal claim made by a party entitled to enter upon any lands or tenements, but deterred from such entry by menaces, or bodily fear, for the purpose of preserving or keeping alive his right. It was called "continual", because it was required to be repeated once in the space of every year and day. It had to be made as near to the land as the party could approach with safety, and, when made in due form, had the same effect with, and in all respects amounted to, a legal entry. 3 Bl.Comm. 175.

Continuance. The adjournment or postponement of a session, hearing, trial, or other proceeding to a subsequent day or time; usually on the request or motion of one of the parties. Also the entry of a continuance made upon the record of the court, for the purpose of formally evidencing the postponement, or of connecting the parts of the record so as to make one continuous whole. Compare Recess.

Continuance nisi /kəntɪnyuwəns náysay/. A postponement on a condition or for a specific period of time.

Continuando /kəntɪnyuwəndow/. In old pleading, a form of allegation in which the trespass, criminal offense, or other wrongful act complained of is charged to have been committed on a specified day and to have "continued" to the present time, or is averred to have been committed at divers days and times within a given period or on a specified day and on divers other days and times between that day and another. This is called "laying the time with a continuando."

Continuing. Enduring; not terminated by a single act or fact; subsisting for a definite period or intended to cover or apply to successive similar obligations or occurrences.

As to continuing Breach; Consideration; Conspiracy; Covenant; Damages; Guaranty; and Nuisance, see those titles. See also Perpetuity.

Continuing contract. A contract calling for periodic performances over a space of time.

Continuing jurisdiction. A doctrine invoked commonly in child custody or support cases by which a court which has once acquired jurisdiction continues to possess it for purposes of amending and modifying its orders therein. Curtis v. Gibbs, Tex., 511 S.W.2d 263.

Continuing offense. Type of crime which is committed over a span of time as, for example, a conspiracy. As to period of statute of limitation, the last act of the offense controls for commencement of the period. A "continuing offense," such that only the last act thereof within the period of the statute of limitations need be alleged in the indictment or information, is one which may consist of separate acts or a course of conduct but which arises from that singleness of thought, purpose or action which may be deemed a single impulse. U. S. v. Benton & Co., Inc., D.C.Fla., 345 F.Supp. 1101, 1103. See also Crime; Offense.

Continuity of life or existence. The death or other withdrawal of an owner of an entity does not terminate the existence of such entity. This is a characteristic of a corporation, since the death or withdrawal of a shareholder does not affect the corporation's existence.

Continuous. Uninterrupted; unbroken; not intermittent or occasional; so persistently repeated at short intervals as to constitute virtually an unbroken series. Connected, extended, or prolonged without cessation or interruption of sequence. Sullivan v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. of Boston, Mo.App., 110 S.W.2d 870, 877. As to continuous Crime and Easement, see those titles.

Continuous adverse use. Term is interchangeable with the term "uninterrupted adverse use".

Continuous injury. One recurring at repeated intervals, so as to be of repeated occurrence; not necessarily an injury that never ceases.

Continuous treatment doctrine. Under this doctrine, the time in which to bring a medical malpractice action is stayed when the course of treatment which includes wrongful acts or omissions has run continuously and is related to the same original condition or complaint. Lomber v. Farrow, 91 A.D.2d 725, 457 N.Y.S.2d 638, 640.

Continuously. Uninterruptedly; in unbroken sequence; without intermission or cessation; without intervening time; with continuity or continuation.

Contour map. Map which shows the configuration and elevation of surface areas with curved lines.

Contra. Against, confronting, opposite to; on the other hand; on the contrary; the reverse of.

Contra account. See Account (Contra).

Contraband. In general, any property which is unlawful to produce or possess. Things and objects outlawed and subject to forfeiture and destruction upon seizure. Com. v. One 1958 Plymouth Sedan, 414 Pa. 540, 201 A.2d 427, 429. Goods exported from or imported into a country against its laws. Smuggled goods. Articles, the importation or exportation of which, is prohibited by law. See e.g. 49 U.S.C.A. § 781.

Trafficking in contraband cigarettes is a federal crime. 18 U.S.C.A. § 2341 et seq.

"Contraband per se" is property the mere possession of which is unlawful, while "derivative contraband" is property innocent by itself but used in perpetration of unlawful act. Com. v. Fassnacht, 246 Pa.Super. 42, 369 A.2d 800, 802.

See also Bootlegging; Counterfeit; Derivative contraband; Gray market goods; Smuggling.

Contraband of war. Certain classes of merchandise, such as arms and ammunition, which, by the rules of international law, cannot lawfully be furnished or carried by a neutral nation to either of two belligerents. If found in transit in neutral vessels, such goods may be seized and condemned for violation of neutrality.

Contra bonos mores /kóntrə bównows móriyz/. Against good morals. Contracts contra bonos mores are void.

Contra-causator /kóntrəkozéytər/. A criminal; one prosecuted for a crime.

Contraceptive. Any device or substance which prevents fertilization of the female ovum.

Contraceptivism. The offense of distributing or prescribing contraceptives; the offense has little or no vitality today with respect to both married and unmarried persons. Baird v. Eisenstadt, 405 U.S. 438, 92 S.Ct. 1029, 31 L.Ed.2d 349.

Contract. An agreement between two or more persons which creates an obligation to do or not to do a particular thing. As defined in Restatement, Second, Contracts § 3: "A contract is a promise or a set of promises for the breach of which the law gives a remedy, or the performance of which the law in some way recognizes as a duty." A legal relationship consisting of the rights and duties of the contracting parties; a promise or set of promises constituting an agreement between the parties that gives each a legal duty to the other and also the right to seek a remedy for the breach of those duties. Its essentials are competency parties, subject matter, a legal consideration, mutuality of agreement, and mutuality of obligation. Lamoureux v. Burrillville Racing Ass'n, 91 R.I. 94, 161 A.2d 213, 215.

Under U.C.C., term refers to total legal obligation which results from parties' agreement as affected by the Code. Section 1-201(11). As to sales, "contract" and "agreement" are limited to those relating to present or future sales of goods, and "contract for sale" includes both a present sale of goods and a contract to sell goods at a future time. U.C.C. § 2-106(1).

The writing which contains the agreement of parties, with the terms and conditions, and which serves as a proof of the obligation.

Contracts may be classified on several different methods, according to the element in them which is brought into prominence. The usual classifications are as follows:

Blanket contract. Contract covering a number or group of products, goods, or services for fixed period of time.

Certain and hazardous. Certain contracts are those in which the thing to be done is supposed to depend on the will of the party, or when, in the usual course of events, it must happen in the manner stipulated. Hazardous contracts are those in which the performance of that which is one of its objects depends on an uncertain event.

Commutative and independent. Commutative contracts are those in which what is done, given, or promised by one party is considered as an equivalent to or in consideration of what is done, given, or promised by the other.

Independent contracts are those in which the mutual acts or promises have no relation to each other, either as equivalents or as considerations.

Conditional contract. A contract whose very existence and performance depends upon the happening of some contingency or condition expressly stated therein. It is not simply an executory contract, since the latter may be an absolute agreement to do or not to do something, but it is a contract whose very existence and performance depend upon a contingency.

Consensual and real. Consensual contracts are such as are founded upon and completed by the mere agreement of the contracting parties, without any external formality or symbolic act to fix the obligation. Real contracts are those in which it is necessary that there should be something more than mere consent, such as a loan of money, deposit or pledge, which, from their nature, require a delivery of the thing (res). In the common law a contract respecting real property (such as a lease of land for years) is called a "real" contract.

Constructive contract. See Constructive contract; also Express and implied; Quasi contract, below.

Cost-plus contract. See Costs.

Divisible and indivisible. The effect of the breach of a contract depends in a large degree upon whether it is to be regarded as indivisible or divisible; i.e. whether it forms a whole, the performance of every part of which is a condition precedent to bind the other party, or is composed of several independent parts, the performance of any one of which will bind the other party pro tanto. The only test is whether the whole quantity of the things concerned, or the sum of the acts to be done, is of the essence of the contract. It depends, therefore, in the last resort, simply upon the intention of the parties. Integrity Flooring v. Zandon Corporation, 130 N.J.L. 244, 32 A.2d 507, 509.

When a consideration is entire and indivisible, and it is against law, the contract is void in toto. When the consideration is divisible, and part of it is illegal, the contract is void only pro tanto. Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 68 U.S. (1 Wall.) 220, 17 L.Ed. 530.

Entire and severable. An entire contract is one the consideration of which is entire on both sides. The entire fulfillment of the promise by either is a condition precedent to the fulfillment of any part of the promise by the other. Whenever, therefore, there is a contract to pay the gross sum for a certain and definite consideration, the contract is entire. A severable contract is one the consideration of which is, by its terms, susceptible of apportionment on either side, so as to correspond to the unascertained consideration on the other side, as a contract to pay a person the worth of his services so long as he will do certain work; or to give a certain price for every bushel of so much corn as corresponds to a sample.

Where a contract consists of many parts, which may be considered as parts of one whole, the contract is entire. When the parts may be considered as so many distinct contracts, entered into at one time, and expressed in the same instrument, but not thereby made one contract, the contract is a separable contract. But, if the consideration of the contract is single and entire, the contract must be held to be entire, although the subject of the contract may consist of several distinct and wholly independent items.

Entire contract clause. A provision in the insurance contract stating that the entire agreement between the insured and insurer is contained in the contract, including the application (if attached), declarations, insuring agreement, exclusions, conditions, and endorsements.

Exclusive contract. See Requirements contract; Tying contract, below.

Executed and executory. Contracts are also divided into executed and executory; executed, where nothing remains to be done by either party, and where the transaction is completed at the moment that the arrangement is made, as where an article is sold and delivered, and payment therefor is made on the spot; executory, where some future act is to be done, as where an agreement is made to build a house in six months, or to do an act on or before some future day, or to lend money upon a certain interest, payable at a future time.

Express and implied. An express contract is an actual agreement of the parties, the terms of which are openly uttered or declared at the time of making it, being stated in distinct and explicit language, either orally or in writing.

An implied contract is one not created or evidenced by the explicit agreement of the parties, but inferred by the law, as a matter of reason and justice from their acts or conduct, the circumstances surrounding the transaction making it a reasonable, or even a necessary, assumption that a contract existed between them by tacit understanding.

An implied contract is one inferred from conduct of parties and arises where plaintiff, without being requested to do so, renders services under circumstances indicating that he expects to be paid therefor, and defendant, knowing such circumstances, avails himself of benefit of those services. Chem-Tronix Laboratories, Inc. v. Solocast Co., A.D., 5 Conn.Cir. 533, 258 A.2d 110, 113. It is an agreement which legitimately can be inferred from intention of parties as evidenced by circumstances and ordinary course of dealing and common understanding of men. Martin v. Little, Brown & Co., 304 Pa.Super. 424, 450 A.2d 984, 987.

See also Constructive contract; and Quasi contract, below.

Gratuitous and onerous. Gratuitous contracts are those of which the object is the benefit of the person with whom it is made, without any profit or advantage received or promised as a consideration for it. It is not, however, the less gratuitous if it proceeds either from gratitude for a benefit before received or from the hope of receiving one thereafter, although such benefit be of a pecuniary nature. Onerous contracts are those in which something is given or promised as a consideration for the engagement or gift, or some service, interest, or condition is imposed on what is given or promised, although unequal to it in value. A gratuitous contract is sometimes called a contract of beneficence.

Investment contract. A contract in which one party invests money or property expecting a return on his investment. See also Investment contract; Security.

Joint and several. A joint contract is one made by two or more promisors, who are jointly bound to fulfill its obligations, or made to two or more promisees, who are jointly entitled to require performance of the same. A contract may be "several" as to any one of several promisors or promisees, if person has a legal right (either from the terms of the agreement or the nature of the undertaking) to enforce his individual interest separately from the other parties. Generally all contracts are joint where the interest of the parties for whose benefit they are created is joint, and separate where that interest is separate.

Mutual interest, mixed, etc. Contracts of "mutual interest" are such as are entered into for the reciprocal interest and utility of each of the parties; as sales, exchange, partnership, and the like. "Mixed" contracts are those by which one of the parties confers a benefit on the other, receiving something of inferior value in return, such as a donation subject to a charge. Contracts "of beneficence" are those by which only one of the contracting parties is benefited; as loans, deposit and mandate.

Open end contract. Contract (normally sales contract) in which certain terms (e.g. order amount) are deliberately left open.

Output contract. A contract in which one party agrees to sell his entire output and the other agrees to buy it; it is not illusory, though it may be indefinite. Such agreements are governed by U.C.C. § 2-306. See also Requirements contract, below.

Parol contract. A contract not in writing, or partially in writing. At common law, a contract, though it may be in writing, not under seal. See Parol evidence rule.

Personal contract. A contract relating to personal property, or one which so far involves the element of personal knowledge or skill or personal confidence that it can be performed only by the person with whom made, and therefore is not binding on his executor.

Pre-contract. An obligation growing out of a contract or contractual relation, of such a nature that it debars the party from legally entering into a similar contract at a later time with any other person.

Principal and accessory contract. A contract is accessory when it is made to provide security for the performance of an obligation. Suretyship, mortgage, and pledge are examples of such a contract. When the secured obligation arises from a contract, either between the same or other parties, that contract is the principal contract. Civ.Code La. art. 1913.

Quasi contract. Legal fiction invented by common law courts to permit recovery by contractual remedy in cases where, in fact, there is no contract, but where circumstances are such that justice warrants a recovery as though there had been a promise. It is not based on intention or consent of the parties, but is founded on considerations of justice and equity, and on doctrine of unjust enrichment. It is not in fact a contract, but an obligation which the law creates in absence of any agreement, when and because the acts of the parties or others have placed in the possession of one person money, or its equivalent, under such circumstances that in equity and good conscience he ought not to retain it. It is what was formerly known as the contract implied in law; it has no reference to the intentions or expressions of the parties. The obligation is imposed despite, and frequently in frustration of their intention. See also Constructive contract.

In the civil law, a contractual relation arising out of transactions between the parties which give them mutual rights and obligations, but do not involve a specific and express convention or agreement between them. The lawful and purely voluntary acts of a man, from which there results any obligation whatever to a third person, and sometimes a reciprocal obligation between the parties. Civ.Code La. art. 2293.

Record, specialty, simple. Contracts of record are such as are declared and adjudicated by courts of competent jurisdiction, or entered on their records, including judgments, recognizances, and statutes staple. These are not properly speaking contracts at all, though they may be enforced by action like contracts. Specialties, or special contracts, are contracts under seal, such as deeds and bonds. All others are included in the description "simple" contracts; that is, a simple contract is one that is not a contract of record and not under seal; it may be either written or oral, in either case, it is called a "parol" contract, the distinguishing feature being the lack of a seal.

Requirements contract. A contract in which one party agrees to purchase his total requirements from the other party and hence it is binding and not illusory. See also Output contract, above.

Shipment contract. See that title.

Special contract. A contract under seal; a specialty; as distinguished from one merely oral or in writing not sealed. But in common usage this term is often used to denote an express or explicit contract, one which clearly defines and settles the reciprocal rights and obligations of the parties, as distinguished from one which must be made out, and its terms ascertained, by the inference of the law from the nature and circumstances of the transaction. A special contract may rest in parol, and does not mean a contract by specialty; it is defined as one with peculiar provisions not found in the ordinary contracts relating to the same subject-matter.

Subcontract. A contract subordinate to another contract, made or intended to be made between the contracting parties, on one part, or some of them, and a third party (i.e. subcontractor). One made under a prior contract.

Where a person has contracted for the performance of certain work (e.g., to build a house), and he in turn engages a third party to perform the whole or a part of that which is included in the original contract (e.g., to do the carpenter work), his agreement with such third person is called a "subcontract," and such person is called a "subcontractor." The term "subcontractor" means one who has contracted with the original contractor for the performance of all or a part of the work or services which such contractor has himself contracted to perform.

Tying contract. See Tying arrangement.

Unconscionable contract. One which no sensible man not under delusion, duress, or in distress would make, and such as no honest and fair man would accept. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Noll, 115 Ind.App. 289, 58 N.E.2d 947, 949, 950. A contract the terms of which are excessively unreasonable, overreaching and one-sided. See Adhesion contract; Unconscionability.

Unenforceable contract. An unenforceable contract is one for the breach of which neither the remedy of damages nor the remedy of specific performance is available, but which is recognized in some other way as creating a duty of performance, though there has been no ratification. Restatement, Second, Contracts § 8. When a contract has some legal consequences but may not be enforced in an action for damages or specific performance in the face of certain defenses, such as the Statute of Frauds or a statute of limitations, the contract is said to be "unenforceable."

Unilateral and bilateral. A unilateral contract is one in which one party makes an express engagement or undertakes a performance, without receiving in return any express engagement or promise of performance from the other. Bilateral (or reciprocal) contracts are those by which the parties expressly enter into mutual engagements, such as sale or hire. Kling Bros. Engineering Works v. Whiting Corporation, 320 Ill.App. 630, 51 N.E.2d 1004, 1007. When the party to whom an engagement is made makes no express agreement on his part, the contract is called unilateral, even in cases where the law attaches certain obligations to his acceptance. Essence of a "unilateral contract" is that neither party is bound until the promisee accepts the offer by performing the proposed act. King v. Industrial Bank of Washington, D.C.App., 474 A.2d 151, 156. It consists of a promise for an act, the acceptance consisting of the performance of the act requested, rather than the promise to perform it. Antonucci v. Stevens Dodge, Inc., 73 Misc.2d 173, 340 N.Y.S.2d 979, 982. Compare Bilateral contract.

Usurious contract. See Usurious contract.

Voidable contract. See Voidable contract.

Void contract. See Void contract.

Written contract. A "written contract" is one which in all its terms is in writing. Commonly referred to as a formal contract.

For "liberty of contract", see Liberty.

Contract carrier. A carrier which furnishes transportation service to meet the special needs of shippers who cannot be adequately served by common carriers. Sarmardick of Grand Island-Hastings, Inc. v. B. D. C. Corp., 183 Neb. 229, 159 N.W.2d 310, 315. A transportation company that carries, for pay, the goods of certain customers only as contrasted to a common carrier that carries the goods of the public in general.

Contract clause. Provision in U.S.Const., Art. I, Sec. 10, to the effect that no state shall pass a law impairing obligation of contract. Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 518, 4 L.Ed. 629.

Contract, estoppel by. "Estoppel by contract" is intended to embrace all cases in which there is an actual or virtual undertaking to treat a fact as settled. It means party is bound by terms of own contract until set aside or annulled for fraud, accident, or mistake. United Fidelity Life Ins. Co. v. Fowler, Tex.Civ.App., 38 S.W.2d 128, 131. There are two sorts of "estoppel by contract," estoppel to deny truth of facts agreed on and settled by force of entering into contract, and estoppel arising from acts done under or in performance of contract. Finch v. Smith, 177 Okl. 307, 58 P.2d 850, 851.

Contract for deed. An agreement by a seller to deliver the deed to the property when certain conditions have been met, such as completion of payments by purchaser. Often such contracts for deed are in turn resold.

Contract for sale of goods. Includes both a contract for present sale of goods and a contract to sell goods at a future time. U.C.C. § 2-106(1).

Contract for sale of land. A contract which calls for conveyance of interest in real estate and requires a writing signed by party sought to be charged as being within Statute of Frauds. See also Contract for deed; Contract of sale.

Contract implied in fact. See Contract.

Contract implied in law. See Contract.

Contraction. Abbreviation; abridgment or shortening of a word by omitting a letter or letters or a syllable, with a mark over the place where the elision occurs.

This was customary in records written in the ancient "court hand," and is frequently found in the books printed in black letter.

Contract not to compete. An agreement by an employee that he will not for a stated period and within a specific geographical area compete with his employer after termination of his employment. These contracts are enforceable if the time span and area are reasonable.

Contract of affreightment. A contract for hiring a vessel. Peterson v. S. S. Wahcondah, D.C.La., 235 F.Supp. 698, 700. See also Affreightment.

Contract of benevolence. A contract made for the benefit of one of the contracting parties only, as a mandate or deposit.

Contract of guaranty. A promise to pay or an assumption of performance of some duty upon the failure of another who is primarily obligated in the first instance. Ammerman v. Miller, 488 F.2d 1285, 1293, 159 U.S.App. D.C. 385. See also Guaranty.

Contract of insurance. Any contract by which one of the parties for a valuable consideration, known as a premium, assumes a risk of loss or liability that rests upon the other, pursuant to a plan for the distribution of such risk, is a contract of insurance, whatever the form it takes or the name it bears. See Insurance; Policy of insurance.

Contract of record. A contract which has been declared and adjudicated by a court having jurisdiction, or which is entered of record in obedience to, or in carrying out, the judgments of a court.

Contract of sale. A contract by which one of the contracting parties, called the "seller," enters into an obligation to the other to cause him to have freely, by a title of proprietor, a thing, for the price of a certain sum of money, which the other contracting party, called the "buyer," on his part obliges himself to pay. Agreement under which seller agrees to convey title to property upon payment by buyer under terms of contract. See also Contract for deed; Contract for sale of land.

Contractor. One who contracts to do work for another. This term is strictly applicable to any person who enters into a contract, but is commonly reserved to designate one who, for a fixed price, undertakes to procure the performance of works or services on a large scale, or the furnishing of goods in large quantities, whether for the public or a company or individual. Such are generally classified as general contractors (responsible for entire job) and sub-contractors (responsible for only portion of job; e.g. plumber, carpenter).

A contractor is a person who, in the pursuit of any independent business, undertakes to do a specific piece of work for another or other persons, using his own means and methods without submitting himself to their control in respect to all its details, and who renders service in the course of an independent occupation representing the will of his employer only as to the result of his work and not as to the means by which it is accomplished. Setzer v. Whitehurst, Ky., 339 S.W.2d 454, 456.

One who in pursuit of independent business undertakes to perform a job or piece of work, retaining in himself control of means, method and manner of accomplishing the desired result.

See also General contractor; Independent contractor; Prime contractor; Subcontractor.

Contract system. As applied to state prisons, this phrase signifies that the labor of the prisoners is utilized by private persons or contractors.

Contractual obligation. The obligation which arises from a contract or agreement.

Contract under seal. For centuries before the doctrine of consideration was developed, and long before informal contracts were enforced, contracts under seal were enforced. The sealed instrument required no consideration. The required formalities are: a sufficient writing, a seal, and delivery. The seal may be actual, or impressed on the paper, or merely recited by the word "seal" or "L.S."

Contractus. Lat. Contract; a contract; contracts.

Contractus bonæ fidei /kəntræktəs bówniy fáydíyày/. In Roman law, contracts of good faith. Those contracts which, when brought into litigation, were not determined by the rules of the strict law alone, but allowed the judge to examine into the bona fides of the transaction, and to hear equitable considerations against their enforcement. In this they were opposed to contracts stricti juris, against which equitable defenses could not be entertained.

Contractus civiles /kəntræktəs sívəliyz/. In Roman law, civil contracts. Those contracts which were recognized as actionable by the strict civil law of Rome, or as being founded upon a particular statute, as distinguished from those which could not be enforced in the courts except by the aid of the prætor, who, through his equitable powers, gave an action upon them. The latter were called "contractus prætorii."

Contractus est quasi actus contra actum /kəntræktəs èst kwéysay æktəs kóntrə æktəm/. A contract is, as it were, act against act.

Contractus ex turpi causa, vel contra bonos mores, nullus est /kəntræktəs èks túrpay kóza, vèl kóntrə bównows móriyz, náləs est/. A contract founded on a base consideration, or against good morals, is null.

Contractus legem ex conventionione accipiunt /kəntræktəs líjəm èks kənvənsíyówniy èksípíyənt/. Contracts receive legal sanction from the agreement of the parties.

Contradict. To disprove. To prove a fact contrary to what has been asserted by a witness.

Contradiction in terms. A phrase of which the parts are expressly inconsistent, as e.g., "an innocent murderer"; "a fee-simple for life."

Contraescriptura /kòntɹæskritúrə/. In Spanish law, a counter-writing; counter-letter. A document executed at the same time with an act of sale or other instrument, and operating by way of defeasance or otherwise modifying the apparent effect and purport of the original instrument.

Contrafactio /kòntɹəfæksh(iy)ow/. Counterfeiting; as contrafactio sigilli regis, counterfeiting the king's seal.

Contra formam collationis /kòntɹə fórməm kələshiyównəs/. In old English law, a writ that issued where lands given in perpetual alms to lay houses of religion, or to an abbot and convent, or to the warden or master of a hospital and his convent, to find certain poor men with necessaries, and do divine service, etc., were alienated, to the disherison of the house and church. By means of this writ the donor or his heirs could recover the lands.

Contra formam doni /kòntɹə fórməm dównày/. Against the form of the grant. See Formedon.

Contra formam feoffamenti /kòntɹə fórməm fiyféméntày/. In old English law, a writ that lay for the heir of a tenant, enfeoffed of certain lands or tenements, by charter of feoffment from a lord to make certain services and suits to his court, who was afterwards distrained for more services than were mentioned in the charter.

Contra formam statuti /kòntɹə fórməm stətyúwtay/. In criminal pleading. (Contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided.) The usual conclusion of every indictment, etc., brought for an offense created by statute.

Contrainte par corps /kòntɹéynt pàr kór/. In French law, the civil process of arrest of the person, which is imposed upon vendors falsely representing their property to be unincumbered, or upon persons mortgaging property which they are aware does not belong to them, and in other cases of moral heinousness.

Contra jus belli /kòntɹə jəs belày/. Lat. Against the law of war.

Contra jus commune /kòntɹə jəs kəmyúwniy/. Against common right or law; contrary to the rule of the common law.

Contra legem facit qui id facit quod lex prohibet; in fraudem vero qui, salvis verbis legis, sententiam ejus circumvenit /kòntɹə líjəm féysət kwày íd féysət kwòd léks pɹohíbət; in fródəm vírow kwày, sálvəs vərbəs líjəs, senténsh(iy)əm íjəs sərkmrýnət/. He does contrary to the law who does what the law prohibits; he acts in fraud of the law who, the letter of the law being inviolate, uses the law contrary to its intention.

Contra legem terræ /kòntɹə líjəm tēhriy/. Against the law of the land.

Contraligatio /kòntɹələgéysh(iy)ow/. In old English law, counter-obligation. Literally, counter-binding. Est enim obligatio quasi contraligatio.

Contramandatio /kòntɹəmændéysh(iy)ow/. A countermanding. Contramandatio placiti, in old English law, was the respiting of a defendant, or giving him further time to answer, by countermanding the day fixed for him to plead, and appointing a new day; a sort of imparlance.

Contramandatum /kòntɹəmændéytəm/. A lawful excuse, which a defendant in a suit by attorney alleges for himself to show that the plaintiff has no cause of complaint.

Contra negantem principia non est disputandum /kòntɹə nəgántəm prinsípiyə nón èst dispyúwtándəm/. There is no disputing against one who denies first principles.

Contra non valentem agere nulla currit præscriptio /kòntɹə nòn váléntəm éyjeriy nálə káhrət pɹəskription(iy)ow/. No prescription runs against a person unable to bring an action.

Contra omnes gentes /kòntɹə ómniyz jéntiyyz/. Against all people. Formal words in old covenants of warranty.

Contra pacem /kòntɹə péysəm/. Against the peace. A phrase used in the Latin forms of indictments, and also of actions for trespass, to signify that the offense alleged was committed against the public peace, i.e., involved a breach of the peace. The full formula was contra pacem domini regis, against the peace of the lord the king. In modern pleading, in this country, the phrase "against the peace of the commonwealth" or "of the people" is used.

Contraplacitum /kòntɹəplásətəm/. In old English law, a counter-plea.

Contrapositio /kòntɹəpəzish(iy)ow/. In old English law, a plea or answer. A counter-position.

Contra preferentem /kòntɹə pɹéfərəntəm/. Against the party who proffers or puts forward a thing. As a rule of strict construction, "contra proferentem," requires that contract be construed against person preparing terms thereof. Matter of City Stores Co., Bkrtcy.N.Y., 9 B.R. 717, 720.

Contra proferentem /kòntɹə pɹófərəntəm/. Used in connection with the construction of written documents to the effect that an ambiguous provision is construed most strongly against the person who selected the language. U. S. v. Seckinger, 397 U.S. 203, 216, 90 S.Ct. 880, 25 L.Ed.2d 224.

Contrarients /kəntɹəriyants/. This word was used in the time of Edw. II to signify those who were opposed to the government, but were neither rebels nor traitors.

Contrariorum contraria est ratio /kòntɹəriyóram kəntɹəriyə èst réysh(iy)ow/. The reason of contrary things is contrary.

Contrarotulator /kòntɹərówtýələytər/kòntɹərówtýələytər/. A controller. One whose business it was to observe the money which the collectors had gathered for the use of the king or the people.

Contrarotulator pipæ /kõntrærõwtýélýtær páypiy/. An officer of the exchequer that writeth out summons twice every year, to the sheriffs, to levy the rents and debts of the pipe.

Contrary. Against; opposed or in opposition to; in conflict with.

Contrary to law. Illegal; in violation of statute or legal regulations at a given time. In respect of verdict, in conflict with the law contained in court's instructions.

Contrary to the evidence. Against the evidence; against the weight of the evidence.

Contrat /kõntrá/. In French law, contracts are of the following varieties: (1) Bilateral, or synallagmatique, where each party is bound to the other to do what is just and proper; or (2) unilateral, where the one side only is bound; or (3) commutatif, where one does to the other something which is supposed to be an equivalent for what the other does to him; or (4) aléatoire, where the consideration for the act of the one is a mere chance; or (5) contrat de bienfaisance, where the one party procures to the other a purely gratuitous benefit; or (6) contrat à titre onereux, where each party is bound under some duty to the other. See Contract.

Contra tabulas /kõntræ tæbyæləs/. In the civil law, against the will (testament).

Contratallia /kõntrætæliyə/. In old English law, a counter-tally. A term used in the exchequer.

Contratatio rei alienæ animo furandi, est furtum /kõntrætéysh(iy)ow riyay eyliyinyiy énamow fyrænday èst fórtəm/. The touching or removing of another's property, with an intention of stealing, is theft.

Contratenere /kõntræténiriy/. To hold against; to withhold.

Contra vadium et plegium /kõntræ vædiyəm èt pléjiyəm/. In old English law, against gage and pledge.

Contravening equity. A right or equity, in another person, which is inconsistent with and opposed to the equity sought to be enforced or recognized.

Contravention. In French law, an act which violates the law, a treaty, or an agreement which the party has made. That infraction of the law punished by a fine which does not exceed fifteen francs and by an imprisonment not exceeding three days.

Contra veritatem lex nunquam aliquid permittit /kõntræ vèrètéytəm léks nõnkwəm ælækwəd pèrmítət/. The law never suffers anything contrary to truth.

Contractare /kõntræktéiriy/. Lat. In the civil law, to handle; to take hold of; to meddle with.

In old English law, to treat. Vel malè contractet; or shall ill treat.

Contractatio /kõntræktéysh(iy)ow/. In the civil and old English law, touching; handling; meddling. The act of removing a thing from its place in such a manner that, if the thing be not restored, it will amount to theft.

Contractatio rei alienæ, animo furandi, est furtum /kõntræktéysh(iy)ow riyay èyliiyinyiy, énamow fyrænday, èst fórtəm/. The touching or removing of another's property, with an intention of stealing, is theft.

Contrefacon /kõntréfason/. In French law, the offense of printing or causing to be printed a book, the copyright of which is held by another, without authority from him.

Contre-maitre /kõntrè-máytr(ə)/. In French marine law, the chief officer of a vessel, who, in case of the sickness or absence of the master, commanded in his place. Literally, the countermaster.

Contribute. To lend assistance or aid, or give something, to a common purpose; to have a share in any act or effect; to discharge a joint obligation. Christman v. Reichholdt, Mo.App., 150 S.W.2d 527, 532. As applied to negligence signifies causal connection between injury and negligence, which transcends and is distinguished from negligent acts or omissions which play so minor a part in producing injuries that law does not recognize them as legal causes. See Negligence (Contributory negligence).

Contributing cause. Generic term used to describe any factor which contributes to a result, though its causal nexus may not be immediate. See Cause; Negligence (Contributory negligence).

Contributing to delinquency. A criminal offense consisting of an act or omission which tends to make a child delinquent.

Contribution. Right of one who has discharged a common liability to recover of another also liable, the aliquot portion which he ought to pay or bear. Under principle of "contribution," a tort-feasor against whom a judgment is rendered is entitled to recover proportional shares of judgment from other joint tort-feasors whose negligence contributed to the injury and who were also liable to the plaintiff. Dawson v. Contractors Transport Corp., 151 U.S.App.D.C. 401, 467 F.2d 727, 729. The share of a loss payable by an insurer when contracts with two or more insurers cover the same loss. The insurer's share of a loss under a coinsurance or similar provision. The sharing of a loss or payment among several. The act of any one or several of a number of co-debtors, co-sureties, etc., in reimbursing one of their number who has paid the whole debt or suffered the whole liability, each to the extent of his proportionate share. A number of states have adopted the Uniform Contribution Among Tortfeasors Act.

In the civil law, a partition by which the creditors of an insolvent debtor divide among themselves the proceeds of his property proportionably to the amount of their respective credits. Division which is made among the heirs of the succession of the debts with which the succession is charged, according to the proportion which each is bound to bear.

In maritime law, where the property of one of several parties interested in a vessel and cargo has been voluntarily sacrificed for the common safety (as by throwing goods overboard to lighten the vessel), such loss must be made good by the contribution of the others, which is termed "general average".

See also General average contribution; Indemnity.

Contribution clause. Insurance clause providing that where more than one policy covers loss, insurers shall share such loss proportionally in accordance with their policy limits.

Contributione facienda /kònrəbyùwshiyówniy fəshiyéndə/. In old English law, a writ that lay where tenants in common were bound to do some act, and one of them was put to the whole burthen, to compel the rest to make contribution.

Contribution to capital. Funds or property contributed by shareholders as the financial basis for operation of the corporation's business, and signifies resources whose dedication to users of the corporation is made the foundation for issuance of capital stock and which became irrevocably devoted to satisfaction of all obligations of corporation. See also Capital.

Contributory, n. One who contributes or is required to contribute. A person liable to contribute to the assets of a company which is being wound up, as being a member or (in some cases) a past member thereof.

Contributory, adj. Joining in the promotion of a given purpose; lending assistance to the production of a given result. Said of a pension plan where employees, as well as employers, make payments to a pension fund.

As to contributory infringement and Negligence, see those titles.

Contributory cause. See Cause; Contributing cause; Negligence (Contributory negligence).

Contributory infringement. The intentional aiding of one person by another in the unlawful making, selling or using of a patented invention. Stamicarbon, N.V. v. McNally-Pittsburg Mfg. Corp., D.C.Kan., 302 F.Supp. 525, 531.

Contributory negligence. See Negligence.

Contrivance. Any device which has been arranged generally to deceive. An instrument or article designed to accomplish a specific objective and made by use of measure of ingenuity.

Contrive. To devise; to plan; to plot; to scheme. Ernst and Ernst v. Hochfelder, 425 U.S. 185, 199, 96 S.Ct. 1375, 1384, 47 L.Ed.2d 668.

Control, v. To exercise restraining or directing influence over. To regulate; restrain; dominate; curb; to hold from action; overpower; counteract; govern.

Control, n. Power or authority to manage, direct, superintend, restrict, regulate, govern, administer, or oversee. The ability to exercise a restraining or directing influence over something. Martin v. State, 175 Ind.App. 503, 372 N.E.2d 1194, 1197. The "control" involved in determining whether principal and agent relationship or master and servant relationship is involved must be accompanied by power or right to order or direct. Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation v. Vicars, 221 Ind. 387, 47 N.E.2d 972.

As used in statute making it unlawful for any person to possess or "control" any narcotic drug, is given its ordinary meaning, namely, to exercise restraining or directing influence over, and also has been defined to relate to authority over what is not in one's physical possession. Speaks v. State, 3 Md.App. 371, 239 A.2d 600, 604.

Rule that driver must at all times have automobile under control, means having it under such control that it can be stopped before doing injury to any person in any situation that is reasonably likely to arise under the circumstances. Kindt v. Reading Co., 352 Pa. 419, 43 A.2d 145, 147.

See also Exclusive control; Immediate control.

Control group. With reference to those whose communications with an attorney on behalf of a corporation are within the attorney-client privilege, this group consists of those persons who have authority to control, or substantially participate in, decisions regarding action to be taken on the advice of a lawyer, or who are authorized members of a group that has such power. Duplan Corp. v. Deering Milliken, Inc., D.C.S.C. 397 F.Supp. 1146, 1163.

Controlled company. A company, the majority of whose voting stock is held by an individual or corporation. For example, a subsidiary of a parent company. The level of control depends on the amount of stock owned. See Control person.

Controlled foreign corporation. Any foreign corporation in which more than 50 percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote or the total value of the stock of the corporation is owned by "U.S. shareholders" on any day during the taxable year of the foreign corporation. For purposes of this definition, a U.S. shareholder is any U.S. person who owns, or is considered as owning, 10 percent or more of the total combined voting power of all classes of voting stock of the foreign corporation. Stock owned directly, indirectly, and constructively is used in this measure.

Controlled group. A controlled group of corporations is required to share the lower-level corporate tax rates and various other tax benefits among the members of the group. A controlled group may be either a brother-sister or a parent-subsidiary group.

Controlled substance. Any drug so designated by law whose availability is restricted; i.e., so designated by federal or state Controlled Substances Acts (q.v.). Included in such classification are narcotics, stimulants, depressants, hallucinogens, and marijuana.

Controlled Substance Acts. Federal and state acts (the latter modeled on the Uniform Controlled Substances Act) the purpose of which is to control the distribution, classification, sale, and use of drugs. The majority of states have such acts. 21 U.S.C.A. § 801 et seq.

Controller. See Comptroller.

Controlment /kəntrólmənt/. In old English law, the controlling or checking of another officer's account; the keeping of a counter-roll.

Control person. In securities law, a person who has actual power or influence over an issuer. Kersh v. General Council of Assemblies of God, C.A.Cal., 804 F.2d 546, 548. One who formulates and directs corporate policy or who is deeply involved in the important business affairs of a corporation. State ex rel. McLeod v. C & L Corp., Inc., App., 280 S.C. 519, 313 S.E.2d 334, 341. Sales of securities by control persons are subject to many of the requirements applicable to the sale of securities directly by the issuer.

Control premium. Refers to the pricing phenomenon by which shares that carry the power to control a corporation are more valuable per share than the shares that do not carry a power of control. The control premium is often computed not on a per share basis but on the aggregate increase in value of the "control block" over the going market or other price of shares which are not part of the "control block".

Controver /kəntrórwəvər/. In old English law, an inventor or deviser of false news.

Controversy. A litigated question; adversary proceeding in a court of law; a civil action or suit, either at law or in equity; a justiciable dispute. To be a "controversy" under federal constitutional provision limiting exercise of judicial power of United States to cases and controversies there must be a concrete case admitting of an immediate and definitive determination of legal rights of parties in an adversary proceeding upon facts alleged, and claims based merely upon assumed potential invasions of rights are not enough to warrant judicial intervention. Southern Ry. Co. v. Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, D.C.Ga., 223 F.Supp. 296, 303. In the constitutional sense, it means more than disagreement and conflict; rather it means kind of controversy courts traditionally resolve. U.S. v. Nixon, U.S. Dist.Col., 418 U.S. 683, 94 S.Ct. 3090, 3102, 41 L.Ed.2d 1039. This term is important in that judicial power of the courts extends only to cases and "controversies." See Actual controversy; Case; Cause of action; Justiciable controversy.

Controvert. To dispute; to deny; to oppose or contest; to take issue on.

Contubernium /kóntəbérniyəm/. In Roman law, the marriage of slaves; a permitted cohabitation.

Contumace capiendo /kóntəméysiy kəpiyéndow/. In English law, excommunication in all cases of contempt in the spiritual courts is discontinued by 53 Geo. III, c. 127, § 2, and in lieu thereof, where a lawful citation or sentence has not been obeyed, the judge shall have power, after a certain period, to pronounce such person contumacious and in contempt, and to signify the same to the court of chancery, whereupon a writ de contumace capiendo shall issue from that court, which shall have the same force and effect as formerly belonged, in case of contempt, to a writ de excommunicato capiendo. See Excommunication.

Contumacious conduct. Wilfully stubborn and disobedient conduct, commonly punishable as contempt of court. See Contempt.

Contumacy /kónt(y)əmásiy/. The refusal or intentional omission of a person who has been duly cited before a court to appear and defend the charge laid against him, or, if he is duly before the court, to obey some lawful order or direction made in the cause. In the former case it is called "presumed" contumacy; in the latter, "actual."

Contumax /kóntəmæks/. One accused of a crime who refuses to appear and answer to the charge. An outlaw.

Contumely /kóntyəməliy/. Rudeness compounded of haughtiness and contempt; scornful insolence; spiteful treatment; disdain, contemptuousness in act or speech; disgrace.

Contuse. To bruise; to injure or disorganize a part of without breaking the skin. Ansley v. Travelers Ins. Co., 27 Tenn.App. 720, 173 S.W.2d 702, 704.

Contusion. A bruise; an injury to any external part of the body by the impact of a fall or the blow of a blunt instrument, without laceration of the flesh, and either with or without a tearing of the skin, but in the former case it is more properly called a "contused wound."

Contutor /kəntýúwtər/. Lat. In the civil law, a co-tutor, or co-guardian.

Conusance /kónyézəns/. In English law, cognizance or jurisdiction. Conusance of pleas.

Conusance, claim of /kléym əv kónyézəns/. See Cognizance.

Conusant /kónyézənt/. Cognizant; acquainted with; having actual knowledge; as, if a party knowing of an agreement in which he has an interest makes no objection to it, he is said to be conusant.

Conusee /kónyézíy/. See Cognizee.

Conusor /kónyézər/. See Cognizor.

Convalescence. Gradual recovery of health or physical strength after illness.

Convenable. In old English law, suitable; agreeable; convenient; fitting.

Convene. To call together; to cause to assemble; to convoke. In the civil law, to bring an action.

Convenience and necessity. See Public convenience and necessity.

Convenient. Proper; just; suitable; fit; adapted; proper; becoming appropriate.

Convenit /kənvíynət/. Lat. In civil and old English law, it is agreed; it was agreed.

Convent. The fraternity of an abbey or priory, as societas is the number of fellows in a college. A religious house, now regarded as a merely voluntary association, not importing civil death.

An association or community of recluses devoted to a religious life under a superior. A body of monks, friars, or nuns, constituting one local community; now usually restricted to a convent of nuns. Sacred Heart Academy of Galveston v. Karsch, 173 Tenn. 618, 122 S.W.2d 416, 417.

Conventicle /kənvéntəkəl/. A private assembly or meeting for the exercise of religion. The word was first an appellation of reproach to the religious assemblies of Wycliffe in the reigns of Edward III, and Richard II, and was afterwards applied to a meeting of dissenters from the established church. As this word in strict propriety denotes an unlawful assembly, it cannot be justly applied to the assembling of persons in places of worship licensed according to the requisitions of law.

Conventio /kənvénsh(iy)ow/. In Canon law, the act of summoning or calling together the parties by summoning the defendant.

In Civil law, a compact, agreement, or convention. An agreement between two or more persons respecting a legal relation between them. The term is one of very wide scope, and applies to all classes of subjects in which an engagement or business relation may be founded by agreement. It is to be distinguished from the negotiations or preliminary transactions on the object of the convention and fixing its extent, which are not binding so long as the convention is not concluded.

In contracts, an agreement; a covenant.

Conventio in unum /kənvénsh(iy)ow in yúwnəm/. In the civil law, the agreement between the two parties to a contract upon the sense of the contract proposed. It is an essential part of the contract, following the pollicitation or proposal emanating from the one, and followed by the consension or agreement of the other.

Convention. An agreement or compact; esp. international agreement, e.g. Geneva Convention. An assembly or meeting of members or representatives of political, legislative, fraternal, etc. organizations.

Constitutional convention. See Constitution.

English law. An extraordinary assembly of the houses of lords and commons, without the assent or summons of the sovereign. It can only be justified ex necessitate rei, as the Parliament which restored Charles II, and that which disposed of the crown and kingdom to William and Mary. Also the name of an old writ that lay for the breach of a covenant.

Judicial convention. See Judicial.

Legislative and political. An assembly of delegates or representatives chosen by the people for special and extraordinary legislative purposes, such as the framing or revision of a state constitution (i.e. constitutional convention). Also an assembly of delegates chosen by a political party, or by the party organization in a larger or smaller territory, to nominate candidates for an approaching election.

Public and international law. A pact or agreement between states or nations in the nature of a treaty; usually applied (a) to agreements or arrangements preliminary to a formal treaty or to serve as its basis, or (b) international agreements for the regulation of matters of common interest but not coming within the sphere of politics or commercial intercourse, such as international postage or the protection of submarine cables. An agreement between states relating to trade, finance, or other matters considered less important than those usually regulated by a treaty. See Compact; Treaty.

Roman law. An agreement between parties; a pact. A convention was a mutual engagement between two persons, possessing all the subjective requisites of a contract, but which did not give rise to an action, nor receive the sanction of the law, as bearing an "obligation," until the objective requisite of a solemn ceremonial, (such as stipulatio) was supplied. In other words, convention was the informal agreement of the parties, which formed the basis of a contract, and which became a contract when the external formalities were superimposed. The division of conventions into contracts and pacts was important in the Roman law. The former were such conventions as already, by the older civil law, founded an obligation and action; all the other conventions were termed "pacts." These generally did not produce an actionable obligation. Actionability was subsequently given to several pacts, whereby they received the same power and efficacy that contracts received.

Conventional. Depending on, or arising from, the mutual agreement of parties; as distinguished from legal, which means created by, or arising from, the act of the law.

As to conventional Estates; Interest; Mortgage; Subrogation; and Trustee, see those titles.

Conventional lien. A lien is conventional where the lien, general or particular, is raised by the express agreement and stipulation of the parties, in circumstances where the law alone would not create a lien from the mere relation of the parties or the details of their transaction.

Conventional loan. Real estate loan (usually from bank or savings and loan association) not involving government participation by way of insurance (FHA) or guarantee (VA).

Conventione /kənvénshiyówniy/. The name of a writ for the breach of any covenant in writing, whether real or personal.

Conventions. This name is sometimes given to compacts or treaties with foreign countries as to the apprehension and extradition of fugitive offenders. See Extradition.

Conventio privatorum non potest publico juri derogare /kənvénsh(iy)ow práyvətórəm nòn pówtést pábləkow júray diyrégéry/. The agreement of private persons cannot derogate from public right, i.e., cannot prevent the application of general rules of law, or render valid any contravention of law.

Conventio vincit legem /kənvénsh(iy)ow vínsət líyjam/. The express agreement of parties overcomes [prevails against] the law.

Conventual church. In ecclesiastical law, that which consists of regular clerks, professing some order or religion; or of dean and chapter; or other societies of spiritual men.

Conventuals /kənvénshuwəlz/. Religious men united in a convent or religious house.

Conventus /kənvéntəs/. Lat. A coming together; a convention or assembly. Conventus magnatum vel procerum (the assembly of chief men or peers) was one of the names of the English parliament. 1 Bl.Comm. 148.

In the civil law, the term meant a gathering together of people; a crowd assembled for any purpose; also a convention, pact, or bargain.

Conventus juridicus /kənvéntəs jəridəkəs/. In the Roman law, a court of sessions held in the Roman provinces, by the president of the province, assisted by a certain number of counsellors and assessors, at fixed periods, to hear and determine suits, and to provide for the civil administration of the province.

Conversant. One who is in the habit of being in a particular place is said to be conversant there. Acquainted; familiar.

Conversantes /kənvərsəntiəz/. In old English law, conversant or dwelling; commorant.

Conversation. Manner of living; behavior habits of life; conduct; as in the phrase "chaste life and conversation." Criminal conversation means seduction of another man's wife, considered as an actionable injury to the husband. See Criminal (Criminal conversation).

Converse. To engage in conversation; social interaction. Reversed in order or relation. The transposition of the subject and predicate in a proposition, as: "Everything is good in its place." Converse, "Nothing is good which is not in its place."

Converse instruction. A negative of a positive statement of an essential element or elements of a cause of action as stated in a verdict-directing instruction. State v. Collins, Mo.App., 587 S.W.2d 303, 306.

Conversion. An unauthorized assumption and exercise of the right of ownership over goods or personal chattels belonging to another, to the alteration of their condition or the exclusion of the owner's rights. Any unauthorized act which deprives an owner of his property permanently or for an indefinite time. Unauthorized and wrongful exercise of dominion and control over another's personal property, to exclusion of or inconsistent with rights of owner. Catania v. Garage De Le Paix, Inc., Tex.Civ.App., 542 S.W.2d 239, 241. See also Embezzlement; Equitable conversion; Fraudulent conversion; Involuntary conversion.

Act of exchanging a convertible security for another security. See Convertible securities.

Commercial instruments. An instrument is converted when: a drawee to whom it is delivered for acceptance refuses to return it on demand; or any person to whom it is delivered for payment refuses on demand either to pay or to return it; or it is paid on a forged indorsement. U.C.C. § 3-419(1).

Constructive conversion. An implied or virtual conversion, which takes place where a person does such acts in reference to the goods of another as amount in law to the appropriation of the property to himself.

Direct conversion. The act of actually appropriating the property of another to his own beneficial use and enjoyment, or to that of a third person, or destroying it, or altering its nature, or wrongfully assuming title in himself.

Equitable conversion. The exchange of property from real to personal or from personal to real, which takes place under some circumstances in the consideration of the law, such as, to give effect to directions in a will or settlement, or to stipulations in a contract, although no such change has actually taken place, and by which exchange the property so dealt with becomes invested with the properties and attributes of that into which it is supposed to have been converted. It is sometimes necessary however for certain purposes of devolution and transfer to regard the property in its changed condition as though the change has not absolutely taken place.

Conversion or convertibility clause. A provision in an adjustable-rate mortgage that allows the borrower to change from an ARM to a fixed-rate loan at some point during the term. A provision in convertible securities specifying conversion rights. See Convertible securities.

Conversion, custodia legis. Converting property in the custody of the court. One who has a lien against property and replevins the same to obtain possession and then sells the property to satisfy the lien before a judgment has entered in the replevin matter, commits conversion by this sale. Brunswick Corp. v. J & P, Inc., D.C.Okl., 296 F.Supp. 544, 545.

Conversion hysteria. A neurosis in which there is gross loss or impairment of some somatic or physical function caused by emotional conflicts, such as hysterical blindness, hysterical paralysis, hysterical tremors, hysterical limping. Used by sufferer to protect himself from anxiety.

Conversion reaction. The transformation of an emotion into physical manifestations. (E.g., an injured person converts an emotional disturbance into physical symptoms.) Kilarjian v. Horvath, C.A.N.Y., 379 F.2d 547, 548.

Conversion securities. The securities into which convertible securities may be converted. See Convertible securities.

Convert. See Conversion.

Convertible bond. See Bond.

Convertible debt. A bond or debenture or note which under certain conditions and at certain times may be converted into stock by the holder. See Convertible securities.

Convertible securities. A bond, debenture or preferred share which may be exchanged by the owner for common stock or another security, usually of the same company, in accordance with the terms of the issue. The ratio between the convertible and conversion securities is fixed at the time the convertible securities are issued, and is usually protected against dilution.

Forced conversion. Refers to a conversion of a convertible security that follows a call for redemption at a time when the value of the conversion security into which it may be converted is greater than the amount that will be received if the holder permits the security to be redeemed. Normally, a holder of a convertible redeemable security has a period of time after the call for redemption to determine whether or not to exercise the conversion privilege.

Convertible term insurance. Type of term insurance which may be changed to permanent (whole life) insurance carrying loan values, built in values, etc.

Convey. To transfer or deliver to another. To pass or transmit the title to property from one to another. To transfer property or the title to property by deed, bill of sale, or instrument under seal. Used popularly in sense of "assign", "sale", or "transfer". See Conveyance.

Conveyance /kən'veyəns/. In its most common usage, transfer of title to land from one person, or class of persons, to another by deed. Term may also include assignment, lease, mortgage or encumbrance of land. Generally, every instrument in writing by which an estate or interest in the realty is created. Smalley v. Juneau Clinic Bldg. Corp., Alaska, 493 P.2d 1296, 1299. See also Alienation; Demise; Fraudulent conveyance; Involuntary conveyance.

Absolute or conditional conveyance. An absolute conveyance is one by which the right or property in a thing is transferred, free of any condition or qualification, by which it might be defeated or changed, as an ordinary deed of lands, in contradistinction to a mortgage, which is a conditional conveyance. Brown v. United States, C.C.A.Pa., 95 F.2d 487, 489.

Fraudulent conveyance. See Fraudulent.

Mesne conveyance. An intermediate conveyance; one occupying an intermediate position in a chain of title between the first grantee and the present holder.

Primary conveyances. Those by means whereof the benefit or estate is created or first arises; as distinguished from those whereby it may be enlarged, restrained, transferred, or extinguished. The term includes feoffment, gift, grant, lease, exchange, and partition, and is opposed to derivative conveyances, such as release, surrender, confirmation, etc. 2 Bl.Comm. 309.

Secondary conveyances. The name given to that class of conveyances which presuppose some other conveyance precedent, and only serve to enlarge, confirm, alter, restrain, restore, or transfer the interest granted by such original conveyance. 2 Bl.Comm. 324. Otherwise termed "derivative conveyances" (q.v.).

Voluntary conveyance. A conveyance without valuable consideration; such as a deed or settlement in favor of a wife or children.

Conveyancer. One whose business it is to prepare deeds, mortgages, examine titles to real estate, and perform other functions relating to the transfer of real property.

In England, one who holds a license to conveyance. Administration of Justice Act, 1985, Part II.

Conveyancing. Act of performing the various functions relating to the transfer of real property such as examination of land titles, preparation of deeds, mortgages, closing agreements, etc.

Conveyancing counsel to the court of chancery. In English law, certain counsel, not fewer than six in number, appointed by the lord chancellor, for the purpose of assisting the court of chancery, or any judge thereof, with their opinion in matters of title and conveyancing.

Conveyor's heirs. Under common law rule, when a remainder was limited to heirs of grantor or testator, such heirs did not take a remainder; instead, the estate was considered a reversion in the grantor or testator, and hence, if heirs took at all, they would take by descent, not by purchase. This rule, known as rule of worthier title (Braswell v. Braswell, 195 Va. 971, 81 S.E.2d 560) has been abolished in many jurisdictions. See Worthier title doctrine.

Convicia si irascaris tua divulgās; spreta exolescunt /kən'vish(iy)ə sây âyræskérās tyúwə dəvôlgās, spriytə èkskaléskənt/. If you be moved to anger by insults, you publish them; if despised, they are forgotten.

Convicium /kən'vish(iy)əm/. In the civil law, the name of a species of slander or injury uttered in public, and which charged some one with some act contra bonos mores.

Convict, v. To find a person guilty of a criminal charge, either upon a criminal trial, a plea of guilty, or a plea of nolo contendere. The word was formerly used also in the sense of finding against the defendant in a civil case.

Convict, n. One who has been adjudged guilty of a crime and is serving a sentence as a result of such conviction. A prisoner.

Convicted. See Conviction.

Conviction. In a general sense, the result of a criminal trial which ends in a judgment or sentence that the accused is guilty as charged. The final judgment on a verdict or finding of guilty, a plea of guilty, or a plea of nolo contendere, but does not include a final judgment which has been expunged by pardon, reversed, set aside, or otherwise rendered nugatory.

The final consummation of the prosecution including the judgment or sentence, or as is frequently the case, the judgment or sentence itself. Ex parte White, 75 Okl.Cr. 204, 130 P.2d 103, 104. The stage of a criminal proceeding where the issue of guilt is determined. United States v. Locke, 409 F.Supp. 600.

A record of the summary proceedings upon any penal statute before one or more justices of the peace or other persons duly authorized, in a case where the offender has been convicted and sentenced.

Summary conviction. The conviction of a person (usually for a minor misdemeanor), as the result of his trial before a magistrate or court, without a jury.

Convincing proof. Such as is sufficient to establish the proposition in question, beyond hesitation, ambiguity, or reasonable doubt, in an unprejudiced mind. See Beyond a reasonable doubt; Clear and convincing proof; Proof.

Convivium /kənviviyəm/. A tenure by which a tenant was bound to provide meat and drink for his lord at least once in the year.

Convocation. In ecclesiastical law, the general assembly of the clergy to consult upon ecclesiastical matters.

Convoy. An escort for protection, either by land or sea. A naval force for the protection of merchant-ships and others, during the whole voyage, or such part of it as is known to require such protection. An association for a hostile object. In undertaking it, a nation spreads over the merchant vessel an immunity from search which belongs only to a national ship. By joining a convoy every individual ship puts off her pacific character, and undertakes for the discharge of duties which belong only to the military marine, and adds to the numerical, if not to the real strength of the convoy. The Atlanta, 16 U.S. (3 Wheat.) 409, 423, 4 L.Ed. 422.

Co-obligor. A joint obligor; one bound jointly with another or others in a bond or obligation.

Cool state of blood. In the law of homicide, this term does not mean that the defendant must be calm or tranquil or display the absence of emotion, but rather that the defendant's anger or emotion must not have been such as to disturb defendant's faculties and reason. State v. Russell Council Judge, 308 N.C. 658, 303 S.E.2d 817, 820. See also Cold blood; Cooling time; Premeditation.

Cooley doctrine. Doctrine which holds that state is deprived of all regulatory power as to subjects which "are in their nature national, or admit only of one uniform system or plan of regulation." Cooley v. Board of Wardens of Port of Philadelphia, 53 U.S. (12 How.) 299, 13 L.Ed. 996. See also Preemption.

Cooling off period. A period of time in which no action of a particular sort may be taken by either side in a dispute. For example, a period of a month after a union or a company files a grievance against the other. During this period, the union may not strike and the company may not lock-out the employees. A period of time in which a buyer may cancel a purchase; e.g. many states by statute require a three-day cancellation period for door-to-door sales or home improvement contracts. An automatic delay in some states, in addition to ordinary court delays, between the filing of divorce papers and the divorce hearing.

Cooling time. Time to recover "cool blood" after severe excitement or provocation. Time for the mind to become so calm and sedate as that it is supposed to contemplate, comprehend, and coolly act with reference to the consequences likely to ensue.

Cooperate. To act jointly or concurrently toward a common end.

Cooperation. Action of co-operating or acting jointly with another or other. Association of persons for common benefit. In patent law, unity of action to a common end or a common result, not merely joint or simultaneous action.

Cooperation clause. That provision in insurance policies which requires the insured to cooperate with the insurer in defense of a claim. "Co-operation" by insured within a co-operation clause means that there shall be fair and frank disclosure of information reasonably demanded by insurer to enable it to determine whether there is genuine defense. Prudence Mut. Cas. Co. v. Dunn, 30 Ill.App.2d 469, 175 N.E.2d 286.

Cooperative /kəwɒp(ə)rətɪv/. A corporation or association organized for purpose of rendering economic services, without gain to itself, to shareholders or members who own and control it. United Grocers, Limited v. U. S., D.C.Cal., 186 F.Supp. 724, 733. Type of business that is owned by its member-customers.

Cooperatives vary widely in character and in the manner in which they function. They have been classified along functional lines as follows: (a) consumer cooperatives (including consumer stores, housing cooperatives, utility cooperatives, and health cooperatives); (b) marketing cooperatives; (c) business purchasing cooperatives; (d) workers' productive cooperatives; (e) financial cooperatives (such as the credit union, mutual savings bank, savings and loan association, and production credit association); (f) insurance cooperatives; (g) labor unions; (h) trade associations; and (i) self-help cooperatives.

The required form for a cooperative may differ in different states; e.g. unincorporated association, cooperative association, nonprofit corporation.

See also Consumer's cooperative; Cooperative corporation.

Cooperative apartment. See that title.

Farmer's cooperative. Major function of such cooperative is to market the combined crops, produce or livestock of its farmer-owners. The cooperative attempts to sell crops and livestock at the optimum price. For example, it might store grain until the price of such rises.

Cooperative apartment. Dwelling units in a multi-dwelling complex in which each owner has an interest in the entire complex and a lease of his own apartment, though he does not own his apartment as in the case of a condominium. This is organized in corporate form and is generally treated as a corporation. However, it is somewhat of a legal hybrid in that the stockholder possesses both stock and a lease and the relationship between the tenant shareholder and the owner-cooperative is largely determined by reading together the certificate of incorporation, stock offering prospectus, stock subscription agreement, and proprietary lease. Sanders v. Tropicana, 31 N.C.App. 276, 229 S.E.2d 304, 308.

Cooperative association. See Cooperative.

Cooperative corporation. A "cooperative corporation", while having a corporate existence, is primarily an organization for purpose of providing services and profits to its members and not for corporate profit. Linnton Plywood Ass'n v. State Tax Commission, 241 Or. 1, 403 P.2d 708, 709. See Cooperative.

Cooperative federalism. The distribution of power between national and local or state governments while each recognizes the powers of the other.

Cooperative housing. See Cooperative apartment.

Cooperative negligence. See Negligence (Contributory negligence).

Coopertio /kòwəpə̀rsh(iy)ow/. In old English law, the head of branches of a tree cut down; though coopertio arborum is rather the bark of timber trees felled, and the chumps and broken wood.

Coopertus /kòwəpə̀rtəs/. Covert; covered.

Co-optation /kòwoptéyshən/. A concurring choice; the election, by the members of a close corporation, of a person to fill a vacancy.

Coordinate. Equal, of the same order, rank, degree or importance; not subordinate. Empire Ins. Co. of Texas v. Cooper, Tex.Civ.App., 138 S.W.2d 159, 164. Adjusted to, in harmony with. Æolian-Skinner Organ Co. v. Shepard Broadcasting Service, C.C.A.Mass., 81 F.2d 392, 395. As to courts of "coordinate jurisdiction," see this term, infra, and Jurisdiction.

Coordinate jurisdiction. That which is possessed by courts of equal rank, degree, or authority, equally competent to deal with the matter in question, whether belonging to the same or different systems; concurrent jurisdiction. See Jurisdiction.

Coordinate system. A method of land description. It uses a measurement based on an intersection of a defined north-south axis and a defined east-west axis.

Co-owner. Two or more persons who own property, real or personal. Tenants in common of property. Broad term which may describe joint tenants as well.

Coparcenary /kòwpə̀rsiynəriy/. Such estate arises where several take by descent from same ancestor as one heir, all coparceners constituting but one heir and having but one estate and being connected by unity of interest and of title. Winters Nat. Bank & Trust Co. v. Riffe, Ohio Prob., 194 N.E.2d 921, 924. A species of estate, or tenancy, which exists where lands of inheritance descend from the ancestor to two or more persons. It arose in England either by common law or particular custom. By common law, as where a person, seised in fee-simple or fee-tail, dies, and his next heirs are two or more females, his daughters, sisters, aunts, cousins, or their representatives; in this case they all inherit, and these coheirs, are then called "coparceners," or, for brevity, "parceners" only. 2 Bl.Comm. 187. By particular custom, as where lands descend, as in gavelkind, to all the males in equal degree, as sons, brothers, uncles, etc. An estate which several persons hold as one heir, whether male or female. This estate has the three unities of time, title, and possession; but the interests of the coparceners may be unequal. 2 Bl.Comm. 188. Today, this type of tenancy is obsolete.

Coparceners /kòwpə̀rsiynə̀rz/. Persons to whom an estate of inheritance descends jointly, and by whom it is held as an entire estate. 2 Bl.Comm. 187.

Coparticeps /kòwpə̀rtəsèps/. In old English law, a coparcener.

Coparties. Parties having like status, such as, co-defendants. Murray v. Haverford Hospital Corp., D.C.Pa., 278 F.Supp. 5, 7.

"Co-party," within rule (F.R.C.P. 13) providing that a pleading may state as a cross-claim any claim by one party against a co-party arising out of the transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of the original action, does not mean merely equal party, such as one of several original defendants, but applies to a third-party defendant brought into the case by an original defendant on a theory of liability over. Fogel v. United Gas Imp. Co., D.C.Pa., 32 F.R.D. 202, 204.

Copartner. One who is a partner with one or more other persons; a member of a partnership.

Copartnership. A partnership.

Copeland Act. Federal act prohibiting wage kickbacks or rebates being imposed on employees engaged in construction or repair of public buildings or works. See 18 U.S.C.A. § 874.

Copeman, or copesman. A chapman (q.v.).

Copesmate /kòwpsmeyt/. A merchant; a partner in merchandise.

Copia /kòpiyə/. Lat. In civil and old English law, opportunity or means of access.

In old English law, a copy. Copia libelli, the copy of a libel.

Copia libelli deliberanda /kòpiyə̀ lə̀bélay dəlībərə̀ndə/. In old English law, the name of a writ that lay where a man could not get a copy of a libel at the hands of a spiritual judge, to have the same delivered to him.

Coppa /kòpə/. In English law, a crop or cock of grass, hay, or corn, divided into titheable portions, that it may be more fairly and justly tithed.

Copper and scales. See Mancipatio.

Coprincipal. One of two or more participants in crime who actually perpetrate crime or are present aiding and abetting person who commits crime. One of two or more persons who has appointed agents whom they have right to control.

Copula /kópyələ/. The corporal consummation of marriage. Copula (in logic), the link between subject and predicate contained in the verb.

Copulatio verborum indicat acceptationem in eodem sensu /kópyələysh(iy)ow vərbóram índəkət æksəp-tèyshiyównəm in iyówdəm séns(y)uw/. Coupling of words together shows that they are to be understood in the same sense.

Copulative term. One which is placed between two or more others to join them together.

Copy; Copying. A transcript, double, imitation, or reproduction of an original writing, painting, instrument, or the like.

Under best evidence rule, a copy may not be introduced until original is accounted for. Certified copies are admissible under statutes in most jurisdictions. Similarly, photographic copies and prints from photographic films are admissible by statute.

Copies of all pleadings, motions and other papers must be served on all parties to action under Fed.R. Civil P. 5(b). Admissions concerning the genuineness of copies of documents are governed by Fed.R. Civil P. 36(a).

A duplicate is admissible in evidence to the same extent as an original unless (1) a genuine question is raised as to the authenticity of the original or (2) in the circumstances it would be unfair to admit the duplicate in lieu of the original. Fed.Evid.R. 1003.

In copyright law, "copying" of a literary work consists in exact or substantial reproduction of the original, using original as a model as distinguished from an independent production of same thing, and a "copy" is that which comes so near to original as to give every person seeing it the idea created by original and must be such that ordinary observation would cause it to be recognized as having been taken from the work of another. Turner v. Century House Pub. Co., 56 Misc.2d 1071, 290 N.Y.S.2d 637, 642.

See also Authentication; Authentic copy; Conformed copy; Duplicate.

Examined copies are those which have been compared with the original or with an official record thereof.

Copyhold. In England a species of estate at will, or customary estate, the only visible title to which consisted of the copies of the court rolls, which were made out by the steward of the manor, on a tenant's being admitted to any parcel of land, or tenement belonging to the manor. It was an estate at the will of the lord, yet such a will as was agreeable to the custom of the manor, which customs were preserved and evidenced by the rolls of the several courts baron, in which they were entered. 2 Bl.Comm. 95. In a larger sense, copyhold was said to import every customary tenure (that is, every tenure pending on the particular custom of a manor), as opposed to free socage, or freehold, which later (since the abolition of knight-service) was considered as the general or common-law tenure of the country. Under the English Law of Property Act of 1922 copyholds were enfranchised and became freehold (or in certain cases leasehold).

Copyhold commissioners. Commissioners appointed to carry into effect various acts of parliament, having for their principal objects the compulsory commutation of manorial burdens and restrictions (fines, heriots, rights to timber and minerals, etc.), and the compulsory enfranchisement of copyhold lands.

Copyholder. A tenant by copyhold tenure (by copy of court-roll). 2 Bl.Comm. 95.

Privileged copyholds. Those copyhold estates which are said to be held according to the custom of the manor, and not at the will of the lord, as common copyholds are. They include customary freeholds and ancient demesnes.

Copyright. The right of literary property as recognized and sanctioned by positive law. An intangible, incorporeal right granted by statute to the author or originator of certain literary or artistic productions, whereby he is invested, for a specified period, with the sole and exclusive privilege of multiplying copies of the same and publishing and selling them.

Copyright protection subsists in original works of authorship fixed in any tangible medium of expression, now known or later developed, from which they can be perceived, reproduced, or otherwise communicated, either directly or with the aid of a machine or device. Works of authorship include the following categories: (1) literary works; (2) musical works, including any accompanying words; (3) dramatic works, including any accompanying music; (4) pantomimes and choreographic works; (5) pictorial, graphic, and sculptural works; (6) motion pictures and other audiovisual works; and (7) sound recordings. In no case does copyright protection for an original work of authorship extend to any idea, procedure, process, system, method of operation, concept, principle, or discovery, regardless of the form in which it is described, explained, illustrated, or embodied in such work. Copyright Act, 17 U.S.C.A. § 102.

Prior to the 1976 Copyright Act there was a distinction between common law and statutory protection whereby, generally, common law copyright protected works prior to publication and the federal copyright laws protected works following publication. The 1976 Act attempted to abolish all significant aspects of common law copyright and create a unified protection system by beginning statutory protection as soon as the work was reduced to a concrete form. 17 U.S.C.A. § 102(a). Under the 1976 Act an author is protected as soon as a work is recorded in some concrete way, since the Act protects all expressions upon fixation in a tangible medium. 17 U.S.C.A. § 102(a). Protection under the 1976 Act is secure until fifty years after the death of the author. 17 U.S.C.A. § 302(a).

In addition to injunctive, impoundment, and civil damages relief, criminal penalties are also provided for copyright infringement. 17 U.S.C.A. § 502 et seq.; 18 U.S.C.A. § 2319.

See also Adaptation right; Collective work; Common-law copyright; Compilation; Compulsory license; Created; Derivative work; Descriptive mark; Display; Fair use doctrine; First sale rule; Infringement; Limited publication; Literary property; Literary work; Work made for hire.

Copyright notice. A necessary notice in the form required by law which is placed in each published copy of the work copyrighted. Copyright Act, 17 U.S.C.A. § 401.

Copyright owner. As term is used with respect to any one of the exclusive rights comprised in a copyright, refers to the owner of that particular right. Copyright Act, 17 U.S.C.A. § 101.

Coraagium, or coraage /kòr(ə)éyjiəm/. Measures of corn. An unusual and extraordinary tribute, arising only on special occasions. They are thus distinguished from services. Mentioned in connection with hidage and carvage.

Coram /kórəm/. Lat. Before; in presence of. Applied to persons only.

Coram domino rege /kórəm dómənow ríyji/. Before our lord the king. Coram domino rege ubicumque tunc fuerit Anglice, before our lord the king wherever he shall then be in England.

Coram ipso rege /kórəm ípsow ríyji/. Before the king himself. The old name of the court of king's bench, which was originally held before the king in person. 3 Bl.Comm. 41.

Coram nobis /kórəm nówbəs/. In our presence; before us. "Writ of error coram nobis" is procedural tool whose purpose is to correct errors of fact only, and its function is to bring before the court rendering the judgment matters of fact which, if known at time judgment was rendered, would have prevented its rendition. Com. v. Mangini, 478 Pa. 147, 386 A.2d 482, 490. Its function is to bring attention of court to, and obtain relief from, errors of fact, such as a valid defense existing in facts of case, but which, without negligence on defendant's part, was not made, either through duress or fraud or excusable mistake, where facts did not appear on face of record, and were such as, if known in season, would have prevented rendition of the judgment questioned. People v. Tuthill, 32 Cal.2d 819, 198 P.2d 505, 506. The essence of the common law remedy of coram nobis is that it is addressed to the very court which renders the judgment in which injustice is alleged to have been done, in contrast to appeals or review directed to another court; the words "coram nobis," meaning "our court," as compared to the common-law writ of "coram vobis," meaning "your court," clearly point this up. The writs of coram nobis and coram vobis have been abolished by Fed.R.Civil P. 60(b) and superseded by relief as provided by that rule. See also Coram vobis; Error coram nobis; Error coram vobis; Writ of error.

Coram non judge /kórəm nòn júwdəsiy/. In presence of a person not a judge. When a suit is brought and determined in a court which has no jurisdiction in the matter, then it is said to be coram non judge, and the judgment is void.

Coram paribus /kórəm pərabəs/. Before the peers or freeholders. The attestation of deeds, like all other solemn transactions, was originally done only coram paribus. 2 Bl.Comm. 307. Coram paribus de vicineto, before the peers or freeholders of the neighborhood. Id. 315.

Coram sectatoribus /kórəm sèktátórəbəs/. Before the suitors.

Coram vobis /kórəm vówbəs/. Before you. A writ of error directed by a court of review to the court which tried the cause, to correct an error in fact. See Coram nobis; Writ of error.

Cord. A measure of wood containing 128 cubic feet, otherwise expressed as a pile of wood 8 feet long, 4 feet high, and 4 feet wide.

Core proceeding. For purposes of bankruptcy court jurisdiction, the term "core proceedings" encompasses those proceedings that arise under the Bankruptcy Code (11 U.S.C.A.), including, but not limited to, those proceedings which are specifically defined in 28 U.S.C.A. § 157(b)(2). In re American Energy, Inc., Bkrtcy.N.D., 50 B.R. 175, 178. Determining whether a proceeding is a core or non-core matter requires that a court analyze various causes of action raised by the parties and make findings that they sufficiently affect the debtor-creditor relationship so as to justify the issuance of final judgment. In re Hinkley, Bkrtcy.Tex., 58 B.R. 339.

Co-respondent. A co-defendant. A person summoned to answer a bill, petition, or libel, together with another respondent. Used for example to designate the person charged with adultery with the respondent in a suit for divorce for that cause, and joined as a defendant with such party.

Ordinarily term "co-respondent" denotes one joined as party defendant in equity suit. Blankenship v. Blankenship, 239 Md. 498, 212 A.2d 294, 299.

Corium forisfacere /kóriyəm fòrəsféysəriy/. To forfeit one's skin, applied to a person condemned to be whipped; anciently the punishment of a servant. Corium perdere, the same. Corium redimere, to compound for a whipping.

Cornage /kórənəj/. A species of tenure in England, by which the tenant was bound to blow a horn for the sake of alarming the country on the approach of an enemy. It was a species of grand serjeanty.

Corner. A combination among the dealers in a specific commodity, or outside investors, for the purpose of buying up the greater portion of that commodity which is upon the market or may be brought to market, and holding the same back from sale, until the demand shall so far outrun the limited supply as to advance the price abnormally.

A "corner" is a condition arising when a much greater quantity of any given commodity is sold for future delivery within a given period than can be purchased in the market. The buyers, who are called in the slang of the exchanges, the "longs," then insist on delivery, and thus succeed in running up the prices to a fictitious point, at which the deals are "rung out" between the dealers by the payment of differences, or, where the buyers insist, by actual delivery.

Lost corner. One whose location as established by the government surveyors cannot be found. The mere fact that evidence of the physical location cannot now be seen, or that no one who saw the marked corner is produced, does not necessarily make the corner a lost one.

Obliterated corner. One where no visible evidence remains of the work of the original surveyor in establishing it.

Surveying. An angle made by two boundary lines; the common end of two boundary lines, which run at an angle with each other.

Cornering the market. See Corner.

Cornet. A commissioned officer of cavalry, abolished in England in 1871, and not existing in the United States army.

Corn laws. A species of protective tariff formerly in existence in England, imposing import-duties on various kinds of grain. The corn laws were abolished in 1846.

Corn Products case. Where corn products manufacturer, as an integral part of its manufacturing business and to protect itself against rises in price of raw corn, bought corn futures, accepting delivery in some cases and in other cases reselling futures upon spot purchase of corn, profits on resale of futures were taxable as ordinary income, rather than as capital gains, even though the transactions did not constitute true hedging in that there was no protection against fall in price. Corn Products Refining Co. v. Commission of Internal Revenue, 350 U.S. 46, 76 S.Ct. 20, 100 L.Ed. 29.

Corn whisky. An intoxicating whisky or liquor made from corn or containing a corn product, otherwise known as "moonshine," "white mule," "hootch," "corn liquor," "moonshine corn whisky."

Corody /kórædiy/. In old English law, a sum of money or allowance of meat, drink, and clothing due to the crown from the abbey or other religious house, whereof it was founder, towards the sustentation of such one of its servants as is thought fit to receive it. It differs from a pension, in that it was allowed towards the maintenance of any of the king's servants in an abbey; a pension being given to one of the king's chaplains, for his better maintenance, till he may be provided with a benefice. 1 Bl.Comm. 283.

Corollary. In logic, a collateral or secondary consequence, deduction, or inference.

Corona /kərównə/. The crown. Placita coronæ; pleas of the crown; criminal actions or proceedings, in which the crown was the prosecutor.

Corona mala /kərównə máelə/. In old English law, the clergy who abuse their character were so called.

Coronare /kórénériy/. In old English law, to give the tonsure, which was done on the crown, or in the form of a crown; to make a man a priest.

Coronare filium /kórénériy fíliyəm/. In old English law, to make one's son a priest. Homo coronatus was one who had received the first tonsure, as preparatory to superior orders, and the tonsure was in form of a corona, or crown of thorns.

Coronation oath. The oath administered to a sovereign at the ceremony of crowning or investing him with the insignia of royalty, in acknowledgment of his right to govern the kingdom, in which he swears to observe the laws, customs, and privileges of the kingdom, and to act and do all things conformably thereto.

Coronator /kórəneytər/. A coroner.

Coronatore eligendo /kórənətóriy elájəndow/. In English law, the name of a writ issued to the sheriff, commanding him to proceed to the election of a coroner.

Coronatore exonerando /kórənətóriy ekzónərəndow/. In English law, the name of a writ for the removal of a coroner, for a cause which is to be therein assigned, as that he is engaged in other business, or incapacitated by years or sickness, or has not a sufficient estate in the county, or lives in an inconvenient part of it.

Coroner /kórənər/. Public official, of English origin, charged with duty to make inquiry into the causes and circumstances of any death which occurs through violence or suddenly and with marks of suspicion; i.e. unnatural death. The functions and duties of coroners have been diminished having been replaced by medical examiners. See Coroner's inquest; Medical examiner.

Coroner's court. In England, a tribunal of record, where a coroner holds his inquiries. In some cases a jury must be summoned for an inquest. See Coroners' Act, 1980, and Coroners' Juries Act, 1983.

Coroner's inquest. An inquisition or examination into the causes and circumstances of any death happening by violence or under suspicious conditions, held by the coroner with the assistance of a jury. See also Inquest.

Corpnership. Exists when a corporation is the sole general partner in a limited partnership with numerous public investors as limited partners.

Corporale sacramentum /korpəréyliy sækraméntəm/. In old English law, a corporal oath.

Corporal imbecility. Physical inability to perform completely the act of sexual intercourse; not necessarily congenital, and not invariably a permanent and incurable impotence.

Corporalis injuria non recipit æstimationem de futuro /korpəréyləs ənjúriyə nòn rəsəpat èstəməyshiýównəm diy fuwytyúrow/. A personal injury does not receive satisfaction from a future course of proceeding [is not left for its satisfaction to a future course of proceeding].

Corporal oath. An oath, the external solemnity of which consists in laying one's hand upon the Holy Bible while the oath is administered to him. More generally, a solemn oath.

Corporal punishment. Physical punishment as distinguished from pecuniary punishment or a fine; any kind of punishment of or inflicted on the body. The term may or may not include imprisonment, according to the context. The Supreme Court has upheld the use of reasonable corporal punishment in schools, Ingraham v. Wright, 430 U.S. 651, 97 S.Ct. 1401, 51 L.Ed.2d 711; though, a number of states, by statute, prohibit paddling of students. Whipping of prisoners has been found to be a form of "cruel and unusual punishment" as prohibited by the 8th Amendment. Jackson v. Bishop, C.A.Ark., 404 F.2d 571. See also Punishment (Cruel and unusual punishment).

Corporal touch. Bodily touch; actual physical contact; manual apprehension.

Corporate. Belonging to a corporation; as a corporate name. Incorporated; as a corporate body.

Corporate acquisition. The takeover of one corporation by another if both parties retain their legal existence after the transaction. An acquisition can be effected via a stock purchase or through a tax-free exchange of stock. See also Leveraged buyout; Reorganization; Takeover bid; Merger.

Corporate agent. A natural person or a corporation who is authorized to act for a corporation as for example in the function of accepting service of process. Broadly, term includes all employees and officers of corporation who have power to bind the corporation.

Corporate alter ego, doctrine of. Means that courts, in ignoring form and looking to substance, will regard stockholders as owners of corporation's property, or as the real parties in interest whenever it is necessary to do so to prevent fraud which might otherwise be perpetrated, to redress a wrong which might otherwise go without redress, or to do justice which might otherwise fail. See Piercing the corporate veil.

Corporate authorities. The title given in statutes of several states to the aggregate body of officers of a municipal corporation, or to certain of those officers (excluding the others) who are vested with authority in regard to the particular matter spoken of in the statute, as, taxation, bonded debt, regulation of the sale of liquors, etc.

Corporate body. Term is equivalent to "body corporate"; i.e. a corporation.

Corporate bonds. Debt securities issued by corporations, typically having a maturity of ten years or longer. A written promise by a corporation to pay a fixed sum of money at some future time named, with stated interest payable at some fixed time or intervals, given in return for money or its equivalent received by the corporation, sometimes secured, and sometimes not.

Corporate charter. Document issued by state agency or authority (commonly Secretary of State) granting corporation legal existence and right to function (i.e., conduct business) as a corporation; or, may mean document filed with Secretary of State on incorporation of a business; e.g., articles of incorporation. See also Charter; Corporate franchise.

Corporate citizenship. Corporate status in the state of incorporation, though a foreign corporation is not a citizen for purposes of the Privileges and Immunities Clause (U.S.Const., Art. IV, § 2). Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 38 U.S. (13 Pet.) 519, 10 L.Ed. 274.

Corporate crime. Any criminal offense committed by and hence chargeable to a corporation because of activities of its officers or employees (e.g., price fixing, toxic waste dumping). Often referred to as "white-collar" crime.

Corporate domicile. The domicile of a corporation is the state of its incorporation.

Corporate entity. The distinct status of a corporation which sets its existence apart from the status of its shareholders; its capacity to have a name of its own, to sue and be sued in its own name as well as the right to buy, sell, lease and mortgage its property in its own name.

Corporate excess. Term used in connection with taxation of a corporation engaged in interstate commerce by a state and meaning the proportion of fair cash value of all the shares constituting the capital stock on a given date as the value of the assets, both real and personal, employed within the state bears to the total assets of the corporation on that date. Alpha Portland Cement Co. v. Mass., 268 U.S. 203, 208, 45 S.Ct. 477, 69 L.Ed. 916.

Corporate franchise. The right to exist and do business as a corporation. The right or privilege granted by the state or government to the persons forming an aggregate corporation, and their successors, to exist and do business as a corporation and to exercise the rights and powers incidental to that form of organization or necessarily implied in the grant. See also Corporate charter.

Corporate liability. See Piercing the corporate veil.

Corporate liquidation. See Liquidation.

Corporate mortgage trust. Device for financing corporate activities which requires an indenture and an independent trustee for protection of holders of bonds and debentures. The trust holds security consisting of property in event of default.

Corporate name. When a corporation is formed, state statutes require that such be given a name and such name is kept on record with the proper state authority (e.g. Secretary of State's office). Only by and under such name may the corporation sue or be sued and do all legal acts.

Corporate officers. Those persons who fill the offices which are provided for in the corporate charter such as president, treasurer, etc., though in a broader sense the term includes vice presidents, general manager and other officials of the corporation.

Corporate opportunity doctrine. This doctrine precludes corporate fiduciaries from diverting to themselves business opportunities in which the corporation has an expectancy, property interest or right, or which in fairness should otherwise belong to corporation. Klinicki v. Lundgren, 298 Or. 662, 695 P.2d 906, 910.

Corporate purpose. In reference to municipal corporations, and especially to their powers of taxation, a "corporate purpose" is one which shall promote the general prosperity and the welfare of the municipality; or a purpose necessary or proper to carry into effect the object of the creation of the corporate body or one which is germane to the general scope of the objects for which the corporation was created or has a legitimate connection with those objects and a manifest relation thereto. State statutes commonly require that the articles of incorporation of business corporations state the purpose of the corporation.

Corporate raider. See Raider.

Corporate reorganization. See Reorganization.

Corporate stock. Term embraces all equity securities issued by a corporation, but not bonds and debentures because these represent debt rather than stock (equity). See Stock.

Corporate trustees. Those corporations which are empowered by their charter to act as trustee, such as banks and trust companies.

Corporation. An artificial person or legal entity created by or under the authority of the laws of a state. An association of persons created by statute as a legal entity. The law treats the corporation itself as a person which can sue and be sued. The corporation is distinct from the individuals who comprise it (shareholders). The corporation survives the death of its investors, as the shares can usually be transferred. Such entity subsists as a body politic under a special denomination, which is regarded in law as having a personality and existence distinct from that of its several members, and which is, by the same authority, vested with the capacity of continuous succession, irrespective of changes in its membership, either in perpetuity or for a limited term of years, and of acting as a unit or single individual in matters relating to the common purpose of the association, within the scope of the powers and authorities conferred upon such bodies by law. Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 518, 636, 657, 4 L.Ed. 629; U. S. v. Trinidad Coal Co., 137 U.S. 160, 11 S.Ct. 57, 34 L.Ed. 640.

poration; Non-profit corporation; Non-stock corporation; Parent company or corporation; Person; Public corporations; Registered corporation; Thin corporation.

Classification

According to the accepted definitions and rules, corporations are classified as follows:

Public and private. A public corporation is one created by the state for political purposes and to act as an agency in the administration of civil government, generally within a particular territory or subdivision of the state, and usually invested, for that purpose, with subordinate and local powers of legislation; such as a county, city, town, or school district. These are also sometimes called "political corporations." See Municipal corporation.

Private corporations are those founded by and composed of private individuals, for private purposes, as distinguished from governmental purposes, and having no political or governmental franchises or duties.

The true distinction between public and private corporations is that the former are organized for governmental purposes, the latter not. The term "public" has sometimes been applied to corporations of which the government owned the entire stock, as in the case of a state bank. But bearing in mind that "public" is here equivalent to "political," it will be apparent that this is a misnomer. Again the fact that the business or operations of a corporation may directly and very extensively affect the general public (as in the case of a railroad company or a bank or an insurance company) is no reason for calling it a public corporation. If organized by private persons for their own advantage,—or even if organized for the benefit of the public generally, as in the case of a free public hospital or other charitable institution,—it is none the less a private corporation if it does not possess governmental powers or functions. The uses may in a sense be called "public," but the corporation is "private," as much so as if the franchises were vested in a single person. Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 562, 4 L.Ed. 629. It is to be observed, however, that those corporations which serve the public or contribute to the comfort and convenience of the general public, though owned and managed by private interests, are now denominated "public-service corporations." See infra. Another distinction between public and private corporations is that the former are not voluntary associations (as the latter are) and that there is no contractual relation between the government and a public corporation or between the individuals who compose it.

While the above are strict distinctions between "public" and "private" corporations, in common usage the term "public" corporation is frequently used to distinguish a business corporation whose shares are traded to and among the general public as opposed to a "private" (or "close" corporation) whose shares are not so traded.

Ecclesiastical and lay. In the English law, all corporations private are divided into ecclesiastical and lay, the former being such corporations as are composed exclusively of ecclesiastics organized for spiritual purposes, or for administering property held for religious uses, such as bishops and certain other dignitaries of the church and (formerly) abbeys and monasteries. 1 Bl.Comm. 470. Lay corporations are those composed of laymen, and existing for secular or business purposes. This distinction is not recognized in American law. Corporations formed for the purpose of maintaining or propagating religion or of supporting public religious services, according to the rights of particular denominations, and incidentally owning and administering real and personal property for religious uses, are called "religious corporations," as distinguished from business corporations; but they are "lay" corporations, and not "ecclesiastical" in the sense of the English law.

Aggregate and sole. A corporation sole is one consisting of one person only, and his successors in some particular station, who are incorporated by law in order to give them some legal capacities and advantages, particularly that of perpetuity, which in their natural persons they could not have had. In this sense, the sovereign in England is a sole corporation, so is a bishop, so are some deans distinct from their several chapters, and so is every parson and vicar.

A corporation aggregate is one composed of a number of individuals vested with corporate powers; and a "corporation," as the word is used in general popular and legal speech, and as defined at the head of this title, means a "corporation aggregate."

Domestic and foreign. With reference to the laws and the courts of any given state, a "domestic" corporation is one created by, or organized under, the laws of that state; a "foreign" corporation is one created by or under the laws of another state, government, or country. See also Domestic corporation.

Subsidiary and parent. Subsidiary corporation is one in which another corporation (called parent corporation) owns at least a majority of the shares, and thus has control.

Other Compound and Descriptive Terms

Acquired corporation. The corporation which disappears as a result of a merger or acquisition.

Acquiring corporation. The offeror in a merger or acquisition.

Aggressor corporation. A corporation that attempts to obtain control of a publicly held corporation, either by a direct cash tender or public exchange offer to shareholders, or by way of merger, which requires the agreement or assent of the target's management. See Takeover bid.

Business corporation. One formed for the purpose of transacting business in the widest sense of that term, including not only trade and commerce, but manufacturing, mining, banking, insurance, transportation, and practically every form of commercial or industrial activity where the purpose of the organization is pecuniary profit; contrasted with religious, charitable, educational, and other like organizations, which are sometimes grouped in the statutory law of a state under the general designation of "corporations not for profit."

Brother-sister corporation. See that title.

Close corporation. A corporation whose shares, or at least voting shares, are held by a single shareholder or closely-knit group of shareholders. Generally, there are no public investors and its shareholders are active in the conduct of the business. A close corporation is one which fills its own vacancies or in which power of voting is held through manipulation under fixed and virtually perpetual proxies. Brooks v. Willcuts, C.C.A.Minn., 78 F.2d 270, 273. A corporation, the stock ownership of which is not widely dispersed. Instead, a few shareholders are in control of corporate policy and are in a position to benefit personally from such policy.

Closely held corporation. See Close corporation, above.

Collapsible corporation. A corporation formed for one specific venture such as a motion picture, or construction of a building, and then collapsed, allowing tax advantages to the shareholders. I.R.C. § 341.

C corporation. A regular corporation governed by Subchapter C of the Internal Revenue Code. Distinguished from S corporations, which fall under Subchapter S of the Code. See also S corporation, below.

Controlled corporation. A corporation where the majority of stock outstanding is held by one individual or one firm. Where there is complete domination and control of a corporation so that it has no independent identity, a court may disregard the corporate form and extend liability for corporate obligations beyond the confines of a corporation's separate entity whenever it is necessary to prevent fraud or achieve equity. Glenn v. Wagner, 67 N.C.App. 563, 313 S.E.2d 832, 839.

Corporation by estoppel. A corporation by estoppel comes about when parties, by their agreements or conduct, estop themselves from denying the existence of the corporation. Harris v. Stephens Wholesale Bldg. Supply Co., Inc., 54 Ala.App. 405, 309 So.2d 115, 117. It is a doctrine which prevents a third person from holding an officer, director, or shareholder of a nonexistent corporation personally liable on an obligation entered into in the name of the nonexistent corporation. The theory is that the third person relied on the existence as a corporation and is now "estopped" from denying that the corporation existed.

Corporation de facto. One existing under color of law and in pursuance of an effort made in good faith to organize a corporation under the statute; an association of men claiming to be a legally incorporated company, and exercising the powers and functions of a corporation, but without actual lawful authority to do so. Its elements are a law or charter authorizing such a corporation, an attempt in good faith to comply with law authorizing its incorporation, and unintentional omission of essential requirements of the law or charter, and exercise in good faith of corporate functions under the law or charter. A corporation which has been defectively formed but which is not subject to collateral attack.

Corporation de jure. That which exists by reason of full compliance by incorporators with requirements of an existing law permitting organization of such corporation.

Corporation sole. Unusual type of corporation consisting of only one person whose successor becomes the corporation on his death or resignation; limited in the main today to bishops and heads of dioceses. See also Aggregate and sole, above.

Eleemosynary corporation. Corporation with charitable functions and purposes.

Joint venture corporation. A corporation which has joined with other individuals or corporations within the corporate framework in some specific undertaking commonly found in oil, chemical, electronic and atomic fields.

Migratory corporation. A corporation, organized under laws of another state than that of incorporators' residence for purpose of doing all or greater part of their business in state of their residence or in other state than that of incorporation. Toklan Royalty Corporation v. Tiffany, 193 Okl. 120, 141 P.2d 571, 573.

Moneyed corporations are, properly speaking, those dealing in money or in the business of receiving deposits, loaning money, and exchange; but in a wider sense the term is applied to all business corporations having a money capital and employing it in the conduct of their business.

Municipal corporations. See that title.

Non-stock corporation. Type of corporation where ownership is not recognized by stock; e.g. municipal corporation.

Not-for-profit corporation. A corporation formed for some charitable or benevolent purpose and not for profit making and generally organized under special statutes for this purpose. Such corporations are afforded special tax treatment. See also Non-profit corporation.

Professional corporation. In most states such may be organized by those rendering personal services to public of a type which requires a license or other legal authorization and which prior to such statutory authorization could not be performed by a corporation. Includes, but is not limited to, public accountants, certified public accountants, chiropractors, osteopaths, physicians, surgeons, dentists, podiatrists, chiroprodists, architects, veterinarians, optometrists, and attorneys at law. Tax benefits are one of several reasons for professional incorporation. Incorporation does not alter professional responsibility or privilege nor does it insulate principal from malpractice liability.

Public-service corporations. Those whose operations serve the needs of the general public or conduce to the comfort and convenience of an entire community, such as public transportation, gas, water, and electric light companies. The business of such companies is said to be "affected with a public interest," and for that reason they are subject to legislative regulation and control to a greater extent than corporations not of this character. See also Quasi public corporation, below.

Quasi corporation. A term applied to those bodies, or municipal societies, which, though not vested with the general powers of corporations, are yet recognized, by statutes or immemorial usage, as persons, or aggregate corporations, with precise duties, which may be enforced, and privileges, which may be maintained, by suits at law. "Quasi corporation" is a phrase used to designate bodies which possess a limited number of corporate powers, and which are low down in the scale or grade of corporate existence, and is generally applied to a body which exercises certain functions of a corporate character, but which has not been created a corporation by any statute, general or special. There is a well-defined and marked distinction between municipal corporations proper and political or quasi corporations. Cities, towns, and villages are municipal corporations proper, while counties, townships, school districts, road districts, and the like are quasi corporations. See Quasi public corporation, below.

Quasi public corporation. This term is sometimes applied to corporations which are not strictly public, in the sense of being organized for governmental purposes, but whose operations contribute to the comfort, convenience, or welfare of the general public, such as telegraph and telephone companies, gas, water, and electric light companies, and irrigation companies. More commonly and more correctly styled "public-service corporations."

There is a large class of private corporations which on account of special franchises conferred on them owe a duty to the public which they may be compelled to perform. This class of corporations is known as public service corporations, and in legal phraseology as "quasi public corporations," or corporations affected with a public interest. A "quasi public corporation" may be said to be a private corporation which has given to it certain powers of a public nature, such, for instance, as the power of eminent domain, in order to enable it to discharge its duties for the public benefit, in which respect it differs from an ordinary private corporation, the powers of which are given and exercised for the exclusive advantage of its stockholders.

The term is also applied to corporations of that class sometimes called "quasi municipal corporations," such as school districts, irrigation districts, township, etc.

S corporation. A small business corporation with a statutorily limited number of shareholders, which, under certain conditions, has elected to have its taxable income taxed to its shareholders at regular income tax rates. I.R.C. § 1361 et seq. Its major significance is the fact that S corporation status usually avoids the corporate income tax, and corporate losses can be claimed by the shareholders. This election is for federal tax purposes only; in terms of legal characteristics under state law, the "S" status corporation is no different than any other regular corporation.

Shell corporation. A corporate frame, containing few, if any, assets, kept alive by required filings, generally for future use.

Spiritual corporations. Corporations, the members of which are entirely spiritual persons, and incorporated as such, for the furtherance of religion and perpetuating the rights of the church.

Subchapter C corporation. A regular corporation subject to the provisions of Subchapter C (§§ 301–386) of the Internal Revenue Code. Distinguished from an S corporation, which is governed by Subchapter S of the Code.

Target corporation. Corporation attempted to be taken over in a tender offer or other type of takeover bid. A corporation viewed as having a good potential for takeover by another corporation or individual.

Trading corporations. A commercial corporation engaged in buying and selling. The word “trading,” is much narrower in scope than “business,” as applied to corporations, and though a trading corporation is a business corporation, there are many business corporations which are not trading companies. Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 669, 4 L.Ed. 629.

Tramp corporations. Companies chartered in one state without any intention of doing business therein, but which carry on their business and operations wholly in other states.

Corporation Act. In English law, the statute 13 Car. II, St. 2, c. 1; by which it was provided that no person should thereafter be elected to office in any corporate town that should not, within one year previously, have taken the sacrament of the Lord’s Supper, according to the rites of the Church of England; and every person so elected was also required to take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy. 4 Bl.Comm. 58. This statute is now repealed.

Corporation courts. Formerly, certain courts in Virginia described as follows: “For each city of the state, there shall be a court called a ‘corporation court,’ to be held by a judge, with like qualifications and elected in the same manner as judges of the county court.”

Corporator. A member of a corporation aggregate. Seaborn v. Wingfield, 56 Nev. 260, 48 P.2d 881, 883. See Incorporator.

Corporeal /kərpóriəl/. A term descriptive of such things as have an objective, material existence; perceptible by the senses of sight and touch; possessing a real body. Opposed to incorporeal and spiritual. There is a distinction between “corporeal” and “corporal.” The former term means “possessing a body,” that is, tangible, physical, material; the latter means “relating to or affecting a body,” that is, bodily, external. Corporeal denotes the nature or physical existence of a body; corporal denotes its exterior or the co-ordination of it with some other body. Hence we speak of “corporeal hereditaments,” but of “corporal punishment,” “corporal touch,” “corporal oath,” etc.

Corporeal hereditaments /kərpóriəl hərədətəmənts/. See Hereditaments.

Corporeal property. Such as affects the senses, and may be seen and handled, as opposed to incorporeal property, which cannot be seen or handled, and exists only in contemplation. Thus a house is corporeal, but the annual rent payable for its occupation is incorporeal. Corporeal property is, if movable, capable of manual transfer: if immovable, possession of it may be delivered up. But incorporeal property cannot be so transferred, but some other means must be adopted for its transfer, of which the most usual is an instrument in writing.

In Roman law, the distinction between things corporeal and incorporeal rested on the sense of touch; tangible objects only were considered corporeal. In modern law, all things which may be perceived by any of the bodily senses are termed corporeal, although a common definition of the word includes merely that which can be touched and seen.

Corpore et animo /kórpəri et ánəməw/. Lat. By the body and by the mind; by the physical act and by the mental intent.

Corps diplomatique /kór dipləmatíyk/. In international law, ambassadors and diplomatic persons at any court or capital.

Corpse /kórps/. The dead body of a human being.

Corpus /kórpəs/. Lat. Body; an aggregate or mass (of men, laws, or articles); physical substance, as distinguished from intellectual conception; the principal sum or capital, as distinguished from interest or income. The main body or principal of a trust.

A substantial or positive fact, as distinguished from what is equivocal and ambiguous. The corpus delicti (body of an offense) is the fact of its having been actually committed.

A corporeal act of any kind (as distinguished from animus or mere intention), on the part of him who wishes to acquire a thing, whereby he obtains the physical ability to exercise his power over it whenever he pleases. The word occurs frequently in this sense in the civil law.

As proof, it consists of showing that there exists the object of the crime (dead body in homicide case), and that such resulted from criminal act of some person. In some jurisdictions, it cannot be proved by confession of defendant in the first instance but only after extrinsic evidence (of the elements) has been offered. Downey v. People, 121 Colo. 307, 215 P.2d 892. In other states, confessional evidence is admissible in the first instance. See Corpus delicti, below.

Corpus comitatus /kórpəs kómətétəs/. The body of a county. The whole county, as distinguished from a part of it, or any particular place in it.

Corpus corporatum /kórpəs kórpərətəm/. A corporation; a corporate body, other than municipal.

Corpus cum causa /kórpəs kəm kózə/. (The body with the cause.) An English writ which issued out of chancery, to remove both the body and the record, touching the cause of any man lying in execution upon a judgment for debt, into the king's bench, there to remain until he satisfied the judgment.

Corpus delicti /kórpəs dəliktay/. The body of a crime. The body (material substance) upon which a crime has been committed, e.g., the corpse of a murdered man, the charred remains of a house burned down. In a derivative sense, the objective proof or substantial fact that a crime has been committed. The "corpus delicti" of a crime is the body, foundation or substance of the crime, which ordinarily includes two elements: the act and the criminal agency of the act. State v. Edwards, 49 Ohio St.2d 31, 358 N.E.2d 1051, 1055.

Corpus pro corpore /kórpəs prów kórpəriy/. In old records, body for body. A phrase expressing the liability of manucaptors.

Corpus humanum non recipit æstimationem /kórpəs hyəmýnəm nòn réspət èstamýshiyównəm/. The human body does not admit of valuation.

Corpus juris /kórpəs júras/. A body of law. A term used to signify a book comprehending several collections of law. There are two principal collections to which this name is given; the Corpus Juris Civilis, and the Corpus Juris Canonici. Also name of an encyclopædic statement of the principles of American law; e.g. Corpus Juris Secundum.

Corpus juris canonici /kórpəs júras kánónasay/. The body of the canon law. A compilation of the canon law, comprising the decrees and canons of the Roman Church, constituting the body of ecclesiastical law of that church.

Corpus juris civilis /kórpəs júras sívaləs/. The body of the civil law. The system of Roman jurisprudence compiled and codified under the direction of the emperor Justinian, in A.D. 528-534. This collection comprises the Institutes, Digest (or Pandects), Code, and Novels. The name is said to have been first applied to this collection early in the seventeenth century.

Correct attest. These words, used before the signatures of bank directors to reports made to the commissioner of banking, mean not alone to bear witness, but to affirm to be true or genuine, and such words are appropriately used for the affirmation of persons in their official capacity to attest the truth of a writing.

Corrected policy. Insurance policy issued after investigation of risk to correct misstatements in policy first issued.

Correction. Discipline, treatment and rehabilitation of offenders through confinement, parole, probation, counseling, etc. See also Correctional system.

Correctional institutions. A generic term describing prisons, jails, reformatories and other places of correction and detention.

Correctional system. Network of governmental agencies concerned with prisons, jails, houses of correction and reformatories; may also refer to pardon and parole systems.

Correction, house of. A prison for the reformation of petty or juvenile offenders.

Corrector of the staple. In old English law, a clerk belonging to the staple, to write and record the bargains of merchants there made.

Corregidor /koréyhidòr/kàrégadòr/. In Spanish law, a magistrate who took cognizance of various misdemeanors, and of civil matters.

Correi /kòwriyay/. Lat. In the civil law, co-stipulators; joint stipulators.

Correi credendi /kòwriyay krédénday/. In the civil and Scotch law, joint creditors; creditors in solido.

Correlative /kàrelədiv/. Having a mutual or reciprocal relation, in such sense that the existence of one necessarily implies the existence of the other. Father and son are correlative terms, as are claim and duty.

Correlative rights. Refers to doctrine which is applied to owners of land and their rights to use of their land with respect to rights of adjoining or lower riparian landowners in water or oil. Alameda County Water District v. Niles Sand & Gravel Co. Inc., 37 Cal.App.3d 924, 112 Cal.Rptr. 846.

Correspondence. Interchange of written communications. The letters written by a person and the answers written by the one to whom they are addressed. The agreement of things with one another.

Correspondence audit. An audit conducted by the Internal Revenue Service through the use of the mail. Typically, the I.R.S. writes to the taxpayer requesting the verification of a particular deduction or exemption. The completion of a special form or the remittance of copies of records or other support is all that is requested of the taxpayer. See also Audit.

Correspondent. A securities firm, bank or other financial organization which regularly performs services for another in a place or market to which the other does not have direct access. Securities firms may have correspondents in foreign countries or on exchanges of which they are not members. Bank which serves as agent for another bank in performing services; e.g. carrying deposit balance for bank in another city.

Correspondent bank. See Correspondent.

Corroborate /kərobəreyt/. To strengthen; to add weight or credibility to a thing by additional and confirming facts or evidence. The testimony of a witness is said to be corroborated when it is shown to correspond with the representation of some other witnesses, or to comport with some facts otherwise known or established. See Corroborating evidence.

Corroborating evidence /kərobəreytiŋ évədəns/. Evidence supplementary to that already given and tending to strengthen or confirm it. Additional evidence of a different character to the same point. Edwards v. Edwards, Tenn.App., 501 S.W.2d 283, 289. In some jurisdictions, corroborating evidence of an accomplice to the crime is given much weight. People v. Baker, 16 Ill.2d 364, 158 N.E.2d 1.

Corrupt. Spoiled; tainted; vitiated; depraved; debased; morally degenerate. As used as a verb, to change ones morals and principles from good to bad.

Corruption. An act done with an intent to give some advantage inconsistent with official duty and the rights of others. The act of an official or fiduciary person who unlawfully and wrongfully uses his station or character to procure some benefit for himself or for another person, contrary to duty and the rights of others. See Bribe; Extortion.

Corruption of blood. In English law, the consequence of attainder, being that the attainted person could neither inherit lands or other hereditaments from his ancestor, nor retain those he already had, nor transmit them by descent to any heir, because his blood was considered in law to be corrupted. Avery v. Everett, 110 N.Y. 317, 18 N.E. 148. This was abolished by St. 3 & 4, Wm. IV, c. 106, and 33 & 34 Vict., c. 23, and is unknown in America. Const.U.S., Art. III, § 3.

Corruptly. When used in a statute, this term, generally imports a wrongful design to acquire some pecuniary or other advantage.

Corrupt motive doctrine. Doctrine invoked in assessing crimes like bribery to determine motive of gift or payment.

Corrupt practices acts. Federal and state statutes regulating campaign contributions and expenditures, including disclosure requirements. 2 U.S.C.A. § 231 et seq.

Corselet /kórslət/. Ancient armor which covered the body.

Corse-present /kórs prèzənt/. In old English law, a mortuary, thus termed because, when a mortuary became due on the death of a man, the best or second-best beast was, according to custom, offered or presented to the priest, and carried with the corpse. In Wales a corse-present was due upon the death of a clergyman to the bishop of the diocese, till abolished by 12 Anne St. 2, c. 6. 2 Bl.Comm. 426.

Corsned /kórsnəd/. In Saxon law, the morsel of execution. A species of ordeal in use among the Saxons, performed by eating a piece of bread over which the priest had pronounced a certain imprecation. If the accused ate it freely, he was pronounced innocent; but, if it stuck in his throat, it was considered as a proof of his guilt. 4 Bl.Comm. 345.

Cortis /kórtəs/. A court or yard before a house.

Cortularium /kórtýləríyəm/, or cortarium /kórtəriyəm/. In old records, a yard adjoining a country farm.

Corvée /korvéy/. In French law, gratuitous labor exacted from the villages or communities, especially for repairing roads, constructing bridges.

Corvée seigneuriale /korvéy seynýəriyál/. Services due the lord of the manor.

Cosa juzgada /kówsa huwsgáða/. In Spanish law, a cause or matter adjudged (res judicata).

Cosas comunes /kówsas komúwne(y)s/. In Spanish law, a term corresponding to the res communes of the Roman law, and descriptive of such things as are open to the equal and common enjoyment of all persons and not to be reduced to private ownership, such as the air, the sea, and the water of running streams.

Cosbering /kózbəriŋ/. See Coshering.

Cosduna /kózdunə/. In feudal law, a custom or tribute.

Cosen, cozen /kózən/. In old English law, to cheat.

Cosenage /kóz(ə)naj/. (Also spelled "Cosinage," "Cousinage.") In old English law, a writ that lay for the heir where the tresail, i.e., the father of the besail, or great-grandfather, was seized of lands in fee at his death, and a stranger entered upon the land and abated. 3 Bl.Comm. 186. Kindred; cousinship; relationship; affinity. 3 Bl.Comm. 186.

Cosening /kóz(ə)niŋ/. In old English law, an offense, mentioned in the old books, where anything was done deceitfully, whether belonging to contracts or not, which could not be properly termed by any special name. The same as the stellionatus of the civil law. 4 Bl.Comm. 158.

Coshering /kóshəriŋ/. In old English law, a feudal prerogative or custom for lords to lie and feast themselves at their tenants' houses.

Cosigner. Person who signs a document or instrument along with another, often assuming obligations and providing credit support to be shared with other obligor(s).

Cosmopathic /kòzməpəθək/. Open to the access of supernatural knowledge or emotion supposedly from a preternatural world; applied to methods of healing.

Cost. Expense; price. The sum or equivalent expended, paid or charged for something. See also Actual cost; Costs; Net cost; Rate.

Cost accounting. The area of accounting which focuses on the method and system used to compile and analyze the costs of selling and manufacturing products. It includes the method for classifying, summarizing, recording, reporting, and allocating the actual costs incurred and comparing them with the standard costs established. Areas of cost accounting include: job order, process, direct, and standard costing.

Cost basis. In accounting, the cost of an asset is the amount paid for the asset in cash or property. The value placed on an asset in a financial statement in terms of its cost; used in determining capital gains or losses.

Cost bond. See Costs, infra.

Cost contract. See Cost-plus contract, infra.

Cost depletion. In accounting and taxation, depletion computed in oil production without reference to discovery or percentage depletion. Magale v. U. S., 118 Ct.Cl. 183, 93 F.Supp. 1004.

Cost of completion. Measure of damages in breach of contract claim or action.

Imputed cost. A value expressing cost which is derived from or based on factors other than actual cost records; estimated costs.

Marginal cost. The increase or decrease in total cost that materializes as a result of a variation in output.

Replacement cost. An appraisal method for determining value by substituting a like property. See also Replacement cost.

Unit cost. Cost of a single unit of product or service. Total cost divided by number of units.

Variable costs. Costs that change in total with changes in rate of production.

Cost and freight (C.A.F.). Quoted sales price includes cost of goods and freight but not insurance or other special charges.

Co-stipulator. A joint promisor.

Cost of capital. The annual percent that a utility must receive to maintain its credit, to pay a return to the owners of the enterprise and to insure the attraction of capital in amounts adequate to meet future needs. It involves a calculation of the interest a utility must pay on its borrowed capital (debt) and the cost of attracting and paying investors for its common or preferred stock (equity). Millinocket Water Co. v. Maine Public Utilities Com'n, Me., 515 A.2d 749, 751.

Cost of living clause. A provision, commonly in labor agreements, and also in certain pension, retirement, and disability benefit programs, giving an automatic wage or benefit increase tied in some way to cost-of-living rises in the economy. Cost of living is usually measured by the Consumer Price Index (CPI) (q.v.).

May also exist in certain long term leases where, for example, rent increases are tied to Consumer Price Index.

Cost-plus contract. One which fixes the amount to be paid the contractor on a basis, generally, of the cost of the material and labor, plus an agreed percentage thereof as profits. Such contracts are used when costs of production or construction are unknown or difficult to ascertain in advance.

Costs. A pecuniary allowance, made to the successful party (and recoverable from the losing party), for his expenses in prosecuting or defending an action or a distinct proceeding within an action. In federal courts, costs are allowed as a matter of course to the prevailing party unless the court otherwise directs; also, specified fees and certain court expenses may be taxed as costs. Fed.R.Civil P. 54(d); Fed.R.App.P. 39; 28 U.S.C.A. § 1920. Generally, "costs" do not include attorney fees unless such fees are by a statute denominated costs or are by statute allowed to be recovered as costs in the case.

Fees and charges required by law to be paid to the courts or some of their officers, the amount of which is fixed by statute or court rule; e.g. filing and service fees.

See also Closing costs; Fee; Security for costs; Service charge.

Bill of costs. A certified, itemized statement of the amount of costs in an action or suit.

Cost bond, or bond for costs. A bond given by a party to an action to secure the eventual payment of such costs as may be awarded against him. A bond which may be required of an appealing party in a civil case; e.g. Fed.R.App.P. 7. Purpose of bond is to cover appellee's costs in event of affirmance of judgment.

Costs de incremento. Increased costs, costs of increase. Costs adjudged by the court in addition to those assessed by the jury.

Costs of collection. Strictly, expenses involved in endeavoring to make collection, as of a promissory note; but as used in or with reference to such notes, the phrase is synonymous with attorney's fees. There is commonly a provision to this effect in such notes. It does not refer to costs of suit, which are recoverable by law.

Costs of the day. Costs which are incurred in preparing for the trial of a cause on a specified day, consisting of witnesses' fees, and other fees of attendance.

Costs to abide event. When an order is made by an appellate court reversing a judgment, with "costs to abide the event," the costs intended by the order include those of the appeal, so that, if the appellee is finally successful, he is entitled to tax the costs of the appeal.

Final costs. Such costs as are to be paid at the end of the suit. Costs, the liability for which depends upon the final result of the litigation.

Indirect costs. Costs not readily identifiable with production of specific goods or services, but rather applicable to production activity in general; e.g., overhead allocations for general and administrative activities.

Interlocutory costs. Costs accruing upon proceedings in the intermediate stages of a cause, as distinguished from final costs; such as the costs of motions.

Security for costs. A security which a defendant in an action may require of a plaintiff who does not reside within the jurisdiction of the court, for the payment of such costs as may be awarded to the defendant. See also Cost bond, above.

Statutory costs. Amounts awarded for various phases of litigation that are fixed by statute. Word "costs" generally refers to statutory fees to which officers, witnesses, jurors and others are entitled for their services in an action and which statutes authorize to be taxed and included in the judgment. Terry v. Burger, 6 Ohio App.2d 53, 216 N.E.2d 383. See e.g. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1920.

Taxation of litigation costs. See Taxation; also Costs, generally, above.

Variable costs. Those costs which in the short run vary in close relationship with changes in output, including items such as raw materials, labor directly used in production, and per unit royalties. Chillicothe Sand & Gravel Co. v. Martin Marietta Corp., C.A.Ill., 615 F.2d 427, 431.

Costs, insurance and freight (C.I.F.). Quoted sales price which includes cost of goods, freight and insurance.

Costumbre /kostúbre(y)/. In Spanish law, custom; an unwritten law established by usage, during a long space of time.

Co-sureties /kòwshúrətiyz/. Joint sureties; two or more sureties to the same obligation.

Cotenancy. A tenancy by several distinct titles but by unity of possession, or any joint ownership or common interest with its grantor. The term is broad enough to comprise both tenancy in common and joint tenancy.

Coterelli /kòtərélay/. Anciently, a kind of peasantry who were outlaws; robbers.

Coterellus /kòtəréləs/. In feudal law, a cottager; a servile tenant, who held in mere villenage; his person, issue, and goods were disposable at the lord's pleasure. A coterellus, therefore, occupied a less favorable position than a cotarius (q.v.), for the latter held by socage tenure.

Coterie /kòwtəriy/. A fashionable association, or a knot of persons forming a particular circle. The origin of the term was purely commercial, signifying an association, in which each member furnished his part, and bore his share in the profit and loss.

Cotland. In old English law, land held by a cottager, whether in socage or villenage.

Cotsethla /kòtséthlə/kòtsétlə/. In old English law, the little seat or mansion belonging to a small farm.

Cotsethland /kòtséthlənd/. The seat of a cottage with the land belonging to it.

Cotsetus /kòtsiytəs/. A cottager or cottage-holder who held by servile tenure and was bound to do the work of the lord.

Cottage. Dwelling of farm laborer or small farmer. Small vacation house. In English law, a small dwelling-house that has no land belonging to it.

Cottier tenancy /kòtiyər ténənsiy/. A species of tenancy in Ireland, constituted by an agreement in writing, and subject to the following terms: That the tenement consists of a dwelling-house with not more than half an acre of land; at a rental not exceeding a specified sum a year; the tenancy to be for not more than a month at a time; the landlord to keep the house in good repair.

Cotton notes. Receipts given for each bale of cotton received on storage by a public warehouse.

Cotuchans. A term used in Domesday for peasants, boors, husbandmen.

Couchant /káwchənt/. Lying down; squatting. Couchant and levant (lying down and rising up) is a term applied to animals trespassing on the land of one other than their owner, for one night or longer. 3 Bl.Comm. 9.

Coucher, or courcher /káwchər/. A factor who continues abroad for traffic; also the general book wherein any corporation, etc., register their acts.

Coulisse /kùliys/. The stockbrokers' curb market in Paris.

Council. An assembly of persons for the purpose of concerting measures of state or municipal policy. The legislative body in the government of cities or boroughs. An advisory body selected to aid the executive; i.e. a body appointed to advise and assist the governor in his executive or judicial capacities or both. See also City council; Legislative council; Metropolitan council.

Common Council. In American law, the lower or more numerous branch of the legislative assembly of a city. In English law, the councillors of the city of London. The parliament, also, was anciently called the "common council of the realm."

Privy Council. See that title.

Select Council. The name given, in some states, to the upper house or branch of the council of a city.

Council of conciliation. In England, by the Acts 30 & 31 Vict., c. 105, power was given for the crown to grant licenses for the formation of councils of conciliation and arbitration, consisting of a certain number of masters and workmen in any trade or employment, having power to hear and determine all questions between masters and workmen which may be submitted to them by both parties, arising out of or with respect to the particular trade or manufacture, and incapable of being otherwise settled. They have power to apply to a justice to enforce the performance of their award. The members are elected by persons engaged in the trade.

Council of Legal Education. A body composed of members of the English bar which governs the bar. It hears complaints against barristers and reports its findings with recommendations to the benchers of the Inn of Court of which the barrister is a member, who alone can act. Established in 1852.

Council of the north. In England, a court instituted by Henry VIII, in 1537, to administer justice in Yorkshire and the four other northern counties. Under the presidency of Stratford, the court showed great rigor, bordering, it is alleged, on harshness. It was abolished by 16 Car. I, the same act which abolished the Star Chamber.

Counsel /káwnsəl/. Attorney or counsellor (q.v.).

Advice and assistance given by one person to another in regard to a legal matter, proposed line of conduct, claim, or contention. See also Counsel, right to.

The words "counsel" and "advise" may be, and frequently are, used in criminal law to describe the offense of a person who, not actually doing the felonious act, by his will contributed to it or procured it to be done. See Accomplice; Aid and abet.

See also Legislative counsel; Of counsel.

Junior counsel. The younger of the counsel employed on the same side of a case, or the one lower in standing or rank, or who is intrusted with the less important parts of the preparation or trial of the cause.

Counsellor. An attorney; lawyer. Member of the legal profession who gives legal advice and handles the legal affairs of client, including, if necessary, appearing on his or her behalf in civil, criminal, or administrative actions and proceedings.

Counsel of record. Attorney whose appearance has been filed with court papers.

Counsel, right to. Constitutional right of criminal defendant to court appointed attorney if he is financially unable to retain private counsel; guaranteed by Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to U.S. Constitution, and as well by court rule (Fed.R.Crim.P. 44), and statute (18 U.S.C.A. § 3006A). Such right to counsel exists with respect to felonies (Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335, 83 S.Ct. 792); misdemeanors when the sentence is to a jail term (Argersinger v. Hemlin, 407 U.S. 25, 92 S.Ct. 2006), and to juvenile delinquency proceedings (In re Gault, 387 U.S. 1, 87 S.Ct. 1428). The extent of this right extends from the time that judicial proceedings have been initiated against the accused, whether by way of formal charge, preliminary hearing, indictment, information, or arraignment (Brewer v. Williams, 430 U.S. 387, 97 S.Ct. 1232), through to sentencing (Mempa v. Rhay, 389 U.S. 128, 88 S.Ct. 254) and appeal (Douglas v. California, 372 U.S. 353, 83 S.Ct. 814). There is no absolute right to appointed counsel in postconviction proceedings. Pennsylvania v. Finley, 481 U.S. 551, 107 S.Ct. 1990, 95 L.Ed.2d 539. "Counsel" however within Sixth Amendment does not include a lay person but refers only to person authorized to practice law. U. S. v. Grismore, C.A.Colo., 546 F.2d 844, 847. See also Assistance of counsel; Critical stage; Effective assistance of counsel; Escobedo Rule; Miranda Rule; Public defender.

Count, v. In pleading, to declare; to recite; to state a case; to narrate the facts constituting a plaintiff's cause of action. To plead orally; to plead or argue a case in court; to recite or read in court; to recite a count in court.

Count, n. In pleading, the plaintiff's statement of a cause of action; a separate and independent claim. Used also to signify the several parts of an indictment, each charging a distinct offense. Fed. R. Crim. P. 7(c)(1), 8. The usual organizational subunit of an indictment. Sanabria v. United States, 437 U.S. 54, 69 n. 23, 98 S.Ct. 2170, 2181 n. 23, 57 L.Ed.2d 43.

"Count" and "charge" when used relative to allegations in an indictment or information are synonymous. State v. Puckett, 39 N.M. 511, 50 P.2d 964, 965.

An earl.

Common counts. Certain general counts or forms inserted in a declaration in an action to recover a money debt, not founded on the circumstances of the individual case, but intended to guard against a possible variance, and to enable the plaintiff to take advantage of any ground of liability which the proof may disclose, within the general scope of the action.

The various forms of an action of assumpsit. In the action of assumpsit, these counts are as follows: For goods sold and delivered, or bargained and sold; for work done; for money lent; for money paid; for money received to the use of the plaintiff; for interest; or for money due on an account stated.

General count. One stating in a general way the plaintiff's claim.

Money counts. A species of common counts, so called from the subject-matter of them; embracing the indebitatus assumpsit count for money lent and advanced, for money paid and expended, and for money had and received, together with the insimul computassent count, or count for money due on an account stated.

Omnibus count. A count which combines in one all the money counts with one for goods sold and delivered, work and labor, and an account stated.

Several counts. Where a plaintiff has several distinct causes of action, he is allowed to pursue them cumulatively in the same action, subject to certain rules which the law prescribes. See e.g. Fed.R. Civil P. 8(e).

Special count. As opposed to the common counts, in pleading, a special count is a statement of the actual facts of the particular case, or a count in which the plaintiff's claim is set forth with all needed particularity.

Countee. In old English law, the most eminent dignity of a subject before the Conquest. He was praefectus or proepositus comitatus, and had the charge and custody of the county; but this authority is now vested in the sheriff.

Countenance. In old English law, credit; estimation. Also, encouragement; aiding and abetting.

Counter, adj. Adverse; antagonistic; opposing or contradicting; contrary.

Counter-affidavit. An affidavit made and presented in contradiction or opposition to an affidavit which is made the basis or support of a motion or application.

Counter-bond. Bond which indemnifies a surety. See Counter-security below.

Counterclaim. See that title.

Counter-deed. A secret writing, either before a notary or under a private seal, which destroys, invalidates, or alters a public one.

Counter-letter. A species of instrument of defeasance common in the civil law. It is executed by a party who has taken a deed of property, absolute on its face, but intended as security for a loan of money, and by it he agrees to reconvey the property on payment of a specified sum. The two instruments, taken together, constitute what is known in Louisiana as an "antichresis" (q.v.).

Counter-mark. A sign put upon goods already marked; also the several marks put upon goods belonging to several persons, to show that they must not be opened, but in the presence of all the owners or their agents.

Counter-plea. See Plea.

Counter-security. A security given to one who has entered into a bond or become surety for another; a countervailing bond of indemnity.

Counterclaim. A claim presented by a defendant in opposition to or deduction from the claim of the plaintiff. Fed.R. Civil P. 13. If established, such will defeat or diminish the plaintiff's claim. Under federal rule practice, and also in most states, counterclaims are either compulsory (required to be made) or permissive (made at option of defendant).

A counterclaim may be any cause of action in favor of one or more defendants or a person whom a defendant represents against one or more plaintiffs, a person whom a plaintiff represents or a plaintiff and other persons alleged to be liable. New York C.P.L.R. § 3019(a).

For requisite content of counterclaim under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, see Complaint. Compare Cross-claim. See also Offset; Recoupment; Set-off; Transaction or occurrence test.

Compulsory counterclaim. A pleading shall state as a counterclaim any claim which at the time of serving the pleading the pleader has against any opposing party, if it arises out of the transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of the opposing party's claim and does not require for its adjudication the presence of third parties of whom the court cannot acquire jurisdiction. But the pleader need not state the claim if (1) at the time the action was commenced the claim was the subject of another pending action, or (2) the opposing party brought suit upon his claim by attachment or other process by which the court did not acquire jurisdiction to render a personal judgment on that claim. Fed.R. Civil P. 13(a).

For claim to constitute a compulsory counterclaim, it must be logically related to original claim and arise out of same subject matter on which original claim is based; many of same factual legal issues, or offshoots of same basic controversy between parties must be involved in a compulsory counterclaim. Tasner v. Billera, D.C.Ill., 379 F.Supp. 809, 813. See also Transaction or occurrence test.

Permissive Counterclaim. A pleading may state as a counterclaim any claim against an opposing party not arising out of the transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of the opposing party's claim. Fed.R. Civil P. 13(b).

Counterfeit /káwntərfit/. To forge; to copy or imitate, without authority or right, and with a view to deceive or defraud, by passing the copy or thing forged for that which is original or genuine. Most commonly applied to the fraudulent and criminal imitation of money or securities. 18 U.S.C.A. § 471 et seq. Counterfeit in common parlance signifies fabrication of false image or representation; counterfeiting an instrument means falsely making it; and in its broadest sense means making of copy without authority or right and with view to deceive or defraud by passing copy as original or genuine. Smith v. State, 7 Md.App. 457, 256 A.2d 357, 360, 361. See also Bootlegging; False making; Falsify; Forgery; Gray market goods; Imitation.

Counterfeit coin. Coin not genuine, but resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for genuine coin, including genuine coin prepared or altered so as to resemble or pass for coin of a higher denomination.

Counterfeiter. One who unlawfully makes base coin in imitation of the true metal, or forges false currency, or any instrument of writing, bearing a likeness and similitude to that which is lawful and genuine, with an intention of deceiving and imposing upon another.

Counter-feisance. The act of forging.

Counter letter. An agreement to reconvey where property has been passed by absolute deed with the intention that it shall serve as security only.

Countermand. A change or revocation of orders, authority, or instructions previously issued. It may be either express or implied; the former where the order or instruction already given is explicitly annulled or recalled; the latter where the party's conduct is incompatible with the further continuance of the order or instruction, as where a new order is given inconsistent with the former order.

Counteroffer. Statement made by the offeree to the offeror relating to the same matter as the original offer and proposing a substituted bargain differing from that proposed by the original offer. Thurmond v. Wieser, Tex.App. 10 Dist., 699 S.W.2d 680, 681. A statement by the offeree which has the legal effect of rejecting the offer and of proposing a new offer to the offeror. Restatement, Second, Contracts, § 59. However, the provisions of U.C.C. § 2-207(1)(2) modifies this principle of contract law as regards sales of goods by providing that the "additional terms are to be construed as proposals for addition to the contract."

Counterpart. In conveyancing, the corresponding part of an instrument; a duplicate or copy. Where an instrument of conveyance, as a lease, is executed in parts, that is, by having several copies or duplicates made and interchangeably executed, that which is executed by the grantor is usually called the "original," and the rest are "counterparts"; although, where all the parties execute every part, this renders them all originals. See Duplicate.

Counterpart writ. A copy of the original writ, authorized to be issued to another county when the court has jurisdiction of the cause by reason of the fact that some of the defendants are residents of the county or found therein.

Counter-rolls. In English law, the rolls which sheriffs have with the coroners, containing particulars of their proceedings, as well of appeals as of inquests, etc.

Countersign. As a noun, the signature of a secretary or other subordinate officer to any writing signed by the principal or superior to vouch for the authenticity of it. See also Attestation.

As a verb, to sign in addition to the signature of another in order to attest the authenticity.

Counter-signature. See Countersign.

Countervail. To counterbalance; to avail against with equal force or virtue; to compensate for, or serve as an equivalent of or substitute for.

Countervailing equity. See Equity.

Countervail livery. At common law, a release was a form of transfer of real estate where some right to it existed in one person but the actual possession was in another; and the possession in such case was said to "countervail livery," that is, it supplied the place of and rendered unnecessary the open and notorious delivery of possession required in other cases.

Counteur /kàwntyúr/. In the time of Edward I, a pleader; also called a Nurrator, and Serjeant-Counteur. See Countours.

Countez /kàwntiyz/. L. Fr. Count, or reckon. In old practice, a direction formerly given by the clerk of a court to the crier, after a jury was sworn, to number them; and which Blackstone says was given in his time, in good English, "count these." 4 Bl.Comm. 340, note (u).

Countors /kàwntərz/. Advocates, or serjeants at law, whom a man retains to defend his cause and speak for him in court, for their fees.

Country. The territory occupied by an independent nation or people, or the inhabitants of such territory. In the primary meaning "country" denotes the population, the nation, the state, or the government, having possession and dominion over a territory.

Rural, as distinguished from urban areas.

Country whence he came. Within statute providing for deportation of aliens means country of alien's nativity, where domicile has not been acquired elsewhere. Immigration Act 1924, § 13; Schenck ex rel. Capodilupo v. Ward, C.C.A.Mass., 80 F.2d 422, 426. But deportation to "country whence alien came" would be complied with if the alien was returned to political dominion in exile and control of country from whence he came. Delany v. Moraitis, C.C.A.Md., 136 F.2d 129-133.

County. The largest territorial division for local government in state. Its powers and importance vary from state to state, and as well within the given state. In certain New England states, it exists mainly for judicial administration. In Louisiana, the equivalent unit is called a parish. Counties are held in some jurisdictions to be municipal corporations, and are sometimes said to be involuntary municipal corporations. Other cases, seeking to distinguish between the two, hold that counties are agencies or political subdivisions of the state for governmental purposes, and not, like municipal corporations, incorporations of the inhabitants of specified regions for purposes of local government. Counties are also said to be merely quasi corporations. Jefferson County ex rel. Grauman v. Jefferson County Fiscal Court, 274 Ky. 91, 118 S.W.2d 181, 184.

Body of the county. The county at large, as distinguished from any particular place within it. A county considered as a territorial whole.

County affairs. Those relating to the county in its organic and corporate capacity and included within its governmental or corporate powers.

County attorney. Attorney employed by county to represent it in civil matters; also, the prosecuting attorney in many counties.

County auditor. County official whose responsibility is examination of accounts and financial records of the county.

County board. The administrative body which governs a county.

County board of equalization. A body created for the purpose of equalizing values of property subject to taxation.

County board of supervisors. A body of town and city officers acting for and on behalf of county in such matters as have been turned over to them by law.

County bonds. Broadly, any bonds issued by county officials to be paid for by a levy on a special taxing district, whether or not coextensive with the county.

County business. All business pertaining to the county as a corporate entity. All business of the county, and any other business of such county connected with or interrelated with the business of any other county properly within the jurisdiction of the county commissioners' court.

County commissioners. Officers of a county, charged with a variety of administrative and executive duties, but principally with the management of the financial affairs of the county, its police regulations, and its corporate business. Sometimes the local laws give them limited judicial powers. In some states they are called "supervisors".

County courts. The powers and jurisdiction of such courts are governed by state constitutions or statutes; some with strictly administrative, or strictly judicial functions, or a combination of both; some with only criminal jurisdiction, or only civil, or both; some have exclusive jurisdictions, others concurrent jurisdiction; such jurisdictional powers may, in addition, be either general or specific.

In England, such are the main civil courts. See the County Courts Act, 1984; Courts Act, 1971.

County officers. Those whose general authority and jurisdiction are confined within the limits of the county in which they are appointed, who are appointed in and for a particular county, and whose duties apply only to that county, and through whom the county performs its usual political functions. Public officers who fill a position usually provided for in the organization of counties and county governments, and are selected by the county to represent it continuously and as part of the regular and permanent administration of public power in carrying out certain acts with the performance of which it is charged in behalf of the public.

County palatine. A term bestowed upon certain counties in England, the lords of which in former times enjoyed especial privileges. They might pardon treasons, murders, and felonies. All writs and indictments ran in their names, as in other counties in the king's; and all offenses were said to be done against their peace, and not, as in other places, contra pacem domini regis. But these privileges have in modern times nearly disappeared after the Judicature Act of 1925, § 18 and the Courts Act of 1971.

County powers. Such only as are expressly provided by law or which are necessarily implied from those expressed.

County property. That which a county is authorized to acquire, hold, and sell.

County purposes. Those exercised by the county acting as a municipal corporation. As regards the rate of taxation, all purposes for which county taxation may be levied. Test whether a tax is levied for county purposes is whether it is for strictly county uses, for which county or its inhabitants alone would benefit, or is it for a purpose in which entire state is concerned and will profit.

County road. One which lies wholly within one county, and which is thereby distinguished from a state road, which is a road lying in two or more counties.

County-seat. A county-seat or county-town is the chief town of a county, where the county buildings and courts are located and the county business transacted.

County supervisors. See County commissioners, above.

County tax. Tax exclusively for county purposes, in which state has no sovereign interest or responsibility, and which has no connection with duties of county in its relation to state.

County-town. The county-seat; the town in which the seat of government of the county is located.

County warrant. An order or warrant drawn by some duly authorized officer of the county, directed to the county treasurer and directing him to pay out of the funds of the county a designated sum of money to a named individual, or to his order or to bearer.

Foreign county. Any county having a judicial and municipal organization separate from that of the county where matters arising in the former county are called in question, though both may lie within the same state or country.

Coup d'état /kūwdeytá/. Political move to overthrow existing government by force.

Coupled with an interest. This phrase, in the law of agency, has reference to a writing creating, conveying to, or vesting in the agent an interest in the estate or property which is the subject of the agency, as distinguished from the proceeds or profits resulting from the exercise of the agency.

Coupons. Interest and dividend certificates; also those parts of a commercial instrument which are to be cut, and which are evidence of something connected with the contract mentioned in the instrument. They are generally attached to certificates of loan, where the interest is payable at particular periods, and, when the interest is paid, they are cut off and delivered to the payor. That portion of a bond redeemable at a specified date for interest payment.

Coupons are written contracts for the payment of a definite sum of money on a given day, and being drawn and executed in a form and mode for the purpose, that they may be separated from the bonds and other instruments to which they are usually attached, it is held that they are negotiable and that a suit may be maintained on them without the necessity of producing the bonds. Each matured coupon upon a negotiable bond is a separable promise, distinct from the promises to pay the bonds or the other coupons, and gives rise to a separate cause of action. Thompson v. Perrine, 106 U.S. 589, 1 S.Ct. 564, 27 L.Ed. 298.

Coupon bonds. Bonds to which are attached coupons for the several successive installments of interest to maturity.

Coupon notes. Promissory notes with coupons attached, the coupons being notes for interest written at the bottom of the principal note, and designed to be cut off severally and presented for payment as they mature.

Coupon rate of interest. The interest rate stated on a bond. The coupon rate of interest times the par, or principal, value of a bond determines the periodic dollar interest payments received by the bondholder.

Coupon securities. Such securities usually provide for the payment of principal to the bearer thereof, and for payment of an installment of interest to the bearer of the respective interest coupons upon presentation thereof upon their respective due dates. Coupon securities are usually in the denomination of $1,000. Ownership of the security and/or coupons is transferred by delivery thereof. Such a security is negotiable under the Uniform Commercial Code. U.C.C. §§ 8-105, 8-302.

Cour de cassation /kūr də kasasyówn/. The supreme judicial tribunal of France, having appellate jurisdiction only.

Course. In surveying, the direction of a line with reference to a meridian.

Course of business. What is usually and normally done in the management of trade or business. See also Course of dealing; Regular course of business.

In worker's compensation acts, the usual course of business of the employer covers the normal operations which form part of the ordinary business carried on, and not including incidental and occasional operations having for their purpose the preservation of the premises or the appliances used in the business.

Commercial paper is said to be transferred, or sales alleged to have been fraudulent may be shown to have been made, "in the course of business," or "in the usual and ordinary course of business," when the circumstances of the transaction are such as usually and ordinarily attend dealings of the same kind and do not exhibit any signs of haste, secrecy, or fraudulent intention.

Course of dealing. A sequence of previous acts and conduct between the parties to a particular transaction which is fairly to be regarded as establishing a common basis of understanding for interpreting their expressions and other conduct. U.C.C. § 1-205(1). See also Trade usage; Usage (Usage of trade).

Course of employment. These words as applied to compensation for injuries within the purview of worker's compensation acts, refer to the time, place, and circumstances under which the accident takes place. A worker is in course of employment when, within time covered by employment, he is doing something which he might reasonably do while so employed at proper place. Generally, in order that an injury may arise out of and in the course of employment, it must be received while the worker is doing the duty he is employed to perform and also as a natural incident of the work flowing therefrom as a natural consequence and directly connected therewith.

The expression "in the course of his employment," in the rule that an employer is liable for the torts of an employee done in the course of employment, means while engaged in the service of the employer while engaged generally in the employer's work, as distinguished from acts done when the employee steps outside of employment to do an act for himself or herself not connected with the employer's business. The test as to whether an injury has arisen out of the "course of employment" is whether there is a causal connection between the duties of employment and the injury suffered. Tri-State Commodities, Inc. v. Stewart, Colo. App., 689 P.2d 712, 713.

State statutes and decisions differ as to the types and scope of activities which fall within "course of employment".

See also Arising out of and in the course of employment; Deviation; Scope of employment.

Course of performance. The understandings of performance which develop by conduct without objection between two parties during the performance of an executory contract.

Course of river. The course of a river is a line parallel with its banks. The term is not synonymous with the "current" of the river.

Course of the voyage. By this term is understood the regular and customary track, if such there be, which a ship takes in going from one port to another, and the shortest way.

Course of trade. What is customarily or ordinarily done in the management of trade or business. See also Course of business.

Course of vein. In mining, the "course of the vein" appearing on the surface is the course of its apex, which is generally inclined and undulated and departs more or less materially from the strike.

Course of vessel. In navigation, the "course" of a vessel is her apparent course, and not her heading at any given moment. It is her actual course.

Courses and distances. A method or form for describing real estate in deeds and mortgages by setting forth the distances in one direction as a boundary, followed by other distances and the direction thereof until the entire parcel has been described. See also Metes and bounds.

Court. A space which is uncovered, but which may be partly or wholly inclosed by buildings or walls. When used in connection with a street, indicates a short street, blind alley, or open space like a short street inclosed by dwellings or other buildings facing thereon.

A legislative assembly. Parliament is called in the old books a court of the king, nobility, and commons assembled. This meaning of the word has also been retained in the titles of some deliberative bodies, such as the "General Court" of Massachusetts, i.e., the legislature.

The person and suit of the sovereign; the place where the sovereign sojourns with his regal retinue, wherever that may be. The English government is spoken of in diplomacy as the court of St. James, because the palace of St. James is the official palace.

An organ of the government, belonging to the judicial department, whose function is the application of the laws to controversies brought before it and the public administration of justice. The presence of a sufficient number of the members of such a body regularly convened in an authorized place at an appointed time, engaged in the full and regular performance of its functions. A body in the government to which the administration of justice is delegated. A body organized to administer justice, and including both judge and jury. An incorporeal, political being, composed of one or more judges, who sit at fixed times and places, attended by proper officers, pursuant to lawful authority, for the administration of justice. An organized body with defined powers, meeting at certain times and places for the hearing and decision of causes and other matters brought before it, and aided in this, its proper business, by its proper officers, viz., attorneys and counsel to present and manage the business, clerks to record and attest its acts and decisions, and ministerial officers to execute its commands, and secure due order in its proceedings.

The words "court" and "judge," or "judges," are frequently used in statutes as synonymous. When used with reference to orders made by the court or judges, they are to be so understood.

General Classification

Courts may be classified and divided according to several methods, the following being the more usual:

Appellate courts. Such courts review decisions of inferior courts, and may be either intermediate appellate courts (court of appeals) or supreme courts. See Court of Appeals; Supreme Court.

Article III courts. See Constitutional court.

Civil and criminal courts. The former being such as are established for the adjudication of controversies between individual parties, or the ascertainment, enforcement, and redress of private rights; the latter, such as are charged with the administration of the criminal laws, and the punishment of wrongs to the public. While in some states there are both civil and criminal courts, in most states the trial court is a court of general jurisdiction (q.v.).

Court above, court below. In appellate practice, the "court above" is the one to which a cause is removed for review, whether by appeal, writ of error, or certiorari; while the "court below" is the one from which the case is removed (normally the trial court).

Court in bank (en banc). A meeting of all the judges of a court, usually for the purposes of hearing arguments on demurrers, motions for new trial, etc., as distinguished from sessions of the same court presided over by a single judge or panel of judges. See Full court, below.

Court of competent jurisdiction. One having power and authority of law at the time of acting to do the particular act. One recognized by law as possessing the right to adjudicate a controversy. One having jurisdiction under the Constitution and/or laws to determine the question in controversy.

Court of general jurisdiction. A court having unlimited trial jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, though its judgments and decrees are subject to appellate review. A superior court; a court having full jurisdiction within its own jurisdictional area.

Court of limited jurisdiction. Court with jurisdiction over only certain types of matters; e.g. probate or juvenile court. When a court of general jurisdiction proceeds under a special statute, it is a "court of limited jurisdiction" for the purpose of that proceeding, and its jurisdiction must affirmatively appear.

Court of original jurisdiction. Courts where actions are initiated and heard in first instance.

Court of record. A court that is required to keep a record of its proceedings, and that may fine or imprison. Such record imports verity and cannot be collaterally impeached.

De facto court. One established, organized, and exercising its judicial functions under authority of a statute apparently valid, though such statute may be in fact unconstitutional and may be afterwards so adjudged; or a court established and acting under the authority of a de facto government.

Equity courts and law courts. The former being such as possess the jurisdiction of a chancellor, apply the rules and principles of chancery (i.e. equity) law, and follow the procedure in equity; the latter, such as have no equitable powers, but administer justice according to the rules and practice of the common law. Under Rules of Civil Procedure, however, equity and law have been merged at the procedural level, and as such this distinction no longer exists in the federal courts nor in most state courts, though equity substantive jurisprudence remains viable. Fed.R.Civil P. 2. See Court of Chancery; Court of Equity.

Full court. A session of a court, which is attended by all the judges or justices composing it. See Court in bank, above.

Spiritual courts. In English law, the ecclesiastical courts, or courts Christian. 3 Bl.Comm. 61. See Ecclesiastical courts.

Superior and inferior courts. The former being courts of general original jurisdiction in the first instance, and which exercise a control or supervision over a system of lower courts, either by appeal, error, or certiorari; the latter being courts of small or restricted jurisdiction, and subject to the review or correction of higher courts. Sometimes the former term is used to denote a particular group or system of courts of high powers, and all others are called "inferior courts".

Trial courts. Generic term for courts where civil actions or criminal proceedings are first commenced at the state level such are variously called municipal, circuit, superior, district, or county courts. At the federal level, the U.S. district courts are the trial courts.

As to the division of courts according to their jurisdiction, see Jurisdiction.

As to several names or kinds of courts not specifically described in the titles immediately following, see Admiralty court; Appellate court; Arches Court; Bankruptcy proceedings (Bankruptcy courts); Circuit courts; City courts; Claims court; Commonwealth court; Consistory courts; Constitutional court; Consular courts; County (County courts); Court-baron; Court of High Commission; Customs Court; District (District courts); Ecclesiastical courts; Family court; Federal courts; Forest courts; Instance court; Insular courts; International Court of Justice; Justice's courts; Kangaroo court; Land court; Legislative courts; Maritime court; Mayor's court; Military courts; Moot court; Municipal courts; Orphan's courts; Police court; Prerogative court; Prize courts; Probate court; Superior (Superior courts); Supreme court; Surrogate court; Tax court; United States Courts.

Court administrator. Generally, a non-judicial officer whose responsibility is the administration of the courts as to budgets, juries, judicial assignments, calendars and non-judicial personnel.

Court-baron. In English law, a court which, although not one of record, was incident to every manor, and could not be severed therefrom. It was ordained for the maintenance of the services and duties stipulated for by lords of manors, and for the purpose of determining actions of a personal nature, where the debt or damage was under forty shillings. Customary court-baron was one appertaining entirely to copyholders. 3 Bl.Comm. 33. Freeholders' court-baron was one held before the freeholders who owed suit and service to the manor. It was the court-baron proper.

Court calendar. A list of cases for trial or appellate argument prepared for a given period of time as a week, month or even a term of the sitting of the court. Such may include scheduling of motions and other pretrial matters. See also Docket.

Court Christian. The ecclesiastical courts in England often so called, as distinguished from the civil courts. 1 Bl.Comm. 83; 3 Bl.Comm. 64.

Court commissioner. A person appointed by a judge to take testimony and find facts or to carry out some specific function connected with a case, such as selling property which is the subject of a petition to partition. See also Commissioner; Court administrator; Magistrate; Master; Referee.

Court en banc /kùrt om bônk/. See Court (Court in bank).

Court for Consideration of Crown Cases Reserved. In England, a court established by St. 11 & 12, Vict., c. 78, composed of such of the judges of the superior courts of Westminster as were able to attend, for the consideration of questions of law reserved by any judge in a court of oyer and terminer, gaol delivery, or quarter sessions, before which a prisoner had been found guilty by verdict. Such question is stated in the form of a special case. 4 Steph. The trial judge was empowered to "state a case" for the opinion of that court. He could not be compelled to do so, and only a question of law could be raised. If the court considered that the point had been wrongly decided at the trial, the conviction would be quashed. By Act of 1907, the Court of Criminal Appeal was created and the Court for Crown Cases Reserved was abolished.

Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes. This court was established by St. 20 & 21, Vict., c. 85, which transferred to it all jurisdiction then exercisable by any ecclesiastical court in England, in matters matrimonial, and also gave it new powers. The court consisted of the lord chancellor, the three chiefs, and three senior puisne judges of the common-law courts, and the judge ordinary, who together constituted, and still constitute, the "full court." The judge ordinary heard almost all matters in the first instance. By the judicature act, 1873, § 3, the jurisdiction of the court was transferred to the supreme court of judicature.

Court for the Correction of Errors. The name of a court having jurisdiction for review, by appeal or writ of error. The name was formerly used in New York and South Carolina.

Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors. In English law, a local court which had its sittings in London only, which received the petitions of insolvent debtors, and decided upon the question of granting a discharge. Abolished by the Bankruptcy Act of 1861.

Court for the Trial of Impeachments. A tribunal empowered to try any officer of government or other person brought to its bar by the process of impeachment. In England, the house of lords constitutes such a court; in the United States, the senate; and in the several states, usually the upper house of the legislative assembly. See also Impeachment.

Court-hand. In old English practice, the peculiar hand in which the records of courts were written from the earliest period down to the reign of George II. Its characteristics were great strength, compactness, and undeviating uniformity; and its use undoubtedly gave to the ancient record its acknowledged superiority over the modern, in the important quality of durability.

The writing of this hand, with its peculiar abbreviations and contractions, constituted, while it was in use, an art of no little importance, being an indispensable part of the profession of "clerkship," as it was called. Two sizes of it were employed, a large and a small hand; the former, called "great court-hand," being used for initial words or clauses, the placita of records, etc.

Court-house. The building occupied for the public sessions of a court, with its various offices. The building occupied and appropriated according to law for the holding of courts.

Court, Hundred. See Hundred Court.

Court-Lands. Domains or lands kept in the lord's hands to serve his family.

Court-Leet. The name of an English court of record held once in the year, and not oftener, within a particular hundred, lordship, or manor, before the steward of the leet; being the king's court granted by charter to the lords of those hundreds or manors. Its office was to view the frankpledges, that is, the freemen within the liberty; to present by jury crimes happening within the jurisdiction; and to punish trivial misdemeanors.

Court-Martial. An ad hoc military court, convened under authority of government and the Uniform Code of Military Justice, 10 U.S.C.A. § 801 et seq., for trying and punishing offenses in violation of the Uniform Code of Military Justice committed by persons subject to the Code, particularly members of the armed forces. Courts-martial are courts of law and courts of justice although they are not part of the federal judiciary established under Article III of the Constitution. They are legislative criminal courts established in the armed forces under the constitutional power of congress to regulate the armed forces. Their jurisdiction is entirely penal and disciplinary. They may be convened by the president, secretaries of military departments and by senior commanders specifically empowered by law. The type (e.g. summary, special, or general) and composition of courts-martial varies according to the gravity of offenses. Generally they are designed to deal with the internal affairs of the military when summary command discipline is inadequate to achieve corrective results, but they have concurrent jurisdiction with civil courts over a wide range of civil offenses. See Courts of Military Review; Court of Military Appeals. See also Code of Military Justice.

Court of Admiralty. A court having jurisdiction of admiralty and maritime matters; such jurisdiction being possessed by federal district courts. See Admiralty Court.

High Court of Admiralty. In English law, this was a court which exercised jurisdiction in prize cases, and had general jurisdiction in maritime causes, on the instance side. Its proceedings were usually in rem, and its practice and principles derived in large measure from the civil law. The judicature acts of 1873 transferred all the powers and jurisdiction of this tribunal to the probate, divorce, and admiralty division of the high court of justice. The Justice Act of 1970 established a new Admiralty Court as part of the Queens Bench Division of the High Court. Now governed by Supreme Court Act, 1981, §§ 4, 5.

Court of Ancient Demesne. In English law, a court of peculiar constitution, held by a bailiff appointed by the king, in which alone the tenants of the king's demesne could be impleaded.

Court of Appeal, His Majesty's. Formerly, the chief appellate tribunal of England. It was established by the judicature acts of 1873 and 1875, and invested with the jurisdiction formerly exercised by the court of appeal in chancery, the exchequer chamber, the judicial committee of the privy council in admiralty and lunacy appeals, and with general appellate jurisdiction from the high court of justice. It consists of the Lord Chancellor, Lord Chief Justice, Master of the Rolls, President of the Family Division, former Lord Chancellors, Lords of Appeal in Ordinary and Lords Justices of Appeal. There are two divisions: (1) Criminal Division which hears appeals from the Crown Court. (2) Civil Division which hears appeals from various civil tribunals. Appeal lies from both divisions to the House of Lords.

Court of Appeals. In those states with courts of appeals, such courts are usually intermediate appellate courts (with the highest appellate court being the state Supreme Court). In New York, Maryland, and the District of Columbia, however, such are the highest appellate courts. In West Virginia the Supreme Court of Appeals is the court of last resort. Alabama, Oklahoma, Tennessee, and Texas have Courts of Criminal Appeals, with those in Oklahoma and Texas being the highest appellate courts for criminal matters. Alabama, Oklahoma, and Texas have Courts of Civil Appeals, which are intermediate appellate courts. See also Supreme Court.

The United States is divided into thirteen federal judicial circuits in each of which there is established a court of appeals known as the United States Court of Appeals for the circuit. Included in these thirteen judicial circuits is the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia and the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit. 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 41, 43. See Courts of Appeals, U.S.

Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit. See Courts of Appeals, U.S.

Court of Appeals in Cases of Capture. A court erected by act of congress under the articles of confederation which preceded the adoption of the Constitution. It had appellate jurisdiction in prize causes.

Court of Archdeacon. The most inferior of the English ecclesiastical courts, from which an appeal generally lies to that of the bishop (i.e., to the Consistory Court). Such court is now virtually obsolete.

Court of Assistants. Formerly a court in Massachusetts organized in 1630, consisting of the governor, deputy governor and assistants. It exercised the whole power both legislative and judicial of the colony and an extensive chancery jurisdiction as well.

Court of Attachments. In old English law, the lowest of the three courts held in the forests. It has fallen into total disuse. It was held before the verderers of the forest once in every forty days, to view the attachments by the foresters for offences against the vert and the venison. It had cognizance only of small trespasses. Larger ones were enrolled and heard by the Justices in Eyre.

Court of Audience. An ecclesiastical court, in which the primates once exercised in person a considerable part of their jurisdiction. Such courts, which existed in England for both the Archbishop of Canterbury and York, have long since been disused.

Court of Augmentation. An English court created in the time of Henry VIII (27 Hen. VIII, c. 27), with jurisdiction over the property and revenue of certain religious foundations, which had been made over to the king by act of parliament, and over suits relating to the same. It was called "The Court of the Augmentations of the Revenues of the King's Crown" (from the augmentation of the revenues of the crown derived from the suppression of the monasteries), and was dissolved in the reign of Queen Mary, but the Office of Augmentation remained long after; the records of the court are now at the Public Record Office.

Court of Bankruptcy. Federal court established in each judicial district, as an adjunct to the U.S. district court for such district, with general jurisdiction over bankruptcy matters. 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 151, 1334. See also Bankruptcy proceedings.

Court of Brotherhood. In old English law, an assembly of the mayors or other chief officers of the principal towns of the Cinque Ports in England, originally administering the chief powers of those ports, now almost extinct.

Court of Chancery. A court administering equity and proceeding according to the forms and principles of equity. In England, prior to the Judicature Acts of 1925 (whereby the Court was superseded by the Chancery Division), the style of the court possessing the largest equitable powers and jurisdiction was the "High Court of Chancery." By the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1925, all three divisions of the High Court administer both law and equity. See now, Supreme Court Act, 1981, § 49.

In some of the United States, the title "court of chancery" is applied to a court possessing general equity powers, distinct from the courts of law. Courts of chancery (equity courts) have been abolished by all states that have adopted Rules of Civil Procedure. See also Court of Equity.

Court of Chivalry. In English law, the name of a court anciently held as a court of honor merely, before the earl-marshal, and as a criminal court before the lord high constable, jointly with the earl-marshal. But it is also said that this court was held by the constable, and after that office reverted to the crown in the time of Henry VIII, by the earl-marshal. It had jurisdiction as to contracts and other matters touching deeds of arms or war, as well as pleas of life or member. It also corrected encroachments in matters of coat-armor, precedency, and other distinctions of families. It is now grown entirely out of use (except for one case in 1955, after a lapse of 200 years) on account of the feebleness of its jurisdiction and want of power to enforce its judgments, as it could neither fine nor imprison, not being a court of record.
